PAPERS RELATING TO INDIGO CULTIVATION IN BENGAL.

(Preliminary to the Appointment of the Commission.)

SELECTIONS from the CORRESPONDENCE connected with INDIGO CULTIVATION, on record in the Office of the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, from April 1854 to the 1st of May 1860.

— No. 1. —

From A. Sconce, Esq., Judge of Nuddea, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal; dated Kishnaghur, 20 April 1854.

My dear Beadon,

I AM more sure that some such statement as that I now enclose should be submitted for the consideration of Government, than of the proper manner of doing it. I profess merely to put on paper the outspoken complaints which people here make against the system generally, but not, as they allow, universally practised in the cultivation of indigo; and I would beg you to do me the favour of laying the paper before the Governor General.

I write, of course, not knowing whether or no the same matter has not been already pressed upon the attention of Government, perhaps I should say, not knowing but that Government has reason to decline the immediate discussion of it. My own idea, however, is that it is no longer enough to measure the advantages of European capital and energy by the value of our exports of indigo; the effects of the system upon the people should also be considered; and I should wish to be satisfied that, in connexion with the cultivation and manufacture of indigo, the people labour under none of those evils which, by a kind of social misadventure, formerly prevailed, nay, which men may regret, but are perfectly free to allow, do still prevail in England.

If the suggestion which I make, of a commission of inquiry, should be listened to at all, I should like to add that it seems to me, for the purpose, should be associated with the Revenue Commissioner an English and a native gentleman not in the public service.

NOTE.

I feel that I ought not to hesitate to put on record the remarkable statements regarding the indigo system of this district that have been made to me by natives of respectability and intelligence, and in a position to be informed of the facts which they narrate, and which, if misinformed, they themselves assuredly believe. My connexion with indigo districts is too recent to permit me to state the circumstances I am about to describe as having fallen within my own knowledge. Indeed, I have known for years, through casual communication with the people, that a native landholder would shrink from the approach of indigo cultivation as they do from fire in the dry prairies of America; and otherwise, the violent outrages that from time to time spring from the sowing of indigo indicate an unwillingness on the part of ryots to place their lands at the service of the planter; but excepting these occasional and very general sources of observation, I have personally no knowledge of the complicated relationship subsisting between indigo planters as landlords, as cultivators, or as manufacturers, and the ryots as tenants or labourers, or producers and sellers of produce; and though the recommendation which it is the main purpose of this paper to submit, be manifestly grounded chiefly on my own ignorance of the subject, it is so plain to me that the strong sentiments and warm feelings of the people, or, at all events, of that portion of the people with whom I have communicated, are not sufficiently known, have not been sufficiently investigated and discussed, and, at all events, to their apprehension have not been sufficiently refuted, that I presume to suggest that the complaints made should be authoritatively sifted.

When seeking information on this subject, one simple question seemed to me to lie at the bottom of the whole matter, namely, the willingness or unwillingness of the ryots to co-operate in the cultivation of indigo. Willingness would betoken contentment and profitable industry; unwillingness might express constraint, bankruptcy, undeliverable bonds. I have asked, therefore, simply whether the cultivation of indigo was acceptable to the people; and the answer given to me, interrupted more than once by the declaration that tongue must fail fully to describe the various forms in which misused power was exercised, was a long narrative of what appeared to be, to the speakers, remediless injustice.

I cannot sufficiently guard against the possible inference that I advance any statement of my own knowledge; I write what perfectly credible and perfectly respectable people have told me; and what I am persuaded they themselves believe. No one, I may add, who has had long intercourse with the natives can have failed to notice the credulity and weakness of judgment which, in some respects, and particularly in whatever relates to their position towards Europeans, imperfect education, narrow experience, and the timidity of their national character, tend to engender; but, allowing for this source of error, there is, I think, in their statements a substratum of understood grievances which cannot, unlistened to, be cast aside.

The general impression conveyed to me regarding the indigo system is, that it is sustained throughout by compulsion, and by the advantages gained by arbitrary and unrighteous dealing.

It is said that the ryots are driven by force or fear to undertake the cultivation of indigo; that they are not allowed to cultivate other crops till they have sown indigo, first, it may be, on the planter's nijjote land, next on the ryots' own lands; that done, the ryots' labour and cattle being limited, it is too late to go on with other crops.

It is said that ryots are not at liberty to devote what lands they choose to the cultivation of indigo, but their best land, this field or that, as the planter may point out.

It is said that, in contracting engagements for land, planters require large and unusual measure, two and a half beegahs of the common beegah to make one beegah.

It is said to be notorious that a ryot gains little, if at all, by the advance of two rupees a beegah made to him by the planter; he has to pay it away to the factory amlah.

It is said that in delivering his produce the ryot is compelled to deliver two bundles for one; two bundles are taken from him at the market price of one bundle. This is said to be done by tying the leafy heads of two (or more) bundles together, and making one factory bundle.

It is said that the work of the factory is carried on by the inadequately requited services of labourers, boatmen, and hackery drivers; by the extortionate cesses which planters levy from their tenants; by the compulsory loans which mahajuns are obliged to make for the purpose of liquidating ryots' balances.

Ryots, it has been said to me, have nothing, and can have nothing; they are working cattle merely, not men reconciled to labour by their gains.

I find it difficult to obtain anything like an exact conception of the forms in which the force or compulsion alleged to be used towards the ryots is exerted; it is said that cattle are not allowed to graze; that they are carried off altogether, perhaps plundered, perhaps drowned; that crops are wantonly destroyed; that houses are harried and burnt. Complain, say they; how often would you have the poor man and the weak man to complain? It is better to bear than to complain.

It will be understood that I do not adopt these statements; they are deplorable; but the utmost I am entitled to say is, that it is deplorable, not that they are are true, but that they should be believed to be true ; and it is to this belief that I think measures of inquiry and redress are due.

Should a commission of inquiry be instituted, these points would specially be attended to :—

1. The whole conditions of a ryot's engagement, as a tenant, to cultivate indigo ; embracing the nature of his rent in money or in crop ; the rate of his rent ; the rate of advances, and extent to which advances are made ; the size of the beegah compared with the beegah of rice land ; the period of the engagement, and terms and manner of delivering the indigo.

2. The indigo being ripe for delivery, does the planter account for it at the full bazaar price ? Under what condition is indigo seed taken and accounted for ?

3. Ordinarily, what provision is made for the termination of a ryot's engagements ? is any period specified ? Has the provision of Section V., Regulation V. of 1830, been taken advantage of ? In practice, by any, is an engagement considered interminable ?

4. Season failing, on whom does the risk rest ? Is the ryot accountable for advances only ; or for the entire money rent of the year ; or for the value of an estimated but ungrown crop of indigo ; or for both rent and advances ?

5. What proportion does the advance bear to the whole rent ; or if the rent be estimated in kind, what is the proportion of the advance to the value of the crop ? In delivering the produce, at what rate is the portion not advanced upon credited to the ryot ?

6. Practically, in this factory and in that, to what extent are balances scored up against ryots ; ordinarily what adjustments are effected ; how long is adjustment deferred ?

7. Practically, what is the comparative position of ryots who grow indigo, and of ryots who grow other crops but not indigo ? Is indigo more liable to fail than other crops ; if so, do the superior returns per beegah from indigo remunerate the ryot for his greater losses ? Ordinarily, are indigo ryots above the world ?

8. At what rate, under what conditions, is the labour of various descriptions required by the planter remunerated ; for tilling the private lands of the factory ; for gathering the crops ; for manufacturing the indigo, and for transporting it ? Is a lost crop worked out in labour ? If worked out how is account taken ?

9. In farms and talooks attached to indigo factories, what is the condition of the sub-tenants as such.

These queries may seem mainly to refer to the conditions of the native ryot ; but they necessarily embrace the co-relative rights and interests of the planter. A factory worked for 20 years or for half a century, must necessarily be invested with some sort of rights ; to ascertain, to define and to preserve these rights could not but be advantageous, and is certainly due to the indigo planter : and possibly even a planter should be expected to admit, that in the system into which he was necessarily adopted, investigation may disclose involuntary defects which he himself would be most unwilling to perpetuate.

MINUTE by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal ; dated 5 June 1854.

THIS paper, with the letter to Mr. Beadon which accompanied it, was handed to me by Mr. Beadon. It reached Mr. Beadon apparently too late to be submitted to Lord Dalhousie ; and I have hitherto been too much occupied to give it proper attention.

It professes to give a succinct account on the evidence of many natives of the zillah of Nuddea, some of them said to be credible and trustworthy persons, of the oppressions practised on their ryots by the indigo planters of the district ; and assuredly the statement is a most grievous one.

Mr. Sconce on the relations between indigo planters and their ryots.

Greatly compressed, the charges against the planters are to the effect that their whole system is one of compulsion and arbitrary and unrighteous dealing; that the ryots are made by force to cultivate indigo, and not allowed to cultivate anything else till they have sown indigo: that they are not allowed to choose the land but must give up to indigo any of their fields which the planter may select: that every planter takes two-and-a-half beegahs from a ryot as one beegah; and, not content with that, takes always from every ryot two bundles of indigo plant for one: while the money paid for the land in advance is of no use to the ryot, as he is obliged immediately he gets it to pay it all back again to the factory amlah: that all the servants and labourers of planters, boatmen, hackery drivers and all, are forced to work for inadequate wages, while inordinate cesses are levied from ryots, and mahajuns are constrained to make compulsory loans to the ryots, for the purpose of paying the ryots balances to the factory: that the ryots have, and can have, nothing for their labour and land, but are treated as mere working cattle: that their crops are wantonly destroyed by the planters, their houses harried and burnt, their cattle carried off as plunder or drowned, and that "it is better to bear than to complain."

Upon these statements which, though condensed, I have stated in Mr. Sconce's own words Mr. Sconce recommends the appointment of commissioners to inquire into the relations of planters and ryots, and to see if these and many other similar things be true.

I wish that Mr. Sconce, before founding such a recommendation on the statements of the natives, had remembered that there were two parties to the quarrel, and therefore two versions of the statement. I wish that he had asked some of the many respectable planters of his district, to which he has been newly appointed, and which is apparently the first indigo district in which he has served, what they had to say to these astounding stories of their violence and cruelty. Had he done so, or had he even inquired in the magistrates or in his own office whether it was true that the ryots found it useless to complain, and therefore never sought redress, I cannot help thinking that he might have considerably modified the present statement and the present recommendation.

For, granting that the whole of these obviously exaggerated stories were true, or supposing that a commission instituted, as Mr. Sconce would recommend, were to find that these oppressions really were of constant or frequent occurrence, what would follow? not that indigo planting was inherently vicious, and proper to be put down by legislative enactment, but simply this, that in the zillah of Nuddea the laws were inefficient, and the tribunals of no avail; that the strong might oppress the weak with perfect impunity; that crime met with no punishment, and injustice went always unredressed.

But if things really were so, if the strong and the violent and the unscrupulous could in Nuddea work their will with impunity, does Mr. Sconce suppose that there would be no oppressors but English planters? that no violence would be heard of but such as they perpetrated? that there would be nothing to tell of the hardness of mahajuns, or the severity of zemindars.

Or is it to be supposed that the tribunals would be found to be vigilant and impartial towards all but English oppressors, and that none but planters could commit violence under their jurisdiction?

Yet one of these conditions is what must have seemed to Mr. Sconce probable. He heard nothing of any tyranny but planters' tyranny, and he has not alluded to any other kind of oppression. Had he supposed there was any such, he would surely have included it in his proposed inquiry. He must certainly have supposed either that in a general dissolution of law and justice none were found to turn the anarchy to account but tyrannous planters; or else that law and justice were in so singular a condition in Nuddea that they dealt only with wicked natives, and allowed oppressive planters to commit all sorts of mischief with impunity.

Whatever be the view which Mr. Sconce may have taken of the case, it is quite certain that no commission need be appointed.

Supposing the stories told to Mr. Sconce to have been thoroughly sifted and tested, and the replies of the opposite parties to have been allowed due weight, it might probably have been found that in Nuddea, as elsewhere, the laws and the manner of their administration, though greatly improved in the course of years, were not yet in so satisfactory a condition as that redress was at all times readily and easily afforded to the poor, nor even always to the rich. It might have been found that this imperfection was partly due to the character of the people, and therefore therefore only to be remedied by the slow advance of knowledge and civilisation, and partly to errors of law and system, some of which perhaps are in course of alteration and amendment, and some only await the advice and suggestions of observant and experienced men having the necessary acquaintance with facts. Mr. Sconce, in his position as head of the whole civil and criminal judicatures of the zillah of Nuddea, would have perceived that he had the power and the duty committed to him of remedying such imperfections of the system under his control as might be found to arise from mal-administration of existing institutions, while he had ample opportunity to observe such defects as might be ascribable to the institutions themselves, and could never perform a more acceptable service to the people or to the Government than in suggesting improvements founded upon his actual knowledge and experience.

I would carefully and courteously communicate the substance of these remarks to Mr. Sconce in reply to his paper of observations. I would tell him that the Government hoped for valuable assistance from his mature suggestions, but I would at the same time recommend to him to bring to the test of experience all general statements which might come to his hearing, for which he would have ample opportunity in the daily exercise of his important judicial functions.

From W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. Sconce, Esq., Judge of Nuddea (No. 1352); dated 9 June 1854.

Sir,

YOUR demi-official letter of the 24th April last, with the official paper to which it gave cover, has been perused by the Lieutenant Governor with attention.

2. You give, upon the authority of certain natives, a statement of great violence and oppression generally practised by indigo planters in your district upon their ryots and dependents, and you recommend the Government to appoint a special commission of inquiry to investigate the subject.

3. The Lieutenant Governor observes that you had barely been three months in the district when you made this recommendation, and that you do not appear to have tested the probability of the statements made to you by any examination of the records of the courts subject to your control, by any intercourse with the planters of the district, or by any inquiry among the intelligent and experienced public functionaries, at the head of the various departments, resident at the station.

4. The Lieutenant Governor cannot doubt that you either have resorted to such obvious means of ascertaining the probability of these most serious general allegations since the date of your letter, or that you certainly will do so shortly. He thinks also that in the course of the daily administration of justice in your court you must have had, and will still further have, opportunities of satisfying your mind whether law and justice are indeed so utterly and shamefully relaxed and inefficient in the zillah of Nuddea as they must be if only a part of these enormous allegations be well founded.

5. He is of opinion, therefore, that it will be proper to defer any further notice of your letter than this acknowledgment, and to await such other communication as you may think it your duty to make after having taken the best advantage of larger opportunity of knowledge.

— No. 2. —

From W. F. Fergusson, Esq., to W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal; dated 9 May 1854.

Sir,

I REQUEST you will submit to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal the accompanying letter of Mr. Henry Mackenzie, with myself the proprietor of the Jingeratcha indigo concern, near the station of Jessore, which he addressed to Mr. J. Dunbar, lately specially deputed to that district, but which Mr. Dunbar returned, stating that his mission had terminated and that he could not take up the case.

A similar representation to the Commissioner of the district has been attended with no effect, beyond a call for explanation from the Deputy Magistrate himself, and in the mean time our property is being ruined.

The simple facts of the case are, that Abdool Luteef, lately appointed Deputy Magistrate at Kalarooah, has set his face against indigo planting; that the knowledge of this has encouraged the ryots in his jurisdiction to break their engagements and to refuse to sow; and that consequently about one-eighth of the property of the Jingeratcha concern is destroyed.

It is not necessary for me to point out to his Honor the Governor of Bengal how ready natives are to break through their contracts, whether to sow indigo, rice, or anything, nor how small encouragement from any one in authority will induce them to do so, and also how difficult it is to prove that such encouragement has been given.

The result, however, is certain and positive loss to the proprietors of the concern, and it would be better for us that the Magistrate were corrupt than that he should be prejudiced, as Abdool Luteef's actions show that he is against us and other planters.

I refer to the records of the courts, to Mr. Dunbar, to any one connected with the districts of Jessore and Kishnaghur, for evidence of Mr. Henry Mackenzie's character for probity and fair dealing with the ryots. Sowing, as the concern does, in upwards of 90 villages close to the station of Jessore (for Jingeratcha is only eight miles from it), there has not been a single complaint against him; but no sooner does Abdool Luteef obtain power than the ryots in the whole of that part of the country refuse to sow and to fulfil their engagements.

All that I ask is, that any of the new complaints against Mr. Mackenzie be investigated by any other magistrate or authority; but I beg that it may be done speedily, for the season for sowing is fast passing away, and delay will be loss.

I believe that on investigation it will be found, that neither in character nor in conduct is Abdool Luteef fit to be entrusted with the powers of a magistrate.

From H. Mackenzie, Esq., to J. Dunbar, Esq.; dated 24 April 1854.

Sir,

WHEN you were in Jessore upon the commission of inquiry to which you were deputed by Government, you had the kindness one day to ask Mr. Maclagan and self, what was the bearing of the authorities, European and native, towards planters having business in their courts. Our answer was, that we met with every proper courtesy from the European functionaries, but that I had to complain of the insolent bearing towards myself and others of the Principal Sudeer Ameen; you were then kind enough to say that you would speak to him, and that it should not happen again; and I have since learned from Messrs. DeVerinne and Savi, who had business in his court some days ago, that your advice to him has had the happiest effect.

Though your mission of inquiry is now over, yet as the subject I am about to bring to your notice should, I believe, have formed part of that inquiry, but for the subdivision of Kalarooah being so much out of the way, I think I am not wrong in addressing myself to you, as, if you cannot interfere, you can at least bring to the notice of Mr. Halliday the grievances of which I have to complain. The first is, the uncourteous and threatening style in which I am addressed by the Deputy Magistrate of Kalarooah; one* of whose perwannahs I now enclose, and

* Perwannah of the Deputy Magistrate of Kalarooah, to (Sree) Henry Mackenzie, of the Puchapora Factory:

Ahadooolla Mundle, Golapdee Mundle, Janker Mundle, Totagazee and Akbur Duffadar, of Mouzah Koolay, appeared in this court, and presented a petition to the effect that your (tomar) Ameen, Kalashee and Dewan, accompanied by Lattials, had been constantly moving about the village, with a view to mark forcibly the paddy lands of the plaintiffs for the cultivation of indigo, to arrest and make advances to them, and in the event of their refusing to take advances, to plunder and as a contrast to it, I send the accompanying one* from Mr. Toogood, which will show the difference between the courteous style of the gentleman and the intended want of courtesy of the native. The perwannahs were issued, and the threats held out, without any inquiry into the merits of the complaints, and without one single proof of oppression on my part. There are two.

To show the leaning of the deputy magistrate, I may mention that some time ago, on receiving notice from my neighbour, Mr. Larmour, that a number of my villagers were conspiring together with the view not to sow indigo, I addressed an English letter to the deputy, enclosing Mr. Larmour's, pointing out proofs of the same parties having last year been leagued together to destroy my indigo (acknowledged in the razenamah of Nobin Ghose, one of the ringleaders), and that their intention this year was, to get up false cases, to prevent me from measuring some putnee villages I had purchased last year. My letter was treated with silent contempt; not so the false petitions of which I had warned him, and upon which he issued the unbecoming and threatening perwannahs of which the one enclosed is a specimen.

I am told that this man's prejudice towards indigo planters arises out of the following circumstances:—It seems that many years ago his family held an indigo advance of 17 cottahs of land from the Meergunge concern, and one season they were made to sow three beegahs, hence his mania and constant expression (not very becoming upon the bench), Neelker Sahib-ka joolum ham koob janta. This unfortunate expression of his before crowded courts has encouraged some ryots who never did before and never would have thought of complaining; and is made a handle of by zemindars, their omla, gattidars, and those hangers on and mischief-makers about all villages, holders of rent-free tenures, who hate indigo because it interferes with their monopoly of the ryots' crops, under the name of Bag Burger. To show that the ryot himself is not alone to blame for the trouble given in not fulfilling his contract, I may mention two cases that will show from whence proceeds, in most cases, the objection to sow indigo. Some days ago, after a heavy shower, I sent my dewan to the Naib of Oomeschunder Paul Chowdry to ask him to allow those ryots that were willing to sow their lands; his answer was, "I cannot until I hear from my moonced to withdraw the order not to sow." This is to force me into taking an ijara, giving for it a loan of 2 or 3,000; another who has stopped my sowings in three villages is a vakeel in the Kishnaghur court. He wants me to take off his hands a dhur ijara on the following terms:—to give one anna on each rupee of the jamma, to pay cash for the balance of rents, loans and paddy the ryots owe him, and to pay the amount, with expenses of a suit in court, which was decreed in my favour, equal to 400 in all. He wants me to give him 3,000 to allow me to sow 100 beegahs of indigo; that I advanced to the ryots, for here is part of the secret of the ryots refusing to sow; and so long as those who instigate them to go and make false complaints are not made amenable to punishment, so long will the ryot be made a tool of by bad men; more especially, plunder their houses, to assault and murder them. You (tomakay) are therefore hereby forbidden, and are directed to prevent your men and the Lattials, from practising oppressions on the plaintiffs. You will also see that when the plaintiffs cultivate their respective lands, your men throw no obstacles in their way. If you (tomar) have any claims to prefer on account of advances for indigo, you are at liberty to sue in the civil courts. Should you disobey this order, and not abstain from practising oppressions, you (tomakay) will be held seriously responsible (sungeen jawubdahee). Dated the 27th March 1854.

* Perwannah of the Fouzdarry Court of Zillah Jessore at Katchandpore, to Mr. (Sreejoot) Henry Mackenzie, of Jingergetcha.

Case.—Plunder of cows and assault, &c.

This day the case having been brought up, it appears that the defendants have not attended the court, though repeatedly called upon to do so. As the defendants are your (apunkar) servants, you (apunee) are directed to make them appear (hazir kurrya diben) at the court within two days. Dated 29th December 1853.

Perwannah of the Fouzdarry Court of Zillah Jessore to Mr. (Sreejoot) Mackenzie, Proprietor of the Bazar at Jingergetcha.

It appears from the report of Thannah Sajahalij that there are no Government chowkeedars at the above Bazar since its establishment; only two chowkeedars appointed by you (apunar) guard and protect it, but they have not got with them badges, and their names are not entered in the register book. You (apunakay) are therefore directed to appoint chowkeedars at the said Bazar, according to the existing law. Dated 27th February 1854.

if encouraged, as he is by officials of the same bias as the deputy magistrate of Kalarooah. I may mention that until this deputy magistrate came to this sub-division, there was not any complaint for forcibly sowing indigo; and though I have indigo advances in 90 villages within the Jessore jurisdiction, not one complaint on this head has been made against me in three years.

To show how much the deputy magistrate's known bias is likely to injure myself and my neighbour, Mr. Larmour, I may mention that a number of his and 12 of my villages got up false complaints and refused to sow; the magistrate, without putting them upon oath, gave them chupprassies to stop our people from going into the villages. Of the 12 villages in my line, seven have since sown their lands: so much for the consistency of the ryots' complaint, and the way in which they play upon this deputy magistrate's prejudice. Since I became a proprietor I have avoided all coercion, trusting that Government, sooner or later, would see the necessity of making some stringent laws that will punish not only the ryot himself for breach of his contract, but which also reach the men who instigate him to do wrong. An equally stringent law is also required to punish those who wilfully, or through carelessness, destroy indigo crops. At present, not any two magistrates agree as to what is to be done with cattle trespassing, and to tell the planter to go and sue the ryots in the civil court for breach of contract and destruction of indigo plant, as this deputy does, is worse than a farce. The result would be, after a long time and much money spent, the planter might get a decree upon a poor wretch, who would prove that all his worldly goods was the dirty dhootie upon his body. If Government would give the planters the protection they are entitled to, and some security for the immense sums of money put into circulation by them, there would be less cause of complaint against planters for upholding their own rights. We do not ask for anything so stringent as the punishments Government found it necessary to put in force to protect their own monopolies in times long passed.

Trusting that you will excuse the liberty that justice to myself and those whose money I am speculating with, forces me to, in bringing to your notice the loss I am likely to suffer, nearly 1,000 beegahs, equal to 9,000 cash, from this servant of the Government.

P.S.—I have underlined the objectionable expressions in the deputy magistrate's perwannah and their contrast in Mr. Toogood's.

At the same time I enclose copy* of extract from a letter of my mooktear at Kalarooah, which I pledge my honour he addressed to me without any suspicion of its being made use of hereafter.

From W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. C. Bidwell, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 1075), dated the 12th May 1854.

Sir,

Dated 9th May 4.

I AM desired to send you in original a letter† received from Mr. W. F.ergusson, a merchant of Calcutta, together with its enclosures, being a communication recently addressed to Mr. Dunbar, by Mr. H. Mackenzie, an indigo planter in the district of Jessore, and certain Bengallee documents referred to in that communication.

The Lieutenant Governor is desirous that you should make inquiries, without delay, in regard to the statement made by Mr. Mackenzie, and report to Government

* Extract paragraph 1 of a letter dated 24th Chyete 1260, from Gooroodoss Chuckerbutty and Hurrybole Rooder, Mookhtars at Kalarooah.

“You may have received the information regarding our affairs in the court here, which was communicated in a previous letter. It appears that the officer in charge of this sub-division is earnestly engaged in keeping the indigo factories under control, and protecting the ryots. As soon as the ryots present petitions, strict orders are passed prohibiting the sowing of indigo. When petitions are presented on behalf of the planters, the above officer passes orders to the effect that they will not be allowed to make the indigo cultivation without the consent of the ryots, and that if they have any claims to prefer, they are at liberty to sue under Act IV. of 1840. Several similar petitions are presented relating to the Molatee concern. If such orders are passed by the hakim, we are helpless.”

ment on the subject. Mr. Dunbar has, you will observe, in the accompanying extract from his recent Report upon Jessore, given a favourable account of Mr. Mackenzie as a planter, and on that consideration, as well as on account of the apparently unusual and objectionable nature of the deputy magistrate's perwannah forwarded by Mr. Mackenzie, the Lieutenant Governor thinks it right to request that the case should receive prompt and careful attention.

The return of the enclosures is requested, with your reply.

Paragraphs 15 and 16.

EXTRACT from a Report from Mr. J. Dunbar on the District of Jessore, dated the 1st March 1854.

PARAGRAPH 15. From the native zemindars I turn to the European planters and landholders; and it is very satisfactory to me to feel that, in doing so, I shall be able to mention some, at least, who take an interest in the welfare of those with whom they have to do, in one or both of these capacities. Mr. R. Savi, of Nowhatta; Mr. Kenny, of Salkamooddee; Mr. Mears, agent of Mr. MacLagan, at Sindoree; and Mr. Rainy, of Coolnah, are the planters of whose generally oppressive conduct the loudest and most frequent complaints were made to me. The three first named are all, more or less, embroiled in quarrels with Ramrutton Roy. These complaints must not, therefore, be received unquestioned as sure evidence of the grievances alleged; yet it would be absurd to suppose that there are not among so large a body as the planters of Jessore, men who are keensighted enough where their own interests are concerned, yet, perhaps, wilfully blind to every claim of right and humanity, which may appear to them to be opposed to those interests. The individuals just named have all a stake in the land itself, being either putneedars or izaradars, so that, as I have had occasion to remark before, it is not probable that they would intentionally carry their exactions too far; but I can well understand that, without going to extremes, they may yet make themselves very unpopular with their tenantry by always insisting on having their best lands for the growth of indigo, and allowing less than a fairly remunerative price for the plant when cut and brought home. Planters who are liberal in their dealings with their ryots allow a rupee for four bundles, every bundle measuring six feet in girth, and those who are hard and grasping exact five or six. In regard to Mr. Rainy, of Coolnah, I am sorry to say that of his severity and oppression I could have no room to doubt. Under the impression that the lands would yield him a better return if planted with indigo, he had pressed the inhabitants of one very populous village near his factory so hard that they had at last abandoned it. He discovered his error in time, and I believe he has the good sense to own it; and I am told he is now endeavouring to conciliate his people by milder measures; but he is generally looked upon in the southern parts of the district as a hard and unfeeling landlord.

16. Mr. De Verinne, of Coragoolah; Mr. Brae, of Bahookally; Mr. Kearns, of Hazrapore; Mr. Gow Smith, of Ramnugger; the Messrs. Macnair, of Joradah; and Mr. Mackenzie, of Jingergatcha, are all well spoken of. Their ryots are generally as well contented under them as the system of indigo cultivation will allow them to be. In working for their own bread, and with the just and honourable purpose of making money enough to enable them eventually to retire to their own country, they do not overlook the claims and the interests of the many poor creatures around them, whose happiness and comfort are so greatly dependant on their own liberal and upright conduct.

From W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal to W. F. Fergusson, Esq., Merchant of Calcutta (No. 1024), dated the 12th May, 1854.

Sir,

I AM desired by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 9th instant, with enclosures, and in reply, to inform you that the Commissioner of the division has been instructed to make an immediate and careful inquiry in regard to the statements made by Mr. Mackenzie, of Jinger-gatcha, respecting the conduct of the deputy magistrate of Kalarooah. The several enclosures of your letter have been forwarded to the Commissioner for that purpose.

From A. C. Bidwell, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 51), dated the 7th June 1854.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1075, dated the 12th ultimo, enclosing an original letter from Mr. Fergusson, a merchant in Calcutta, and requesting that I will make inquiries without delay in regard to the statements contained in that letter, and report the result to Government.

2. I lost no time in forwarding the letters to the magistrate of Nuddea, in whose district the villages referred to are situate. I had previously forwarded for inquiry certain complaints of the same character brought against the deputy magistrate by Mr. Larmour, the manager of the affairs of the Bengal Indigo Company, and both the magistrate of Nuddea and the joint magistrate of Baraset have looked carefully into the cases adverted to by the complainants as containing evidence of the partiality and unfair dealing of the deputy magistrate, and reported to me on the subject.

3. The only one on which I am called upon to report is Mr. Mackenzie's. I have placed below his allegation side by side with abstract of the deputy magistrate's reply.

Mr. Mackenzie states that he has had the management of the Jinger-gatcha concern for the last four years, and until Abdool Luteef came to this part of the country there was never a complaint against him for forcibly sowing indigo, either in this district or Jessore. Since Abdool Luteef's coming a number of his ryots, presuming on the deputy magistrate's supposed favour towards them, have refused to sow. He had, he states, at this present moment, although there have been most favourable rains for sowing, 1,000 begahs of land and upwards unsown.

Mr. Mackenzie next complains of the style of Abdool Luteef's perwannahs. He is addressed by him in an uncourteous style, and the ryots knowing the contempt in which he is held by this man, take advantage of it and refuse to sow. These perwannahs are issued on the bare statement of ryots, taken without oath, and without any inquiry being held on the subject; moreover, without any proof of oppression on his (Mr. Mackenzie's) part, the deputy magistrate grants chupprassies to the ryots under the

4. The deputy magistrate replies that, without questioning the correctness of Mr. Mackenzie's statement that no complaints were previously lodged against him, of the truth of which he has no means of judging, he cannot admit the fact as proof that the present complaints are unfounded. His court was located at Kalarooah for the purpose of affording protection to all parties subjected to oppression, who, before the existence of his court, might be obliged to bear their wrongs in silence, rather than resort to courts situate at so great a distance as the sudder courts of Jessore, Nuddea and Baraset. He defies Mr. Mackenzie to produce any proof of undue favour towards the ryots, and it is no fault of his if Mr. Mackenzie has 1,000 beegahs of land unsown.

5. The deputy magistrate states in reply, that he addresses Messrs. Mackenzie and other gentlemen in the style which, as far as he has been able to ascertain, prevails in all other courts. He considers that it is not the deputy magistrate that is speaking in the perwannah, but the Government of the country through their courts of justice, and that it would be improper if the court addressed these gentlemen on equal terms (which is apparently what they wish), or made any difference in the style of address the plea of protecting them, and the consequence is that his own factory people are afraid to go into his own putnee and ijara villages.

address to rich or poor. He then refers to several perwannahs addressed to both indigo factories and zemindars by the magistrate of Nuddea, in which he says the style of address is exactly similar to that adopted by him.

6. The deputy magistrate then takes occasion to notice the disrespectful manner in which the gentlemen complaining have mentioned his name, and alluded to him throughout their letters.

7. With regard to the issue of the perwannahs complained of, he has only followed the practice of the courts. That when petitions are presented for protection against apprehended violence or oppression, it has never to his knowledge been the practice to require proof, but to issue a perwannah warning the party complained of against the apprehended violence or illegality. To show that he did not adopt this system hastily, he mentions that shortly after he was appointed to the sub-division, some ryots petitioned for two burkundauzes to be stationed in their village, to protect them from Mr. Mackenzie's people, who were about to plunder their village, out of revenge for not sowing indigo. Being at the time inexperienced, he applied for advice to Mr. Montresor, the magistrate of the district, who wrote in reply: "By all means send two burkundauzes to prevent Mr. Mackenzie's people bullying the ryots:" and he submits that this shows that whatever Mr. Dunbar may have heard of Mr. Mackenzie's character, Mr. Montresor was not altogether of the same opinion, or he would not have sanctioned his sending burkundauzes to protect the ryots against his people, upon the mere petition of the former, and without requiring any proof; and that whenever application was made on Mr. Mackenzie's part for protection against ryots bent upon offering personal violence, similar orders have been issued by him.

The last year a man of the name of Nobin Chunder Ghose, in combination with others, brought a false complaint against him and his servants. Finding that he would be unable to prove the case, he wrote to him (Mr. Mackenzie), saying, that if he would protect him from the other ryots, he was willing to compromise the matter. He agreed, and the case was accordingly compromised: this year the same man put in petitions that he, Mr. Mackenzie, wished to sow their lands forcibly. The deputy magistrate, without taking their statements on oath, granted them chupprassies to protect them from his alleged tyranny. These very ryots have now sown their indigo, and no notice has been taken of the false complaint made by them both this year and last.

That when his (Mr. Mackenzie's) ryots first leagued together this year not to sow indigo for him, he wrote to the deputy magistrate telling him of the circumstance, and warning him against the men who were conspiring against him; that the deputy magistrate took no notice whatever of his letter; but when these very men, against whom he had warned him, came and presented petitions complaining of oppression on his part, he, without inquiry into the matter,

8. In this case the deputy magistrate has not the nuthee to refer to, but he rests his defence on Mr. Mackenzie's own version of it. "In my opinion it does not appear that, because a man thought proper to withdraw his complaint, he should be punished for false complaint. Moreover, no attempt was made by Mr. Mackenzie to prove that the plaint was a false one." In explanation of his proceedings this year, he states that it not being known to him that the man had complained falsely against Mr. Mackenzie, and no objection being made by Mr. Mackenzie's mookhtar at the time, he saw no impropriety in ordering his police to protect the petitioner from oppression. That notice of what he had done was communicated to the magistrate of the district, who made no remark upon it. That Mr. Mackenzie himself never alleged to him that the complaint was a false one.

9. In reply to this, the deputy magistrate states that he received no letter from Mr. Mackenzie before the presentation of the petition of complaint against him. That his orders were passed on the petition on the 27th of March, and on the 1st of April Mr. Mackenzie's mookhtar delivered the letter, which, however, was dated the 25th March, at Jingeratcha, a place only 24 miles distant; that he cannot explain the delay, but had no cognizance of the letter until three days after the passing of the orders complained of. That, moreover, the names of the parties presenting the petition are not those given in Mr. Mackenzie's letter; that he took no further notice of the letter than to file it, because it contained no specific complaint against any body, and was not on stamped paper.

10. I think that, on the whole, the deputy magistrate has fairly answered all the allegations brought against him by Mr. Mackenzie. With regard to the style of address, there seems to have been a great difference of practice, and the deputy magistrate has proved that he did not intend to show any want of courtesy on the present occasion. To put an end to the diversity of practice now existing, and occasion of complaint arising therefrom, it would perhaps be well if the Sudder Court were requested to issue suitable instructions to all magistrates on the point in question.

11. With regard to the practice alleged against the deputy magistrate, of affording undue countenance to the ryots by issuing threatening perwannahs, and ordering burkundauzes to the village for the protection of the ryots, whenever a petition of apprehended violence is put in, I have somewhat more to say. The magistrate of Nuddea, his assistant, and the joint magistrate of Baraset, have all looked into the cases quoted against the deputy magistrate by the gentlemen who have complained, and all agree that he has unwittingly caused injustice to individuals by these orders. It is not to be denied that the ryots frequently require protection from the violence of indigo planters, determined that, cost what it may, indigo shall be sown in a certain village; but it is equally true that the ryot, after taking advances, and agreeing to cultivate indigo, is too ready to avail himself of any subterfuge, and defraud the planter of his advances. The deputy magistrate says that it has been ruled that, under such circumstances, the planter must have recourse to the civil courts, but there is no necessity for him to encourage the ryot in his fraudulent attempts to call upon the deputy magistrate to depute policemen to the spot in order to prevent violence, unless he really has reason to believe that violence will take place if he omits to do so. The assistant magistrate of Nuddea remarks as follows:

"4. It does not require much knowledge of the native character to know that if a ryot who has taken advances can find any way in which he can break his engagement with impunity, he will most assuredly take advantage of it, and this is what the ryots appear to have done in the case under review; for of course, when they knew that they had a burkundauz in the village to protect them, they would construe any attempt of the planter to get his indigo sown into an act of oppression; and from the fact of the deputy magistrate appointing a burkundauz to remain in their village whenever they asked him to do so, the ryots naturally supposed that he (the deputy magistrate) was siding with them against the planters. This is seen from the results, for not only have the ryots refused to sow, but in a great many instances they have broken up the indigo which they had sown.

"5. I am far from thinking that the deputy magistrate ever imagined that such would be the result of his orders; on the contrary, I think that all that he did was done with the best intentions; that he was not biassed against the planters, but that his great object was to prevent any breaches of the peace in his jurisdiction, and to protect the ryots from the planters, who he imagined were going to oppress them; but at the same time he seems to have lost sight of the fact, that the planters had as much right to protection as the ryots, and that his orders would have the effect of preventing those ryots sowing who were legally bound to do so."

12. Speaking of Mr. Larmour's complaints, the magistrate of Nuddea says:

"5. The orders of the deputy magistrate upon the petitions of the ryots are not so faultless. Without requiring the ryot to swear to the truth of his complaint, an order is recorded in which the oppression of the planter is assumed; and he is informed that if he does not desist from collecting armed men to coerce the ryots, he will be summoned in person for the purpose of being bound down to keep the peace.

"6. Burkundauzes

"6. Burkundauzes are at the same time deputed, not to prevent either party from committing a breach of the peace, but to protect the ryot from the aggressions of the planter.

"7. The order of the deputy magistrate upon the report of the darogah of Kaguzpookeria, in a case of Mr. Larmour, appears injudicious. The darogah reported that Mr. Larmour had not collected an illegal assembly of armed men at Bagancharah. The deputy magistrate, if he doubted the truth of this statement, might have tested it in any way he thought desirable; but he should not, without proof, have recorded in an emphatic manner that the Darogah was not to be believed, and that he was colluding with Mr. Larmour.

"8. The style of the perwannahs addressed to the planters by the deputy magistrate is obviously objectionable, and his explanation is not satisfactory.

"9. I am inclined to believe that the deputy magistrate is not influenced by improper motives; that he is desirous to perform his duties in good faith, and to the best of his judgment; but he has shown a want of discretion which has led to consequences which must be deplored, and which cannot easily be remedied."

13. The joint magistrate of Baraset, who inquired into the cases which occurred in his jurisdiction, states:

"6. The deputy magistrate, in his explanation, states that he has only followed the usual course in giving the Peechlapole ryots the muddud burkundauz; that he knew nothing of the circumstances under which the petitions were presented, and that Mr. Larmour has suffered no loss from any orders passed by him. With regard to the petition of the Kooshadangah ryots, that he knew nothing of the advances made to them, nor the indigo having already been sown; and that Mr. Larmour's mookhtar brought nothing to that effect to his notice when the petition was presented. That he promptly despatched his mohurir, at the request of Mr. Larmour, to inquire into the fact of the indigo having been sown, but passed no order upon the mohurir's report, because he had not actually seen the indigo being ploughed up, nor obtained any evidence that such was the case. The deputy magistrate, however, admits that he was satisfied the indigo was being broken up, and he states that he verbally told Mr. Larmour's mookhtar to bring forward his proof.

"7. I do not believe for a moment that the deputy magistrate ever intended to encourage the ryots in not completing their engagements with the factory, although his orders have certainly had that effect, and the loss to the factory has been considerable; I am sorry to say, however, that I do not think he has acted judiciously in the matter. The greater number of those ryots are Feerazees, a very troublesome set of people, and he should have been very cautious how he dealt with them. The villages of Kooshadangah and Peechlapole are within three miles of his cutcherry, and he might easily have ascertained, either from personal inspection or from inquiry, the truth or otherwise of the complaint made by the ryots before granting the muddud burkundauzes. This was doubtless an error in judgment on his part, but when he became aware that these Feerazees were taking advantage of his orders, and were actually breaking up the indigo plant, he should at once have taken measures to undeceive them, and to prevent the destruction of the plant. In the latter part of the fourth paragraph of his explanation the deputy magistrate says—'and how could my order on the petition of the Peechlapole people, granting them a muddud burkundauz, which was actually passed on the 23d, have encouraged the Kooshadangah men to petition a day earlier, i. e., on the 22d, is also a mystery to me.' This is not strictly correct, for the order to give the Peechlapole ryots the muddud burkundauz is dated the 21st April, although it was not actually given until the 23d idem."

14. It is clear from the above that the deputy magistrate has, in his desire to protect the ryot from oppression, and by resorting too readily to the practice of deputing police officers to protect ryots, without sufficient inquiry into the merits of the case, fallen into the error of overlooking the just claims of the other side.

15. Abdool Luteef is however a very intelligent and conscientious public officer, and I have no doubt that the injustice which he has unintentionally caused in some of the cases now brought under review will be a warning to him to avoid similar errors in future.

16. The enclosures of your letter are herewith returned. I have not thought it necessary to trouble the Lieutenant Governor with the letters of the magistrates and deputy magistrates, but if required they shall be sent in without a moment's delay.

From W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 1389), dated the 14th June 1854.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 7th instant, reporting the result of the inquiries which you were instructed to institute in my letter of the 12th ultimo.

2. The Lieutenant Governor desires me to say that he thinks the inquiry has been promptly, and at the same time carefully and impartially made, and that the acknowledgments of Government are due to the officers concerned in it.

3. The Lieutenant Governor is not disposed to differ from the conclusion at which you have arrived, as reported on the 14th and 15th paragraphs of your letter.

4. It is clear to his Honor, however, that without imputing to Moulvee Abdool Luteef anything worse than a great want of caution and judgment, a neglect of usual courtesy, and some appearance of prejudice, he has so conducted himself in a district largely devoted to the cultivation of indigo as to render it on the whole desirable that he should now be employed elsewhere.

5. The Lieutenant Governor proposes therefore to take the opportunity of Baboo Kissory Chand Mitter's appointment to the junior magistracy of Calcutta, to transfer Moulvie Abdool Luteef to the sub-division of Jehanabad.

From W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to
W. F. Fergusson, Esq., (No. 1368), dated the 14th June 1854.

Sir,

Paras. 3 to 5.

IN continuation of my letter dated the 12th ultimo, I am directed by the Lieutenant Governor to send you the accompanying extract of a communication made this day to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division.

— No. 3. —

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, (No. 402), dated the 3d November 1854.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to submit for the consideration of the Lieutenant Governor, copy of a report, No. 90, dated the 26th ultimo, from Mr. Beaufort, the joint magistrate and deputy collector of Pubna, on the expediency of re-enacting a law for enforcing the execution of contracts relating to the cultivation and delivery of the indigo plant.

2. Mr. Beaufort, after describing what he considers to have been the effects of rescinding Sections II. and III. of Regulation V. of 1830, recommends the re-enactment of these rules, but I am not prepared to support his recommendation, I am inclined to think that the interests of indigo planters are sufficiently protected by the unrepealed sections of Regulations VI. of 1823 and V. of 1830, and by Act No. X. of 1836, and I see no sufficient reason for making a breach of contract for the cultivation of indigo a criminal offence (as was done by Section III. Regulation V. of 1830), when according to the general principles of law it cannot be considered such. If the section in question were to be re-enacted, it would be held by the Company's courts to be both a civil and criminal offence; and the planter, besides having the option of instituting a summary suit against the ryot, would be enabled to get him imprisoned for one month for a misdemeanour. The cultivation of indigo may be, and no doubt is, a benefit to the country, but I can scarcely think that such extraordinary and anomalous measures are required for the protection of the interests of those who embark their capital in that speculation.

From F. Beaufort, Esq., Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Pubna, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 90, dated 26 October 1854).

Sir,

WHEN the Lieutenant Governor visited this station, he desired me to make a report to him, through you, regarding the expediency of re-enacting a law for enforcing the execution of contracts relating to the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant. I have since then made inquiries on the subject from various persons, and I have now the honour to furnish you with the conclusions which the information so obtained, and my own experience, have enabled me to draw.

2. You are aware that Section III. Regulation V. 1830, made the evasion by a ryot of his indigo contract punishable by a magistrate, in the same way as similar evasions of other contracts are punishable under Section V. Regulation VII. 1819; and that this provision was rescinded by Act XVI. 1835. The result of that rescission was and is, that if the ryots break the conditions of their agreements by a fraudulent transfer of the produce of their land to another person, or by refusing to cultivate the land with indigo, the aggrieved planter has no resource but what is to be found in the provisions of Regulation VI. 1823 and Act X. 1836. But experience has shown that this is insufficient. The observation contained in the preamble of the former of the last quoted enactments is still applicable to the case with the alteration of only one word. The system at present in force provides, as above observed, no other remedy for parties injured by this dishonest practice than by a [summary] action in the civil court. The difficulty and delay of obtaining redress by that course have not unfrequently led to acts of violence, and even to serious affrays.

3. The magistrate can in no way interfere, for if the planter brings a suit before him under Act IV. 1840, as having a quasi possession of the land, as obtained through advances in money and seed for its cultivation, he cannot interfere, since the Sudder Court have expressly ruled that the ryot who has cultivated, and not the person who has made advances, is to be held to be in possession of the land; and that the lien or interest which the planter holds under Section II. Regulation VI. 1823, should not be considered in such case.

4. In 1835 the Legislature had ceased to shadow forth in a preamble the reasons which had led to any enactment, and therefore it is not apparent why the rules of Regulation V. 1830 were rescinded; whether any inconvenience had been felt in practice from abuse of the power conferred, or other cause; or whether the Legislature of the day considered that any principle of law was contravened by those provisions. But as far as I can learn, there were very few complaints and very few convictions under it. It was originally enacted at the time of the great failures among the mercantile houses in Calcutta. The planters were all heavily in debt to those houses, and were much distressed for funds. When Palmer & Co. failed, the native zemindars took advantage of the consequent panic to induce the ryots to break off all their engagements with the planters, who at that time could not hold estates in their own name. This state of things was represented to Government by planters; and probably Lord William Bentinck saved indigo property in Bengal from utter destruction by passing the regulation in question.

5. I am assured by old planters that the effect of it was merely to keep matters quiet. The zemindars ceased to instigate their ryots to break off their contracts; and the planters feeling themselves more secure were enabled to carry on their concerns without having recourse to the compulsion and physical force to which the state of affairs had driven them. There was no complaint, they say, of oppression arising from the law; and they are not aware of the reasons which led to its repeal. Its enactment produced no evil, while its rescission has sown the seeds of numberless quarrels, from which has sprung a full harvest of assaults, plunderings, illegal detentions, and affrays.

6. But the question for present consideration is, whether a law of this kind be now required or not; and whether it would be productive of more good than evil. That its provisions will be to some extent abused, that there are men among the planters who will not scruple to take a dishonest advantage of it, is not to be denied. But this is not a sufficient reason for refusing the prayer of the large body of honourable men who do not, and will not, have recourse to such fraudulent practices. For there are many laws of which rogues make daily use, but which cannot on that account be taken out of the books. A forged bond is the common weapon of enmity, but the courts cannot refuse on that account to enforce those which are not fraudulent. Not admitting therefore this plea against the enactment, I proceed to investigate the arguments in its favour.

7. In the present state of the law, if the ryots who have taken advances refuse to act up to their contracts, the planter has no other remedy than a civil suit. It will hardly be denied that this is in fact no remedy at all. The civil prosecution of a large number of ryots involves a large expenditure, the greater portion of which can never be recovered. It is also a tedious process, although called summary, during the progress of which the planter sustains additional loss. We find therefore that very few cases of this nature are instituted, although breach of contract is of frequent occurrence. In lieu of it, the planter has recourse to physical force; the consequences of which are injury and oppression with affrays.

8. But the reason for this frequent breach of contract is not to be found among the ryots. They can find no ultimate advantage in not fulfilling their engagements. It is the zemindars who instigate them to evade their agreements, and who make use of the tremendous power they possess to prevent the cultivation of indigo in whole villages, and sometimes in whole estates. The ryots are always glad enough to take advances, because it gives them the means of paying their rents, and for the same reason the zemindars do not interfere before the time has arrived for sowing. It is well known that the agents of the landholders are at hand to receive the rents when the advances are being made, and are often present in the planter's cutcherry for that purpose. The money thus secured by the ryot and placed to his credit, he has no objection to throw the planter overboard, provided he has some powerful person to back him and save him from his vengeance. There is no doubt but that he has, whether reasonably or unreasonably, a great aversion to indigo. He believes there are many other crops which yield a more certain as well as a larger profit. I have heard planters argue the contrary, and produce proofs of it, but the idea in the ryot's mind remains the same. When, therefore, he is desired by the agent not to cultivate any indigo, on pain of the zemindar's displeasure, he sees no profit in refusing obedience. He has pocketed the advances; he knows that his landlord has ample power to oppress him, and he hopes that he will secure him from the planter. He has no hesitation in signing an ekhar to break his contract.

9. Probably the planter hears nothing of what is going on; appearances are kept up; a shower of rain falls, and the takadgeer is immediately sent to the spot with the seed. Then the disturbance commences; the takadgeer is obliged to run, and the seed is destroyed. The next day the planter is told that, instead of the lands being sown when the opportunity offered, the ryots have with one accord repudiated their advances, turned his servants out of the villages, and filled the lands with dhan.

10. What is he to do? There is no remedy to be found in the law; a great loss is impending over him; and there are only two ways of avoiding it. He must either use physical force, and compel the ryots to fulfil their contracts at the point of the stick, or he must come to terms with the zemindar, if indeed that be possible; sible; that is to say, he must make large presents to the zemindars' omlah, and pay black mail to the man himself, under the plea of old rents, which in fact he does not owe, or take leases of the villages on losing jummas.

11. If the Bill which has lately been read in the Legislative Council becomes law, a recurrence to the lattia system will expose him to heavy punishments, and he will be entitled to claim the enactment of some other law which will really protect his interests from losses of this kind. But even under the present law, the appeal to physical force is attended with great expense and great annoyance in many ways. For the sake of peace, therefore, many planters consent to the zemindars' exactions, if not too immoderate. The consequence is, that the law in some measure assists the zemindar in levying what is in fact a heavy tax, and adds so much to the difficulties and expense of planting, repressing the commerce of the country in one of its most valuable products. And it must be remembered that the large amount of ready money annually expended by the planters has a very material effect on the revenues of the country.

12. But it may be that the zemindar will not consent to any terms; he may have a personal feeling to gratify in destroying the cultivation of a concern; he may refuse to lease his villages to the planter on any terms; and at the same time prevent his ryots from growing indigo. And I beg to say that I have seen instances of this. In such case if the zemindar has large estates, in which an indigo concern has been cultivating for years, he has it in his power to injure it in a very serious degree. In fact, he is sometimes able to shut up one or two of the factories.

13. To obviate these difficulties the planter is always willing to obtain landed property if possible. He rarely has the opportunity of getting anything better than a putnee; generally he must be content with a short lease. But for either he must pay very high, and agree to a rent on which he will suffer a yearly loss. To this he will submit readily, if within his means, and is liberal in the settlement, because he finds a great profit in it in freedom from quarrels, and in the power which it gives him over the ryots.

14. The proposed re-enactment would provide a remedy for much of this, and prevent the undue interference of the zemindar. If the ryots can be brought to immediate punishment, the breach of contract will be a rare occurrence. The planter will not spend money in vain; the zemindar will be obliged to have recourse to the not illegal exercise of his power over his ryots in preventing them from taking advances, instead of first taking and then repudiating them, and the frequent disturbances between the two will cease to occur.

15. But if such an enactment is to be made law, we must provide against the probable abuse of it by unscrupulous men. The general tone of the planters has improved of late years; and the present body contains men of higher principle than formerly. But in legislating you make a law applicable to all cases and all classes, and you cannot depend on individual character. Planting is carried on by natives as well as Europeans, by men of evil as well as of good repute. Jessore and Nuddea especially are studded over with shut-up factories, in almost all of which there are large outstanding balances against the ryots, under the name of advances; for in balancing the account of the ryot at the close of the season, it is frequently the custom to pay for the indigo brought to the vats without deducting the advances made, and thus to leave a balance against him which is still called an advance.

16. No contract, therefore, ought to be valid beyond the current season. Each indigo year should have its own contracts duly executed at the time the advances are made. They should specify the amount of advances, the extent of land which the ryot contracts to cultivate, and the boundaries of each field which is to be cultivated; and every contract ought to be registered in the presence of the planter, or his agent, and the ryot.

17. This would raise a difficulty in regard to the offices of registry; for neither could the planter and the ryots find time to attend at the sudder station for this purpose, nor could the former afford to pay for each of some hundreds of contracts the sum which it costs now to register any document, whether of small or of great importance. Registrars must be provided near at hand, and the charge must be fixed very low.

18. In the vicinity of the sudder stations, or of the head-quarters of sub-divisions, such contracts might be registered before the collector or magistrate, or the officer in charge of the sub-divisions. But in more remote positions it will be necessary to appoint respectable natives, who should at the same time be made liable to severe penalties for any misfeasance. And in all cases every contract registered should be forwarded for record to a central office within a limited period. Such subordinate registrars should not be allowed to take Mokhtarnamahs, though they might admit general powers of attorney accepted by the regular courts. Everything should be done by the parties contracting in person and on the spot, so as to give the greatest possible publicity to the proceeding. These subordinate registrars would be of the same class as the sale commissioners appointed under Act I. 1839, and I think the expedient would be found to answer.

19. On the whole, it seems to me that the original rule of Regulation V. 1830 might be re-enacted without danger to the public, and with much advantage to parties engaged in the cultivation of indigo. And it certainly appears to me that every just facility should be given to persons engaged in a branch of commerce so important in itself, and which is so beneficial to the country at large.

CIRCULAR from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to the Commissioners of Revenue and Circuit, Patna, Bhagulpore, Dacca, Chittagong, Nuddea, Burdwan and Cuttack Divisions; the Commissioner of Chota Nagpore; the Civil and Sessions Judges and Magistrates of Jessore, Nuddea, Rajshahye, Moorshedabad, Pubna, Midnapore, Tirhoot, and Purneah; W. Tayler, Esq., Judge of Shahabad; S. Bowring, Esq., Judge of Dacca; C. Steer, Esq., Judge of Backergunge, J. S. Torrens, Esq., Judge of 24-Pergunnahs; G. U. Yule, Esq., Offg. Judge of Rungpore; and H. Atherton, Esq., Offg. Judge of Sarun, (No. 3079, dated 14 December 1854).

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to forward to you a copy of the letter noted on the margin, relating to a question of re-enacting a law for summarily enforcing the execution of contracts entered into for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant, and to request that you will favour the Lieutenant Governor with your opinion regarding the suggestions made by Mr. Beaufort.

Letter from Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, No. 402, dated the 3d November 1854, with one enclosure.

From A. C. Bidwell, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 4, dated 4 January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, dated 14 ultimo, forwarding copy of a letter from the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, No. 402, dated 3 November 1854, with its enclosure, and requesting that I will favour the Lieutenant Governor with my opinion on the suggestions made by Mr. Beaufort.

2. Mr. Beaufort's suggestion is, that the rules of Sections II. and III. Regulation V. of 1830, be re-enacted, with a view of enforcing the execution of contracts relating to the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant, to which Mr. Gouldsbury objects that the interests of indigo planters are sufficiently protected by the law still in force, and that there is no sufficient reason for making a breach of contract to cultivate indigo a criminal offence, when according to the general principles of law it cannot be considered such.

3. I cannot agree with Mr. Gouldsbury in thinking that the interests of planters are sufficiently protected by the law in force; proof to the contrary exists in the notorious fact that planters are constantly driven to resort to physical force, in order to obtain their rights from the ryots, the peculiar nature of the cultivation of of indigo being such that ruinous loss to the planter ensues if immediate advantage is not taken of occurrences of suitable weather for sowing.

4. Besides, the primary object of the proposed law is not to protect the interests of the indigo planter, but to preserve the peace. The indigo planter is a man of energy, and, if the law will not protect him, will protect himself by threats and violence; and will continue to do so however stringent may be the provisions of the law proscribing the entertainment of lattials, &c. Under such circumstances, it is surely not opposed to the general principles of law to afford, even by special enactment, that protection to the planter which the nature of his calling renders necessary, and which is so essential that if withheld it inevitably leads to a breach of the peace.

5. It is not the overbearing character of the European which leads him to resort to violent means to protect his interests in the cultivation of indigo, but the peculiar nature of that cultivation. Europeans are engaged all over the country in general agricultural pursuits, but I have never heard it said of them that they were more prone to violence than any other class of the community, in defending their rights, when an indigo crop is not concerned.

6. But there are certain contracts the breach of which is by the present law constituted a misdemeanour, see Section V. Regulation VII. of 1819. If I make a contract with certain workmen to construct a fence round my field, the breach of that contract on their part is a misdemeanour punishable with a month's imprisonment. Why should not a contract to raise a crop of indigo in the field itself be entitled to the same protection, especially when the ordinary resources of the law are so impotent to protect me that I am driven to break the law in order to obtain my just rights.

7. I am labouring under the same disadvantage with Mr. Beaufort as regards knowledge of the grounds which led to the enactment of Act XVI. of 1835. But I have never heard that the provisions which it repealed (those of Sections II. and III. of Regulation V. of 1830) were abused.

8. At the same time, I agree with Mr. Beaufort that precautions should be taken against their abuse if re-enacted, and would make the proposed enforcement by penal measures of the contract conditional upon the previous registry of that contract.

9. The present state of the law of registry renders this impracticable. But I trust that the time is not far distant when the universal registry of deeds will be insisted on—the fee being reduced to 8 annas, and every moonsiff constituted a registrar. This is a measure which I think urgently demanded.

From E. A. Samuells, Esq., Commissioner of the Cuttack Division, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 128, dated 12 January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, of the 14th ultimo, forwarding for my opinion copies of letters from the Commissioner of Rajshahye and the joint Magistrate of Pubna, relative to the re-enactment of a law for summarily enforcing, through means of the Criminal Court, the execution of contracts for the cultivation of indigo.

2. I agree with Mr. Gouldsbury that such a law is uncalled for by any specialities of the indigo trade. The indigo planter has already an amount of protection afforded him by the civil law, in his dealings with the cultivators, which has not been conceded to any other class of manufacturers or agriculturists; and I am strongly impressed with the opinion that it is this system of protection which has encouraged the lax and reckless contracts, of the frequent evasion of which the planters now complain.

3. It is to be observed that these complaints proceed principally from the Bengal planters. In Tirhoot, before a planter advances money to a ryot, he secures a long lease of the lands from the zemindar, and makes a friend of him by paying him a heavy peshgee. In the same way merchants, who advance for rice and other agricultural products, take care either to deal with responsible parties, like the mahajun or the zemindar, or to take security for the fulfilment of the contract on the part of the ryot. The Bengal planters not only neglect these ordinary mercantile precautions, but they are in the constant habit of making advances without security to the ryots of zemindars, from whose co-operation they know they have nothing to expect, and of whose enmity they are in many cases aware. Men who act in this way cannot be said to trade; they gamble, and, but for the law, which makes a distinction between their contracts and those of other traders, they would pay a much more severe penalty for their rashness than they do.

From H. Stainforth, Esq., Commissioner of the Chittagong Division, to
A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 33, dated 13 January 1855).

Sir,

I BEG to acknowledge your letter, No. 3079, of the 14th ultimo, and to submit the following remarks on the recommendations of Mr. Beaufort, for the consideration of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

2. The relative position of the parties, whose interests are involved in Mr. Beaufort's recommendations, seems to be as follows:—

3. The planter's factory is surrounded by the land of other parties, on which indigo must be raised for him, or he must close his factory erected at great expense.

4. If he can obtain a lease of it from the landholder, little power is left to oppose what he is able and ready to bring to bear on the ryot, and matters proceed generally in conformity with his will. But it often happens that a landholder asks a higher rent than the planter is willing, or perhaps able, to pay; or he is indisposed, from some cause or other, to let his estate to the planter, and thus no lease is effected.

5. The planter is then driven to deal with the ryots, without the powers and influence which a lease from the landholder would have given him. Moreover, the zemindar, disappointed in not obtaining the jumma which he asked, or owing the planter a grudge, or averse to having his estate covered with a crop which he cannot sell in distraint for rent due to him; or unwilling to be supplanted in the influence which, as landlord, he thinks himself entitled to hold among the tenantry of his estate; or perhaps even desirous of protecting his tenants from the oppression which planters invariably and necessarily exercise more or less, of course thwarts the planter as much as possible.

6. The ryots generally have a hard time of it under the planters. They know that when a shower falls they must be compelled to assist in cultivation, or the opportunity for sowing will be lost; that when a river rises, they must be compelled to assist in cutting the crop, or it will be destroyed by the water, and they feel that they had much better go on more majorum cultivating other crops, which Mr. Beaufort admits to be more profitable than indigo; but some are tempted by advances to execute engagements, while others have engagements written out in their names, and advances forced upon them, or not given at all. Such contracts are of course readily broken, and no great influence, if any, on the part of the zemindar seems necessary to induce the ryots to break them.

7. This I believe to be the real state of the case; and it is clear on the premises that the cultivation of indigo in Bengal is in a false position, and that it can only be carried on with any degree of fairness when the interests of the planter and the ryot are, in some measure, assimilated by their standing, in respect to each other, in the relation of landlord and tenant, in which relation it would be more impolitic on the planter than it is at present to lessen the income and resources of the ryots.

8. Mr. Beaufort sees danger of fraud, and he would appoint persons to register the contracts near the factories, as a protection to the ryots; but quis custodiet ipsos ipsos custodes? It requires no special power of prescience to say, with certainty of correctness, that, even as the sale commissioners are the ready tools of the landholder's oppression, these proposed registrars would be willing instruments to wink at the personation of any number of ryots by any single servant of the indigo planter. Such registration, as protection, would be wholly illusory. If it would have any effect, the effect could only be pernicious.

9. I need scarcely add, that until I came to the conclusion that the weak and poor, who form the great mass of the population, should be made weaker and poorer for the benefit of a small body of men, many of whom are very unscrupulous and oppressive, I am not likely to concur in Mr. Beaufort's recommendations.

From W. Dampier, Esq., Commissioner of the Patna Division, to W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 1197, dated 18 January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Under Secretary Russell's letter, No. 3079, of the 14th December last, with its enclosures, requesting my opinion regarding the suggestion made by Mr. F. L. Beaufort, joint magistrate of Pubna, for the re-enactment of a law similar to the rescinded parts of Regulation V. of 1830, making a breach of contract for the cultivation of indigo punishable as a misdemeanor.

I am not prepared to support such a proposition, which would be a retrograde step in legislation. The entire system of advances in Bengal, as described in the preamble to Regulation VI. of 1823, is an evil one; and I can see no more reason for declaring a breach of contract for the cultivation of indigo punishable as a criminal offence than for declaring the same punishment for the breach of contract for the cultivation of any other produce.

I have always understood that the cultivation of indigo was not generally remunerative to the ryots, and might be considered more or less compulsory.

The advances are sometimes as recklessly given as received, the planter trusting to his own means of enforcing the cultivation, which he knows the ryot will, if possible, evade. It would be almost impracticable, as proposed by Mr. Beaufort, to separate the hal from the bakya advance. Factories are worked on the outstanding balances with additional advances, and the result of Mr. Beaufort's plan would be, in the ryots being annually made to give an acknowledgment of having received the whole sum hal and bakya.

Since British subjects have been competent to hold lands in India they have, by means of purchasing estates or taking farms where they cultivate indigo, acquired the legitimate influence of property over the cultivators, and I have understood that in many such properties the system of making advances is gradually falling into disuse. In such estates, besides the neizjole of the proprietor, the ryots of the village each cultivate a portion of their lands, according to the extent of their holding or its fitness for such cultivation, with indigo, and the value of the crop as delivered at the factory is credited to the rent of their remaining lands. Under this plan it is the interest of the ryot to produce as good a crop as he can, whilst it is advantageous to the planter, as he manufactures his indigo at a much less direct outlay of capital than under the advance system, and is not obliged to resort to usurious loans.

I consider Mr. Beaufort's suggestion as bad, it tending to protect and perpetuate a system which is an evil, and to place the ryot in a state of subjection to the planter in which he ought not to be continued by any legal enactment.

From C. T. Davidson, Esq., Commissioner of the Dacca Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 45, dated 26 January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, dated 14 ultimo, forwarding for my opinion copy of some suggestions made by the joint magistrate of Pubna, on the subject of summarily enforcing contracts for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant.

2. Mr. Beaufort's report contains the following suggestions :

1st. He advocates the re-enactment of the rules contained in Regulation V. of 1830.

2dly. He suggests that each indigo year should have its own contracts, that no contracts should extend beyond the current year, and that such contracts ought to be registered.

3dly. He recommends the establishment of local registry offices, and great reduction in the registry fee required by Regulation XX. of 1812.

3. The rules proposed to be re-enacted are, I presume, those contained in Section III., Regulation V. of 1830, for although by Act XVI. of 1835, Section II. of that law was also rescinded, it was again revived by Section III., Act X. of 1836. The section to be re-enacted makes a breach of contract to cultivate and deliver indigo a criminal act, punishable by imprisonment.

4. It cannot be denied that the cultivation of indigo is a fruitful source of the serious affrays which are of frequent occurrence in those districts wherein the manufacture of indigo is carried on. I have no doubt that the protection which would be afforded to the indigo planter by the re-enactment of Section III. Regulation V. of 1830, would materially reduce the many breaches of the peace arising out of evasion of contracts by ryots who have received advances for the cultivation of indigo. For the suppression of affrays a most stringent Bill is under the consideration of the Legislature, and if special legislation is to be resorted to for the repression of breaches of the peace, it may be fairly asked why should it not be extended to the removal of an evil which is one of the chief promoters of them.

5. The suggestion of confining indigo contracts to one year appears to me to be an excellent one, and the benefit of a summary investigation should be restricted to claims and disputes belonging to the current year only, as in suits for land rent.

6. The establishment of local registry offices, merely for recording indigo contracts, is a plan which could not be carried out without considerable difficulty.

From G. J. Brown, Esq., Commissioner of the Bhaugulpore Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No 83, dated 24 February 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Under Secretary Russell's circular, No. 3079, dated 14 December last, with enclosures, regarding the propriety of re-enacting a law for summarily enforcing the execution of contracts entered into for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant.

2. As far as I can learn from inquiries made by me on the subject, there is no occasion for reviving the penal enactments of Regulation V. 1830 in this division, and I quite agree with the Commissioner of Rajshahye in considering that such anomalous measures are not required for the protection of indigo planters. The only plea which can be urged for magisterial interference in such cases, is the dilatoriness of civil court, and the proper remedy for the evil complained of should therefore be directed toward simplifying the processes of the latter instead of extending the powers of the former.

3. Act XVI. of 1835 does not assign any reason for rescinding the provisions of Sections II. and III. Regulation V. 1830, though doubtless Government had at that time good grounds for repealing the then existing law; and I respectfully submit that a reference to the proceedings of the Legislative Department of that period may probably suffice to refute all the arguments now advanced by Mr. Beaufort in favour of the former practice.

From W. H. Elliott, Esq. Officiating Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No 33, dated the 22nd March 1855).

Sir,

In reply to your circular of the 14th December last, No. 3079, regarding the re-enactment of Section III. Regulation V. of 1830, which rendered a breach of contract for the cultivation of indigo a criminal offence, I have the honour to submit, with all deference, the following remarks:—

2. The whole system of cultivating of indigo in Lower Bengal is so radically bad, that I believe there are few planters who are not compelled at times to resort to violent measures, which their better feelings disapprove, for the preservation of their factories from ruin. I do not here allude to those acts of gross injustice and open violence which admit of no palliation; but I know from personal experience that planters, who would scorn such acts, do too often consider themselves obliged to take land for indigo against the will of the ryot who has refused advances, and to force advances upon others.

3. Having served in the largest indigo district in India, and in others of considerable importance, I have seen no little of the working of the system; and I regret to say that I never yet heard of one instance in Bengal of a ryot gaining substance by the cultivation of indigo. The gomashas and other omla, the takadgeers, and other subordinates of indigo factories, constantly amass wealth, more or less, but the fact of a mere cultivator of indigo having become wealthy in Bengal has never yet been brought to my notice. Indeed, under the present system, strange as it may appear, the wealth of the ryots is inconsistent with the well-being of the factory, which depends upon keeping a ryot invariably upon the debit side of the account, as the only hold which the planter has upon the land for the next year.

4. Mr. Beaufort acknowledges in his 8th paragraph that, “the ryot has no doubt, reasonably or unreasonably, a great aversion to indigo, because he believes there are many other crops which yield a more certain as well as a larger profit.” In another part of the same paragraph Mr. Beaufort says, “the ryots are glad enough to take advances, because they give them the means of paying their rents.” I think it may fairly be argued, from these two statements taken together, that no ryot who can otherwise pay his rents will take advances for indigo, and this fact my own experience attests. I have known instances in which, circumstances having led to the abandonment of certain villages by planters, the ryots have been for some years free. Suddenly the loss of an ijara, or the commencement of a feud in another quarter, has turned the planter’s attention to such villages, and the ryots have been called upon to take advances, which one and all have refused. The factory books have then been searched, and it has been found that the father of A and the uncle of B, and the elder brother of C, once held the lands now in the possession of those three individuals; and were, at the time of their decease, indebted in various trifling sums to the factory. The unlucky ryots were then called upon to pay the debts of their predecessors; acknowledgments of those debts with promises to pay, prepared by some unscrupulous subordinate of the factory, have then perhaps been shown to the proprietor, who naturally praised the good management of his omla, and authorised advances to the villagers, part of which being retained by the omla, the rest would be given with many threats in presence of many factory servants to the unlucky ryots, whose fields, for years devoted to more profitable crops, would thenceforth be sown with indigo. No effort of the ryot in the supply of indigo could efface the advance made to him; and no cash-payment in liquidation of that advance could be accepted; for, as I have already said, the grand object is to keep the ryots always on the debit side of the book, as the only lien which the factory has upon the land.

5. That ryots do often obtain assistance by cash advances from indigo planters, to escape the rapacity of zemindars, is undeniable. I have known many a kind act done by a planter in thus helping a ryot; but, on the other hand, the return which the ryot has to make is to him most ruinous; and it would be strange indeed if the ryot, knowing indigo to be amongst the least profitable of crops, should voluntarily enter upon its cultivation.

A bundle consists of as much indigo plant as can be encircled by a six feet chain.

6. It is also a notorious fact, that the ryot does not get as much placed to his credit as his crop, if fairly paid for, would yield. I have heard many calculations made which go to prove that five bundles of indigo are as much as can possibly be given, with any hope of remuneration to the cultivator, for one rupee; but the general rate taken in Bengal I believe to be eight or nine bundles; and further, the measurement of bundles is made in various ways. At times the chain is passed round the bundle so as to form what may be called just measure; at other times the two ends are pulled with such force by two takadgeers that a bundle and half is compressed within the chain; the degree of strain to be used is, not improbably, regulated by the payment or non-payment of a douceur by the ryot.

7. I am quite unable to understand on what ground a law is required for the cultivation of indigo, more stringent than that needed for paddy or sugar-cane. Surely, in these days, when the liberty of the subject is so respected as to give undue safety to evil doers, a ryot should not be forced by a criminal enactment to cultivate a crop which sad experience has shown him to yield no profit.

8. I have myself occasionally seen indigo cultivated willingly; that crop will grow upon sandy churs where almost nothing else will flourish. On such a chur, were a ryot paid at the end of each season for the indigo delivered by him, and acquitted of all claims for the future, many a man would be glad to cultivate; but the known impossibility of extricating himself from the books of a factory, in which his name has once been entered; the certainty that all the land cultivated this year, and perhaps an additional piece also, will be claimed next year by the factory, may well make every ryot fearful of such a connexion.

9. The conduct of the native landholders with regard to indigo factories is not always so bad as it is represented. The native naturally desires to make the best bargain he can. The revenue laws give him an awful power over his tenants; and, in order to make the planter pay a high price for his putnee or ijara, he tells his ryots that they must not cultivate indigo without his permission. This provokes the planter, and he tries to force the ryots, who appeal to their landlord, whose pecuniary interest is at stake, and undoubtedly he has a right to get the utmost he can for his property. The same thing is done every day in other matters, without exciting animadversion. I saw not long ago in Calcutta a dirty little patch of ground, adjoining a fine house of a rich man, and asked how he could tolerate it. He said he could not help it, as the ground was not his. It was worth about 100 rupees; he had offered 2,500 (but its owner demanded 5,000), and he could not take it by force! The zemindar's demands are exorbitant; for the simple reason that they know the factories cannot get on without their lands. The planters are annoyed, and feuds ensue. If no planter would commence an indigo factory till he could secure the full amount of land necessary for its support, very few disturbances would arise, and less oppression of the ryots would be needed: as is the case generally with native indigo factories. A very large extent of country belongs to the zemindar; he makes no advances of cash, but gives the ryots seed, and requires a certain proportion of the land of every village to be sown with indigo; for the produce of that land he pays at the end of the season; not much perhaps, but a moderate remuneration. The ryot, however, is free for the next year; he is not indebted to the factory, and perhaps the next year some other ryot's land may be taken.

10. Again, in Tirhoot and Behar, where the advance system is not prevalent, and the ryots are more fairly paid at the end of the season, and the planters are on a better footing with each other and with the zemindars, indigo cultivation is a much easier matter than in Bengal. Many of the planters are highly respected; I can mention an instance of this, which came under my own observation, to the honour honour of Mr. William Moran, of Mooteeharee, now an indigo broker in Calcutta. After the failure of the Union Bank and Cockerell & Co., who were his agents, he had no money and no seed, and was in Calcutta making the best he could of a bad job. His factories were under the charge of a country-born writer, very lame and not very energetic. And, day after day, I rode over the neighbourhood and saw his lands cultivated as well, by the voluntary efforts of his ryots, as in his palmiest days. At the eleventh hour he got a little seed and sent it up. It was sown, and he had an excellent season, and has since cleared off all incumbrances, and is, I hope and believe, a wealthy man.

11. In the same district I saw, oft and again, that with regard to the 100,000 registered cultivators of poppy, the greatest punishment that could be inflicted on them was to get their names cut out of the sub-deputy opium agent's books. No force was required to increase that cultivation. It pays so well that every man is anxious to be allowed to supply opium; and that led to the chief grievance of the factories of that district, that each ryot was anxiously looking to sowing less indigo if he might sow more poppy.

12. I do not see how it can be doubted that, if a ryot were well paid for cultivating indigo, he would gladly do it. Nor do I see how the Legislature can be asked to assist in the forcible extension of a crop which confessedly does not pay, and leads the ryots concerned in it into endless annoyances. The registered contracts (which even Mr. Beaufort thinks necessary to guard against oppression and fraud) will, I believe, prove utterly useless; and, with the kindest feelings to many honourable indigo planters, I am compelled to express a hope that the repealed law in question will not be re-enacted, and that the planters will, in lieu thereof, adopt a better system of management.

From W. J. Allen, Esq., Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 63, dated the 14th April 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, dated the 14th of December last, with annexed correspondence, calling for my opinion upon the suggestions made by Mr. Beaufort, the joint magistrate and deputy collector of Pubna, in regard to the re-enactment of a law for enforcing summarily the execution of contracts for the cultivation and delivery of indigo.

2. I have had some experience as a magistrate of an indigo district, and have seen indigo planting carried on both before and after the enactment of Act XVI. of 1835, and I am quite satisfied that the effects of that law have been and are very injurious. There appears to have been no necessity for the repeal of Sections III. and IV. Regulation V. of 1830, which afforded useful protection to the planting interest, and gave dissatisfaction only to roguish ryots and dishonest zemindars.

3. Under the present law a planter has no real remedy against a fraudulent ryot, and the consequence is, that he is not unfrequently driven to violent measures to obtain that protection for his property which the law denies him.

4. I would recommend the repeal of Act XVI. of 1835, and the formation at the same time of a well-devised system of cheap and expeditious registration of indigo contracts; if these contracts are properly registered, the provisions of Regulation V. of 1830 could not be turned into an instrument of oppression.

5. I consider Mr. Beaufort's suggestions regarding the registration of indigo contracts to be well worthy of attention; the pergunnah cazees, the sale commissioners, and other respectable residents in the mofussil, might be employed with advantage to register indigo contracts.

From W. Luke, Esq., Civil and Sessions Judge of Midnapore, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 1, dated the 4th January 1855).

Sir,

Letter from Commissioner of Circuit and Revenue, Rajshahye, No. 402, of the 3d November 1854, with one enclosure.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, dated the 14th ultimo, forwarding copies of letters noted in the margin, requesting me to give an opinion of the expediency of altering the law for summarily enforcing the execution of contracts entered into for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant, as suggested by Mr. Beaufort, the joint magistrate of Pubna.

Mr. Beaufort, in the 2d paragraph of his letter, observes that the result of the rescission of Section III. Regulation V. of 1830, "was and is, that if the ryots break the conditions of their agreements by a fraudulent transfer of the produce of their land to another person, or by refusing to cultivate the land with indigo, the aggrieved planter has no redress but what is to be found in the provisions of Regulation VI. of 1823 and Act X. of 1836, but experience has shown that this is insufficient." The grievances to which Mr. Beaufort adverts existed long before Regulation V. of 1830 was promulgated, and that enactment was framed to meet cases such as Mr. Beaufort describes, and were certainly not the result of the rescission of Section III. of that enactment. My experience does not tell me that the law, as it at present exists, is insufficient for the protection of planters against the dishonesty of ryots; a breach of contract usually occurs by a hostile neighbour or the zemindar inducing parties who have taken advances for indigo plant to depart from their agreement, and in such cases the law, as it now stands by Section III. Regulation X. of 1836, seems to me to afford ample redress, not only against the defaulters themselves, but against all others who may be instrumental in prevailing on ryots to commit a breach of contract.

The difficulty and delay in obtaining redress by a civil action, which Mr. Beaufort points out, is in my opinion exaggerated, but if these really exist the contemplated changes in our civil courts will supply a remedy.

Class legislation under any circumstances is objectionable, and I see no reason why indigo more than any other product of the country should receive the special protection of the Legislature, as it is well known to all who have had any experience in districts where the cultivation of indigo prevails that it is a forced cultivation.

There are many causes for this. In the first place it is a most exhausting crop, and land repeatedly sown with it deteriorates every year. In the next place it, is in the long run a losing crop to the ryot. He may be induced to grow it for the sake of the advances, which gives him a command of money at a moment when he may much require it; having once, however, entered into engagements he is no longer a free agent; his land is pledged to the planter, and he is seldom or never able to redeem it. At the close of each year he still finds himself, from some cause or other, debtor to the factory, and therefore compelled to sow indigo with a view to clear off his debt (a result never likely to occur), or to suffer the consequences of refusal.

None but the needy will voluntarily engage to sow indigo plant, and in support of this fact I would observe, that the first object of a planter in establishing an indigo factory is to secure the proprietary right in the land where his future operations are to be carried on; by this means he obtains power over the ryots, and his first step in furtherance of his object is to require all those holding lands adapted to the growth of indigo plant to set apart a portion for that purpose. This requisition is strictly enforced by the servants of the factory, who measure off the lands, superintend the sowing, weeding, and subsequent reaping of the crop, and no solicitations or remonstrances on the part of the ryot are of any avail. The ryot receives a fair remuneration for his labour, as far as the planter himself is aware, but it passes through so many hands from the factory dewan to the lowest takeedar, that by the time it reaches the party entitled to it, it is so shorn of its proportions that it is no longer an adequate return for the article supplied, or the time and labour bestowed upon it. Can it then be a matter of surprise, that the ryot should be unwilling to resign his independence and means of support, by voluntarily making engagements that he knows full well must terminate to his detriment? Certainly not; and, for these reasons, I think it would be impolitic to make the laws in regard to indigo contracts more stringent in their provisions than they are at present.

Whether willing or otherwise.

From S. Bowring, Esq., Judge of Zillah Dacca, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 9, dated the 6th January 1855).

Sir,

IN reply to your circular, No. 3079, dated 14th ultimo, I have the honour to state, that I consider it highly desirable that the repealed sections of Regulation V. of 1830 should be re-enacted, or that some new law providing for the execution of contracts should be added to the code.

2. I quite agree in the reasons urged by Mr. Beaufort, but would beg to observe that, to the best of my recollection, Mr. Sconce, at the time judge of Chittagong, proposed some years ago that contracts for the delivery of goods, if registered by competent authority, should have the force of a decree of court. Mr. Beaufort proposes that persons should, in certain cases, be appointed for the purpose of registering contracts to supply indigo plant; but when the value of the crop which the ryots may engage to deliver falls below 300 rupees, such duty might, I think, be performed by the moonsiff of the sub-division. If the registered cabooleent be declared equivalent to a decree of court, the planter, on the neglect or refusal the ryot to cultivate, might take out immediate execution, and any resistance offered might be made penal under the provisions of the Act.

3. Zemindars and planters have generally vakeels or agents at the moonsiff's cutcherries, which would be a great check on the personation of one ryot by another, while there would always be a risk of this, if persons of inferior rank in life, at whose offices few parties are usually in attendance, were appointed.

4. It would, I think, be very objectionable if any such registered cabooleent should be allowed to be in force for a longer period than one year.

5. Your letter refers only to contracts for delivery of indigo plant, but I would suggest that the provisions of any enactment founded on Mr. Beaufort's proposition might be extended to other articles, in particular to the cutting of timber in the district of Chittagong, where the fellers are in the habit of receiving advances, and, having brought down the timber, of selling it for their own advantage to third parties, leaving the real owner of the wood to recover his money by the tedious process of a civil suit. This abuse existed to such an extent at Chittagong, that it was lately thought likely to render it impossible for any resident of that town to supply timber for the railway—a matter of national importance.

6. If a registered contract to deliver timber were to be declared equivalent to a decree of court, any person having made an advance for the article might at once attach it on arrival, and the abuse would cease to exist.

From Robert Forbes, Esq., Civil and Sessions Judge of Tirhoot, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 8, dated the 10th January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE had the honour to receive your circular letter, No. 3079, of the 14th ultimo, with its enclosures, from the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division and joint magistrate of Pubna, concerning the proposal of the latter officer for re-enacting a law for the summary enforcement of contracts for the cultivation and delivery of indigo, regarding which his Honour the Lieutenant Governor desires me to give my opinion.

2. I beg to state in reply, for his Honour's information, that I entirely concur with Mr. Commissioner Gouldsbury in thinking that the re-enactment of such a law as that suggested by Mr. Beaufort is not necessary, and would not be just or advisable.

3. In this zillah, one of the chief, if not the chief indigo district in the country, it is rarely the practice of the planters to enter into indigo contracts with ryots, as they ordinarily grow indigo and compel or induce its cultivation as maliks or thikadars, or themselves cultivate it in home farms, and I can see no such analogy between a contract for service (a breach of which is criminally punishable under Regulation VII. 1819) and a contract for indigo, that because the former is cognizable by a magistrate the latter should be so also. A contract for indigo is, to all intents and purposes, just as much a civil contract as a contract for grain or sugar, and I am of opinion that a summary civil process is in justice amply sufficient for the planter, and that to give him a criminal remedy in addition would be arming him with too great an advantage, contrary to the spirit of all law, and leaving the ryot one remedy less than his more powerful opponent.

4. If a planter is guilty of a breach of any civil contract with a ryot, the latter has no remedy in the criminal, and can only go to the civil court; and as the law now stands, the summary civil process makes the planter equal to the zemindar suing for rent, already considered too strong in that respect.

From R. N. Skinner, Esq., Sessions Judge of Jessore, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 7, dated the 10th January 1855).

Sir,

IN answer to your circular No. 3079, dated 14th ultimo, I have the honour to state, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, that I do not coincide in opinion with Mr. Beaufort as to the propriety of re-enacting Sections II and III. of Regulation V. 1830.

2. Section III. Regulation X. 1836, seems preferable to Section II. of Regulation V. 1830. Breaches of contract, relative to advances made by mahajuns to ryots for growing paddy; the advances* made by proprietors or farmers to their ryots, &c., for water-courses, reservoirs, or embankments; advances made by Government for opium,† salt,‡ embankments,§ &c., are not punishable as misdemeanours.

* Section 22, III. 1794.

‡ Sections 19 and 126, X. 1819.

§ Sections 40, XIV. and 10, XXXIII. 1793.

|| 2 & 3 of V. 1830.

3. The summary process for arresting defaulters in summary suits for arrears of revenue might be made applicable to ryots evading engagements to cultivate indigo.

4. Europeans could not hold lands in their own name in 1830 as they could when those sections || were rescinded, and can do now.

From A. Sconce, Esq., Civil and Sessions Judge of Nuddea, to W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 6, dated the 11th January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE had the honour to receive Mr. Under Secretary Russell's letter, No. 3079, of the 14th ultimo, with its enclosure, relative to the expediency of re-enacting in a modified form certain rescinded provisions of Regulation V. of 1830, with a view to the summary cognizance and punishment of a breach of indigo contracts; and, as instructed by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, I now offer, but with much diffidence, such remarks as occur to me on this very wide and very delicate subject.

2. In the eighth paragraph of Mr. Beaufort's letter there is a remarkable statement. Mr. Beaufort observes, that "there is no doubt but that the ryot has, whether reasonably or unreasonably, a great aversion to indigo. He believes there are many other crops which yield a more certain as well as a larger profit. I have heard planters argue the contrary, and produce proofs of it, but the idea in the ryots' mind remains the same." This then is a preliminary fact, that the ryot, believing indigo to be an unprofitable crop, is averse to undertake the cultivation of it; and the proposition is, that he shall be summarily punished for evading his contract to cultivate what he declares and believes is a losing crop.

3. This

3. This incompatible conjunction of circumstances rather adds to the perplexity I have experienced hitherto when I have tried to form a view of this matter from my own limited experience; and I say unfeignedly I should have been glad if Mr. Beaufort had discussed, with all the facilities which his local knowledge afforded him, the very peculiar position indicated by the admitted reluctance of the ryot to sow his lands with indigo. How is it that a ryot enters into a contract to cultivate a crop to which he is known to be averse? How is his reluctance overcome, or is it ever overcome? Is he free to take the contract or let it alone? And for ourselves we may ask, knowing that the ryot is an unwilling party to the covenant, knowing that in his judgment the cultivation of rice or of oil-seeds would be more profitable to him, shall we aggravate the anomaly by constituting the rejection of the contract a crime, and imprisoning the criminal?

4. The feelings ascribed by Mr. Beaufort to the Pubna ryot entirely correspond with, I may say, the general opinion entertained of the feelings and inclinations of the agricultural community in this district. No one, it is said, would cultivate indigo if left to his own choice; yet indigo engagements are undertaken in spite of the known reluctance of the people.

5. Possibly the main cause of objection to the cultivation of indigo is ascribable to the losses it entails; the sufficiency and quality of the crop being precarious, and the unliquidated advances being an irredeemable burden. It is admitted that planters cannot cultivate indigo by their own hired labourers. They cannot make it pay. The returns do not remunerate them with sufficient profit over and above the expenses of labour. Planters, therefore, prefer to throw the expenses of cultivation on the ryots. Planters pay for the crop, ryots give their labour to produce the crop, but have we grounds to assume that the ryot succeeds in a crop which the planter fails in? The precarious nature of the crop there is no contesting; and an inquiry of greater interest cannot be suggested than that of ascertaining, both whether the ryot's absolute share of one year's crop be a just return to him for that year, and whether it be sufficient to cover the losses he incurs in a series of years. Some planters, it is said, take four bundles, some take six bundles of cut plant to the rupee; and whether it be from generosity that one confines himself to the lower rate, or from right that the other enforces the higher, it is understood that, generally speaking, ryots are never in a condition to relieve themselves from the balances written against them in the factory accounts.

6. But, as I understand, the connexion of the planter and ryot is not simply that of a cultivator working upon the advances of a capitalist. The planter is not and yet is the cultivator. He selects the land; he directs and compels the ploughing, and the sowing, and the weeding. The land is "his cultivation;" and the ripened crop is cut for his vats. Unquestionably, by the energy and attention of the planter, the land is likely to be better tilled and the crop more productive; but it is more in place to consider whether the interference which he exercises and the rights he asserts, are compatible with his abnegation of the responsibility of a cultivating farmer; with the freedom and rights of the ryot, and with the adequate remuneration of the ryot's enforced, but possibly, judiciously directed labour. An advance of two rupees a beegah cannot justify the assertion of every sort of right; nor is it, in any fair sense, a measure of the ryot's duty to labour, or of the remuneration of his labour and of his expenses additional to his own labour. Rather is it the reverse of the acknowledged remuneration of an exacted or required service; for to whatever extent the crop fails, the labour is practically disavowed, and the money paid in anticipation is written back as a debt against the ryot. It seems to me that it is only by treating the subject in this form, that the admitted unwillingness of the ryot to grow indigo can be thoroughly understood. Probably his unwillingness is not feigned, and I feel deeply the importance of giving a definite, if it were a true, expression to his objections.

7. Again, it is universally assumed that in this district ryots do not retain more than a half, or a third, or less than a third, of the advances ostensibly paid to them. The chief or a large portion is absorbed by the factory omia, public officers, European and native, native residents of the district and others, speak of this as a fact which they believe, though possibly not one party so speaking can specify any case falling within his individual knowledge. Public report may be as exaggerated as it is indefinite. Necessarily a good deal depends upon the planter's personal supervision at the time his money is distributed, and it may be feared that the most commendable efforts of the planters who distribute their own advances, are, to some extent, defeated by the mean speculation and unconscientious and faithless fraud of dependents from which they, no more than the public departments of the State, can reckon on being exempt. My attempt to explain the reasons which possibly determine the ryot's aversion to grow indigo, would be incomplete if I omitted this misappropriation of his advances. It is by the advance that the contract is professedly constituted; and obviously the countenance and aid to be given to that contract by the law, should be materially affected by our assurance that the ryot fully received, or was responsible for not fully receiving, the consideration stipulated in his agreement.

8. I do not know to what extent the advance consists partly of cash and partly of unliquidated balances of past years. I have seen cases in which the advance, expressed in a renewed contract, consisted wholly of the balance of an account. I have seen a case in which, for the cultivation of $3\frac{1}{2}$ beegahs, the advance consisted of eight annas cash and 6-8 rupees of old balances. Generally, I apprehend, the entire advance is cash; this is a point, however (as indeed are many others), upon which I do not possess exact or sufficient information; but even the exception to the general rule must be deplored which would invoke the aid of a penal law to enforce the labour of a ryot for the adjustment of an old and an unchecked debt.

9. Here, as in Pubna, there is the same striking unwillingness on the part of the ryot to cultivate indigo, and on the part of the zemindar to let indigo be cultivated. From both parties, over all, floats a shadow of dissatisfaction, which, however it may veil the nature and force of underlying interests or passions, is itself palpably manifest. Both say, We do not want it, we would rather be let alone; but practically both accede, one to the cultivation of the repudiated crop, the other to the sub-letting of his estate to the proprietors of factories. But they say more; they say they act under constraint, and are unable to abide the issue of an unequal struggle. No one more than myself abhors dishonesty, or the exertion of malicious influence, from whomsoever it proceeds. I have nothing to say in favour of ryots who accept advances only to embezzle them, or of zemindars who, for selfish and fraudulent ends, instigate the evasion of the mutually beneficial and mutually acceptable engagements of planters and ryots; but I cannot convert dissent into fraud, nor can I presume that the profits of a favourable speculation are, in the eyes of zemindars and ryots, to be derived, not from carrying the speculation to a completion, but by contemning the crop and incurring the perils of misappropriating the planter's advances. Mr. Beaufort states, but does not attempt to account for, the motives of zemindars in instigating ryots to evade their indigo agreements. In this district such interference is comparatively rare; but supposing it were not so, and that the fact is as asserted, it cannot be without a purpose that zemindars oppose the cultivation of indigo. Indeed they can assign no stronger reasons than the Pubna ryot himself assigns, that indigo is a losing crop; but besides, the Pubna zemindar may be influenced by other motives, which it is as just as it is important to ascertain. That the zemindar should seek a share in the ryot's advances for the adjustment of his rent, is not censurable. Probably, when the advance is made, seven or eight months of the revenue year have gone. The advance is all that the landlord sees in the shape of harvest to cover his claim; and when the real harvest is cut well into the second year, far from yielding rent to the zemindar, it may be, and often is, largely insufficient to balance the planter's pre-payment to the ryot. And surely in the mere matter of misappropriating advances upon which Mr. Beaufort lays so much stress, and which it is the express purpose of his letter to bring within the cognizance of the criminal law, the remedy is in the hands of the planter. Let him not advance at all. He knows that zemindars and people are unmistakeably averse to the engagement he binds the ryot by. Let then the ryot cultivate his land in his own way, with indigo if it be profitable, and with advances, if advances be desirable to him, paid at the risk of those who are willing to accommodate him. It is the business of the legislator to exhaust, not to increase, the opportunities from which spring public crime.

10. There

10. There is no advantage in an advance itself. It is notoriously an expensive incumbrance. A ryot who, from his own resources, pays his rent, supports his family, and cultivates his rice, his dal, his jute, and his oil seeds without advances, is far more prosperous than a ryot who cannot do the same things without borrowed money. It is not the apparent temporary convenience that the ryot's profit for the year begins and ends with. To be sure in indigo the advance is too often the ryot's whole harvest. But I speak just now of the general uses of advances, upon which there is much misapprehension. It is not the advance, but the completed harvests of the whole year, that determine the prosperity of the ryot. He is not prosperous, he is not benefited, if the debt scored against him exceeds the crop which he is supposed to have reaped. And, again, the advance is itself nothing, except it be the representative of rent and food and wages; and more happily these sources of wealth may be permitted to represent themselves. Without an advance, as with an advance, a ryot may buy cattle, till his land, and pay his landlord's rent; but this is all outlay on his part, a means to an end; and it is by measuring his in-coming crop only that we can congratulate him or his country upon the resources he is supposed to be the instrument of developing. An exhausting crop may impoverish the people as well as the soil.

11. The superfluous assistance of an advance when it is not needed, is too much confounded with the useful ends it is calculated to promote when it effectively works up waste land, or encourages the people to adopt a more remunerating agriculture. But neither of these conditions applies, in a general sense, to indigo. Hear what the Pubna ryot says: He says he is prepared to cultivate his own land; it will not therefore lie waste by the withdrawal of the planter; and what is more, he is persuaded that the products he will himself cultivate, will pay him better than indigo. Under such circumstances, it is a striking scientific error to commend or justify the employment of advances. Capital superfluously spent is mis-spent; and labour misdirected is lost and wasted. I need not say that I do not depreciate the value of indigo. To some it is a source of great gain. And I do not doubt that even the ryot's reluctance to cultivate indigo may be conciliated, and the zemindar's opposition overcome, by the recognition of the ryot's right to retain a profitable interest in the produce.

12. It is not clear how much of the rescinded provisions of Regulation V. of 1830, Mr. Beaufort proposes to re-enact; I suppose only section III., which embodies the offence amenable to the magistrate; but this section is confined to the omission to sow or cultivate indigo, while in the second paragraph of his letter, Mr. Beaufort speaks of the fraudulent transfer of a crop, as if non-delivery were by the same law a punishable offence. But it seems to me impossible that the Legislature should confine itself to the re-enactment of the rescinded provisions of Regulation V. of 1830. This would resemble far too closely the recognition of a nudum pactum, whereby all the obligation should be on one side, and all the protection on the other. It seems to me that, in affording summary facilities for the cultivation of indigo, we are bound to be satisfied, both that we do not aid blindly an unacceptable and inequitable engagement, and that the planter should fulfil his part of the stipulation under the same penalties that we suspend over the ryot. Let it be that the ryot is bound to cultivate what he agrees to cultivate. But there is more to be seen than that; is his agreement free; is his advance fairly enjoyed by him; is he made to sow land measured by the common standard; and as to the delivery of his crop, shall he be required to deliver plant at the rate of four bundles for the rupee, as accepted in one factory, or six bundles to the rupee as taken in another—an immense difference to the ryot; and who, under the provision of the law, shall see which rate is most equitable, and that neither is exceeded?

13. In fine, I think that those who are interested in the cultivation of indigo should, for the legitimate promotion of their objects, look to the good-will and to the prosperity of the people, and not to the special encouragement and countenance of exceptional laws.

From J. S. Torrens, Esq., Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergannahs, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 11, dated 15 January 1855).

Sir,

Dated 14th December 1854, No. 3079.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, with enclosures, as per margin; and to submit for consideration of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor what appear to me the principal objections to the recommendation contained in the letter of the Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Pubna, of the 26th October, No. 90.

2. The primary ground on which the re-enactment of the penal provisions of Regulation V. of 1830 is advocated is, that a civil proceeding is so tardy, that to be secure from pecuniary loss, by the evasions of contracting cultivators, the planter is liable to be compelled to resort to physical force; that is to say, a breach of the peace and defiance of the law. This reason seems one of the worst possible which an effective Government could acknowledge as the ground of a special law in favour of any particular class or body of speculators; and though, no doubt, the tardiness of civil proceedings is very great, the evil has of late been materially remedied by improvement in the law, and in the character of our native judges, and these improvements are still progressing. Like objections to the English civil courts have long existed, so much that "tardiness in obtaining redress and extravagance of justice in them" are assigned grounds for recent changes made, but never have been taken as grounds for special penal enactments on behalf of particular classes. That my remarks on this head may not appear inapplicable, I may mention that I have known instances of appeals from the judgments of Moonsiffs being decidedly nearly, if not within the time that investigations on appeals in Act IV. cases have been pending; and it should by no means be supposed that the desire of having what are really civil questions disposed of summarily in a criminal court, is solely attributable to the true and admitted objections to the procedure of the civil courts.

3. Further reasons assigned for the advocacy of special provisions in favour of the planter are, that the causes for which the law was repealed are not apparent, that there were no abuses practised under it when in force, and that the body of planters contains many high-principled gentlemen, who would not be guilty of abuse. On these I may observe, that one reason for the law having been repealed may perhaps appear in the 4th para. of the Joint Magistrate's letter itself, as it is there stated that the enactment was had recourse to under the then special position of the body, in which position it is not pretended they are now placed. Next, I do not think that it can be admitted that the law was not abused, as compulsory advances prevailed to the greatest extent, whilst the aid and provision which the law contained for calling in such a corrupt police, as the class of the natives from which they must be taken leave at disposal, placed the ryot wholly in the power of the planter and his people, and even, from the very system, led to affrays betwixt him and the zemindars, the more outrageous and complicated from the interference of the police, which the law was framed to admit of. This, I apprehend, was also a reason for the repeal, as well as the circumstance of the Legislature having placed the European planter, in respect of the tenure of land, on a footing with other classes.

4. I quite admit, as well as the Joint Magistrate, that the body of planters contains gentlemen of excellent principles and conduct, who would not abuse privileges given them; but though this be the case, I believe they have very generally to entrust their affairs, and the matter of advances in particular, to a very licentious and unscrupulous class of natives; and that the body of planters, even where the best intentions exist, are much in the hands of such a class as I describe, is, I think, undeniable.

5. Another reason assigned for the re-enactment is, that it is to the zemindars only, not the ryots, to whom indigo cultivation, as now carried on, is distasteful. I am not of opinion that this is the case, and indeed, the latter part of the paragraph in the Joint Magistrate's letter, which represents the above, would appear contradicted by the close of the same, as in the words noted in the margin.* It is,

is, I submit, but right that a ryot should be allowed to cultivate his own holding as he pleases ; but once he has received advances, the agents of the planters seek to deprive him of this option, and to allot and parcel out the land for their own objects. No ryot can wish only to cultivate indigo, and when he really takes advances, an obligation of cultivation of any spot in his holding is not either what only he himself willingly will agree to, or what his landlord, exercising only a legitimate influence, is disposed to encourage him in. These circumstances leave it the more desirable that the performance of the contract should be enforced only by civil proceedings, and if voluntary contracts only are those which are complained of as habitually broken, looking on such contracts for indigo cultivation like all other similar contracts, it seems inconsistent to seek to repeat * the advance to a party who has once failed in contracts he had engaged for.

6. The difficulty of planters obtaining land of their own is another reason on which the Joint Magistrate's recommendation is based. On this, and his remarks on the point, I observe that it is natural, and what is the case in all countries, that existing landlords should desire to retain lordship over their own lands as long as in their power ; and if planters wish for land, they should of course pay the price it will bring, and ought to be encouraged to seek to do this, or to establish wholly amicable relations with the zemindars and ryots, rather than force advances where it must be known that they are distasteful to either one or the other ; so I believe planters who have thriven best in the end have done, and with others, desire of rapid and sudden profits on cultivation (on however litigated a tenure, and however extended, so it offer prospects of a sudden and inordinate profit) lies at the root of the evil, and is the system which has, in fact, mainly originated and continued both the distaste which exists on part of the natives to the culture, and the outrages which are the result.

7. In respect to what is represented by the Joint Magistrate, in his 11th paragraph, as to the proposed Affray Act forming another ground for the re-enactment he advocates, I submit that the proposed law appears to me as calculated to afford protection, not the reverse, to steady and peaceable planters of the class I have referred to in the foregoing remarks ; and that eventually they will acknowledge this when the new law has been under operation ; and thus, instead of its enactment calling for an accompaniment of the special and unusual penal provisions contained in Regulation V. 1830, it will, in my mind, do the contrary.

8. I have only now to notice the precautionary measures of registration proposed in support of the expediency of the re-enactment, and to state that a regular and well-contrived system of registration would undoubtedly be a great protection to, and prevent litigation respecting, all contracts ; but if such a measure is adopted, so far from its being a reason for special provision for any class, it should be the reverse, and should be extended to all, though, I trust, never under such agency as has been provided in the Mofussil for the sale of distrained property, one similar to which the Joint Magistrate proposes should be partly employed.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, of 14 December last, with enclosures, requesting my opinion on Mr. Beaufort's suggestions regarding the re-enactment of a law for summarily enforcing the performance of contracts entered into for the cultivation and delivery of indigo.

2. Granting that exceptional legislation of this nature, to the extent of rendering dering the breach of a civil contract punishable as a criminal offence, is allowable in certain cases, it is necessary, on asking for such legislation in any case, to show some good ground for departing from the general principle of law; and I do not think any such ground is shown by Mr. Beaufort. He states that the passing of the law of 1830, probably saved indigo property from utter destruction, yet that there were few complaints and convictions under it; that it was supposed to have kept matters quiet; no complaints were made against it, and its rescission (in 1835) has led to a full harvest of quarrels (paras. 4 and 5); that the civil remedy being tedious and expensive is not had recourse to, physical force being found preferable (para. 7); that the ryots can find no advantage in the breach of contract to which they are instigated by the zemindars, and yet that these ryots, who are always glad to take advances, have, reasonably or unreasonably, a great aversion to indigo, believing that there are many crops which yield a more certain as well as a larger profit (para. 8); that the ryot, backed by the zemindars, does not cultivate, and the planter to save himself must either use force, or buy over the zemindar and his agents, or take farms of the villages at losing jummas (paras. 9 and 10); that for the sake of peace, the zemindar's exactions are generally consented to (para. 11); but some zemindars are not to be so pacified (para. 12); and finally, that farms, even attended with a loss on the rent, are generally desirable, on account of the profit accruing in freedom from quarrels, and in the power which a farmer has over the ryots.

* Vide close of the 15th paragraph of the Joint Magistrate's letter.

3. Without disputing any of these statements (though some of them certainly admit of dispute), I may fairly say that there is nothing in them to show the specialty in indigo contracts which renders a summary penal law to enforce their execution more necessary than in the case of contracts for other products of the soil. The great crops of Bengal rice, sugar, silk, fibres, oil seeds, &c., are advanced upon to an extent to which Indigo advances can bear no comparison; the advancers would, doubtless, be glad of the aid of a summary law, but still the ryots generally fulfil their contracts without being compelled to do so either by bands of armed men or bribed zemindars. I fully allow that the necessity of keeping up extensive buildings and a large establishment renders a breach of contract by the ryot more injurious to the planter than it is to the advancer on produce which requires no manufactory process to fit it for the market, but that is no reason for changing the law in his favour, and if it was, it applies to silk, sugar, lac, and other branches of trade as well as to indigo planting. But in all these trades there is no general complaint that the ryots will not fulfil their contracts; why should indigo planting be an exception? I believe there is only one answer to that question, and that is in Mr. Beaufort's words, because the ryots, reasonably or unreasonably, are averse to indigo, believing that there are many other crops which yield a more certain as well as a better profit. I cannot account for the universal dislike shown to indigo by the cultivators in any other way. I cannot show in figures that indigo is less profitable than other crops. The ryots believe that it is so, and they ought to know best. They take the advances under pressure of some kind or other, and having satisfied the present necessity, endeavour to escape from what they know to be a losing contract. The mere fact that an indigo concern can afford to pay large sums to a zemindar to induce him to refrain from opposition, shows that there is not fair unconstrained dealing between the planter and the ryots. In the outset of a new speculation, the parties who first enter on it, or in case of a monopoly, the monopolists may make a profit far exceeding that of those with whom they deal, or the ordinary average of mercantile profits, but as soon as any branch of trade becomes open, and all are free to enter on or to refrain from it, the profits become pretty fairly equalized among all engaged in it; and no one will continue it who does not get a fair share; but here is a trade carried on for nearly a century, where one party is enabled by his profits to pay largely, in addition to a most expensive agency, one or more third persons, not for doing anything to help him, but merely that they may do nothing to oppose him, while the other party cannot be persuaded to remain in the trade by almost anything short of actual force. In buying off a zemindar, I consider the planter simply purchases the power of turning his ryots, so far as indigo is concerned, into slaves, who are expected to work not only without any share in the profits of their work, but at a real loss unless we are to deny deny to the ryot the power of judging for himself as to what crop pays him best.

4. The zemindars or their agents often doubtless encourage the evasion of indigo contracts. They think the cultivation unprofitable to their ryots, who they know detest it, and they dislike the influence which a planter acquires in their estates, and the check which he more or less, according to his character, puts on their misdeeds; but I believe their general reason for opposition is, that they find it profitable; the planter for his own interest must give them a share of the profits he makes out of the ryots in their estates.

5. Formerly the unwilling ryots were compelled to cultivate by the fear of violence; then it was found better to pay the zemindar; now it is thought the magistrate will be cheaper than either; but I trust no law will ever be passed to increase the profits of indigo planting by oppressing still more those who suffer enough already. I have had many intimate and most esteemed friends among the planters, and have some still, and I like them as a class. I know they do not believe that the ryot is unfairly treated, and it was with no pleasure that I long ago found myself forced to come to that conclusion.

6. I have omitted to mention a difference between contracts for indigo plant and those for other produce which may have some little effect in adding to the ryot's dislike of indigo; by the terms of an indigo contract (I speak under correction), and, indeed, often by the very necessity of the case, the ryot must give the whole of his indigo plant to the factory at the same fixed rate; in contracts for other produce the ryot only agrees to repay the advance with interest, &c., in cash or in produce, at a fixed or the market rate, while all the surplus is his own to dispose of as he pleases.

From W. Taylor, Esq., Judge of Shahabad, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 16, dated the 25th January 1855).

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter No. 3079, dated 14 December 1854, with its enclosures, requesting me to give my opinion in regard to the suggestions of Mr. Beaufort therein contained, I have the honour to observe that I cannot bring myself to assent to the expediency of the measure proposed.

Exceptional legislation for the benefit of a class is so directly at variance with all sound principles of government, that however expedient it may appear at a particular time, a prudent statesman will, I conceive, always view it with disfavour.

But when it is proposed to convert a civil wrong into a crime for the advantage of a mere section of the community, the objections to it are immeasurably enhanced; and in my humble opinion, nothing but imperative necessity, or a great and unquestioned public good, could justify even the consideration of a measure so repugnant to the spirit of modern law and universal justice.

I have had but little experience in dealing with the disputes which Mr. Beaufort refers to, but it appears to me that a more legitimate mode of enforcing the contracts between the indigo planters and ryots might be devised by rendering the civil process actually, instead of nominally, "summary," and (to prevent the judgment when given in favour of the planter from being nugatory), by giving him a lien on the produce of the ryot's field, whatever it may be, on proof of such ryot having taken an advance for the cultivation of the said field with indigo.

From George Loch, Esq., Officiating Judge of Purneah, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Governor of Bengal (No. 27, dated the 21st January 1855).

Sir,

I HAVE the

* Copy of letter from Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated 3d November 1854, to Secretary to Government of Bengal.

Copy of a letter from Joint Magistrate of Pubna to Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated 26th October 1854.

honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th December 1854, No. 3079, with its enclosures,* and in reply, beg to state, that owing to the peculiar circumstances in which the planter is placed, some peculiar provision for his protection as regards indigo contracts should be made. Were he subject to loss only through failure of crops, or the ordinary neglect of ryots to fulfil their engagements, he ought to be left to protect himself as in other contracts. But where the breach of contract arises, as it does in most instances, through the influence of third parties whom he cannot reach, some more effectual means of protection and redress should be provided than are afforded by the ordinary process of law. Even with a decree in his favour, the planter does not get redress. He never can recover from the ryot the value of the produce lost to him by the ryot's breach of contract, and very seldom is he able to recover the amount of his advances; and what a process he has to go through before he can obtain a decree, and when obtained, how difficult to execute it effectually and speedily.

2. Suppose no obstacle to the trial of a suit in the Court of First Instance to exist, the case might be disposed of in three months.. Then comes an appeal, which, owing to the number of cases on the file, and pressure of other business, cannot be heard for months, and when brought up is liable to be remanded for re-trial, and further time is lost. If the appeal be disposed of, there still remains a special appeal, and the facility with which this is admitted, renders the temptation to make it very strong; and if the ryot be under the influence of third parties, anxious to injure the planter, this appeal will doubtless be made, perhaps not so much with the hope of getting the original order reversed as to cause delay, and to prevent the planter taking steps to execute his decree. It may be said that, as interest on the amount decreed is accruing, the planter really suffers no injury by the delay. But he does suffer, for the delay enables the ryot to dispose of all his property, and the planter finds nothing wherewith to satisfy his decree, and he is chary of imprisoning the defaulter as it only entails on him the further expense of his keep while in gaol. It may be said that alienation may be prevented pendente lite by attachment under Regulation II. 1806, but this attachment cannot be made without proof of intention to alienate, and it is very difficult to obtain proof of such intention by any overt act of the defaulting ryot.

3. Suppose, however, under the best circumstances, the suit is undefended, and the planter gets a decree in three months, and no appeal is made, and in execution he attaches the property of the ryot, consisting of huts, grain in store, crops on the ground, cattle, &c., what follows? Notification of sale is issued, and claimants spring up on every side. If the claims are rejected by the Moonsiff, then comes a summary appeal and with it delay. If the Moonsiff's order be confirmed, a further notification of sale is issued, and the right and interest of the defaulter in the property attached is sold, and what does it fetch—seldom sufficient to liquidate the amount decreed.

4. The above remarks are of course applicable to all suits brought forward in the Mofussil Courts, but there is this peculiarity in the transactions of the planter which tells hard against him. Contracts with ryots for the ordinary products of the earth are on a small scale, and the risk to the party making advances is not so great, and the ryot has generally sufficient property from which loss may be recovered; nor is there any undue influence employed to make the ryots break their engagements. But the planter is obliged to make large advances, and has no security but the good faith of the ryot, who is at the beck and nod of his zemindar or mahajun. He has a large interest at stake, and can never recover the loss incurred by failure of the ryot to meet his engagement. I may here instance the powerful influence a zemindar has over his ryots. When I took charge, as Magistrate of Nuddea, the Rajah of Berhampore had a quarrel with Messrs. Hills & White, and forbid the ryots to cultivate indigo, and not a man for miles round certain factories would take advances. I proceeded to the spot, examined many of the ryots, they had nothing to complain of, acknowledged that they received liberal advances, but said they would not cultivate indigo any more, though they had done so for years. Nor were Messrs. Hills & White able to make advances until they had taken the mehal in Putnee and paid a handsome salamee to the rajah. If the influence of the zemindar be sufficient to prevent ryots taking advances, very little exertion of that influence is, I apprehend, sufficient to make them break their contracts, and it is from the effects of this baneful influence that the planters ought to be protected, for they cannot, under any circumstances, obtain redress against the real party who causes their loss.

5. There is of course danger that the law may be abused if breaches of indigo contracts are made punishable as misdemeanors. The records of the criminal courts might be able to show whether the law, when in existence, was enforced frequently or not, and whether it was found to be much abused; false or groundless complaints might be made punishable by fine commutable to imprisonment, and the introduction of a system of registration might prove some protection to the ryots. Agreements are taken from the ryots at a certain season of the year. Any planter wishing to benefit by the law should be obliged to register all agreements at that particular season within a certain time after execution, and no prosecution should be allowed on an unregistered agreement. One point would hereby be gained. It would be clear that the deed was executed about the time it purported to be written, and was not prepared for the purpose of being filed at the time the prosecution was instituted. A sliding scale of registration fees might be introduced as per margin, and all prosecution should be brought forward within the year, or immediately after the close of the year, to which the contract relates. Considering the ignorance of the class of people who take advances, it might be expedient to limit the agreements to one year, and to prohibit the introduction of, or render nugatory, such clauses as the following:—"That if the advance be not covered by the quantity of plant delivered, the ryot will still continue to cultivate indigo." Such a proviso is easily introduced into the body of the agreement without the knowledge or consent of the ryot. I am averse to putting any unnecessary legal restrictions on contracts, and were the mass of the people at all educated, I would not make the suggestion.

If the amount advanced, or arrears with or without advance, do not exceed

and for every 25 rupees above 100 rupees, 4 annas.

6. I would, in conclusion, refer to Section V., Regulation VI. 1823, which relates to suits for the recovery of indigo advances. The law requires that these cases should be disposed of as summary suits; but the law is almost a dead letter, because no advantage can be obtained under it. By the time the suit is decided, the ryot has absconded or disposed of all his property. The first process in summary suits for rent is the apprehension of the defaulter; might not a similar process be issued in suits for indigo advances, or else process for attachment of his property to satisfy the amount eventually decreed, false complaints being punishable by heavy damages?

From H. Atherton, Esq., Officiating Judge of Sarun, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal—(No. 41, dated the 2d February 1855).

Sir,

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, of the 14th December last, with enclosures, which has lately reached me, requiring my opinion on the suggestions made by Mr. Beaufort for re-enacting a law for summarily enforcing the execution of contracts for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant.

2. Mr. Beaufort considers that the original rule of Regulation V. of 1830 should be re-enacted, and he thinks that every facility should be afforded to persons engaged in a branch of commerce so beneficial to the country at large. He does not propose to make breach of contract for the cultivation of any kind of crop penal. He does not propose to legislate on any broad general principle. He does not say that any man deliberately evading a contract, freely entered into, is guilty of fraud, and therefore deserving of punishment in the criminal courts. He proposes a special law for protection of the indigo cultivation alone, and therefore I hold he was bound to show that there is some special iniquity in the evasion of an indigo contract, and that the indigo planter stands more in need of protection, and deserves it more than the petty mahajun, who advances money for the cultivation of rice or sugar-cane, or any other of the common crops of the country.

3. Mr. Beaufort remarks that indigo cultivation is beneficial to the country at large, and I readily admit that it is of immense value to the zemindars in particular, and to the Government, because the cultivation tends to raise the rent of land and to increase the general revenue of the country; but I deny that indigo cultivation does the ryot any good, and I maintain that, until it be proved that indigo cultivation is specially advantageous to the cultivator, special laws for the enforcement of contracts for indigo cultivation cannot justly be enacted.

4. I hold the indigo cultivation, carried on as it usually is in Bengal, to be a forced cultivation, and this I consider to be proved by the admission of every planter and of every other person I have ever conversed with on the subject; that no ryot, receiving an advance of say 10 rupees, would for his own profit grow indigo if allowed to grow any other crop. Mr. Beaufort himself, in the 8th paragraph of his report, allows that the "ryot has a great aversion to indigo," and why is this, but that the ryot knows indigo is not a paying crop? He will readily take the planter's money when he can get it, just as the planters themselves and their masters some years ago took money from the Union Bank, but then, having secured the cash, he will endeavour to evade a losing bargain because he feels that the honest performance of the contract will profit him nothing; and this is the reason, and the only reason, why the ryot having taken the planter's money is so easily led away by the zemindar or other party instigating him to the breach of his engagement. But is the planter deserving of pity? certainly not. He knows beforehand that nine ryots out of ten with whom he deals are rogues, that they will cheat him if they can, and he has therefore only to blame himself for putting himself in their power. He can easily protect himself. He has simply to keep his money in his own pocket and to hire land where he can get it, and to carry on the indigo cultivation by hired labour, if he thinks the cultivation will pay him. His case no more calls for any special protection on the part of the Government than does that of the native mahajun who advances money for rice or sugar-cane.

5. Mr. Beaufort's remarks as to the position of the planter in this country are perfectly true, and it is his position which places him generally at the mercy of those about him. He has seldom the right to the permanent occupation of more than thirty or forty beegahs on which the factory buildings stand; a large capital is sunk in buildings which are worthless without land. The native zemindar gives him land on which to build his factory, and then, having caught him in the trap, takes advantage of his position, as do Englishmen under the same circumstances, and demands a high price for any additional quantity of land he may allow him to occupy. He knows the ryots dislike the indigo cultivation on the usual terms, and he makes further profit from the planters by aiding them to break their contracts. The conduct of both ryot and zemindar is bad, but the planter has no reason to call on the Government to get him out of the difficulties in which he has voluntarily placed himself. Were indigo cultivation generally profitable, the ryot would as readily grow indigo as rice or sugar-cane, and backed up by the planter, would resist all interference on the part of the zemindar. It is not, generally speaking, possible, and therefore he is willing to turn against the planter. I say the cultivation is not generally possible, because under certain rare circumstances, it can be carried on without difficulty, but that is only when the ryot has a good master, and is only called on to give up a small portion of his land for indigo. Factories in Bengal have so multiplied that the planter cannot be satisfied with a small portion of the ryot's land for indigo, and therefore affrays constantly take place in the attempt to compel the ryot, either to give up his land for indigo or to sow lands for which he has received advances.

6. Should the Government for the benefit of the planter, pass a special law for the protection of indigo cultivation, Mr. Beaufort's suggestions in regard to the registration of deeds should be attended to, but being opposed to any such law I need not enlarge on the details which might be required in carrying it into operation.
for

From C. Steer, Esq., Judge of Backergunge, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 31), dated the 7th February 1855.

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, of the 14th December 1854, with its enclosures, relating to the expediency of re-enacting a law for summarily enforcing the execution of contracts for the cultivation of indigo.

2. I am utterly averse to the system of indigo advances as it now prevails, and consider that it should be discouraged rather than facilities should be given to extend it. None but a planter would deny that the cultivation of indigo was not profitable to the ryot. Is it for Government to encourage such a system? Make the cultivation profitable, and the ryots will of their own free will and accord, and without the enactment of special laws, enter into contracts for the cultivation of indigo as readily as they will any other sort of produce, and will be as little likely to break their contracts as they are when engaging for the cultivation of any other sort of produce.

3. Every honest planter will admit that no ryot will take an advance unless he is in the last extremity, and that none ever get out of the planter's books who are once in them. The reason of this is plain, indigo cultivation is ruin to the ryot. As well might Government give countenance and support to the usurious mahajun as to the planter as he now deals with his cultivators. Both planter and mahajun act in the same way, both take advantage of the ryot's necessities, and both derive a usurious profit from their dealings. Let the planters allow to the ryots a fair share of the profits they themselves derive, and there will be no complaints that the ryots are eternally breaking their contracts. The natives are not slow in perceiving where their interest lies, and the date cultivation is an example how readily they will adopt the cultivation of an article from which a profit is likely to be gained, and they are not deterred by the knowledge that years will elapse before they obtain the slightest return. If the ryot received from the planter a price for the plant he delivers, that would enable him to stand the loss of a bad season occasionally, he would with greater readiness cultivate indigo than he now does the date tree and the sugar cane, and it is solely because there is no reciprocity of advantage that the indigo cultivation is so much detested. As the planters, then, have it in their own power to remedy the evil they complain of, they should be told to apply that remedy; and a hateful and an unfair system, such as the system of advances now is, should never in my opinion meet with any support from Government.

4. It may well be questioned how far indigo cultivation, carried on as it is now, is really beneficial to the country. A planter spends a great deal of money; he gives employment to a great number of persons; his residence in the country is in many ways beneficial to the neighbourhood in which he dwells—these are all obvious advantages; and it is also very true that in indigo districts many a zemindar gets a good rent for his estate from the planter, promptly paid, where he formerly found it difficult to collect a small and precarious rent. The profits to the planter on his indigo enable him to pay a rent above what he can himself collect. But if, as I have not the slightest doubt, that the indigo has been obtained on a system ruinous to the planter's tenants, then, however valuable indigo may be as an article of commerce, it would be better for the sake of the ryots if there was not a stick of indigo in the land.

5. So difficult is it to get lands for indigo that the planter finds it necessary to admit into his partnership the lord of the soil. To him he gives in the shape of enhanced rent the profit for indigo, which in fairness belongs to the ryot, and the planters have only to give that share to the ryot to make the cultivation of indigo as popular as it is now the reverse, and they will then not need to lease lands at an unfair rate, only that they may have their indigo cultivators more under their thumb.

6. As planters only, planters do not benefit the country. As planters they certainly introduce a crop which is highly remunerative, but they take all the profit themselves, and keep the cultivators poorer than they would be if allowed to cultivate the poorest description of produce. Planters, who are also zemindars, have two things to look to, their indigo and their ryots. These are the men whom we may look to be a real blessing to the country, for their interest as proprietors of the land makes them careful to protect the ryots, and they cannot push indigo cultivation to a ruinous extent, as regards the ryots, without suffering in a like degree themselves. In their hands, a law making the breach of indigo contracts criminal would be as little abused as it would be little used. But the planter who only holds land that he may compel his tenants to raise indigo for him, is not one whose power over the tenantry ought to be strengthened. He cultivates indigo upon usury, and like every other usurer should be left to the remedy of the civil court.

7. It will not be deemed out of place to mention that I consulted Messrs. Hampton & Reily on the subject of Mr. Beaufort's letter, as they have both had considerable experience in indigo districts. Their opinions and those above expressed are identical.

From G. C. Cheap, Esq., Sessions Judge of Rajshahye, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 8), dated the 17th February 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, of the 14th of December last, with its enclosures, calling on me to report my opinion on the suggestions made by Mr. Beaufort, the joint magistrate of Pubna, for the revival or re-enactment of Sections II. and III., Regulation V. of 1830.

2. These sections were, I believe, rescinded, with reference to the orders contained in a despatch of the Honourable the Court of Directors, dated so far back as the 10th April 1832. The reasons given by the Court were embodied in the 32d, 33d, 34th, 36th, 37th and 41st paragraphs of their letter; and, in my humble opinion, are so conclusive against the re-enactment, that I do not see how such penal rules for breach of civil contracts could ever be sanctioned by the Legislature.

3. Though none of the gentlemen who signed the despatch are now in the Court, there can be little doubt that the present members of the Court would unanimously subscribe to the opinion recorded by their predecessors.

4. I would also beg leave to remark, that in this age of "free trade," no special penal enactment for breach of contract for the manufacture of indigo would ever have the sanction of Parliament, before whom all Acts of the Indian Government have, I believe, to be laid.

5. For the above, and other obvious reasons that I do not think it necessary to state, as it would only be useless occupying the time of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, I am against the re-enactment of the rules of Regulation V. of 1830 rescinded.

P.S.—The whole of the correspondence that took place relating to indigo manufacture appeared in a Blue Book, published in 1833, and at my suggestion was reprinted by Messrs. Thacker & Co. in 1834. The pamphlet is entitled "Papers relating to the Settlement of Europeans in India; republished from the Parliamentary Reports, by W. Thacker & Co., Calcutta," and may still be obtained from them; if not, I shall be happy to send you the copy I have.

From

From D. I. Money, Esq., Judge of Moorshedabad, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 89), dated the 26th March 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE to apologise for the delay which has occurred in the submission of reply to your letter (circular), No. 3079, dated 14th December 1854, forwarding copies of letters, as per margin, and requesting my opinion regarding the re-enactment, as recommended by Mr. Beaufort, of Sections II. and III. of Regulation V. of 1830, for the purpose of enforcing the execution of contracts relating to the cultivation and delivery of the indigo plant.

Letter from Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, No. 402, dated the 3d November 1854, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Letter from the joint magistrate and deputy collector of Pubna, No. 90, dated 26th October 1854, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division.

2. It does not appear to me that Mr. Beaufort has shown good cause for the re-enactment of the sections above-mentioned, which, although no reason was given, were probably repealed by the Government, as pressing hardly upon the ryot, and giving too much power to the planter. It was a power which was not possessed by those who had vested rights in land, the proprietors of the soil, and should only be delegated by the law to those who speculate in one branch of the commerce of the country upon clear and undeniable proof of exigency, and not "merely to keep matters quiet."

3. It is a common notion, I believe, in almost every district that the ryots are averse to the cultivation of indigo, and that the agricultural community have suffered much from its cultivation. To what extent this is true could only be ascertained by a commission of inquiry. As far as my experience goes, there is little or no aversion on the part of either the ryot or the zemindar to the cultivation of indigo on alluvial lands, because they do not yield other crops in greater abundance, and such aversion only exists, and excites in the end opposition and violence, when the planter is determined to sow indigo upon soil which the ryot believes would give him an exuberant crop, and pay him better if sown with paddy, or any other seed. Though in many instances, for no just cause whatever, the zemindar may instigate the ryot to a breach of his contract, and deserves punishment; yet, in cases like the above, where the contract is forced while the aversion exists, the natural consequence is opposition, and the zemindar becomes the ryot's protector.

4. The object to be attained under the proposed re-enactment is compensation for injury, and this can be more speedily and less vindictively attained by altering the civil law than by re-enacting a penal one.

5. Redress by summary suits is insufficient. I would lessen the period of 20 days fixed for serving summons to defendants under the provisions of Clause 2, Section III. Regulation VI. of 1823, to 10 days, and I would amend Section V. Regulation X. of 1836, which gives power to judges to make over summary suits relating to indigo for trial to the Principal Sudder Ameens and Sudder Ameens, by providing that indigo planters should be allowed to institute suits, according as they may value their claim, direct in the Courts of the Principal Sudder Ameen, Sudder Ameen and Moonsiff, instead of by the slower process of transfer by the judge.

6. By Clause 4, Section V. Regulation VI. of 1823, the amount of penalty in breaches of contract, owing to accident, is regulated. If to every contract was attached, as a penalty for its infringement, an estimated amount of damages, fixed either with reference to the advances to the ryot or the quantity of land contracted for, the planter, in a summary suit, would realise the full amount of his losses. Without some such provision, it would at any rate take time, even if it would not be difficult, upon the institution of a summary suit, to ascertain the amount of damages, and delay would ensue in recovering the amount and awarding the same to the planter.

7. Mr. Beaufort states that "the civil prosecution of a large number of ryots involves a large expenditure, the greater portion of which can never be recovered."

of 1831, regarding summary suits for rent, provides that summary claims preferred under Section IV. of that Regulation, shall be written on paper bearing a stamp of one-fourth the value which would have been required in a regular suit, in spite of which, in summary suits connected with the Civil Court, the stamp value sometimes exceeds the value of the claim. The latter part of that section, authorising collectors to take a plaint on eight annas' stamp, where a party is unable to pay the price of the prescribed stamp, should be also extended to summary suits for indigo.

8. If, when the plaint is proved, the planter can obtain a decree with costs, and in execution realise the amount decreed, with interest and costs; and if by expediting the summary process, and lessening the expense, he can both speedily and cheaply obtain compensation for his losses, there is no reason to apprehend that affrays would be the more frequent consequence of the planter's going to law, and seeking its redress under such provisions, than if the stringent repealed statutes alluded to were re-enacted.

9. Very few contracts have been registered under Clause 1, Section III., Regulation XX. of 1812, although the cultivation of indigo has increased. I concur with Mr. Beaufort in his opinion regarding the register of contracts, and the period at which they should expire. But I see no reason why they should not be, under careful provisions, registered by the moonsiffs as well as by the magistrate, deputy magistrate and collector, and also by the pergunnah cazees, under Regulation XXXIX. of 1793, on the payment of certain fees which might be fixed.

From J. C. Dodyson, Esq., Magistrate of Rajshahye, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 3), dated the 3d January 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular letter, No. 3079, of the 14th December 1854, forwarding a copy of Mr. Beaufort's report on the expediency of re-enacting a law for summarily enforcing contracts for growing indigo entered into by the planters with the ryots, together with a copy of Mr. Gouldsbury's letter on the subject, and requesting me to give my opinion on the matter in question; and, in reply thereto, to inform you that I most fully concur in what Mr. Beaufort suggests, and for like reasons to those fully given by that officer; for I consider that the re-enactment of Sections II. and III. of Regulation V. of 1830 would go a great way in preventing those affrays with the ryots, of which the zemindars are the main instigators. I am also of opinion, that all contracts of this description ought to be immediately registered by the persons themselves, and at the smallest possible expense to the contracting parties, and should not be held valid in any court unless so registered; nor should these contracts be enforced beyond the current year, for if held valid beyond that time a door would be opened for oppression.

I consider the law as it at present stands, by referring the planter to a civil suit, gives him no protection whatever, for when a ryot agrees to cultivate, say 10 beegahs of indigo, he generally receives an advance of 20 rupees, or two rupees per beegah, giving no security after the vexatious delay which at present is inseparable from a civil suit, if he obtains a decree against the defaulter, finds that the whole property of the ryot is not worth half of the original sum advanced to him, not to mention the costs of the civil suit.

Such being the case, I consider that what Mr. Beaufort advocates, if carried out, would be of immense benefit to all indigo planters, without in the least degree being a source of hardship to the zemindar or his ryots.

From

From H. B. Lawford, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 31), dated the 12th January 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular, No. 3079, dated the 14th ultimo, and its enclosures.

2. In reply thereto, I beg to inform you that I consider that the re-enacting of the law for summarily enforcing the execution of contracts entered into for the cultivation and delivery of indigo would be a beneficial measure, provided that a stringent law were enacted to prevent its abuse, and to protect the cultivators of the plant.

3. Act V. of 1830, before the repeal of the two first sections, was altogether in favour of the planter, and left the ryot entirely at his mercy, for, of course, the planter could make the ryot take advances to any amount, and after that have him punished, in the event of his refusing to sow his land with Indigo.

4. Now there is no doubt that ryots generally object to the cultivation of indigo. In the first place, when the advances are given, the ryot receives the money with his own hand, but before he has left the compound of the factory he has been mulcted of the best part of it by the factory servants, so that he is not much better off when he leaves the factory than when he entered it. * I do not see how this can be put a stop to, for though many planters make the advances to the ryots with their own hands, they say that they know the factory servants take a certain part for themselves from the ryots immediately the money is paid.

5. Then again indigo is not a crop which pays, as any honest planter will allow; and very often, so far from paying, it is a dead loss to the ryots; this being the case, their antipathy to the crop is not to be wondered at; moreover, if in a bad season, the ryot who has received advances cannot produce a sufficient crop of indigo to cover those advances, the sum in which he is indebted to the factory is carried on under the head of advances to him, although he may receive nothing at all.

6. This is, I think, exceedingly unjust, and in my opinion the planter ought to have no claim whatever against the ryot, after the ryot has sown and delivered the crop of the specified quantity of land which he (the ryot) agreed to sow.

7. It is not the ryot's fault if the crop turn out a bad one, and if so, why should he be obliged to bear the burthen of the loss of it; if the planter had sown and cultivated the indigo himself, and an adequate crop had not been produced, the planter would have had to bear the loss himself, and because the ryot has sown the crop, why should he have to bear the loss for the planter?

8. When planters are asked why they do not take the cultivation of indigo into their own hands, and do away with the system of advances, they will tell you that it would be impossible to attend properly to the operations of a large concern; there may be some force in this argument, but I am quite sure that one reason for their disliking the cultivation is, the knowledge that the loss in a bad season would fall on themselves instead of on the ryots.

9. Then again many planters, instead of apportioning a reasonable quantity of the ryots' land for the cultivation of indigo, will take a third or even a half of course; when this is the case, the ryot's time is almost wholly taken up with his indigo crop, and as this does not pay him, he necessarily becomes a ruined man.

10. Now I know of one concern in this district, in which the manager only takes two beegahs out of 30 for the cultivation of indigo. The loss of his ryots on that crop, therefore, is so small, that it is scarcely felt by them, and it is a loss for which they are compensated by the protection afforded to them by the factory. I do not mean to say that two beegahs out of 30 is the utmost that any planter ought to be allowed to take, but if one man can make taking that quantity pay, no one ought, I think, to be allowed to take the excessive quantity which, as I have shown above, some are in the habit of taking.

11. There is no denying that the planters require protection for their crops after they are sown, as the zemindars are constantly stirring up the ryots to refuse to sow after they have taken advances, and I think that the re-enacting of the two first sections of Act V. of 1830, would be sufficient to protect their interests though at the same time I think a clause should be added to section IV. of the Act (unrepealed), making it a misdemeanour for a man to plough up his own indigo after he has taken advances for the crop; for the present law, as interpreted by the Sudder Nizamut Adawlut, allows a ryot to destroy his crop himself after he has taken advances, and refers the planter for redress to the civil court.

12. If a law such as this be passed for the protection of the planter, there should be a stringent one passed for the protection of the ryot, one proviso of which should be that no planter should be allowed to take more than a certain proportion of the ryots' land for the cultivation of indigo. I imagine that it could be easily ascertained from the planters themselves what a fair proportion is. If any ryot chose voluntarily to take advances to sow more than the legal quantity of his land with indigo, and afterwards refused to sow, the criminal courts should only be empowered to enforce the sowing of the legal quantity, and the planter might sue the ryot for any further claims against him in the civil courts; without a proviso of this nature, an agreement would be taken from every ryot to sow any quantity of land the planter pleased, and the law would thus become a dead letter.

13. Another feature of this law should be that if, owing to a bad season, or any other cause out of the control of the ryot, the produce of the land which he had sown did not cover the advances which he had received, the planter should have no claim against the ryot on that account, it being manifestly more equitable that the loss consequent on a bad crop should be borne by the planter than by the ryot who was obliged to sow it for him.

14. If some such law as this were passed for the protection of planters and ryots, indigo cultivation would be more popular, I think, in the eyes of the people, and the protection afforded to the planters would prevent many of the unseemly outbreaks which, at present, are of too frequent occurrence in the Mofussil.

From A. E. Russell, Esq., Magistrate of Tirhoot, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under-Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 20), dated the 19th January 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular letter, No. 3079, dated 14th ultimo, forwarding copies of letters from Mr. Beaufort and the Commissioner of the Rajshahye division, regarding the expediency of re-enacting a law, making the evasion of indigo contracts by ryots punishable by the criminal courts.

2. It appears to me that, in some cases, the indigo planter is certainly put to great inconvenience and loss by the evasion of the contracts by the ryots, as though he may obtain a decree against the ryot, it is very often quite impossible to levy enough from his property to cover the expenses of the law proceedings and the amount decreed; but though many of these cases are so like fraud on the part of the ryots, that they might be justly punishable for the offence, yet taking into consideration the fact that in many parts of the country the cultivation of indigo is rather a forced than a voluntary act on the part of the ryot, as is shown by the fact that scarcely any factory in this district has cultivation in any mouzah, except in such as are let in farm to the factory, I do not think that it is advisable to enact a law which would make the evasion of a contract, in many instances forced on the ryot against his will, a matter for punishment under the criminal law.

3. In cases where the cultivation of indigo is voluntarily undertaken by the ryots, it has often appeared to me a hardship that the planter should have no redress redress except through the civil courts ; but in enacting a law of this kind, it is necessary to take into consideration the state of indigo contracts in general, and I do not feel inclined, all things being taken into consideration, to recommend the enactment of such a law.

From G. A. Pepper, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Purneah, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 45), dated the 22d January 1855.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 3079, dated 14th December 1854, and to the inquiry contained in it, I beg to subscribe the following opinion :—

The question at present under consideration is, whether an Act, as proposed by Mr. Beaufort, to make the non-fulfilment of a contract entered into by a ryot subject to summary trial and punishment in a criminal court would be beneficial or otherwise ?

It is universally admitted, that the present state of the law is defective ; that it affords no protection or security to the interests of the planter, and for the ends of justice is totally inadequate ; that it is much too dilatory, and that planters avoid resorting to it, as it only entails additional loss upon themselves. Under these circumstances, some new law becomes absolutely necessary ; but it is questionable whether more evil than good would not result, if the Act, as proposed by Mr. Beaufort, be passed without any corresponding check ; and I think Mr. Beaufort's plan of confining the validity of an engagement to one year would not alone be sufficient, though an excellent measure in itself.

From inquiries, I find that the generality of planters would approve of the proposed law ; but some have objected, on the ground of it giving the planter too much power, and that when formerly it existed it was much abused. Under these circumstances, it appears to me that a summary process by civil law would be most advisable, whereby all the advantages proposed by the new law would be secured without many of its objections.

However, on taking the subject into consideration, it appears to me that every person voluntarily entering into a compact should be bound to perform it, or bear the loss ; but herein lies the difficulty, that it is not a criminal act to decline fulfilling a contract ; and secondly, a ryot, who so breaks his engagement, and seriously injures the planter, is, generally speaking, a pauper, or at least so manages to dispose of his property as to make it worse than useless to prosecute him for damages. It not unfrequently happens, too, that the want of ready money makes a ryot enter into the agreement, when he is well aware at the time that he cannot fulfil it, and has no intention of doing so, or sows bad grain, or at an unfavourable season, thereby hoping by the loss of the crop to secure his lands for some other purpose. However, these subterfuges and fraudulent practices of the ryot, whether instigated by a neighbouring zemindar, or by personal motives, prove the inadequacy of the present law, and the necessity of some other more summary and more stringent. But again, there is a serious objection to the one proposed. It strikes at a great principle ; it brings civil acts, which are cognizant by the civil law, within the scope of the criminal law. It tends to make cognizant by the criminal law acts which are not criminal. It interferes with the liberty of the subject. For instance, a ryot enters into an agreement, from which he thought a corresponding advantage would accrue to himself ; but, after all the formalities are gone through, upon more mature reflection, he finds that he has been overreached ; will he be imprisoned for withdrawing from such a contract ? He finds his contract injurious to his interests, perhaps seriously so ; he is therefore willing to bear the loss by civil law, incurred by the infringement of his contract, provided he can save himself from ruin. Would there be any crime in his doing so ; on the contrary, would it not be a serious infringement of his liberty to compel him to endure more loss than justice requires and is necessary, and to prevent him seeking what he considers his best interests ? How can a man be criminally prosecuted for seeking at his own cost to better himself ? In my opinion, it is only when he becomes without just cause unwilling, or foreknowingly unable to bear the loss, and thereby casts the burden of his own shortsightedness intentionally upon another, that any criminality can be attached to his act, and that he might be deservedly and advantageously subjected for fraud to the criminal authority.

Besides, as we are administering for planters and zemindars, it would be as well to consider what it is they wish to secure. The object and interest of a planter is to secure as much labour on as moderate terms as possible, and for that purpose he makes advances to the ryots. Is he not bound to take some precautions previous to doing so, or is he to proceed blindly to work and leave his interests to the protection of the law? The law protects him who seeks to protect himself, and the planter should not have that protected by an arbitrary law which might be secured by an exercise of proper caution. The planter's interest is to protect rather than oppress the ryot, on the principle that free labour is more productive than forced, and the ryot's interest in most cases is to adhere to his contract. The reason of his breaking it is, that he has to serve two masters who are generally opposed to each other, the zemindar and the European planter, and to satisfy the demands of the former, the ryot enters into fraudulent contracts with the latter. The ryot is to blame for entering into the contract, but the planter should, in my opinion, exercise more circumspection, and make no advances till he knows the ryot's ability to fulfil his promise, and has sufficient security offered for its performance. It is, generally speaking, fraud on the one side and negligence on the other. But should the law exist, will the planter be benefited to the extent proposed and expected? A ryot in prison cannot return him the crop he agreed for, and the fear of being subjected to such a degradation may deter all the more respectable ryots from taking any advances or making any such agreements, and so render the law nugatory, while those only who did not fear the result, and consequently would not be deterred by it, would work on such terms.

There are persons, however, against whose fraudulent practices a planter requires protection much more than against the ryots, and these are ill-disposed, unscrupulous, and extorting zemindars. For instance, a planter has made advances to ryots for indigo; this takes place when their lands are under water, but when the season arrives for sowing, the planter wishes to measure the land engaged to him, and suddenly finds that a putneedar or a zemindar has so intimidated or bought over the ryots that he will not, and they dare not, let the planter measure the lands he has paid for, and the only course left the planter is to do it at all risks, or to pay the required fee of 400 or 500 rupees to the extortioner, whether putneedar, or talookdar, or zemindar, knowing well at the same time that the next year will bring a like or increased demand.

There are native planters as well as European; there are respectable men amongst them, but there are also some of the most unscrupulous; what is to deter any of the latter from taking advantage of the great power entrusted to them, unless there is some corresponding check to protect the ryot? Limiting the period of the validity of the agreement to one year, as Mr. Beaufort proposes, only prescribes a bound to their authority, but does not give any security against the abuse of it. From these and similar considerations, I would propose a summary civil process, otherwise I cannot advocate the proposed new law without some amendments and extension.

Thus I beg to suggest that the ryot be only prosecutable in the criminal court, and subject to one month's imprisonment in case—

First. He is proved to the satisfaction of the magistrate to have broken a good and valid contract, and to have no personal property or other means whereby the injury inflicted on the planter can be remedied and his claims satisfied. But should the ryot prove that he possesses property, which can be sold to indemnify the claims of the planter, or that he has land which the planter can use for raising a crop of indigo, and which he is willing to cultivate, or give the planter to be cultivated, or has given good and sufficient security so that the amount can be recovered, I would, in that case, remit the imprisonment and attach the property, pending a decision by civil court, or else give to the criminal court the necessary authority to award damages.

Secondly.—In case the ryot has been proved to the satisfaction of the presiding authority to have fraudulently made, or to have broken an engagement fraudulently, or with a view to his own profit, at the risk of the planter.

Thirdly.—In case of having broken an engagement, the ryot possesses no available available property or has no sufficient security, which was, however, sufficient at the time of making the contract (for if insufficient then the fault is the planter's for accepting it).

Fourthly.—As imprisonment of the ryot will not indemnify the planter, I would propose that in all cases where land could be identified and proved to belong to the ryot, and he had no other means of repaying the planter, that the amount of land engaged for in the contract be made over for the crop or the season to the planter.

Fifthly.—As securities and zemindars are often as culpable, or more so than the ryots, all persons proved to have aided and abetted the ryot in defrauding the planter should be punishable by fine (for instance, two ryots stand security for a third when he enters an engagement with the planter, and fraudulently assert that they possess property, or connive to produce property to deceive and induce the planter to accept their security and make the advance). In such a case I would propose that not only the ryot be afterwards punishable should he break the engagement, but that the sureties be made also responsible and subject to a like sentence.

Sixthly.—To give protection to the ryot, I would beg to suggest that, in cases when it is proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that the charge brought by the planter against any ryot is unfounded or malicious, the planter or zemindar subject himself for every such offence to one month's imprisonment and 200 rupees' fine or an additional month's imprisonment, and that the Magistrate be empowered to award damages to the ryot from the amount of the fine levied, or from the personal property of the defendants.

Seventhly.—That no claim for broken contracts be admissible under this Act beyond one year of the date of their engagement.

Eightly.—That planters be authorized to measure lands for the amount of which they hold engagements.

All which I still think might be as well or better done by a Small-cause Court than by a Criminal.

From G. Bright, Esq., Magistrate of Midnapore, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 39), dated the 29th January 1855.

Sir,

In reply to your circular letter, No. 3079, dated the 14th December 1854, I have the honour to report, that no necessity appears to me to exist to make the breach of contract by ryots for indigo cultivation a criminal offence. The law as it stands, under the provisions of Regulations VI. of 1823 and V. of 1830, and Act X. of 1836, is in my opinion quite sufficient to secure the interests of the planters, and it would be unreasonable to suppose that a special law should be passed for this class of people without extending it to all other classes engaged in cultivation of other kinds of crops, and who are equally liable to the same loss and inconvenience.

2. It is argued that from want of such a law planters resort to violence to compel the fulfilment of contracts, and that breaches of the peace thereby occur. I do not see how the proposed law would obviate this. Under the present prevailing system of latials and armed retainers, compulsion would in most cases be primarily resorted to, to save the trouble, inconvenience, and loss of time necessary for prosecution in the criminal courts. The prosecution itself would only be of second rate importance, and, as it were, kept in reserve in case such other means failed, or it was seen that for some cause it would be an inadvisable act to adopt violence.

From C. F. Carnac, Esq., Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 83), dated the 6th February 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, dated 14th December last, with its enclosures, on the subject of contracts entered into for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant.

2. I have given the matter my best consideration and conversed with several parties on the subject, and although I was in the first instance inclined to vote against the introduction of the system of making the non-fulfilment of contracts for indigo penal, fearing lest some might make it the means of oppressing the ryots, I have now come to the conclusion that, provided each contract be registered regularly, as proposed by Mr. Beaufort, the plan cannot help being of considerable benefit to the planter; whilst it will not in any way tend to place at the disposal of many of the class another instrument of tyranny and oppression.

3. There is no fear, I think, of the planters themselves, as a body, abusing the law, if passed; for I believe them to be a far more enlightened and better class of men than were in existence when the former Act was passed, but there are of course exceptions to the rule, and it is to provide against their abusing the privilege that some stringent measures should be adopted.

4. I would suggest, however, that the Act should apply not only to contracts for indigo, but also for supplying cocoons, &c., for which very large advances are made by those engaged in the manufacture of silk.

5. It often happens, I believe, that a man takes advances for a large supply of cocoons according to the promise of the bund, or supply. Instead, however, of supplying the cocoons in question to the manufacturer who has really advanced, he goes and offers them to another, who readily takes them off his hands, and thereby the man secures a double price for his cocoons, at the expense of the party who has advanced for them. In such a case the loser has no redress except in the civil court, to which it is not often worth his while to have recourse.

6. The contracts, if registered, should be witnessed by two parties, not in any way connected with the one advancing the money; and the registers of such deeds should be appointed by the Magistrate in the neighbourhood of every indigo factory and silk filature.

7. I think that the sum of four annas would be a sufficient fee for registration, and two annas for a copy of every deed. This charge would not be felt by any one, and would be sufficient to remunerate the register himself.

8. Where police thannahs are available, I do not see any objection to the contracts being registered there, in due form, and noted merely in the razeenamcha to prevent any fraud; a certain fee might also be allowed to the several police officers entrusted with the duty.

9. Where a Moonsiff's cutchery is at hand, it would, I think, be advisable to entrust him with the registration of the deeds in preference to the darogahs.

From E. W. Molony, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Jessore, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 92), dated the 8th February 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular, No. 3079, dated the 14th of December, with enclosures, and in reply beg to forward my opinion on the proposition submitted by Mr. Beaufort.

2. Mr. Beaufort, after explaining that the planter has no remedy for breach of contract to sow indigo but in the civil court, goes on to show in paragraphs 7 to 13, the evils resulting from such breach of engagement on the part of the ryot when backed by his zemindar; that the expense and tediousness of a civil suit suit prevents the adoption of that course, and that the planter is in consequence driven to compel fulfilments of contracts by physical force. He then proceeds to argue, that much of this would be prevented by the re-enactment of sections II and III. Regulation V. 1830; that the zemindars would cease to instigate the ryots to break their contracts, and that affrays and disturbances would be of much rarer occurrence.

3. Mr. Beaufort correctly states, that it is the intervention of the zemindars either with a view of extorting money or from personal motives of enmity which causes the ryots to break off their contracts; but I do not agree with him that the law he proposes will remedy this evil, though it may check it in some measure. In paragraph 14, Mr. Beaufort says, "The zemindar will be driven to the not illegal power he may exercise over his ryots to prevent their taking advances instead of first taking and then repudiating them." This will bring the planter and ryots into collision and will lead to constant disturbances, and the same system of intimidation will be necessary to make the ryots take advances as is necessary now to make them fulfil their engagements; the power of the zemindar, as instanced in paragraph 12, will not be lessened.

4. But the question is, not whether the proposed enactment will tend to check affrays or oppression; such a result will never be brought about by this or similar laws, until the cultivation of indigo becomes more tasteful to the ryots; but whether it is just and proper to give assistance to cause the enforcement of bond fide contracts of a nature particularly liable to be broken through, and which if not enforced very summarily entail great loss upon the planter. This, I think, should be done, and I entirely agree with Mr. Beaufort in the propositions contained in the 14th to 18th paragraphs of his letter. No person should be punishable for breach of a contract in which all these forms had not been observed.

From F. Beaufort, Esq., Joint Magistrate of Pubna, to A. W. Russell, Esq., Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 114), dated the 19th March 1855.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3079, of the 14th December last, with its enclosures, regarding the summary enforcement of contracts for the cultivation of indigo.

2. Having expressed my own opinion on this subject at full length, it would be superfluous for me to say anything more on the subject. But I may observe that Mr. Gouldsbury has not entered upon the question in the objections which he has urged to the proposal. The only point for consideration is, whether the "extraordinary and anomalous measure" is required or not; and it is hardly a sufficient reason for ignoring it, that it merits such epithets.

3. If the civil penalty be insufficient, as I have already attempted to show, the only resource is to make the breach of faith punishable criminally. And if the enactment proposed has the effect of preventing the disturbances which so commonly occur, and so constantly embroil the peace of a district, I cannot, for my part, see any objection to it in the fact that it is opposed to a preconceived maxim of law.

MINUTE by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated the 6th June 1856.

I AM desirous of knowing how the late indigo sowing season passed off in the indigo districts with respect to disputes coming before the Magistrates, caused by contending claims to land, or complaints of non-fulfilment of contract on the one hand, or of forcible sowing of indigo on the other.

I wish the several Commissioners called upon to ascertain the facts from the Magistrates and to report them to Government, stating at the same time their own and the Magistrates' opinions whether, where such disputes have occurred, they have been owing to defects of law or administration, such as it may be in the power of the Government to remedy; and, if so, what are the remedies they would suggest for that purpose.

A similar communication may be made to the Sudder Court, in order to obtain their sentiments on the subject, and those of the Sessions Judges.

From C. T. Buckland, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioners of the Patna, Bhaugulpore, Rajshahye, Dacca, Chittagong, Nuddea, and Burdwan Divisions (No. 2048), dated 7 June 1856.

Sir,

THE Lieutenant Governor is desirous of being informed how the late indigo sowing season has passed off in the indigo districts of Bengal, with respect to disputes which have come before the Magistrates caused by contending claims to land between neighbouring planters or zemindars, or by complaints of non-fulfilment of contracts on the one hand, or of forcible sowing of indigo on the other, between planters and ryots.

2. I am directed, therefore, to request that you will ascertain the facts of any cases that may have occurred from the Magistrates of the districts in your division in which indigo is cultivated, and that you will report on them to Government, stating at the same time your own and the Magistrates' opinion whether, where any such disputes have occurred, they have owed their origin to any defects of law or administration, such as it may be in the power of the Government to remedy; and, if so, what are the remedies which you would suggest for that purpose.

From C. T. Buckland, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Register of the Sudder Court (No. 1704), dated 7 June 1856.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward herewith a copy of a letter this day addressed to the Commissioners of Circuit noted on the margin.

2. The Lieutenant Governor requests that the court will take the subject of this communication into their consideration, and will favour him with their own opinion on it, after communicating with the Sessions Judges of the districts in which indigo is cultivated.

From C. Steer, Esq., Commissioner of the Chittagong Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 166), dated 2 July 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 2048, dated 7th ultimo, calling for a report how the late indigo sowing season has passed off in the districts of this division, with respect to disputes which have come before the Magistrates caused by contending claims to land between neighbouring planters or zemindars, or by complaints of non-fulfilment of contracts on the one hand, or of forcible sowing of indigo on the other, between planters and ryots.

2. In this division Tipperah is the only district where indigo is cultivated. No dispute occurred in the last indigo season regarding indigo sowings, &c. Only one petition was given on the part of Mr. Lamb, complaining of anticipated opposition in sowing, but none was made, and the police reported that the sowing had been completed without hindrance.

3. It would, I think, be an advantage if cases for breach of contract to cultivate indigo, under Regulations VI. of 1823, and Act X. of 1836, were made cognisable nisable by the Moonsiffs primarily, instead of the present rule, which makes those cases cognisable by the Zillah Judge, and referable at his pleasure to the Collector. Under certain circumstances the necessity for an application to the Judge makes the law a dead letter. The crop is going under water, and no time is to be lost in cutting it.

4. Again, if there is no objection to special legislation in favour of indigo planters, a subject which I shall not now discuss, and the object is to remove by all means the causes which lead to affrays between planters and ryots, there should be better provision made for this at the time when indigo is to be sown. When a ryot, who has taken advances, meditates disposing of the crop to some one else, the law provides the means of enabling the planter to obtain the crop; if a ryot takes advances and will not sow, the planter's only remedy is an action for damages. But a decree against a Bengal ryot, every one knows, is of no more value than waste paper. The value of a crop of indigo is to the planter, on the contrary, much more than three times the amount of the advance, were that even always recoverable. There is every temptation, therefore, to the planter to take the law into his own hands and sow by force the land which, by contract, ought to have been sown by the ryot. Two things then are required, first, some remedy more than nominal to recompense the planter for loss sustained by breach of contract; and, secondly, some suitable and effective measure to prevent the planter from sowing by force the lands of a ryot who has taken advances and refuses to sow them with indigo.

5. I see no objection why a planter should not be allowed to apply to the court to sow the land, for the cultivation of which he has made advances, in the same way as he is now allowed to apply to court to cut a crop for which he has advanced. Were he allowed to do this, and any opposition to him was declared a criminal offence, punishable by the Magistrate, it would remove in a great measure the fighting which now often arises at the time of indigo sowing. If these cases were made cognisable by the Moonsiffs, and a rule made like the one I propose, there would be no necessity for the planter to take the law into his own hands. The Moonsiff is always close by, his order would enable the planter to sow the land of a contracting ryot before the time of sowing passed by, and he would have better security for the recovery of his advance than a decree for damages.

6. The ryot could not justly complain, for he has done the wrong which has led to the deprivation of his lands. After the crop has been cut, he should be restored to his lands, and an account rendered to him of the expenses incurred by the planter in the cultivation and reaping, &c. If at the price the crop was bargained to be sold there is anything due to the ryot, he should be entitled to it; and if the planter has suffered any loss, he should be entitled to recover it by a suit against the ryot, and it should be declared that a planter sowing by force the land of any ryot with whom he has a dispute, and without permission obtained from the Moonsiff, would render himself, and all parties concerned in the sowing, amenable to punishment by the Magistrate.

From J. H. Young, Esq., Officiating Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, to the Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 101), dated the 15th July 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 2048, dated the 7th ultimo, desiring me to report, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, how the late indigo sowing season has passed off in the indigo districts of this division; whether any disputes have arisen, and if so, whether they are from defects of law or administration, and if so, what remedies I would suggest.

2. I called on the six Magistrates in this division to report on the subject, and I have just received their answers. In Bancoorah and Beerbhoom there have been no such cases, and in Hooghly and Howrah only one or two. In Midnapoor and Burdwan there have been six or seven such cases, but all of a trifling description.

3. Mr. Lawford is the only Magistrate under me who has suggested any alteration in the present laws concerning the cultivation of indigo. That gentleman was, as his Honour is aware, for some time in the Kishnaghur district before he came here, and his opinion on the subject is therefore entitled to some weight. For this reason I beg to forward his letter on the subject in original.

4. Mr. Lawford's remarks may be considered under two heads; first, he thinks the law hard upon the planter, inasmuch as the ryot, after taking advances, may, "wilfully destroy his own crop," and it is "not to be expected that the man who has made the advances will stand quietly looking on while his crop is being destroyed, when he knows that his only remedy will be the civil court."

5. For this state of things, Mr. Lawford suggests a remedy in these words—"when the ryot has taken advances, and the crop has come up, let the planter have the indigo, and the ryot the profit of his land."

6. There seems to be some obscurity here as to the ownership of the crop. In the first instance it is called that of the ryot, and in the second, that of the planter; and it would probably be difficult to state by law when it changed hands. For instance, supposing the day after the sowing the ryot ploughs up the land before (that is) the crop can have appeared above the ground, to whom does it belong?

7. But the great objection I should have to legislating in this way, would be the interference which it would necessitate in the private affairs of individuals.

8. The planter makes advances for the cultivation of indigo just as the mahajun does for the cultivation of rice or any other crop. We do not interfere to let the mahajun take the rice crop, and why should we do so for the planter? If the mahajun is injured, he has his remedy in the Civil Court, and so has the planter. I cannot see why one should be more favoured than the other.

9. Mr. Lawford also considers the law to be hard on the ryot, and he suggests that, if after receiving advances "the crop fails through no carelessness of the ryot, let the planter bear the loss, and the advances which the ryot has received be struck off the books; he planted indigo to please the planter, not to please himself, and that being the case, why should he be the sufferer?"

10. If the planter chooses to advance his money on these terms, there is no reason whatever, it seems to me, why he should not be allowed to do so; but to make a law enforcing these terms in all cases would be most objectionable, in my opinion.

11. It would also, I believe, be quite futile, futile as the old usury laws were, to prevent the extortion of high interest. If the planter could only advance money legally on these terms, he would soon find out an illegal mode of doing it, which would answer his purpose as well, if not better than the present way.

12. I would altogether deprecate any legislative interference with such private transactions. I would protect the planter, who has given advances by laying heavy penalties upon the ryot who breaks his engagements, and I would protect the ryot from being compelled to take advances by giving him all the facilities possible for clearing up his accounts in a legal manner, and for enabling him to extricate himself from the planter's grip.

13. In the first of these cases the decision lies in nine cases out of ten with the Fouzdaree authorities, with all their oppressive machinery; and in the second, with the Dewanee authorities, with all their procrastinating machinery. If such cases were disposed of by the revenue authorities, it would, I believe, be a great gain to the honest planter and the honest ryot.

From H. B. Lawford, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Burdwan, to the Commissioner of the Burdwan Division (No. 132), dated the 3d July 1856.

Sir,

With reference to your circular letter No. 27, of the 9th ultimo, I have the honour to inform you that the indigo sowing season has passed off this year without without any disturbance in this district; seven complaints only, in connection with indigo, having been preferred to me, and these all of a very trifling nature.

2. In two of the cases the dispute arose about the boundaries of the land: one was amicably settled, and the other is still pending.

3. In one case complaint of forcibly sowing indigo in another man's land was made: the case is still pending, but it is one of no difficulty.

4. Two cases of wilfully destroying indigo are pending, but as the crop was destroyed by others than those by whom it was sown, there will be no difficulty in disposing of them.

5. One case, in which a chowkeedar rented his land to a gomashtha, and when the latter went to sow indigo repudiated his bond, was amicably settled, and another similar case in which a planter agreed with a zemindar to sow indigo on the latter's land, giving up the land after cutting the crop, and which the zemindar denies, is still pending under Act IV. of 1840. No defect in the law has given rise to any of these disputes, as they might have occurred with any other crop. I do not mean to say, however, that there are no defects, for I consider the law, as now interpreted, which allows a man who has taken advances for the purpose of sowing indigo to wilfully destroy his own crop, an anomaly, which I think cannot too soon be altered; that a law of this nature should cause disputes cannot be wondered at, for it is not probable that the man who has made the advances will stand quietly looking on while his crop is being destroyed, when he knows that his only remedy will be the Civil Court.

6. Another great evil which exists in the system rather than the law, is the way in which money is advanced to the ryots. I believe it is admitted on all hands that money must be advanced to a ryot, whatever crop he sows, so that advances cannot be done away with, but indigo is a most uncertain crop, and is consequently not regarded so favourably by the ryots as rice and other common crops. A good season may and probably does pay him, taken by itself, but in the balance against this must be placed the numerous seasons in which the crop almost and sometimes entirely fails, and when this is the case the ryot loses the produce of the land, and also gets debited in the planter's books with the advances he has received, and if this goes on for several seasons he gets so deep in debt to the planter, that he has very little chance of ever freeing himself again.

7. This is a system which I think ought not to continue.

8. When the ryot has taken advances and the crop has come up, let the planter have the indigo and the ryot the profit of his land, but if the crop fails through no carelessness of the ryot, let the planter bear the loss, and the advances which the ryot has received be struck out of the book; he planted indigo to please the planter, not to please himself, and that being the case I do not see why he should be the sufferer.

9. In nijabad concerns, you hardly ever hear of disputes, simply because the planter sows his own lands with his own servants; if you ask the proprietor of a large concern why he does not have his land nijabad, he will probably tell you that it is impossible to keep up a sufficient number of ploughs, bullocks, &c. to cultivate such a vast extent of country, but I believe the principal reason is, the knowledge that if the crop fails the loss will be his own, and not the ryot's, as it is now.

10. If ryots knew that if the crop failed owing to no fault of theirs, the advances would not be carried on against them, I have no doubt that the culture of the crop would become popular, as then it would be worth while running the chance of making a good season and large profits, and if the crop failed their only loss would be that they would get no profit out of their land.

From A. Grote, Esq., Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 94), dated the 19th August 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 2048, dated the 7th June 1856, calling for certain information regarding any disputes about indigo which may have occurred during the late sowing season.

2. The Magistrate of Nuddea tells me, "there have been complaints of forcible advances, breach of contract, forcible sowings, breaking up of cultivated land, all of which cases have been amicably settled; in fact trespass, that is, destruction of crop by cattle, have been the only cases connected with indigo that have been at all generally punished. There have also been a few cases of illegal assembly in which Act V. of 1848, has been put in requisition four times."

3. The Magistrate of Moorshedabad reports that no cases of the kind have occurred in the thannah under his direct management; four cases occurred in the Aurungabad subdivision. In three of these, ryots complained of being compelled to sow indigo; the other was a boundary dispute. "They might all have been of a more serious character," Mr. Spencer adds, "had it not been for the proximity of the subdivisional court." In my last quarterly statement Mr. Herschel's explanation of one of these cases has been quoted from at some length.

4. The Magistrate of Jessore gives the number of petitions connected with indigo cultivation, in the following tabular form:

	JESSORE.	MAGOORAH.	KHOOLNAH.
1. Complaint of collections of lattials for forcible sowing of indigo and prevention of sowing sometimes, including charges of plunder - - - -	2	38	—
2. Sowing indigo in paddy and other lands belonging to and sown by ryots - - - - -	8	7	4
3. Burning a house for the purpose of sowing indigo on its site - - - - -	-	1	—
4. Forcibly taking away ryots' bullocks to sow indigo and to compel them to fulfil contracts - - -	-	9	—
5. Duress to compel ryots to fulfil contracts, &c. - -	-	4	—
6. Cases of assault and oppression on ryots to compel them to give indigo lands or fulfil contracts - -	-	5	—
7. Affrays connected with indigo - - - - -	-	2	—
8. Trespass in indigo - - - - -	4	1	—
9. Cutting khals to fill up paddy lands, so as to make them fit for indigo - - - - -	-	2	—
10. Compelling ryots to sign blank paper - - - -	-	2	—
11. Forcibly taking away indigo seed - - - - -	1	-	1
12. Breaking up indigo cultivation - - - - -	2	—	—

5. "On the whole," Mr. Molony says, "the sowing season has gone off quietly." Two affrays connected with indigo were reported from the Magoorah subdivision. In one, Mr. Bell's people, who had gone to plough some lands belonging to his factory, were opposed by the ryots of the sheikdars of Digga, who drove them off, wounding and carrying away one of them. The other is described as an intended affray between Mr. Oman and others, which was prevented by the timely arrival of the police. From Mr. Skinner's letter I find that Mr. Bell's dispute was as much about a hath as indigo.

6. The cases entered under heading 2, are generally made up between the parties. Heading 8, includes three cases of wilful injury to indigo belonging, in two

two of the cases, to factories owned by native planters, and one case of wounding with rescue of cows, which had been caught trespassing in indigo fields.

7. In Baraset there has been a serious dispute between Mr. Hampton of the Hobrah concern, and certain ryots. The servants of the former have been committed to the sessions court, on a charge of plundering the houses of some villagers who would not sow indigo.*

* I hear the parties were acquitted a few days ago.

8. As regards the defects of the law in which such disputes are presumed to have their origin, and the remedies which should be applied, on which points Government requires my opinion and that of the magistrates, I find the latter by no means unanimous on either.

9. Mr. Spencer thinks the law sufficient if promptly administered, and if the magistrate pays attention to the miscellaneous petitions which generally precede serious disputes. But he adds—

“4. Disputes between the planter and ryot, regarding the forcible sowing of indigo, must to a certain extent always exist, for it must be clear to every one that the cultivation of indigo is for the most part distasteful to the ryots, who would much prefer cultivating rice and other crops of grain, and seldom, if ever voluntarily, take advances for indigo; and this I think can hardly be remedied by legislation, and all that can be done is to provide greater facilities for obtaining redress by increasing the number of sub-divisions in Bengal.”

Mr. Elliott says:

“It is difficult to state where the deficiency lies in the law. I should say the cause is an inefficient and corrupt police, which is both powerless and unwilling to assist the ryot against the oppression of the zemindar or employer.”

The Cattle Trespass Act will, he thinks, remove one principal cause of quarrel, and the next most serious cause is in his opinion breach of contract on the part of the ryots, but beyond showing how completely without redress the planter is, under the present law, he makes no suggestion for improving his position.

Mr. Molony says:

“6. I do not consider that any of the cases that have occurred in this district owe their origin to any defects in the laws; but the planter should have, I think, some summary process for compelling a ryot to fulfil his contract.”

If the ryot under advance fail to sow when the season comes on, the planters, says Mr. Molony, sow his lands themselves. Mr. Skinner's report, which is forwarded by the magistrate, gives an instance in which Mr. Gow Smith had, during his absence from Magoorah at the April examination, “made a clean sweep of the lands available for indigo by making a show of plough and men which would prevent any one from interfering.”

10. Mr. Skinner is in favour of giving the planter power by a criminal process to enforce the fulfilment of a contract, and he would on the other hand enact a stringent law to protect the ryot from his “richer and more physically powerful oppressor;” a better class of chowkeedars would, he adds, prevent much of the oppression now committed by the peons and servants of zemindars and planters, and he would like to have more power than he has for bringing principals into court, and for holding them responsible for the acts of their subordinates.

11. I submit in original two letters, No. 291 and No. 376, dated 19th May and 30th June 1856, from the joint magistrate of Baraset, who seems to have given the subject more thought than the other magistrates, and whose intelligent remarks on it deserve attention.

12. A full inquiry would, I can well believe, show that there are good grounds for the general unpopularity of the present system of growing indigo. The repeal in 1835 of those parts of Regulation V. of 1830, which held the instigator to break engagements equally liable with the ryot for the penalty of such breach, and which made wilful neglect to sow or cultivate a misdemeanour on the part of a ryot who had agreed to do so, denote I suppose nothing more than the withdrawal of a protection to planters, which further consideration convinced the Legislature to be unjustifiable. No preamble being given to Act XVI. of 1835, I can but conjecture that it was the result of such a conviction. It was not directed against the advance system, which was left as it had been recognised by Regulation VI. of 1823.

13. The machinery provided by this last law and by the unrepealed sections of Regulation V. of 1830 appear to be deficient in the following points:—

1st. The agency for carrying out the provisions is insufficient.

2dly. The process is not sufficiently summary, and the award is limited to compensation for non-fulfilment of contract; there are no provisions for enforcing its fulfilment. Indigo must be sown when the rain falls, or the season perhaps is lost for that year. Similarly it must be cut at a particular time, or the crops may be lost or damaged.

3dly. As in the case of the execution of decrees generally, there is extreme difficulty in obtaining the compensation when awarded after the summary process.

Clause 5, sec. 3,

14. I do not know whether recourse is now ever had to this law, which, even if moonsiffs were empowered to entertain such suits, is not adapted to the peculiarities of indigo cultivation. A planter cannot know that a contracting ryot means to oppose his fields being sown till the rain falls, and his servants proceed to see the field sown. Supposing a moonsiff to be at hand, and that the planter succeed in getting an award in three days, he gets nothing more than the right* to receive what he cannot oblige the ryot to sow, and the compensation in money for the plant which is of such vital importance to him.

15. It is defect in the law which drives the planters to compulsory sowings and cuttings, and it is this which must be supplied before we shall succeed in stopping resort to physical force. The law must extend the lien recognised in section II. from the crop to the occupancy of the land, and the summary court must be empowered to decide whether a planter, who has asserted that lien by sowing, has or has not legally acquired it. A very severe penalty leviable summarily for abuse of the power thus to sow, together with compensation to the ryot, and the enforced surrender of the land, would, I think, check any disposition on the part of the planters to assert lien which they could not substantiate, while simple dismissal of the ryot's claim, with costs, would suffice as an award for the planter.

16. If the summary process is to be of any effect at all in stopping indigo disputes, it must I think have for its object the justification of what has been done by the planter to enforce the contract, rather than an indemnification to him for what the contracting ryot has failed to do; such a law would give the planter no more power than he has now, but it would make him accountable for the power which he now exercises illegally. The principle would be that laid down in section V. Regulation VII. of 1819, which authorises the magistrate to compel performance of a contract, but there would be no occasion to re-enact Regulation V. of 1830, making non-performance a misdemeanour, because the planter would see to its due performance.

17. Nothing will make the cultivation of indigo popular until it is found to pay well, and this, it seems to be the general impression, is not now the case. Litigation and other unnecessary expenses, which will not occur when our subdivisional officers are within easy reach, and when our police are on an improved footing, probably have an effect in preventing planters from paying so liberally for produce as the ryot has a right to expect to be paid.

From J. H. Mangles, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 291), dated the 19th May 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to address you on a subject which, although not one of routine, and which, perhaps, I had done better to have left in abler and more experienced hands, seems to me to be one of very great importance. A recent occurrence in my district has brought the subject strikingly to my notice, and has perhaps, you will think, led me to exaggerate its magnitude.

2. You

2. You are aware, I believe, that differences exist between Mr. Hampton, of Hobra, an indigo planter, and the ryots in his vicinity. These differences have already given rise to an actual and flagrant breach of the law, and it is not at all unlikely that further crimes may spring from a dispute which very intimately and seriously concerns the pockets of both parties.

3. Both Mr. Hampton and the ryots with whom I have had personal communication, are, I believe, most anxious to submit the point of their dispute to me. But you will perceive after I have explained the circumstances of the case, that I can have no jurisdiction in the matter, and can only refer the disputants to the civil court.

4. Mr. Hampton avers that the ryots with whom he is now at issue have taken advances from him for sowing indigo, but that under the persuasion of third parties, when the seed has been bought and the soil is ready to receive it, and a short delay may ruin the prospects of a whole year, they have refused to sow. He adds that, although a species of remedy lies eventually open to him in the civil court, yet that, taking that for what it is worth, the execution of a decree of the court for damages is attended with so many practical difficulties as to make it a dead letter as far as regards compensation for the losses of the year. He therefore views resort to a civil court as a very perilous and unsatisfactory proceeding. He does not ask for damages, but for legal means to oblige parties who have entered into an engagement, to fulfil it under pain of punishment in the criminal court. On the whole, it is impossible to look at his grievances, and the only remedy open to him, without forming the opinion that, supposing Mr. Hampton's statements to be correct, his case is a very hard one.

5. The ryots on the other hand maintain that they have taken no advances from Mr. Hampton, and that solely because they will not take advances, they are being oppressed by his servants. They state that they will not sow indigo for this very sound reason, that they find tobacco and other crops far more profitable. They too wish to have the point whether they have received advances or not, cleared up as speedily as possible in my court. And here, again, I feel that there is much reasonableness in the wish. But I am obliged to inform them that I can decide no such point for them, and that the civil court alone must do so.

6. In the mean time, all that I can do, I conceive, is to prevent breaches of the peace; but from not having it in my power to decide between the parties, or, in fact, to know which of them is the aggressor, and which the aggrieved, and which should therefore have my moral support, I am placed in a position of considerable difficulty. Act IV. of 1840, is not applicable to the case, for Mr. Hampton does not pretend to be in possession, or to be seeking possession. Section V. Regulation VII. 1819, is no more so. I am not aware of any other law under which I could act so as to meet the occasion.

7. Even in the civil court it appears to me that Mr. Hampton can scarcely find adequate relief. But I need not dwell on this point. The proof of a law is in its results, and I fully believe, and I fancy it is generally allowed that one of the chief causes of the affrays and disturbances in which indigo planters and their servants are so often concerned, lies in the fact that they have found by experience that the law does not effectually protect them, and that they must shift for themselves without it, and sometimes even in its teeth.

8. The case of indigo has already been made in the Regulations an exceptional one, and it seems likely to be allowed to remain so. The main objection, then, to what I would propose as a beneficial modification of the law is, in a great measure, met and refuted by its present state, which is not only tolerated, but viewed as just.

9. With this conviction, I cannot refrain from expressing my wish that an enactment, applying the principle of section V. of Regulation VII. 1819, to the case of contracts for indigo, could be passed. Regulation V. 1830 did originally contain a section somewhat to this effect; but by Act XVI. 1835, this section was rescinded, for what reason I know not. Such an enactment would, I submit, materially strengthen the hands of a magistrate in his attempts to put down the disgraceful scenes which are so common in some parts of Bengal, would offer speedy and practical justice to both parties, and would deprive planters of the excuse which they often openly avow, and still often actually feel, justifies them in a measure in righting themselves by violent means.

10. I make this suggestion, of course, with the utmost deference, and more in the hope that you may find something in it on which to found a suggestion of your own, than as a feasible or digested plan in itself. The subject, however, is one which does not deserve to be overlooked, and I shall be very glad to find that you think it worth referring for the consideration of higher authorities.

From J. H. Mangles, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 376), dated the 30th June 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your memorandum, No. 60, dated the 11th instant, with enclosure.

2. I have already addressed you on the subject of your communication in my letter, No. 156, dated the 7th March last, having reference to the dispute between Mr. Hampton and the ryots near his factory.

3. I have also sent you an abstract of a charge of plunder brought against Mr. Hampton's servants, whom I have committed for trial to the Sessions Court. The case has not yet been tried.

4. Beyond this dispute and its results thus reported, I have to notice no other instances of the kind referred to by you, which deserve your attention or that of the Government.

5. My views on the present state of the law were also submitted in my letter, No. 291, dated the 19th ultimo. I would add, however, that although I feel that much might be done by its amendment in favour of the planters to check affrays and violent crimes, yet, on the other hand, I am fully impressed with the conviction that the present system of indigo planting is in most cases forced and unnatural, and that it cannot act otherwise than oppressively towards the cultivators of the soil. It may be, and no doubt is, probable that in the majority of cases the operation of this system is and will be borne with the apathy characteristic of the country, but occasions will of course occur when the resistance of oppression by violence will give rise to very serious breaches of the peace.

6. It is extremely doubtful, I think, whether any new enactment could effectually check the evil I complain of. The vicinage of justice would undoubtedly be more effectual than any other remedy, and I cannot help thinking that the cheap justice at every man's door, which indigo planters are always calling for, would in a short time almost entirely destroy the whole present system of cultivation. I most readily, however, acquit the majority of European planters of any active participation in the oppression which goes on under the authority of their names, but they know that they must wink at it to a certain extent, and by trusting their gomash-tas, &c. far too implicitly, lay temptations in their way to carry it far beyond what they even suspect, or if they did, would tolerate.

7. You may perhaps think that I am assuming a great deal, after a very short experience. Of other districts I know nothing, and am speaking only of my own; but I am fully convinced that here, and especially in the Hobrah case, a forced system alone keeps a plant of indigo in the country. A year or two ago the zemindar who, according to Mr. Hampton, is stirring up the ryots not to sow for him, had a factory of his own. He has now given it up, and I am informed that the ryots pay him yearly a large sum not to revive it. I doubt very much whether, when indigo is grown, the ryots even get a full quid pro quo at all on any pre-arranged, however reduced, rate. But supposing thus much, the rate is never viewed as advantageous to them, because far below the rate of profit attainable from other crops. As long as this remains so, and Mr. Hampton, with whom I spoke on the subject, allowed the latter part of my remark to be true, it is folly to say that the system must not be essentially a forced one.

8. Indigo

8. Indigo planters, I know, constantly lay stress on the apparent greater well-being of ryots on indigo estates, as compared with those under the ordinary zemindars. It may be quite true what they say, and yet my position that planting is forced remain as I have stated it. Zemindars, we are all aware, are habitually guilty of frightful oppression and extortion. Although I admit then that indigo planters are not so bad masters as they are, a very wide margin of exaction is still quite consistent with the admission. It is very little to say that English gentlemen treat their ryots not quite so badly as ignorant and half savage natives, proverbially unworthy of their positions. Government has surely a right to expect that the difference between the two shall be far more striking and positive: but this as long as indigo planters' servants plunder the ryots' houses, or drive off their cattle or illegally imprison their persons, can never be.

9. I cannot help thinking that were Government to institute a searching investigation on the subject, and that not merely through local officers, the state of things all over the country would be found to be much as I have stated above. An investigation of this kind seems to me to be the only sure way to elicit the truth. Local officers have too much work always on their hands to inquire very far beyond what comes actually into their courts. Besides, a magistrate can hardly go, as I have already pointed out to you in a former letter, into the merits of a case. He must confine himself to a maintenance of the peace. Whatever the result of the investigation might be, it would at least clear up what I believe is still looked upon as a disputed question. By drawing public attention to the subject it would be certain to act beneficially if all, as I fear would be the case, were not found right, and would collect sound and digested data on which legislation might proceed safely and well.

From G. U. Yule, Esq., Commissioner of the Bhaugulpore Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 13), dated the 30th August 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 2048, of the 7th June last, requesting information regarding the manner in which the indigo sowing season has passed over.

2. The magistrate of Bhaugulpore reports that only two petty cases were preferred by ryots against planters, one of which was struck off on default of evidence, and in the other the police were directed to prevent a breach of the peace. Several cases relating to injury by cattle trespass were brought forward by planters. The magistrate makes no remarks.

3. In Monghyr there were two complaints of forcible sowings, one compromised, the other likely to be so, and two of turning off ploughs sent to cultivate for indigo. All four cases were concerned with claims to hold ticca in the villages. The magistrate considers that no state of the law could meet such occasional and trifling cases.

4. In Purneah there were only two cases. In one two ryots quarrel about a field: one sows it with indigo, the other with rice; and the other between two jotedars was much of the same nature. The magistrate is very severe upon the planters, and considers that a law is required to meet, first, the injustice exercised by the planter and unfair contract palmed on the unthinking ryot; and secondly, the fraud practised by the ryot to escape from his engagements, and benefit himself at the planter's expense. For the first, he proposes that no balance above a year's standing should be recoverable from a ryot, and for the second, a small cause court. His opinion on the latter point he has already communicated to you in his letter of the 22d January 1855, No. 45.

5. In Tirhoot there were 38 complaints by maliks and their ryots against indigo planters, and 25 vice versa. I forward the magistrate's detailed statement. That officer states the cases are seldom in reality between planter and ryot, but between planter and malik; that these cases are owing to the system of indigo planting (not explained) in his district where there are often so many maliks to one estate; that where there is but one malik there are few disputes, and that the cases in his statement are not so serious as they look, and certainly he cannot consider them serious, for 33 cases out of the 63 were pending even at the end of August, and out of the 30 disposed of by far the greater portion were dakhil serishta, or compromised. "There is one tolerably fruitful source of quarrel," the magistrate states, "for which a remedy might be applied. After the expiration of a lease, the planter pointing to the koontees or stalks of the plant left in the ground claims and holds possession against the malik, and the magistrate, under the circumstances, must keep the planter in possession, though the malik is certainly entitled in justice to enter on the land." In this the magistrate is quite wrong, as I pointed out to him. The Sudder Court's Circular Order of the 12th June 1840, No. 54, declares Section X. of Act IV. of 1840 to apply to a case of the kind mentioned.

6. In three districts then there is no case of defect of law or administration shown to exist. The complaints in Tirhoot cannot be considered numerous with reference to the size of the district, the number of factories and of landowners, and of the 63 disputes in the statement, some nine or ten do not appear to be caused by indigo. An analysis of the 23 cases in the first column might show what were the causes generally leading to disputes of the kind, if they have not all been compromised or struck off, but still the result of such a small number of cases could scarcely be depended on, and I am too ignorant of the district as yet to be able to form an opinion.

7. With regard to Purneah, the magistrate's opinion as to the injustice on one side and fraud on the other is not borne out by the complaints in his court: but that may arise* from the power of the planters rendering it unnecessary for them, and useless for their ryots, to come into court. Until, however, I can satisfy myself that such a state of things exists as Mr. Pepper describes, and prove to the satisfaction of Government that it does so, I need not remark on Mr. Pepper's proposed remedies, or propose others myself.

* If Mr. Pepper has formed his opinion on good grounds.

From C. T. Davidson, Esq., Commissioner of the Dacca Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 4754), dated the 17th July 1856.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 2048, dated the 7th ultimo, desiring to be informed how the late indigo sowing season has passed off, with respect to disputes regarding land between neighbouring planters or zemindars, and complaints of non-fulfilment of contracts on the one hand, and of forcible sowing of land on the other, between planters and ryots.

2. The only districts in this division in which indigo is cultivated are Dacca, Furreedpore and Mymensing; and I will, as desired in your second paragraph, proceed to state the facts of the cases which have occurred, as ascertained from the reports furnished by the magistrates of the three districts abovenamed.

Dacca.—Seventeen cases are reported to have occurred in this district, of which ten belong to the Manickgunge sub-division, six to Moonsheegunge, and one to that portion of the Dacca district which is under the immediate jurisdiction of the magistrate.

The Dacca case was a dispute between the planter and zemindar. The latter complained that the planter's people had destroyed his ryot's crops, and were endeavouring to sow the land with indigo. The magistrate brought the case under Act IV. of 1840, and decreed possession of the land in dispute to the planter, and this decree was upheld by the judge. The six cases appertaining to Moonsheegunge were complaints on the part of cultivators of the forcible sowing of their lands with indigo. Three were dismissed, one compromised, and the remaining two are pending. Of the ten cases which occurred in the sub-division of Manickgunge, five were instituted on the part of planters, one against some ryots for absconding after receipt of advances, three for resistance to the sowing of indigo, and one complaining of the plunder of indigo seed. The breach of contract case is pending, and the other four were dismissed or struck off.

off. The other five cases are on the part of cultivators against the planter's people, one for assault for not sowing indigo, one for an apprehended destruction of crop, and three for forcible sowing of indigo. Of these cases, one is said to be pending and the remaining four are put down as "disposed of." The cases appertaining to this sub-division have not been satisfactorily reported, owing perhaps to the deputy magistrate not knowing English; this much, however, is deducible, that the cases are all of a trivial nature.

Furreedpore.—The joint magistrate reports, that no cases of the description referred to in paragraph 1 of your letter have occurred in the Furreedpore district, except the case of affray, with homicide, of which a circumstantial account was submitted to Government in my report, No. 460, dated the 3d instant.

Mymensing.—The magistrate of Mymensing reports, that during the late sowing season, "no disputes regarding land relative to the cultivation of indigo have been brought into court within his district, nor has there been any complaint of the non-fulfilment of contract concerning cultivation on the one hand, nor of forcible sowing of indigo on the other, from planters or ryots."

Backergunge.—Has not been included among the indigo districts, as there are no factories to my knowledge situated within it. A trifling dispute regarding the cultivation of one and a quarter beegah of land between a planter, whose factories are in the Furreedpore district, and a talookdar occurred. The tenant of the piece of land above referred to had taken advances from the planter. The talookdar desired to oust the tenant and locate another man. The planter espoused the cause of the ryot, who was under advances, and but for prompt measures having been taken, a breach of the peace might have ensued. The village chowkedars informed the police that a disturbance was likely to occur, and the circumstance was reported by the police to the magistrate, who summoned the principals to enter into recognisances to keep the peace. This order had the effect of bringing the parties to an amicable adjustment of the dispute.

3. It will be seen from the foregoing abstracts from the magistrate's reports that disputes regarding claims to land between planters and zemindars, &c., referred to in the first paragraph of your letter, are of rare occurrence; and among the few cases which have occurred, one only has been attended with any serious breach of the peace. I allude, of course, to the Furreedpore case of attempt to sow lands forcibly by the people of an out-factory of the Meergunge concern.

4. I have not received any suggestions, pointing out defects in the law to which it may be said that disputes regarding indigo cultivation have owed their origin, except from the joint magistrate of Furreedpore, who recommends "that the principal parties whose interests are involved in disputes of this kind should be made more immediately responsible, and more amenable to punishment than they are at present, for the acts of their agents and servants;" but this defect, if it can be considered one, applies with equal force to all disputes regarding land, hauts, &c., and in comparison with which those exclusively relating to the cultivation of indigo bear, in this division, a very small proportion.

5. The question of making proprietors of estates and indigo factories responsible for the acts of their agent is no new one, and has, I believe, received most attentive consideration.

6. The first case referred to in this report was one which might, from the power and influence of the parties thereto, have terminated in a serious breach of the peace, but which was no doubt prevented by the prompt enforcement of Act IV. of 1840. The other Dacca cases appear from the magistrate's report to have been of a petty description, and considering the extent to which indigo cultivation is carried on in the three districts referred to in this report, the wonder is that they should be so few. The origin of the Furreedpore case of forcible indigo sowing, which resulted in an affray attended with loss of life, cannot, in my opinion, be traced to any defect in the law.

From C. T. Buckland, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioners of the Patna and Rajshahye Divisions (No. 2,807), dated the 10th September 1856.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to draw your attention to the Government Orders, No. 2,048, dated the 7th June last, and to request that the report therein called for may be submitted without further delay.

From C. T. Buckland, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Register of the Sudder Court (No. 2,386), dated the 11th September 1856.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to draw the Sudder Court's attention to the Government letter, No. 1,704, dated the 7th June last, and to request that the report therein called for may be furnished without further delay.

From A. W. Russell, Esq., Officiating Register of the Nizamut Adawlut, to C. T. Buckland, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 809), dated the 18th September-1856.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Court to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1704, dated the 7th June last, and in reply to forward for the purpose of being laid before his Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the accompanying abstract of the returns which have been received from the local authorities relative to the last indigo season.

2. The Court observe generally that there is nothing in the reports of the local courts that requires special notice from them; but on the part of Messrs. Colvin and Torrens I am to remark that, while there thus appears to be no call for legislation, one or two cases have recently been before the Court (more particularly the case referred to by the Officiating Session Judge of Rajshahye, disposed of on the 5th July last), from which it was evident that the forced cultivation of indigo had lead and does lead to the most serious outrages and deeds of violence. The judge of Tirhoot has also, they remark, referred to a case disposed of by this court on the 29th May 1854, page 637, of the Nizamut Reports for that year, which is another illustration of the results of forcing indigo cultivation (see also page 767 of Nizamut decisions for 1855, dated 5th November). These are not, however, they are aware, new crimes, nor is there any remarkable increase in their number. No special legislation, therefore, in their opinion seems to be called for any more than in the case of affrays, which are now less in number than formerly, owing to the operation of Act V. of 1848.

ABSTRACT of the Returns to Circular Letter, No. 473, of the 13 June 1856, requesting information in cases respecting Indigo.

Tirhoot.—The judge reports that, from the 1st December 1855 to 1st July 1856, fifteen cases had come before him; that the main causes of dispute are two; first, the planters take farms of portions of shares from some co-sharer of a joint estate, and then cultivate the other sharer's ground; secondly, they leave the stumps of old indigo in the ground to stand as proofs of their possession of the soil, should their possession, even after expiry of their lease, be disputed, and any attempts to remove them are opposed.

Jessore.—The judge knew of but one case, in which however there was nothing particular to remark, and the case was of no consequence.

Rajshahye.—The indigo cultivation is chiefly in the hands of one firm. No case has occurred lately. A year ago there were some disputes, which the arrest of certain parties had had the effect of stopping.

Nuddea.—

Nuddea.—Two cases only have occurred; there was no breach of the peace in these, nor any remarkable feature.

Dacca.—Comments on the lattia system; the character of the people, and absence of impartial evidence, rather than any defect in the law, are the causes that it is not checked. The police must be remodelled to be effectual for the purpose.

Purneah.—No cases had occurred, though 48 false charges under Regulation V. 1830, had been preferred and all dismissed.

Moorsheedabad.

24-Pergunnahs.

} Nothing had happened.

Sarun.—Nothing. The judge comments on the indigo system generally; would allow the magistrates power to turn out a planter on expiry of his lease.

From W. Tayler, Esq., Commissioner of the Patna Division, to the Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 825), dated the 17th September 1856.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 2048, of the 7th June last, I have the honour to report, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, as follows:

Sarun and Chumparun.—2. In these districts very few cases of the nature alluded to in your letter under acknowledgment, occurred during the late indigo sowing season, and in none of them did any serious disturbance ensue.

3. Indigo disputes rarely take place in these districts. The planters are few in number, and the factories so scattered that their interests seldom if ever clash, and there is not that competition which prevails in Lower Bengal.

4. The principal causes of the few disputes which have arisen are—

1st. A planter keeping possession of the land after the expiry of his lease; and, secondly, a planter taking merely a share in an undivided estate, and then trying to sow indigo in it.

Patna, Behar, and Shahabad.—5. No disputes of the description alluded to occurred in these districts during the late indigo sowing season between the planters and the zemindars, or ryots, but a few petty cases which were taken up and disposed of under the existing regulations and the discretionary powers of the magistrates.

6. Under these circumstances it does not appear that any remedial measures are called for in this division.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 624), dated the 15th September 1856.

Sir,

HAVING consulted the magistrates of the division on the subject of Mr. Junior Secretary Buckland's letter, No. 2048, of the 7th June last, I have the honour to furnish the following report as to the manner in which the late indigo sowing season has passed off in the districts of this division:

2. The deputy magistrate observes, that the late indigo season did not pass off so tranquilly as could have been wished. In part of the district there were constant disputes between neighbouring planters and zemindars, caused by contending claims to land. Between the Bisees of Joar, Janfurally, zemindar of Gourypoor, and other petty jotedars, and Messrs. Watson & Co., many disputes occurred which would have caused serious disturbance of the peace were not proper measures taken to prevent its occurrence, by the institution of Act IV.

cases, and by binding the principals of the respective parties on their own penal recognisances. This has to some measure served to keep this part of the country tranquil.

3. With regard to forcible sowing of indigo, he says, there were several complaints laid before him by the ryots, stating that the planters made a plea of contract on their parts; in many of these instances contracts were not actually entered into between the planters. In one place particularly among many, there was a likelihood of serious breach of the peace taking place every day, but by his stationing a jemadar and burkundaz there no such occurrence has as yet taken place. He further states, that he had also stationed a jemadar at Bhagha to prevent any quarrels taking place between the khondkar of that place and Messrs. Watson & Co. In many villages people have formed combinations to protect themselves from the oppressions of the planters.

4. The cause of these disputes, he believes, is to be attributed to the very nature of the contract system itself. The ryots are very unwilling to cultivate indigo on the existing system of advances, on account of their getting only two rupees advance for a beegah of land, for which they have to labour heavily. From his own personal knowledge, while in his Mofussil tours, during the period he has been in charge of the subdivision, he knows it is as a fact stated by them that they had to pay out of these two rupees to the gomashas, ameens, and tagadgeers (who are notoriously known to be an extortionate and oppressive class of people, and who never scruple to benefit themselves at the expense of the ryots). He has heard it from their own mouths that another cause of their reluctance to cultivate indigo, is owing to the system of measurement of land by the gomashas of the indigo planters; for a beegah of land, the gomashas measure a beegah and half. Another cause, he continues, of the ryot's invincible unwillingness is the way in which the bundles of indigo are weighed by the factory people, for every two bundles for a rupee, six bundles are weighed by them; this is a source of great oppression to them. Under such a system, he remarks, where the ryots can never be expected to be gainers, but losers by the cultivation of indigo, and when they can never expect to liquidate the money once taken in advance, how could they be willing to enter into engagements with the planters. To remedy this state of things, he suggests the propriety of defining the contract system. He conceives it to be desirable that the contract pottah should be registered, either in the nearest moonsiff's or magistrate's court, with a view of preventing quarrels between the planters' people and the ryots, as no false registry of the pottahs could be made. If such a power were vested in the aforesaid officers, it would be conferring a great benefit on the country.

A. J. Jackson, Esq.,

5. The magistrate reports that in the thannahs under his own immediate control there has been but little complaint of oppression on the part of planters; and the only occasion on which there was the least chance of a serious disturbance, was one which he reported to me from Burgatchee, owing to the presence of the police on the spot, and to his tent being within a short ride of the chur in dispute, the cutting of the indigo was completed without disturbance of any kind.

6. He cannot look upon the manner in which the sowing season has passed off in the sub-division as so unsatisfactory as the deputy magistrate would appear to consider it. The deputy magistrate states that there have been causes of dispute, and that it has been necessary to station police officers to preserve the peace in various places. But it is shown by his own letter that no breach of the peace has taken place, and therefore it becomes manifest that the police has, in the present instance, been effective for the purpose for which it has been used.

7. It is very true, he observes, that villagers have an objection to cultivate indigo, and it is also true that it occasionally bears hard on them, as where they have to break up crops nearly fit to cut, in order to sow indigo. But he never heard that the ryots ever made any objections to taking the advances in the first instance.

8. As far as he has seen, the most effectual check to anything like fighting consists consists in the personal activity of the magistrate. Not that he means him to rush off to prevent every petty quarrel, but a knowledge that he is not only likely, but almost certain to visit the spot in person, acts as a most salutary check where powerful landholders are at war with each other.

9. In this district there occurred two cases of disputes regarding land, and eight complaints of ryots of forcibly sowing indigo on their land.

R. Alexander, Esq.,
of Pubna.

10. Of the two cases of disputes concerning land, one is between Mr. Durand, proprietor of Nischindpoor concern, and Mr. Battersby, manager of the Balia-kandy concern. From what has come before the joint magistrate, it appears that a similar dispute occurred last season when Mr. Roberts was manager of Balia-kandy, and that that gentleman made a boundary line between the two concerns, which was agreed to by Mr. Durand, and the dispute last season was settled. This season a new manager has come to Balia-kandy, and Mr. Durand complains that this gentleman, instead of confining himself to the boundary made by his predecessor, has encroached on the Nischindpoor lands. This case is at present under investigation. The other case of dispute about land has taken place between Mr. Stevenson, of Belnabaree factory, and Ranee Sumomoye, an inhabitant of Moorshedabad. The Ranee has lately got a decree for some chur lands in the civil court, in virtue of which decree she claims certain lands that the Belnabaree concern holds pottahs of, and upon the factory people attempting to sow these lands, the Ranee's people are said to have come forward in numbers, and driven them off. With respect to these chur lands, the joint magistrate observes that he thinks it probable that serious disputes will take place next year, unless the Ranee is given plainly to understand that she is personally responsible for the acts of her servants. At the present moment there is a strong hostile feeling on the part of the Ranee and her servants against the factory.

11. Of the eight cases instituted by ryots against planters for forcibly sowing their lands, three were compromised by the parties, one was dismissed after investigation, and four were struck off the file in default of the usual peons' fees being deposited.

12. The officiating magistrate informs me, that in his district no cases of disputes have arisen between planters and zemindars, and but very few between planters and the ryots. The latter are common cases of assault brought by either party on various pretences, such as ploughing up ground where indigo has been already sown, destroying indigo after the plant has come up, and disputes as to having received advances, one of the latter of which cases was attended by rather severe, though apparently unintentional, wounding. In his opinion none of these cases have owed their origin to any defect in the law or the administration; they are such as frequently arise with regard to the cultivation of any other produce.

Esq., Officiating
Rungpoor.

13. The joint magistrate informs me, that there have been only five cases in his district throughout the year connected with indigo, of which two were in Serajgunge subdivision. Of the three others, which were charges against the servants of an indigo planter for breaking up the rice crop and sowing indigo, two cases were amicably settled, and in one the defendants were punished by fines, but the cases were all trifling. These disputes were not occasioned by any defect of the law.

J. C. Dogdson,
Esq., Joint Magistrate of Bograh.

14. The magistrate reports, that indigo is not grown in his district, and consequently no cases whatever connected with its cultivation or sowing have occurred.

R. H. Ravenshaw, Esq., Magistrate of Dinagepoor.

15. The officiating joint magistrate having recently taken charge of the office cannot speak personally on the subject of indigo planting, but he has ascertained from the records of the office that but five cases connected with that cultivation have been instituted since October last; of these two were Act IV. cases, one of which was settled amicably, and the other dismissed. The other three were petty cases. From this he concludes it is apparent that the sowing was conducted peaceably and without disturbance.

A. J. Jackson, Esq.,
Officiating Joint
Magistrate of Maldah.

16. On the whole, the results of the past season have been satisfactory in this division. No serious breach of the peace has occurred, the precautionary measures adopted by the local officers, where disputes existed, having been found effectual to prevent such disturbances. With regard to the remarks of the deputy magistrate of Nattore on the subject of contracts for the cultivation of indigo, it may be sufficient to observe that it is optional with the ryots to receive advances or not, the law affording them sufficient protection against any attempt of the planters to force advances upon them. I believe the truth to be, that the ryots cannot resist the temptation when the money is offered to them, even when they are averse to cultivate indigo.

— No. 5. —

From A. C. MacArthur, Esq., to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated the 14th July 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith copy of a letter, dated 3d December, 1857, from the magistrate of Furreedpore to my address, along with copy of my answer, dated 23d December, as also copy of a letter dated 5th instant, addressed by me to the magistrate of Jessore, along with a copy of that gentleman's reply, dated 7th instant, and to request the favour of your laying the following observations before his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, as regards the contemplated site for the head quarters of the Gopalgunge subdivision, but more particularly as regards the villages of Lohogurrah or Luckipassah, for that purpose.

2. In order more clearly to illustrate what I have to state, I take the liberty of forwarding (also herewith) a map showing the extreme northern and southern limits of the Gopalgunge subdivision, along the course of the rivers Elankolly, Mudoomutty, and Attarabanka, being in all a distance in English miles of twenty-eight and half, and as the map from which the accompanying is copied was the work of a professional surveyor, the distance may be relied upon.

letter, No. 779.

3. When it was first contemplated to create the Gopalgunge subdivision, the Government hoped by this measure to check the ravages of the numerous gangs of river dacoits and other thieves who are said to infest the banks of these rivers. To carry out the intentions of the Government as expressed in the above paragraph, copied from the letter No. 1 (herewith) addressed to me by Mr. Chapman, magistrate of Furreedpore, there can be no doubt that Gopalgunge itself would be the most central place for the head quarters of the subdivision, as a reference to the accompanying map will show. It has been stated however, as I understand, that the country about Gopalgunge is too low and liable to inundation for such a purpose, and that therefore other spots less objectionable have been named, and amongst others Lohogurrah and Luckipassah, both within my indigo cultivation, and, in my opinion, objectionable both on public and private grounds, which I will now endeavour to explain. The original and principal object in creating the subdivision being for the prevention of river dacoities, which have been of frequent occurrence upon these rivers from Lunka or Chandpoor southwards to within a few miles of Koolnea station, on the Mudoomutty and Attarabanka rivers, and in the same direction towards Burrisal, on the river called by that name, it would naturally occur to any one that the site of the proposed station should be as much in the centre of the scene of these outrages as possible. A single glance at the map, however, will show that Lohogurrah or Luckipassah are nearly as far removed from them as the limits of the sub-division could admit of, and to be still within it. Supposing, however, that either of the two should eventually be fixed upon, the result would be that by far the most peaceable portion of the whole country occupied by the subdivision would thus be chosen, for such an occurrence as a dacoity, or indeed other crime of any magnitude is never heard of for miles around these places. It will also be particularly remarked, upon reference to the map, that the river upon which Lohogurrah and Luckipassah are situated (the Nobogunga) is some five miles distant from the large river forming the Elankolly, Mudoomutty, and Attarabanka (for the river assumes these different names on its course to Koolnea), and some 15 miles from the nearest point to where these dacoities ever occur; so that, in so far as the prevention of river dacoities (where they really do occur) is concerned, the station might as well be in Koolnea. It is well known to his Honour that crimes such as river dacoities are seldom committed mitted in a neighbourhood occupied by European planters, and which is the case downwards from Rajmahal all the way within about 15 miles of Gopalgunge, where, however, no European resides, and where consequently river dacoities are and can be nightly perpetrated without the fear of discovery; for it is a well known fact that many of the principal natives along the line of the rivers, in that unfrequented locality, live by the proceeds of their plunder from defenceless boats passing along. To prevent river dacoities, which, as I said before, was the original intention in creating the subdivision, the head station should be as central as possible, so that when necessary the magistrate himself might visit the spot within a reasonable time after getting information of the occurrence, otherwise he might as well live in Koolnea or Furreedpore, for the delay which would arise in arriving on the spot, should his residence be at Luckipassah or Lohogurrah, would enable the dacoits to decamp with their booty and render pursuit unavailing. Either have the station midway on the unfrequented portion of the river, which will also be found to be midway, or in the centre of the subdivision generally, or save the expense of the station and establishment, for they will certainly be entirely useless unless placed, as I state, in some central position on the Mudoomutty. These are my public grounds of objection, and which I have taken the liberty of urging from having been consulted on the subject of the new sub-division when first contemplated.

4. My private reasons for objecting to the headquarters of the sub-divisionⁿ being at either Lohogurrah or Luckipassah may not appear so conclusive at first sight as those I urge upon public grounds, but it is fortunate for me that his Honour the Lieutenant Governor is so intimately acquainted with the native character, and their proneness to litigation when the means are at their doors, that I shall not have much difficulty in making myself understood. I will begin by stating, that should Luckipassah be the spot fixed upon, the station will be not more than 100 yards from my factory of that name, and where I have a large ryotty cultivation of 2,000 biggahs; and again, should Lohogurrah be the spot fixed upon, that will be about a quarter of a mile from the same factory, about a mile from my factory of Amdanga, and not much more from another factory called Eranda. It will be observed that Mr. Moloney, in his reply, states as his opinion that at either of the two localities the station would be "central for the whole of the Meergunge concern." I do not know whether Mr. Moloney writes ironically, but I should imagine he did; if he means that the neighbourhood of the station to the factories would be beneficial to them, it is sufficiently well known to his Honour that the very reverse is the fact, for amongst a community notorious for their litigious propensities the greater facilities they have of going to court the more frequently will they resort to it, and besides their own propensities in that way, the inducements which would be held out to the otherwise peaceably disposed, by needy and worthless Mooktears and other hangers-on about a court, would be more than they could withstand; and the consequences, I can plainly see, would consist in one scene of petty litigation for imaginary or feigned wrongs on the part of the ryot, creating an unceasing war between him and the factory, to the entire eventual ruin of the latter, not to say to the detriment of the former. Where a ryot wished to evade or not to fulfil his engagement with the planter, he had only in such a case to step in next door, file a petition on an eight annas' stamp, and, as a matter of course, get an order to prevent the planter in any way from molesting him, or interfering with his lands; supposing such a case to happen after a sowing shower, what would be the position of the planter? nothing short of ruin! for one successful case like this, and any one acquainted with the native character will at once see that every ryot would follow the example set to him, should his doing so benefit himself at the moment, either in a pecuniary point of view or to serve some one having a sinister design in harassing the planter. Instances are not by any means wanting to prove that an indigo factory and a station cannot exist on the same spot, and the reason is not difficult to arrive at to any one acquainted with the Mofussil and with the entire absence of remedy to the planter for breach of contract by the ryot. However just the civil courts may be in their decisions, the process is too tedious to be any remedy at all in such cases, for whilst the case is being litigated the factory is closed and the planter ruined in consequence. I may here mention that these factories have been in existence for upwards of 50 years, and the record of the Koolnea court will, if necessary, show that for many years past scarcely a single case of any description whatever has been before that court connected with them, and certainly not one at all of other than the most petty description. The principal residents upon the Nobogunga river are Brahmins, who have been there from time immemorial, and who from their rising generation supply a great portion of the Amlah for the courts in Jessore and elsewhere, as well as almost every factory in the district with Gomastahs and Mohurirs, and are an intelligent and peaceful race, having no sort of occasion for the presence of a magisterial station in their neighbourhood. The country is besides almost entirely my own property either as Talookdar, Putneedar or otherwise, and unless therefore in so far as that the river Nobogunga is in a pleasant and high part of the country, and as such a suitable locality for a gentleman's Mofussil residence, there is not one reason that I can imagine why it should be fixed upon as the site for the Gopalgunge station. It is entirely away from the great rivers where dacoities occur, equally away from the abodes of the lawless and turbulent; and saving that it is, as I said before, a pleasant spot, it has not one solitary recommendation as the site of a station created for the object in view when the Gopalgunge subdivision was contemplated.

Finally, taking all these circumstances into consideration, and looking at the accompanying map, I trust his Honour the Lieutenant Governor will withhold his sanction to the erection of the station at any spot north of Lunka or Chandpore, at which places, and down to Gopalgunge, there are very many suitable localities, all on the river, and in the immediate neighbourhood of these scenes of river dacoities, crimes which have never been known or heard of as happening farther north, or upon the Elankolly or Nobogunga river. In closing this letter, I may be permitted to take the liberty of calling his Honour's attention to the copy of my letter to Mr. Chapman herewith sent, in regard to my opinion on the subject of the transfer of the Mooksidpore thannah to the new subdivision.

Meergunge (No. 779), dated the 3d December 1857.

Sir,

It is in contemplation to station a deputy magistrate upon the Mudoomutty and Nubogunga Rivers, with his head quarters at Gopalgunge. The Government hope by this measure to check the ravages of the numerous gangs of river dacoits and other thieves who are said to infest the banks of those rivers.

2. I have been called upon to report, whether I consider it advisable that any of the country now under my jurisdiction should be transferred to the proposed new subdivision.

3. I shall be very much obliged to you if you will favour me with your opinion upon this point. The Pharee of Gopeenauthpore will in all probability be transferred to the new subdivision of Madareepore. If any part of this district in addition to that police division be made over to the new subdivision, it must probably be taken from the country in which your cultivation lies. You are therefore peculiarly qualified to advise the Government upon the subject.

4. Will you also inform me whether the banks of the Mudoomutty in your neighbourhood are infested by dacoits, &c., as supposed, or not? I shall be much obliged, if you will favour me with an early reply to this letter.

INDIGO CULTIVATION IN BENGAL.

(No. 2.)

From A. MacArthur, Esq., Meergunge, to R. B. Chapman, Esq., Joint Magistrate, Furreedpore, dated the 23d December 1857.

Sir,

In reply to your letter, No. 779, dated the 3d instant, I have the honour to state—

1. That I am of opinion the stationing of a deputy magistrate at Gopalgunge would be of much benefit to the inhabitants of the surrounding country, for at present they are compelled to go to Furreedpore or to Koolnea (as the case may be), when they have any court business, the difficulties attendant upon travelling at certain seasons of the year being so great as to deter many from undertaking the journey at all, and in regard to river dacoities the proposed station at Gopalgunge would be the means of effectually preventing their occurrence, that locality being at present unprotected, arising in great measure from its distance from the stations of Koolnea and Magoorah, being about half way between both.

2. As no portion of my indigo cultivation or lands fall within the bounds of Thannah Gopeenauthpore, I am not sufficiently acquainted with that locality to pass an opinion upon the advisability of transferring it to the proposed new station, but I will take the liberty of remarking, that as my country extends no further south than the bounds of Thannah Mooksudpore, I would not by any means advise the transfer of any portion of the country under the latter thannah to the new station, Furreedpore itself being more contiguous and easier of access, besides being possessed of the advantage, so highly prized by European and native, of having a covenanted officer for its magistrate. For the sake of this advantage, a native would travel much further in quest of justice than if the court were presided over by a native; and the European, to my certain knowledge, would almost prefer foregoing the chances of redress, than be obliged to seek it from a native magistrate, from whom impartiality is generally supposed to be the exceptional case. I would therefore strongly advise the Government to retain, attached to the Furreedpore Station itself, all the thannahs north of Gopeenauthpore, and as to that thannah itself, my limited knowledge of its locality would induce me to recommend its transfer to Gopalgunge or Madareepore, for its distance to Furreedpore is so great, and access to that station so difficult, as to render it doubtful whether a native would not rather sacrifice his rights than travel so far, and particularly after the rains set in, when the roads are almost impassable for any kind of conveyance, and

3. River dacoities are by no means of so frequent occurrence upon the Mudoomutty River as they were some years since; in fact, I have not heard of a single case of an aggravated character for a year past, and the erection of the new station of Gopalgunge would, as I said before, completely put a stop to them.

(No. 3.)

From A. MacArthur, Esq., Meergunge, to E. C. Moloney, Esq., Magistrate of Jessore, dated 5 July 1858.

Sir,

MAY I beg the favour of your informing me whether it is in contemplation to substitute Lohogurrah or Luckipassah for Gopalgunge, as the site of the new subdivision? I have no official information to that effect, but having the strongest objections to its erection on the locality spoken of, I trust you will enable me to state them in the proper quarter before the measure is finally decided upon.

(No. 4.)

From E. C. Moloney, Esq., Magistrate of Jessore, to A. MacArthur, Esq., Meergunge
(No. 361), dated 7 July 1858.

Sir,

In reply to your letter of date the 5th instant, I have the honour to inform you that the head quarters of the Gopalgunge subdivision have not yet been finally decided upon. The places you mention will be considered as well as the other eligible sites in the neighbourhood. I should have thought that Lohogurrah was very central for the whole of the Meergunge concern in the thannahs of Lohogurrah and Belgatchee.

(No. 2924.)

Forwarded to the Commissioner of Nuddea for report, with the request that he will return the original papers and the sketch with his reply.

By order of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal,

C. T. Buckland,

Fort William,
27 July 1858.

Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 226Ct.), dated 16 December 1858.

Sir,

I BEG now to return the enclosures of your letter, No. 2924, dated 27th July last, with the following remarks on Mr. MacArthur's objections to the selection of Lohogurrah or Luckipassah, as the head quarters of the Gopalgunge sub-division.

2. Mr. MacArthur's objections are both on public and private grounds. Those of the first class would represent both the above places as too far north of the dangerous part of the Moodoomutty.

3. Mr. Bainbridge, while recommending the abandonment of the plan of establishing his head quarters at either of these places on account of their low level, remarks as follows on the necessity of selecting a site which shall not be south of Chandpore. This place is a few miles only south-east of Luckipassah.

"Previous to my removal from Gopalgunge, the reports of theft and burglary in and about Luckipassah and Lohogurrah, and on the Nobogunge upwards to Nuldee, were numerous; my presence has been a sensible check, but they are still frequent."

"The number of budmashes fills no small space in the notoriety of both places."

"As to dacoity I remark that Ramlo Churn Buxee, resident of Battapara, and Mohima Chunder Raha, resident of Palaghatta, Thannah Maroodpore, two 'principal natives on the line of the river,' have been notorious encouragers of dacoits and receivers of stolen property. The former place is about seven and the latter about two miles north of Chandpore. Suspicion still attaches to both, especially the latter, and I find Paterghatta still named as the dreaded reach of the Mudoomutty. It is not so long since a large gang of dacoits was exhaled from Itna, a village adjoining Chandpore. I believe a heavy dacoity has occurred within the year near *Nuldee. I observe that by far the major part of work of all description comes from north of that place; that the northern part of the subdivision is most populous, the residence of all the planters and most of the large landholders, and that the concealment of crime is alarming, all which, considered with the comparative facility of transit up and down stream, induce me to think the station should not be further south of Chandpore than is absolutely necessary. I believe it would so best support all the objects contemplated."

* Viz. Sunkerpore, in the house of Dhurmonarain Shaha.

3. The private reasons for objecting to the establishment of the subdivisional head quarters within the country of the Meergunge concern seem to contain some grave admissions against the present system of growing indigo. Why should not a factory and a station be capable of existing on the same spot? I am quite of the opinion of the magistrate and his assistant that the subdivision lately established in Eastern Jessore was very much required.

4. As regards the best site for this subdivision, I recommend that for the present none be fixed on. Its jurisdiction must be first finally settled; as yet it consists only of one thannah and two pharees, one of the latter being in Furreedpore, the authorities of which district do not, I understand, wish to contribute any further to it. As I have already said in previous letters, I am strongly in favour of confining all subdivisional jurisdictions to one district, and I have proposed to add Sulkeah thannah to Gopalgunge. For the present it is therefore advisable to keep its head quarters afloat, for a boat must always be provided for the officer in charge, the whole country being under inundation during the rainy season.

From C. T. Buckland, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. MacArthur, Esq., Meergunge, (No. 471), dated Fort William, 19 January 1859.

Sir,

Your letter dated the 14th July last, stating your objections to the selection of Lohogurrah or Luckipassah as a site for the head quarters of the new subdivision of Gopalgunge, having been duly submitted to the Lieutenant Governor was forwarded by his Honour's direction to the Commissioner of the division for inquiry and report. I am now directed to inform you, that the Commissioner, after duly considering the subject, recommends that the head quarters of the sub-division should not at present be fixed permanently in any locality, or until further experience shows which site is most eligible, and in this opinion the Lieutenant Governor concurs.

2. The map which accompanied your letter is herewith returned.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary of the Government of Bengal (No. 119 Ct.), dated 12 June 1859.

Sir,

In July last I received from Government, with a call for report on its contents, a petition presented by Mr. MacArthur, of the Meergunge concern. This gentleman represented that the Gopalgunge sub-division of Jessore was one that might be well dispensed with, and protested at all events against its head quarters being located at Luckhipassah, or anywhere within the country sown by his concern. I request the favour of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor referring to my report on this petition, dated 16th December last, No. 226 Ct.

2. As a supplement to that report, I now beg to lay before Government, for perusal, copies of the English decisions of the Officiating Magistrate and Sessions Judge in the cases noted in the margin. They will show that Mr. MacArthur has been convicted in two cases of the illegal detention of certain ryots in a brick godown at Meergunge Factory, and fined 300 rupees in each case. The Sessions Judge in appeal reduced this fine to 250 rupees in each case, not with any intention of mitigating the magistrate's sentence, but in order to bring the total amount of fine within the limit of 500 rupees imposed by Act 53 Geo. 3.

I consider Mr. Bainbridge to have acted with a promptitude and firmness in releasing the confined ryots which entitle him to great credit, and I think also that we have now ample proof that this sub-division was much wanted.

Queen and Bholie Sheikh v. Mr. Alexander MacArthur.
Queen and Fuquir Mahomed v. Mr. Alexander MacArthur and others.
Queen and Dhona Shaik v. Jakair Biswas.

Queen and Bholie Sheikh versus Mr. Alexander MacArthur.

Charge.—Illegal detention or duress under Act 53 Geo. 3, c. 155, s. 105.

It is clearly proved on evidence, which is good, considering the power of the accused and his position, that Bholie Sheikh was seized and taken to various factories and there detained together with others. It is further indisputable that certain persons were released by Mr. Bainbridge, one of those persons having answered to the call "Bholai," raised by person on the outside of a brick godown, within which he and the others released were shut up. This Bholie was also identified by various witnesses; and Nadya Chand Nishe deposes to have been confined with him. His name, and that of the others, was recorded by the Nazir of Gopalgunge, and that official described the persons whose names were written down, and descriptions tally with the persons of the plaintiffs in this and the concurrent case. From these and other casual circumstances, I am convinced that Bholie, present in this court, is one of the men released by Mr. Bainbridge from Meergunge godown. The fact of a detention for about two months is proved by the statement on oath of Bholie Sheikh and the plaintiffs in the case of Fuquir Moneeroodee and Mudoomutty, whose case is filed in support of the evidence in this, also by the petition letter, or defawaree, read in the presence of defendant's son and various amlah in Mr. Bainbridge's tent. It is further shown by the reply that he was not there of his own free will, and that he did not enter surreptitiously and allow himself to be locked up. It is lastly improbable, and according to the deposition of Mr. Smith, a person in charge of factories of defendant, it is impossible that defendant could have been ignorant of a lengthy detention of any person within the walls of the godown of the factory inhabited by him; and there is good ground for supposing that such treatment is often applied to ryots, who desert or default in indigo matters. I consequently fine Mr. Alexander MacArthur, defendant, 300 rupees, to be levied according as prescribed in the Act 53 Geo. 3, in the default of payment within five days.

C. B. Skinner, Officiating Magistrate.

After the above order was passed, defendant's mookhtear put forward an objection that two witnesses for the defence had not been heard. Mr. MacArthur did not raise this objection, nor do I think it could affect my orders, which are based upon the inapplicability of defendant's reply. Nor has a subpoena been served.

C. B. Skinner, Officiating Magistrate.

Queen and Fuquir Mahomed, &c., versus Alexander MacArthur and others.

Charge—Illegal imprisonment.

In this case we must consider, firstly, the detention at Luckhipassah. This is denied by Mr. Smith, in charge who, however, refused to give a deposition until he should have time to consider and consult. The evidence on which I consider it proved is the statement of plaintiffs, backed by that of certain casual visitants to the factory in the ordinary course of business, &c.; the only evidence in repudiation is that certain persons, who state they did not see the plaintiffs, although themselves were occasionally at the factory. We next find them at Noacola. It is not at all impossible that they should have been forced to give in petitions as stated by them; the petitions filed do not in any way disprove the charge. It is next proved, and on unimpeachable authority, that they were released from Meergunge factory. Now, no case is made out that they were simply confined for a legal period for arrears of rent, which might easily be done is true. Some time ago punishment was awarded against certain persons for duress in Meergunge factory from simple enmity; I am inclined to look on this as a detention from similar causes for the reasons stated by the plaintiffs; it struck me very particularly in the cross-examination of witnesses, that the questions put by plaintiffs were those of persons pleading facts, with which they believed the parties under examination to be acquainted; and of Nadya Chand's evidence, it is sufficient to remark that the best part of it was extracted by cross-examination. The evidence to minor parts is necessarily scanty, but I think there is sufficient, when backed by the release and the facts above recorded, to establish a good case, as in Bholie's case. I consider Mr. MacArthur guilty of being a party to the illegal confinement, and fine him 300 rupees, under Act 53 Geo. 3., to be realised as by that Act provided. Nelumber Ghose, Gomashta of Luckhipassah factory, tries to prove that defendants were not there, but I consider his defence worthless, and sentence him to one month's imprisonment, and 40 rupees fine in lieu of labour to be paid in 48 hours, and 100 rupees in addition, or other six weeks imprisonment; Hurmootolah to a fine of 50 rupees, or one month's imprisonment; also Pauchoo Chowkeedar, of Meergunge, whose defence cannot stand, and Selamutoolah of Luckhipassah to the same.

(signed) C. B. Skinner,

10 May 1859.

Nelumber Ghose was Gomashta of Luckipassah Factory, where plaintiffs are proved to have been confined by the evidence of several persons. Defendant tries to prove that they were not so confined. Before the orders on Mr. MacArthur were referred in appeal to the Sessions Judge, and before defendant Nelumber had appeared in person; but after hearing all the evidence for the prosecution and defence, I recorded a sentence of imprisonment, which, however, has never been pronounced. The Appellate Court has put a veto, an order of imprisonment against the native defendants in this case; I therefore sentence Nelumber Ghose to a fine of 100 rupees, or six weeks' imprisonment, and 40 rupees in lieu of labour, to be paid in 48 hours. Hurmootolah, Pauchoo, and Selamutoolah, who are proved to have been Chowkeedars on duty at the factories of Meergunge and Luckipassah, respectively, during the period of the plaintiff's confinement, and who do not deny that they held the office throughout, though they do deny that plaintiffs were imprisoned, are sentenced each to 50 rupees fine, or one month's imprisonment, and 20 rupees in lieu of labour.

(signed) C. B. Skinner,
Officiating Magistrate.

2 June 1859.

Queen and Dhonie Sheik versus Jakair Biswas.

Charge—Illegal confinement.

In the first place, I consider it proved by Bholie and witnesses, and confirmed by Mr. John MacArthur, that Bholie was at Noacola Factory, and by the former that he was taken away to Meergunge. A similar statement made by Monerodee and Fuquir Mahomed give force to it, and a subsequent release as well as the previous capture are satisfactorily proved. It is shown that Jakair Biswas ordered violence. This proof in this case, backed by the evidence to similar conduct in the other, are sufficient evidence to establish guilt on the part of defendant. I consequently sentence him to 15 days imprisonment, with 20 rupees in lieu of labour, to be paid in 48 hours, and to pay a fine of 100 rupees, or to undergo imprisonment for six weeks more,

(signed) C. B. Skinner,
Officiating Magistrate.

10 May 1859.

Appeals Nos. 51, 55, and 56.

This is an appeal from Mr. Alexander MacArthur, of Meergunge Factory, against two fines of 300 rupees each, imposed on him by the Officiating Magistrate in two cases of illegal imprisonment. The plaintiff Bholie Sheikh, and Fuquir Mahomed and Monerodee, co-plaintiffs co-plaintiffs, were all three released from a locked godown of the Meergunge Factory, by the Joint Magistrate of Gopalgunge, Mr. A. J. Bainbridge, who was informed of their detention there by a small boy, as he was riding up to pay a visit to the factory. The evidence of Mr. Bainbridge shows clearly and indisputably that the disclosure made to him was unexpected, though he had before heard of men being confined; that on going up and calling out Bholie, he was answered at once; that when the servants of the factory would not bring the key of the godown, he sent to Mr. MacArthur, who had it brought at once, and the men were released then and there; that he did not observe any irons on them; that it was then stated, for the factory, that the men were defaulters for rents, and that he had them at once sent off to his tents by his own people where he took their depositions the next day. He admits that he could not swear to the men being the same, but as it was rather dark when he released them, this matters little, the more so as the parties released already recognise Mr. Bainbridge, and are identified by others, Abed Sheikh, Lukshmen Syce, and Ramdhon, the Nazir.

The released parties declare that they had been detained for about two months, variously at Luckipassah, Noacola, Churnarandy, and finally at Meergunge Factories. The reasons given are either that they are servants of Bisseur Chuklanovis, who is at feud with Mr. MacArthur, or that they have taken indigo advances, or owe rent, or that there was a fear lest they should give evidence in some cases regarding an estate purchased by Ram Rutton Rai.

It is clear, however, from the evidence of these men that during all the above periods they were not continuously confined. They admit being allowed to go home at times, and Enquir Mahomed allows that he was made to give a petition in person in the Joint Magistrate's Camp on the 10th of March, when had his imprisonment been rigorous or even real, he would surely have complained thereof. This was only one week before the release at Meergunge.

Other witnesses, however, corroborate the detention of the parties to a certain extent at the out-factories, before they were taken to Meergunge. The evidence of Someroodeen, Nydia Chand, Mofezodin, Baken Khan, Tamizuddin, a second Nydia Chand, and Shiromoini, is tolerably clear as to their apprehension in the first instance and their subsequent detention against their will at Noacola and Luckipassah.

It is admitted, however, that the evidence of others on this point is their mere hearsay, or that it would seem to imply (see depositions of Shibchunder Bukshe) that the men were at the factories of their own free will to settle about rents, &c. The real gist of the charge against Mr. MacArthur is his complicity in the detention at Meergunge. There is nothing to connect him with the original apprehension and detention at the out-factories; and least there can be no such presumption of criminal knowledge as would sustain a conviction, and we have seen that there are doubts as to the reality of any violent or continuous detention previously.

With regard to the real point in the case, then, Mr. MacArthur shows that he went to Furreedpore on the 14th of March and returned only on the 16th, just before Mr. Bainbridge released the parties; and it is argued for him that his ready offering of the key of the godown, and his release of the parties then and there, does not look like criminality. It is also said that the men were there as rent defaulters, and that, after all, it is not clear that the parties whose evidence has been taken were really the parties released.

On this I must observe, that rent defaulters can only be summoned to settle matters, and on no pretence can they be shut up in a dark godown under lock and key. As to the insinuation that the men were charged in the way, it is clear that Mr. Bainbridge took every pains to convey them to his tent in safety. They recognise him as the official who released them, and they were the parties likely to remember their deliverer, and Abed, Lukshmen, and Ramdhon Bukshe identify them as the real parties. Nor is it easy to see what object any one would have in substituting others for the real men: these men had been in a godown and could tell a plausible story; new men would have had to be tutored into a knowledge of places and times.

Again, Mr. MacArthur could hardly have refused to open the godown at the request of the Joint Magistrate, and whether he knew of the detention or not, it would have been the worst policy to refuse to unlock the door. Any charge, however outrageous, might afterwards, as Mr. MacArthur must have well known, have been easily got up against him with some show of probability.

Nor does it seem to me to affect the case that Mr. Bainbridge, at the time, was out of the jurisdiction of Gopalgunge, and in that of Magoorah. Both are in Jessore, to which Mr. Bainbridge stands appointed. He acted as a police officer, and his evidence taken regularly in the case is open to the same scrutiny as that of any other witness.

It was for the appellant to show under what circumstances, or by what show of right, the parties were found in the predicament accurately described by Mr. Bainbridge. This onus fairly lays on Mr. MacArthur, and as he has brought no good evidence to explain the circumstances or to give the detention a different colouring, I think, considering the un rebutted evidence of the parties, (who say that they had been at least for some days there,) the place of the confinement, (it being the godown of the head factory of a large concern,) and the whole probabilities and inferences, that the appellant cannot complain if the courts, on this, argue his complicity, and hold that the illegal detention must have taken place under his sanction either expressed or implied.

An objection that the Magistrate made Mr. John MacArthur a witness when he might have been inculpated as a defendant through certain testimony which was held valid against other persons, but apparently disregarded in his case, does not appear to me of very great importance.

The magistrate acted to the best of his judgment, and there may be several little circumstances as to identity, mode of speech, &c., to influence a judge who bases his judgment on the witness before him, and on the viva voce testimony which cannot be attainable to the same extent, by an appellate judge, who is confined solely to the dead record.

I observe, however, that the magistrate has fined Mr. MacArthur 600 rupees. Looking to the Act of George 3, which fixes 500 rupees as the limit, and to the well known construction of our courts with regard to cumulation punishments, which cannot be awarded for offences occurring at the same date beyond the strict letter of the law, or beyond the full amount of the officer's powers, I lower the fine in each case to 250 rupees, which will bring it within the law.

With regard to the appeal of Jakair Biswas, he is a gomastah of the out-factory of Noacola, and there is nothing whatever to connect him with the actual imprisonment at Meergunge. All that is in evidence against him is, that he ordered Bholie to be apprehended and beaten, though not severely. I must treat this case as one of common assault, and in this view I reduce the sentence to 50 rupees, or 15 days' imprisonment.

Looking to the difference of the laws for Englishmen and natives, and to the particular circumstances of this case, I cannot altogether reconcile myself to a decision by which the owner of the factory, an Englishman should leave the court with a fine, though a heavy fine; while the servant, a native and an old man to boot, should leave the court not under a fine, but for the jail, under a peremptory order of imprisonment.

The sentences are amended accordingly, the orders of the magistrate being substantially affirmed. A copy of this decision to be sent to the officiating magistrate for his inspection.

Jessore, 26 May 1856. Sessions Judge.

FROM A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, (No. 4,144), dated Fort William, 30 June 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 119Ct., dated the 12th instant, submitting copies of the decisions of the Officiating Magistrate and Sessions Judge of Jessore, in three cases of illegal imprisonment in which Mr. MacArthur, of the Meergunge Indigo Factory was concerned

2. These cases afford, I am to observe, a very pregnant comment on the petition which was submitted by that gentleman to Government in July 1858, against the establishment of a sub-divisional officer near his factories.

3. His Honor cannot but consider such cases of long continued illegal confinement as those of which Mr. MacArthur was found guilty as a great opprobrium. Where the offender is a British subject, no doubt the criminal law is very unjust towards the injured native. But the civil law is not open to the same imputation. It should be made known to the sufferers, and generally to the poor people subject to such oppression, that apart from all action of the criminal courts, any person placed in confinement by a private person, on whatever pretence, has a civil action against the oppressor, whoever he may be.

4. The part taken by Mr. Bainbridge, the Joint Magistrate, in releasing the ryots confined by Mr. MacArthur, was very praiseworthy; and I am to request that you will convey to him the expression of the Lieutenant Governor's approbation of his conduct.

— No. 6. —

FROM T. B. Lane, Esq., to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated Rajshabye, 14 May 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to submit, for the consideration of his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, the draft of a Bill for ensuring the execution of engagements for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant.

2. In doing so, I am influenced by a strong desire to secure, not only the protection of the class of indigo planters from fraud, but also the cessation of those affrays and quarrels which often arise from breach of engagements, caused by collusion lusion between the ryot and the zemindar; and, I trust, that I may not be deemed intrusive or over zealous.

3. I think it right to make a few preliminary observations:—

The riot in breaking his engagement, whether by a fraudulent transfer of the plant to another than the person making the advances, or by an utter failure to sow his land with the indigo seed, is as a rule in collusion with his zemindar, although no doubt influenced also by his cupidity; and just as certainly, he, as a rule, contracts the engagement with the consent of his zemindar. I would make the consent of the zemindar, through his agent, an indispensable condition to the engagement.

The proposed law, to be in any way beneficial, must have a summary and immediate effect. Any delay in the magistrate's court, followed by a further suspense pending the decision on appeal by the judge, would render the law practically useless. A summary procedure, without appeal, being therefore essential to its success, it is necessary that the circumstances attendant on the making of the engagement should be such, as to preclude all after excuses on the part of the contracting party. The signature of the zemindar's agent would be the proof that the ryot had willingly contracted the engagement.

It is not to be denied, that reputable and respectable as is the class of indigo planters for the most part, still amongst them there are some unscrupulous persons. A measure preventing fraud on their part, must therefore be included. I consider that the full list of the season's engagements required by Section II., which would be open to general inspection in the magistrate's court, would afford a sure means of detecting any such attempt at fraud, long before any suit could be preferred based on a false contract; as well as it would enable the magistrate to detect any ryot who might have received advances from more than one person. I may also observe, that any planter who once defrauded ryots contracting with him, would effectually discourage them and all others from again entering into engagements with him.

The date specified in Section II., is the ordinary period at which advances are made, but a magistrate may, at his discretion, and on consideration of special circumstances in any district, determine another date as the last on which attestation can be effected.

The possession to be given under Section V., would be given under the same procedure as that in use in cases under Act IV. of 1840.

BILL for the ensuring the Execution of Engagements for the Cultivation and Delivery of Indigo Plant.

EVERY written engagement for the cultivation and delivery of indigo plant, shall be countersigned by the person making the advance, and by the zemindar's gomashtha of the mouzah in which the land to be cultivated is situate.

II. Every such engagement shall be presented to the magistrate of the district before the 1st day of September in each year, or before such date as may be determined by the magistrate; and the magistrate shall fix to each document his signature, and the date thereof. On the 1st day of September, or on such date as may be determined as above, every person making advances and receiving such engagements for the season then commencing, shall furnish the magistrate with a full list of all such engagements received by him in the form A.

III. If any person who may have made such advances, shall have just reason to believe that an individual, under engagement to him, is in any way evading, or intending to evade, the execution of the said engagement, it shall be competent to such person to present a petition of complaint to the magistrate, filing with the same the deed of engagement, attested as provided in the first and second Section of this Act.

IV. On the presentation of such petition and deed, a summons shall be immediately issued requiring the individual complained against to attend, and answer to the complaint personally, or by agent, before the magistrate within a reasonable specified period, but which shall in no case exceed 14 days.

V. If the individual thus summoned shall attend personally or by agent within the specified period, and shall offer to fulfil his engagement, he shall be permitted to do so. If he shall refuse to execute his engagement, or after offering to fulfil it, shall fail to do so, or if he shall not appear within the time specified, the magistrate shall summarily order possession of the land described in the engagement to be delivered to the person making the advances make any contract the ryot may enter into more or less binding than it otherwise would be.

7. Your draft Act again makes no provision for cases in which a contract between a ryot, or a person claiming to be a ryot, cannot be executed without interfering with the rights of a third party; as where A contracts with a party to cultivate indigo on B's land, or on land which B claims to be his; such cases, it is obvious, are not suitable for the decision of a criminal or police court.

8. His Honor, however, considers the provision suggested in your draft, for securing the reality of contracts for the cultivation of indigo and the freedom of action of the weaker party on such occasions, namely, by requiring them, in order to their being of legal validity, to be entered into in presence of a public officer, a very good one, and one that might with advantage be extended to contracts made under advances for the cultivation of any crop whatsoever. The attention of the Legislative Member of Bengal will be drawn to this suggestion.

COPY of the above letter, and of the one to which it is a reply, together with the Draft Bill, forwarded for the information of the Legislative Member of Council for Bengal.

From T. B. Lane, Esq., Rajshahye, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 23 June 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter to my address, No. 3538, of the 3d instant, I have the honour respectfully to submit some further observations on my draft Act concerning indigo contracts.

2. I would with all deference observe, that there is a great difference in the position of persons making advances for the cultivation of indigo and those who make advances for the production of other crops. The former class consists of persons who, expending large sums of money in advance for the cultivation of land, reside in the immediate vicinity of that land, carry on the subsequent manufactures, in which other large sums are expended on the spot, and possess considerable influence with the population, in consequence of this connexion with them from which so many earn their maintenance. This influence, exercised independent of the zemindar, is most distasteful to him, and although he may be sometimes propitiated by large presents to himself and his amlah, his feelings of dislike to the position held by the indigo planter are often so strong that he uses all his efforts to prevent the actual cultivation of the plant. At the best, cultivation is impeded by a heavy tax, and in some cases stopped altogether.

2. I do not assert that the zemindar has the slightest right to regulate the cultivation of his ryots' land; but regarding the immense power possessed by him over them, by which he can compel them in any case to act at his will, I wish it to be made essential to the free character of the contract between planter and cultivator, that there should be a formal recognition of its existence on the zemindar's part. The contract would not be more binding, but the magistrate would feel assured that it had been really or willingly made.

4. Under the present law, in cases of breach of contract the planter, who, honourably averse to resort to physical force, applies to the Civil Court for redress, cannot there obtain a sufficient compensation for his loss. The damages awarded cannot be recovered from ryots, who have little or no property, who have taken the advance because they wanted money to pay their rent. And as these breaches do not occur singly, but all the ryots of the zemindaree act in concert, an indigo planter as at present situated may at any time find himself injured in a very serious degree.

5. Assuming, therefore, that indigo planters are engaged in sustaining a commerce in one of the most valuable products of India, that in doing so they expend a large amount of capital, and affect materially both the weal of the surrounding population and the revenues of the country, I would urge that it is both politic and just that they should be specially protected from the opposition so constantly shown to them by the neighbouring zemindars, who, by exercising their great power, can effectually bar the progress of their cultivation.

6. I have heard that many ryots believe that indigo is not so profitable to them as other crops are. What I wish to secure is, not the forcing the ryot to make engagements which he does not like, but merely that when he has, with the cognizance of his zemindar's agent, willingly agreed to certain terms, he should be compelled afterwards to fulfil them.

7. Let me add, that it seems very probable that if a summary remedy as proposed by me can be provided, breaches of contract will but seldom occur through fear of the immediate result, and the whole question will settle into its proper position, viz., that if a zemindar wishes to prevent his ryots from cultivating for a factory, he will be obliged to do so by preventing them at first from taking advances, instead of allowing them to take the money and afterwards deny the contract.

8. With reference to the 7th paragraph of your letter, I would suggest that, if in the opinion of his Honor the presence of the zemindar's agent cannot be considered a sufficient guarantee that the land contracted for belongs to the ryot contracting, an addition should be made to the 4th Section of the draft as follows:

"Provided, that if within one month from the date specified in Section II., any individual shall before the magistrate claim land described in the list of engagements for the season to be his holding, not that of the ryot in whose name it is entered, the magistrate upon receiving any petition from the person making advances for the cultivation of the said land, shall refrain from proceeding under this Act, referring the parties to the Civil Court."

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to T. B. Lane, Esq., Rajshahye (No. 4220), dated Fort William, the 5th July, 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated the 23d ultimo, submitting further observations on your Draft Act concerning indigo contracts, which has been duly laid before the Lieutenant Governor.

— No. 7. —

From E. Prestwich, Esq., to the Honourable F. J. Halliday, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal (No. 320), dated the 2d February 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to the interview I had the honour to have with you on Thursday last, I beg to hand you a statement of the facts I mentioned on that occasion.

1. I am the proprietor of the Hobra Indigo concern in zillah Baraset, and largely interested in the several concerns belonging to the Bengal Indigo Company, as also indigo concerns in zillahs Arrah, Tirlhoot, and Jessore.

2. Mr. Eden, the present Magistrate of Zillah Baraset, has expressed his determination in the most hostile manner (through the medium of the "Field" newspaper, of which it is notorious he is the mofussil editor, as also generally to every person with whom he comes in contact,) to entirely do away with indigo cultivation within the district of Baraset, stating that in the course of two years no indigo shall be sown in that district.

3. In consequence of Mr. Eden's expressed and well-known hostility to the cultivation of indigo, the ryots of Chowrassee and Ookrah pergunnahs in the Hobra concern have entered into a combination not to come in and settle their accounts for the past season, or to enter into any arrangement to clear off the money they are indebted to me.

4. In

4. In order to insure the good working of the Hobra concern, I took an ezarah of Chowrassee pergunnah, in which I pay an annual yearly loss of six thousand rupees. Every possible indulgence has been shown towards the ryots. I have never attempted to increase the collections in any way, and have borne with this loss that the ryots should have every encouragement to act fairly by the concern. They now being assured that the magistrate will support them in evading their indigo engagements, refuse to sow indigo as heretofore.

5. On representations made to me last season by Mr. Eden, that Mr. Hampton permitted the servants of Hobra to act unfairly towards the ryots, I removed Mr. Hampton from charge of the concern, and also discharged the old servants, Mr. Eden assuring me I had only to do so to make the ryots exceedingly well disposed towards the concern, and promising me every encouragement and assistance.

6. I now discover that I have been completely misled, and that Mr. Eden's determination to uproot indigo cultivation is the real cause of my present difficulties, and where a magistrate of a district does not hesitate to express publicly his hostility to indigo, it is quite impossible for me to expect assistance or justice from him, and my position has been made doubly difficult by my having a new manager, assistant, and servants.

7. I have invested a large amount of capital in the Hobra concern. I have this year provided indigo seed at a very great cost, and when investing my capital in district Baraset, I did so in full confidence that I should receive every fair assistance and encouragement, and not be ruined by an officer of government who is determined to carry out his expressed theory as to what is best for the good of the country, viz., the entire cessation of indigo cultivation to be superseded by cotton.

8. Mr. Eden makes a pretence that his private feelings do not affect his official acts, and do not influence his amlah, the police, and the ryots of the district. Any person at all acquainted with the influence a magistrate exercises in the Mofussil, must know that he has only to raise his finger to put up the ryots to rebel against the factory, and ryots generally are only too glad of any excuse to avoid paying their just debts.

9. In the many indigo concerns in which I am interested no difficulty like the present exists. It is only in Baraset, and with a magistrate so biassed and prejudiced; and if Mr. Eden's present policy is to be pursued by him and adopted by other magistrates, it must certainly result in my ruin as well as that of all men who have brought capital to the country for investment in indigo.

From E. Prestwich, Esq., to the Honourable F. J. Halliday, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated Calcutta, 15 April 1859.

Sir,

You will doubtless recollect the interviews which I had the honour to have with you, on the 27th January and 3d February last, in respect of certain complaints which I made against the Honourable Mr. Eden, the magistrate of Baraset, as affecting my interests in the Baraset concerns, of which I am the proprietor.

2. At the latter of these interviews Mr. Eden was present, and I agreed, in order to avoid the necessity of proceeding further in the matter, to a proposition that was then made to the effect that Mr. Eden should, on his return to his charge, persuade the ryots to come in to the factory in order that they might compare and settle their accounts for the past season.

3. So far, however, from Mr. Eden's carrying out this arrangement upon his return, he, in open court, stated that I had petitioned Government for his removal, and that I had been unsuccessful in my application, thereby letting the ryots know, what they otherwise would not have known, that we were opposed to each other, and intimating to them that they might proceed to the factory if they pleased which they were probably aware of before.

Subsequently, on the 20th February, Mr. Eden issued a roobookaree much in the same spirit, and the result has been, as a matter of course, that up to this hour not a ryot has come in to settle his accounts.

Finding that Mr. Eden was not acting with even a show of fairness, but that his hostility to the factory had been increased by my proceedings, I laid the matter before Mr. A. Grote, the Commissioner of the district. After some delay, Mr. Grote replied that no case was made out for his interference or for representation to Government, upon the ground, as stated in the following extract of his letter to me dated the 6th instant, that "the explanation of the roobookaree of the effect of which you complain is given in the following extracts from Mr. Eden's letter, (paras. 17-20), which show that the latter warned you of what might be expected from his interfering in the manner proposed by you." I appeal to you, Sir, whether Mr. Eden's explanation is a fair explanation of what actually took place, and whether he has interfered in the manner proposed by me, whether he has not by the wording of the roobookaree taken every possible advantage of his position still further to complicate the business.

Mr. Grote appears to be under the impression, from Mr. Eden's explanation, that the roobookaree was issued in its present form with your approval and sanction, and therefore, coming from high authority, it is not a matter for his interference.

The actual and ruinous result is that I have been able as yet to sow only about 2,600 beegahs, or less than one-fourth of the cultivation of any previous year, and should this combination amongst the ryots continue to receive the encouragement of the magistrate, the factory will be closed.

The only resource left to me therefore is again to appeal to you, that you will be so good as to call for the whole case, and to give me the redress I seek, by removing Mr. Eden from his present charge, and by giving it to some one whose opinions on the subject of indigo planting are not so openly and avowedly hostile.

I beg to annex copies of my correspondence with Mr. Grote, consisting of my letters to him, dated 16th and 21st March, and of his letters to me, dated the 17th March and 6th April.

The certified copy of Mr. Eden's roobookaree referred to in the preceding is with Mr. Grote.

From E. Prestwich, Esq., to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of Nuddea, dated Calcutta, 16 March 1859.

Sir,

I BEG to be allowed to bring to your notice the following facts, and to solicit your interference with respect thereto in such manner as you may think proper for the protection of my interests as an indigo planter within the district of Baraset.

1. I became the purchaser of the Baraset indigo concern, one-half in the year 1853, and the remaining half subsequently for one lac of rupees (1,00,000). When purchased, there was a cultivation of upwards of 16,000 beegahs of land for the purposes of the factory, and an annual average outturn of upwards of 700 maunds of indigo. I subsequently, for the purpose of insuring the interests of the concern, took an izarah of Chowrassee pergunnah at a loss on the annual collections of 6,000 rupees. I have shown every indulgence to the ryots of that pergunnah, in remitting to them the fees and other exactions which they had been in the habit of paying to the zemindar; and I have never attempted in any way to increase the collections or make up the deficit therein. Further, when during last season it was represented to me by the joint magistrate of Baraset, the Honourable A. Eden, that some of the native factory servants had in his opinion been guilty of some oppression towards certain of the ryots, I dismissed from my employment not only those native servants who were so charged, but also I removed my European manager, Mr. Hampton, against whom no charge of participating in such acts had been made or shown, but whom Mr. Eden believed to be somewhat to blame, and I boldly and confidently assert that I have, in all respects, so far as lay in my power, both from motives of humanity, and from a sense of the comfort and well-being of the ryots being most material to the prosperity of the factory, endeavoured to improve their condition and gain their confidence.

2. Notwithstanding such my efforts, this formerly prosperous concern is now approaching entire ruin. The cultivation last year declined to about 11,000 beegahs; this year not half the latter quantity of land has been settled for. Although the season is already so far advanced, the outstanding balances at the end of last year amount to Rs. 1,14,474. 2. 10., and the ryots where the combination exists have, notwithstanding every attempt which has been made by my manager and me hitherto, in almost every case, refused to come in and settle their accounts, and those ryots who have taken advances, now say that they will not sow unless the other ryots sow likewise. The result of this is, that I am threatened with the total loss of the large capital, exceeding two lacs of rupees, which I have already invested in the concern. The cause of these losses and difficulties is to be sought for in the conduct and language of Mr. Eden since he came to Baraset as joint magistrate. That officer, who has formed very strong opinions on the subject of indigo planting, and the necessity of introducing what appears to him certain reforms in the system, and the greater advantages offered by other cultivation to the ryot, has taken every opportunity of giving expression to those opinions both officially and in private correspondence and conversation, and also in the columns of the "Field" newspaper, with which he is notoriously connected as a Mofussil contributor, has indulged in attacks on the indigo planting body generally. The natural and inevitable consequence of such open expression of opinion on his part has been that the ryots throughout the Baraset district have formed the opinion that in declining to come in and settle their accounts, or enter into fresh contracts, as they did in former years, they are acting in a manner calculated to please the magistrate of the district, and that they can rely on his countenance and support in any contest they may have with the factory.

The immediate effect, on such a population as that of Baraset, of such impressions will be at once apparent to any one.

3. The justice or injustice of Mr. Eden's opinions on this subject I do not think it is here necessary for me to discuss. The duty of a magistrate is, I submit, entirely beside the expression of any particular opinions which he may, as an individual, entertain with regard to such public and general questions as are involved in the displacement of the cultivation of indigo by that of tobacco or other products. His duty is undoubtedly to protect the ryot from oppression, and to preserve the peace, but it is as undoubtedly also his duty to act with the greatest impartiality and discretion in the expression of opinions on matters not falling within his jurisdiction, which may be well or ill founded, but which coming from a person in his position, are calculated to lead to the falsest impressions among the ignorant and ill-disposed, and to operate most prejudicially on the interests of a large body of men, whose difficulties are already considerable, and whose experience is so much greater than his. I will here only observe, as an instance of the amount of knowledge which Mr. Eden brings to bear on this important subject, that one of the principal grievances which he has repeatedly put forward on behalf of the ryot is, that he loses by the cultivation of indigo to the exclusion of that of tobacco, which Mr. Eden particularly advocates in Baraset; whereas every person having any knowledge of the rotation of crops in this country is aware that tobacco and indigo are grown at different seasons on the same ground, and do not interfere the one with the other.

4. Finding at the commencement of this year that the prospects of the concern were so disastrous, and having ascertained that the cause of the ryots not coming in was, as stated by themselves, that they considered the magistrate to be opposed to the cultivation of indigo, I obtained two interviews with his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, on the 27th of January and the 3d of February of this year, relative to this matter, at the latter of which Mr. Eden was present. It was at the latter of these arranged, with the approval of Mr. Eden himself, that my manager, Mr. Warner, should write a letter to his Honour, requesting him to instruct Mr. Eden to use his influence with the ryots of Chowrassee and Ookrah pergunnahs, to induce them to come in and settle their accounts for the past year, Mr. Warner at the same time undertaking to use no coercion whatever to force the ryots to take fresh advances. That letter was accordingly written by Mr. Warner in those terms on the 4th February; and on the same day Mr. Eden, without waiting for further instructions, and without, so far as I can understand, any necessity or proper motive for so doing, intimated in open court the failure of the application which had been made for his removal, informed them in effect that the Lieutenant Governor's order was, that there was no law compelling the ryot to sow indigo, but that they might sow what they pleased; that the ryots were to go to the factory and settle their accounts, but that an amlah of the magistrate would accompany them to protect them against the planter: that if the planter owed the ryot anything it must be paid immediately, but if he had any claim against the ryot, it must be sued for, and that the ryots who had already entered into contracts ought to perform them, but that no one must be forced to enter into them.

The effect of this merely colourable performance of the promise he had given before the Lieutenant Governor has been to make matters worse than they were before. A number of ryots who had previously promised to come into the factory and settle their accounts, on hearing of this order, declined to do so, and the reason in all cases assigned is the expressed hostility of the magistrate towards the indigo planters.

On the 20th of February, Mr. Eden issued an order in open court to the same effect, in great part as the former of the 4th, but with the addition that any ryot who should go to the factory should be exempted from arrest while there upon any decree which the factory might previously have obtained against them. By this Mr. Eden apparently intended to insinuate that the coercion of legal process might be employed in breach of the undertaking which I had given through Mr. Warner, and so further to display his hostile feeling. The result has been that not one ryot has since come into the factory, either to settle accounts or enter into agreements.

As a further illustration of the working on the minds of the ryots of the knowledge of Mr. Eden's sentiments, I may mention that in January last Mr. Eden applied to Mr. Warner officially, requesting that one of his deputy magistrates might be allowed to occupy the factory house at Parcool, one of my sub-factories. This Mr. Warner declined, as there has been no disaffection displayed by the ryots of that factory up to that time, but offered the factory house at Simlah, another sub-factory, for his occupation. Notwithstanding such refusal, Mr. Eden sent the deputy magistrate to Parcool, and the consequence has been that the deputy magistrate informed the ryots of Mr. Eden's views on the subject of indigo, and the ryots who had before entered into engagements and were quietly performing them have since shown every unwillingness to carry them out.

In conclusion, sir, I beg to say that I am clearly aware that there is no law by which the magistrate is bound to assist or can assist the planter in obtaining contracts or their performance from his ryots. All I claim is non-interference by the magistrate, so long as no breach of the peace or oppression calls for his intervention, with the free course of agriculture and contract.

Mr. Eden's conduct as magistrate of Baraset is fraught with ruin to me, and I therefore pray that on consideration of this case, you will be pleased to make such representations to Government as may lead to the removal of Mr. Eden from Baraset, or to such other measures as shall effectually protect my interests.

From the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division to E. Prestwich, Esq. (No. 44), dated Allipore, 17 March 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your letter dated yesterday.

2. You attribute the unfavourable prospects this year of the Hobrah concern to the conduct and language of the joint magistrate of Baraset, who you say holds certain strong opinions, and takes every opportunity of expressing them officially, on the subject of indigo planting; as a consequence of this, the Baraset ryots are, you think, under an impression that in declining to come in and settle their accounts and take fresh advances they are doing what will please the joint magistrate.

3. If these charges against Mr. Eden are susceptible of proof, undoubtedly you have good reason for dissatisfaction; for, however strong that gentleman's opinions may be on the existing system of indigo cultivation, he is not justified in giving such official expression to them as should have the effect you describe. I must request you to state whether you are prepared to show that Mr. Eden has thus abused his official position, or whether you merely infer that he has done so because his opinions on the subject have not been disguised in his private "correspondence and conversation, and in the columns of the 'Field.'"

4. Notwithstanding these alleged prejudices of the joint magistrate, you appear, however, to have applied to Government for permission to his interfering to settle differences between you and your ryots, and having obtained it, you now complain that by his mode of interference Mr. Eden has made matters worse than they were before. "All I claim," you now say, "is non-interference by the magistrate so long as no breach of the peace calls for his intervention." This course, I agree with you, is binding on a magistrate, and any deviation from it must be attended with embarrassment. In this case the deviation seems to have been of your own seeking, and to have received the sanction of high authority, and the results, which have been so different from what you had expected, seem to me to be beyond remedy. I will, however, send your letter for Mr. Eden's remarks, and will on the receipt of these determine whether there are grounds for making the reference which you desire to Government.

From E. Prestwich, Esq. to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of Nuddea, dated Calcutta, 21 March 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 17th instant, and in reply beg to state—

You somewhat misunderstand the cause and object of my application to the Lieutenant Governor; it was not so much an application for the good offices of Mr. Eden in inducing the ryots to come in and settle their accounts, as a charge similar to that I have made to you of my difficulties having been occasioned by Mr. Eden publishing privately and officially his sentiments on the subject of indigo planting. There was coupled with such charge the request that measures should be taken for correcting the mischief in such manner as should seem most advisable to the Lieutenant Governor under the circumstances, and it was in consequence of what passed at the interview to which I had referred that Mr. Eden undertook to use his influence to disabuse the minds of the ryots and induce them to come forward and settle their accounts. I merely asked that the magistrate should not interfere to my prejudice in future, and should as far as lay in his power remedy the evil he had done before. This he undertook to do, but did not do: the promise he gave he carried out neither in letter nor spirit; his proceedings were such as clearly to intimate to the ryots that he had gained a triumph over me before the Lieutenant Governor, and they could be encouraged in their opposition to my interests.

You have asked me for evidence of my charges. My charge in my letter to you was that previously to my interviews with the Lieutenant Governor, Mr. Eden had expressed his sentiments and shown his bias in a manner calculated to injure me, and that after these interviews he had in breach of his undertaking made matters even worse than before.

As to the first the evidence is supplied by the well known fact, which, I think, Mr. Eden will hardly deny, and which is notorious to all in Baraset and the adjoining districts, that he does entertain opinions most unfavourable to indigo planting—that he has given the freest expression to them in private conversation, correspondence, and in the press. You will easily understand how difficult it is to fix on particular acts or expressions while the general tenor of the conduct and language of an official leave no doubt in the minds of those by whom he is surrounded and looked up to, as to the opinions he entertains. And you also well know how much greater weight is often attached to, and how much more important results often attend on, such expressions of opinion than were perhaps contemplated by the person who uttered them.

That the effect of Mr. Eden's conduct has been such as I complain of, the present ruinous state of my interests in the Baraset concern sufficiently attest.

As to the evidence of Mr. Eden's conduct subsequent to these interviews, I am not in the same difficulty—I can confidently appeal to the language of his roobokarree (an authenticated copy of which I had the honour to forward to you), and I ask if anything could be calculated more to lead to the conviction in the minds of the ryots that all my efforts had totally failed, that the magistrate had won over the Lieutenant Governor, and that they would be supported by them both in their course of dishonest opposition.

As I have before stated, the consequence has been, that even those who had before promised to come in, put this patent construction on these orders, and the concern has been virtually closed, Mr. Eden being more determined than ever in carrying out his theory regardless of all consequences—and on this ground I pray for his removal.

From the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to E. Prestwich, Esq., at Calcutta, (No. 56Ct.), dated Allipore, 6 April 1859.

Sir,

HAVING now fully considered your letters dated respectively the 16th and 21st ultimo, together with the remarks made on the former by the joint magistrate of Baraset, I have come to the conclusion that under the circumstances no case is made out for my interference, or for representation to Government.

2. The explanation of the roobokaree, of the effect of which you complain, is given in the following extracts from Mr. Eden's letter (paras. 17 to 20), which show that the latter warned you of what might be expected from his interfering in the manner proposed by you :—

EXTRACT Paras. 17 to 20 from Mr. Eden's letter, No. 276, dated 24 March 1859, to the Address of the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division.

"17. Mr. Prestwich and Mr. Warner came and called upon me and asked me to compel the attendance of the ryots at the factory. I declined to compel their attendance, but on their asking me to depute my sheristadar to try and settle the difference, I at once complied. He went to the spot, and reported that Mr. Warner was endeavouring to introduce a new form of contract, and that the ryots would not sign it, and that as neither party would give way he could do nothing.

"18. A short time after this I waited, by instruction, on the Lieutenant Governor, and was amazed to find that Mr. Prestwich and another gentleman, who has nothing to do with the matter, had petitioned the Governor for my removal. I returned to my camp to find out what cases there had been connected with the concern in my court, and found that there had been none at all during the past year, with the exception of the case in which the Naibs were imprisoned in June or July during Mr. Hampton's time. The next day I saw the Lieutenant Governor in the presence of Messrs. Prestwich and Goodenough. After making a number of groundless and general charges which they could not substantiate, they agreed that all they wanted was my interference to induce the ryots to come in and settle their accounts. The Lieutenant Governor requested me to use this influence, on receiving an assurance that no advantage should be taken of their attending to settle their accounts to compel them to enter into fresh contracts, the ryots being told what their rights were, and an amlah being deputed to see that no coercive measures were made use of. I protested slightly, because knowing that the effect of this order would be to let the ryots see that it was not the wish of Government that they should be forced to cultivate indigo (as they now believe it to be), and feeling convinced that they consequently would not sow any longer under compulsion, I felt sure that the owners of the factory would throw the blame upon me. His Honour, however, said that this was a question for the consideration of the owners of the factory, not for me, and if they agreed to it I had no right to object.

"19. I returned home, and finding that as usual on such occasions, a report had been spread, that I had been removed at the request of the owners of the factory, I explained at once what had occurred, so as to counteract the evil effects that would have arisen from the belief that I had been removed for protecting the ryots. I subsequently sent for the ryots, and requested them to go into the factory and settle their accounts, and told them in the presence of Mr. Prestwich's mooktear, that they had better pay their balances. The account given of what took place on the 4th, I distinctly deny; it is a report that he has received from a native, and he ought better to have known the value of such reports.

"20. At the request of Mr. Prestwich's mooktear, I put all that passed in writing, giving him a copy to forward to his master: some of the ryots declined to attend the factory, on the grounds that former managers had instituted false suits in other districts, and had obtained ex parte decrees that had lain over for many years, and that Mr. Warner would execute these on them when they attended the factory. As the Lieutenant Governor evidently wished the ryots to settle their accounts, I got over the objection by ruling, that as they were going in accordance with my wishes, they should be exempt from arrest by decree of the civil court, in the same way as if going and coming to my court, a ruling which I consider perfectly justified by the circumstance."

21 April 1859.

Mr. PRESTWICH, owner of an indigo concern in zillah Baraset, accompanied by Mr. Goodenough, waited on me to represent that he suffered greatly from the undeserved hostility of Mr. Eden (the district magistrate) to the whole system of indigo planting. That Mr. Eden paraded these opinions in many ways, and took care to have them known, so that he was no longer believed to be impartial between planters and their ryots. Moreover, he had in certain cases acted unjustly towards Mr. Prestwich, and for these reasons, ought not to be continued in an office which brought him into constant contact with planters, and marred his reputation for impartiality, while it threatened Mr. Prestwich with ruin. Mr. Prestwich also made these and other statements in writing to the same effect. His letter is appended.

Complaint of Mr.
Prestwich against
Mr. Eden.

I saw Mr. Eden on the subject, and it appeared to me from his statements, that the present condition of affairs in Baraset between Mr. Prestwich and some of his ryots was such as to threaten the public peace, and was likely to spread to other places. But that it was probable that a verbal explanation might remove most of the causes of difference, and lead to a satisfactory result. Accordingly, Mr. Eden readily consented to meet Mr. Prestwich and Mr. Goodenough, and discuss the subject before me.

At the meeting, it was plainly shown that Mr. Eden's conduct had been strictly legal, though it certainly appeared to me that Mr. Eden betrayed some prejudice against the system of indigo planting. It was certain, however, that Mr. Prestwich had looked to Mr. Eden for such assistance as Mr. Eden could not justly or legally afford, and that he was by no means fully informed as to his own legal rights as a planter, or as to the true limits of the magistrate's jurisdiction. Indeed much of Mr. Prestwich's irritation proceeded evidently from a misunderstanding in these points, and was moderated when the subject was more fully explained to him.

Ultimately, Mr. Prestwich receded from much of what he had at first desired to demand; and he made a proposition which I thought Mr. Eden, for the sake of peace and good understanding in his district, might fairly accede to. Mr. Prestwich was therefore requested to put it into writing, and Mr. Eden undertook to assent to it if expressed as he anticipated.

Mr. Prestwich's agent afterwards wrote the following letter:—

"To the Honourable F. J. Halliday, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

"Sir,

"Mr. Prestwich, the owner of the Hobra concern, having informed me of the conversation which he had the honour to hold with you on Thursday last, regarding the difficulties at present existing in that concern, I beg to state that some of those difficulties may, I hope, be reduced if you will be good enough to instruct Mr. Eden, the magistrate of the Baraset district, to use his influence with the ryots of the Chowrassee and Ookrah pergunnahs to induce them to come into the factory to compare the balances of their accounts for the operations of the past season. Should the ryots come into the factory for this purpose, I engage that I will use no coercive measures to force them to take fresh advances for the ensuing year.

"Hobra, the 4th Feb. 1859."

"I have &c.

"J. G. Warner."

As this exactly accorded with the verbal proposition above alluded to, and was perfectly fair and reasonable, while it was stated that an assent to it would cause most of the differences between Mr. Prestwich and his ryots to cease, I caused my private secretary to write as follows to Mr. Eden:—

"My dear Mr. Eden,

"In forwarding you the accompanying copy of a letter from Mr. Warner, I am desired by the Lieutenant Governor to say that, although you are under no legal obligation to interfere in this way, yet his Honour thinks that you may unobjectionably do what is asked for the general benefit of the parties concerned.

"If the ryots should seek your advice, I am to observe that you should take care that they are under no misunderstanding as to their lawful rights, and you should adopt full precautions to ensure them from any force or coercion as to new advances, or on any other account whatever.

"I am, &c.

"H. Raban."

"Allipore, the 11th February 1859.

The

The above is an accurate statement of what passed.

Mr. Prestwich now complains that Mr. Eden has not fairly acted up to his implied agreement, and has submitted another complaint to that effect, together with his correspondence with Mr. Grote, the Commissioner of the 24-pergunnahs.

But the roobokarree alluded to by Mr. Prestwich is not transmitted, and it is essential to a right understanding of the case.

I request, therefore, that the Commissioner may be called upon to forward a copy and translation of the roobokarree in question, with any further remarks he or Mr. Eden may desire to submit on the subject.

The substance of the statement in this Minute should be communicated to the Commissioner, together with copies of the letters adverted to.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 2644), dated Fort William, 23 April 1859.

Sir,

IN forwarding to you a copy of a letter from Mr. Prestwich, the owner of an indigo concern in zillah Baraset, dated the 15th instant, in which he brings a complaint against Mr. Eden, the joint magistrate of that district, I am directed to inform you that some little time ago Mr. Prestwich, accompanied by Mr. Goodenough, waited on the Lieutenant Governor to represent that he suffered greatly from the undeserved hostility of Mr. Eden to the whole system of indigo planting; that Mr. Eden paraded these opinions in many ways, and took occasion to have them known so that he was no longer believed to be impartial between planters and their ryots; and that, moreover, in certain cases he had acted unjustly towards Mr. Prestwich, and that for these reasons he ought not to be continued in the office which brought him into constant contact with planters, and marred his reputation for impartiality, while it threatened Mr. Prestwich with ruin. These and other statements to the same effect were also made by Mr. Prestwich in writing, in a letter dated the 2d February last, of which a copy is appended. The Lieutenant Governor saw Mr. Eden on the subject, and learnt from him that there were differences between Mr. Prestwich and some of his ryots, which threatened the public peace, but that it was probable that a verbal explanation might remove most of the causes of difference, and place matters on a satisfactory footing. Mr. Eden readily consented to meet Mr. Prestwich and Mr. Goodenough, and discuss the subject in my presence.

Accordingly a meeting was arranged, and at this meeting it was plainly shown that Mr. Eden's conduct had been strictly legal, though it appeared to his Honour that he betrayed some prejudice against the system of indigo planting. It was certain however, that Mr. Prestwich had looked to Mr. Eden for such assistance as Mr. Eden could not justly or legally afford, and that he was by no means fully informed as to his own legal rights as a planter, or as to the true limits of the magistrates' jurisdiction. Indeed it was evident that much of Mr. Prestwich's irritation proceeded from a misunderstanding on these points, and was moderated when the subject was more fully explained to him.

Ultimately Mr. Prestwich receded from much of what he had at first desired to demand, and he made a proposition which the Lieutenant Governor thought Mr. Eden, for the sake of peace and good understanding in his district, might fairly accede to. Mr. Prestwich was therefore requested to put his proposition into writing, and Mr. Eden undertook to assent to it if expressed as he anticipated.

Mr. Prestwich's agents afterwards addressed his Honour requesting that Mr. Eden might be "instructed to use his influence with the ryots of the Chowrassee and Ookrah pergunnahs to induce them to come into the factory to compare the balances of their accounts for the operations of the past season," he himself engaging on his part to "use no coercive measures to force them to take fresh advances for the ensuing year," if they should do so.

As this exactly accorded with the verbal proposition above alluded to, and at the same time appeared to be perfectly fair and reasonable, while it was stated that an assent to it would cause most of the differences between Mr. Prestwich and his ryots to cease, his Honour caused it to be intimated to Mr. Eden, through his private secretary, that although he was under no legal obligation to interfere in the way proposed, his Honour thought that he might unobjectionably do what was asked for the general benefit of the parties concerned.

"If the ryots should seek your advice," it was observed, "you should take care that they are under no misunderstanding as to their lawful rights, and you should adopt full precautions to insure them from any force or coercion as to new advances, or on any other account whatever."

Mr. Prestwich now complains that Mr. Eden has not fairly acted up to his implied agreement, and has submitted another complaint to that effect, together with his correspondence with Mr. Commissioner Grote referred to in the margin. But the roobokarree alluded to by Mr. Prestwich, which is essential to a right understanding of the case, has not been received.

I am desired therefore to request that you will be so good as to forward to this office, at your earliest convenience, a copy and translation of the document in question with any remarks which you or Mr. Eden may desire to make on the subject.

From J. H. Young, Esq., Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 88 Ct.), dated 29 April 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 2644, of the 23rd instant, on the subject of the complaint made by Mr. Prestwich, the owner of an indigo concern in zillah Baraset, against Mr. Eden, the joint magistrate of that district.

2. I beg to enclose, as requested, a copy and translation of the roobokarree written by Mr. Eden, which forms the groundwork of Mr. Prestwich's complaint.

3. I have not thought it necessary to call upon Mr. Eden for any further explanation at present, as I quite concur with Mr. Grote in the opinion he has formed and stated in his letter to Mr. Prestwich, No. 56 Ct., of the 6th instant, which is before Government, that that gentleman has failed to make out any case calling for the interference of the Commissioner or for representation to Government.

4. Should, however, the Lieutenant Governor take a different view of the matter, perhaps he will allow Mr. Eden an opportunity of explaining.

TRANSLATION of the Roobokarree held by the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, under date 20 February 1859.

THE agent of the Hobrah concern, in the district of Baraset having among other complaints represented to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal that the ryots of Ookrah and Chowrassee have wickedly combined not to sow indigo, the only demand that was admitted against them after various discussions is that they did not settle their accounts. The agent agreed not to exercise any oppression whatever on them, and the Lieutenant Governor accordingly ordered the joint magistrate to summon the ryots and explain to them that they should go to the factory in order to settle their accounts, to receive their dues if creditor, or to pay their debts if debtor, and to take advances for sowing indigo if they are willing to do so; that if they are unwilling to sow indigo, the agent cannot by force give them advances; that where they have their own land they have power to make any cultivation they like on it, and that he has been directed to employ an amlah to see that no oppression whatever is practised until the accounts are adjusted. Accordingly, the joint magistrate summoned the ryots. Mokin Mundle, of Ookrah, and Shib Chunder Chatterjee, Ameer Biswas, and others, of Chowrassee, appearing before him in the presence of Ramkanyi Ghosal, mooktear of the factory, he explained to them the above orders. The ryots all agreed to abide by these orders, but Shib Chunder Chatterjee and some other ryots said that it is probable that the agent of the factory will execute the false decrees which he has obtained against them in other districts, seize them when they go to the factory to settle the accounts, and put them to pains in order to make them submit. On this ground they prayed that some measures be taken to prevent such acts; since the ryots will go to the factory according to the instructions of the joint magistrate, they cannot be seized by any other adawlut till they return home from the factory.

Ordered, that a perwannah be issued to Juggobundoo Mitter, mohurrir of the Hobra Thannah, to the effect that he shall attend the factory whilst the ryots are engaged there to adjust their accounts, and see that the agent does not force them by oppression to do anything; that there be no hindrance to the ryots acting in indigo matters according to their own will, and that the unwilling ryots do not dissuade the willing ryots from sowing indigo. That he be informed that the ryots will go to the factory in the jurisdiction of which they live, and that he will have to attend the factory where his presence is required by the ryots, and to act as directed above. That he will, moreover, see that they are not seized in execution of a decree of any other courts when they go to the factory to close their accounts, and until they return home from thence. That two perwannahs be written similar to that which will be written to the mohurrir, one to be given to Mokin Mundle, of Ookrah, and the other to Ameer Biswas, of Chowrassee.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to E. Prestwich, Esq. (No 3066), dated Fort William, 13 May 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 15th April last, representing the difficulties experienced by you in one of your indigo concerns in the Baraset district, and complaining against certain proceedings of Mr. Eden, the joint magistrate of that district, which, in your opinion, have caused those difficulties.

2. The late Lieutenant Governor has placed on record a Minute detailing the circumstances connected with the interviews with him to which you refer, at the last of which Mr. Eden was present.

3. Mr. Halliday has observed that at this meeting it was plainly shown that Mr. Eden's conduct had been strictly legal, and that it was evident you had looked to Mr. Eden for such assistance as he could not justly or legally afford. The result of the interview was that you were requested to put in writing a proposition which you had made, and to which Mr. Halliday thought Mr. Eden might, for the sake of peace and good understanding in his district, fairly accede.

4. This proposition was accordingly submitted in writing by your agent, and was to the effect that Mr. Eden might be "instructed to use his influence with the ryots of the Chowrassee and Ookrah pergunnahs to induce them to come into your factory to compare the balances of their accounts for the operations of the past season," your agent engaging, on your part, to "use no coercive measures to force them to take fresh advances for the ensuing year."

5. On receipt of this communication Mr. Halliday caused it to be intimated to Mr. Eden, through his private secretary, that although he was under no legal obligation to interfere in the way proposed, he (Mr. Halliday) thought that he might unobjectionably do what was asked for the general benefit of the parties concerned. "If the ryots should seek your advice," it was observed, "you should take care that they are under no misunderstanding as to their lawful rights, and you should adopt full precautions to ensure them from force or coercion as to new advances, or on any other account whatever."

6. In your letter under reply, you complained that Mr. Eden had not fairly carried out the proposed arrangement, but, on the contrary, had proceeded in a manner calculated to widen the breach between your factory people and the ryots, as was evidenced, more particularly, by the wording of a certain roobokarree in which Mr. Eden was alleged to have "taken every possible advantage of his position still further to complicate the business."

7. As the document alluded to did not accompany your letter, a copy of it was called for from the Commissioner, and has been submitted with the rest of the papers for the consideration of the Lieutenant Governor, whose remarks on the case I am now desired to communicate to you.

8. The Lieutenant Governor is of opinion that you have failed to make out any case against Mr. Eden, for whose removal you have now for the second time petitioned.

9. Mr. Eden's roobokarree, of the 20th February above referred to, of which you complain as being "much in the same spirit" with certain verbal statements, alleged to have been made by Mr. Eden in open court, has been examined by the Lieutenant Governor. His Honour sees nothing in this paper to support your complaint, the only tangible point of which is that Mr. Eden encourages a combination, which the ryots of certain pergunnahs in the Baraset district are said said to have entered into, not to contract to sow indigo to be sold to you on the terms offered by your agent. Considering the position of Mr. Eden at the time, and that this roobokaree was written in the execution of the very difficult task of mediating in an official capacity, but with no official authority, in the matter of a negotiation with which he had no concern (a position for which he was not responsible, and which had been brought about at the written request of your manager, made with your consent), it appears to his Honour that there is nothing in the roobokaree inconsistent with substantial as well as with apparent impartiality. Mr. Eden ordered the thannah mohurrir to see that the unwilling ryots did not persuade the willing ryots not to sow indigo; and he explained to all the ryots that they should go to the factory to settle their accounts, and to receive and pay their balances, which is exactly what you had asked him to do. He could not have gone further with propriety; and he could not have gone so far with propriety if he had not simultaneously explained that it was optional with the ryots to contract or not, and that a ryot having his own land is free to cultivate thereon whatever suits him best. The order to the mohurrir to attend with the ryots at the factory, and to see that they were allowed to go home safe again, was nothing more than providing for the fulfilment of your part of the engagement, to use no coercive measures on the occasion to force the ryots to contract again; and that order was called forth in consequence of certain fears expressed by some of the ryots when they agreed to do as Mr. Eden advised.

10. Whether the interference of a district magistrate in this affair between two discordant parties, neither of whom can be forced to do what it does not suit him to do, exercised with all that impartiality in form and substance without which any such interference would have been highly reprehensible, was a proceeding likely to promote your objects in your difference with the ryots, was a question for you to have considered before you instructed your agent to write his letter of the 4th February. Mr. Eden cannot be made responsible for the result.

11. The Lieutenant Governor sees no reason to doubt that in this, as in all other cases, Mr. Eden will be as ready to do what he can to check unlawful conspiracy, and resort to intimidation on the part of unwilling ryots, as he would be to check unlawful coercion on the part of a planter. Mr. Eden will now be instructed to avoid all interference between you and these ryots, though he will always be ready to explain to both parties, that it will be his duty to check either party who may step beyond his lawful rights.

12. The Lieutenant Governor is sorry that it is out of the power of Government or of its officers, to assist you in this affair. But it is manifest that the only legitimate course is to make it for the ryots' interests to consent to cultivate indigo for you, and to make them see that it is so. The government officers must leave both parties freely to make their own bargains, as may best suit their own interests, neither encouraging nor discouraging one sort of cultivation more than another.

13. A copy of this communication will be forwarded to Mr. Eden, for his information and guidance.

Copy forwarded to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division for his information, and for communication to Mr. Eden.

From E. Prestwich, Esq., to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated the 22d July 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th May, on the subject of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor's decision in the matter of my complaint against the Honourable A. Eden, magistrate of Baraset.

I have now to request that you will be so good as to furnish me with copies of all Mr. Eden's letters to the several authorities on the subject, for my information and guidance.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to E. Prestwich, Esq., No. 4812, dated Fort William, the 3rd August 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 22nd ultimo, and in reply to inform you that your complaint against Mr. Eden, the joint magistrate of Baraset, was sufficiently disposed of by my letter, No. 3066, dated the 13th May last; and that the Lieutenant Governor considers it unnecessary to furnish you with any further papers on the subject.

— No. 8. —

From the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 74 Ct.), dated Allipore, the 15th April 1859.

Sir,

I BEG to lay before Government the enclosed original correspondence* between the joint magistrate of Baraset and myself, and to request the favour of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor's informing me whether the spirit of my instructions as to the use to be made of the police in dealing with indigo disputes is approved of. My reasons for making this reference will be found in the concluding paragraph of my letter of this date to the joint magistrate.

2. As allusion is made by Mr. Eden to an order of mine which issued last year, and which is incorrectly termed an order to assist Mr. Larmour, I think it right to send all the correspondence in original for perusal if necessary. It will be seen that I had then as now to instruct Mr. Eden to amend an order to the police darogah, which I regarded as an improper one.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 132), dated the 8th March 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to state that, having received injustice at the hands of the joint magistrate of Baraset, I lay the matter before you.

I took an izarah of Charghat for six years, giving to the zemindar an advance of 4,000 rupees as paisgee, and an ikrar to the effect that I would measure and settle the villages, the zemindar giving me full power to do so.

On my commencing the measurement the ryots complained to Mr. Eden. He put a stop to my measuring, and called upon me to furnish him with law and regulation to show I had legal right to measure. I did so as per annexed kyfeut, on receipt of which he passed no order. I then addressed him an English letter, copy of which is attached. You will observe by his reply that I had no chance of getting my indigo lands cultivated or sown this season, unless I would forego the measurement of the villages, which I had every right to do.

I consider Mr. Eden's style and conduct arbitrary and unjust. He has closed the case without passing an order that I had no right to measure. I have been forced to break through my engagement with the zemindar or lose my indigo season, and after the patting on the back the ryots have had from the magistrate, they will not be disposed to act fairly towards me.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, (No. 48), dated the 29th January 1858.

Sir,

AGREEABLY to your order dated 16th instant, I had the honour to forward a kyfeut regarding my proposed measurement of Taruff Charghat held in izarah by this concern. I beg to bring to your notice that since you issued an order putting a stop to my measuring the villages, the ryots taking advantage of this order have put a stop to my indigo cultivation, and refuse to carry out their indigo engagements. Feeling certain that your intention was not to injure me in this respect, I now address you, with the hope that you will convey to your police instructions to protect my servants in carrying out their duties in superintending the indigo lands. Hitherto, we have never had any difference with the ryots of Charghat, and the present difficulty has arisen solely from my wish to fulfil my engagement with the zemindars. The ryots of this part of the country are only too ready to take advantage of an order which would appear to protect them in not fulfilling their indigo contracts.

From the Honourable A. Eden, Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for Bengal Indigo Company, dated the 1st February 1858.

Sir,

I do not think that you have any authority to measure lands: zemindars and landholders are authorised to do this by Regulation VII. of 1799, but I see nothing to authorise an under-farmer to measure. That regulation also requires that all abuse or unjust exercise of their powers is to be checked. I tell you fairly that I cannot support you in this measurement. I have made inquiries before coming to this decision from men experienced in the management of Mofussil estates, and have been assured by them that it is quite contrary to custom for an under-farmer to measure.

However, I should be very sorry if my decision was to lead to any loss in indigo to the concern. I am assured by the ryots that they will sow indigo as usual, or even more than usual, if you desist from the measurement. Your object and profession is to manufacture indigo, and if you take my advice you will desist from the measurement and come to an amicable arrangement with the ryots, in which I shall be happy to assist you. If this is done, you will be able to get a good crop of indigo and satisfy your ryots. I am quite aware what a troublesome set the Mussulman ryots are about there, but in this case I think they are in the right. Ex-judicially I will assist you as I have done Mr. Hampton in getting the ryots to fulfil their engagements, and this I will set about as soon as I hear from you that you don't intend to measure.

If you do measure there will be a breach of the peace, for which I shall of course, after the warning I have given, consider you responsible.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, (No. 59), dated the 3rd February 1858.

Sir,

I LOSE no time in replying to your letter of 1st instant, received this morning. I have no intention or wish to press the measurement of Dhee Charghat, if my doing so is illegal. It was one of the conditions of my kubooleut to the zemindar that I would measure and settle the "jumabundees." Your passing an order to the effect that I have no right to measure will clear me with the zemindar. I have no other difference with the ryots. The object of my letter was to beg of you not to allow your order to stop the measurement of the villages to be taken advantage of by the ryots to evade their indigo engagements, and if you will do me the favour to pass an order on your darogah to say I will not measure the villages, and that he is to protect me in my indigo engagement, I think this is all that is necessary. You may rest satisfied that in no instance will I ever do what will cause a breach of the peace. I have invariably appealed to the authorities where disputes have arisen throughout the Bengal Indigo Company's concerns, and with many thanks for your offer of assistance in the Charghat matter,—

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, (No. 33 Ct.), dated the 11th March 1858.

Sir,

I BEG to hand you for report copy of a letter No. 132, dated 8th instant, from Mr. Larmour, complaining of your interference with him in the exercise of his just rights as farmer of the Charghat lands.

2. I have seen your letter to him of the 1st, and am disposed to question the legality of your proceedings, the record of which you are requested to submit with your reply.

From the Honourable A. Eden, Officiating Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, (No. 133), dated the 17th March 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 33, of the 11th instant, forwarding copy of a letter No. 132, of the 8th March 1858, from Mr. Larmour to your address.

2. I am perfectly astonished, not only at the subject of Mr. Larmour's letter, but at the ungentlemanlike language he has presumed to apply to my proceedings.

3. The facts of the case are these. The putneedar of Charghat being unable to grind his ryots by increasing their rents, applied to Mr. Larmour, as a man experienced in the management of recusant ryots, to take an izar permitting him to measure with a view to increase the rents.

4. Mr. Larmour has produced no ikrar in my court to the effect that he was bound to measure; the kubcoleut merely stated that the putneedar would permit him to measure. This is a form meaning nothing, and invariably inserted but never acted on.

5. The matter was first brought to my notice by a rumour that the ryots were combining to resist Mr. Larmour in measuring their lands, and that they were much excited in consequence of his having announced his intention of doing so; the ryots then came to complain of oppression on the part of Mr. Larmour and his ameens, &c. I called upon Mr. Larmour for a kyfeut as to the law under which he was acting. He gave a kyfeut stating that he wanted to measure, but the ryots were resisting his right, but did not answer my question. Another kyfeut was therefore called for. He replied 1st, under Regulation VII., 1799, Section XV., paragraph 8, but this, in my opinion, applies only to zemindars, putneedars, and sudder farmers, not to an under-holder of the second degree like Mr. Larmour.

6. The decisions of the Dewany Adawlut distinctly rule that a zemindar cannot transfer his rights of sale to an izaradar, and I cannot find any ruling that he can transfer the rights of measuring. As regards Mr. Larmour's objection that the "Gazette" of the 1st December 1857 contains a provision for measurement by under-holders, I think the absurdity of a man quoting an unpassed Act as authorising him to do anything makes any further reply on this head unnecessary, but I may as well state that, even if it was passed into law, it only provides for zemindars instituting suits to measure in cases in which their ryots resist the right.

7. But even, for the sake of argument, assuming that the putneedar is able to transfer his rights of measurement to Mr. Larmour. I must observe that, by an injunction of the judge of Nuddea filed with the case, the zemindar of Charghat is is prevented from measuring Charghat on the grounds that it had already been completely measured, and that further measurement was illegal. This at once clenches the question; but even assuming also that there was no such decision, or that it has not the effect I attribute to it, I must protest against Mr. Larmour's appealing against my order, saying nothing of the language he has applied to me in making that appeal; first, if Mr. Larmour wished to appeal against my order he should have done so as directed by the regulations on stamped paper within one month to the sessions judge, and not to the Commissioners, to whom I respectfully submit no appeal lies in such matters. In the second place, the case was settled amicably at Mr. Larmour's own request, as shown in his letter of the 3d February. He says, "I have no intention or wish to press the measurement of Dhee Charghat, if by doing so is illegal. It was one of the conditions of my kuboolent" (which however it was not); "your passing an order to the effect, that I have no right to measure, will clear me with the zemindar." "If you will do me the favour to pass an order on your darogah to say, I will not measure the villages, and that he is to protect me in my indigo engagements, I think this is all that is necessary, and with many thanks for your offer of assistance, in the Charghat matter, I am, &c." Now, it is hard to believe that the same individual who wrote this letter, should write on my acting on this letter, that my style and conduct were arbitrary and unjust. I issued the order, you will see, dated the 5th of February, exactly in accordance with what Mr. Larmour proposes on the 3d February. He never objects; the ryots consent to sow their indigo, and take a note to him from me, in which I told him, that his principal ryots had been to me, and said that they did not wish to get out of the indigo engagements. They were willing to sow as in previous years, since he gave up the question of measurement. This he agreed to; they then took their advances. When he has got the ryots into the snare, and got them to take advances at my instigation, made on his promises, he turns round upon them and me, and makes the false and malicious statements that are contained in his letter to you. You will see by the statement of his mooktear, and the letter of instructions that he produces from his master, that Mr. Larmour was quite willing to make this settlement out of court; that he was furnished with a copy of my order two days after, although he now says I never gave one. It is impossible to believe that he can have been in perfect possession of his senses when he wrote two such very opposite letters, one thanking me for my offer of assistance, the other charging me with arbitrary and unjust conduct and style for rendering that very assistance; what he means by style I cannot say, unless he expected me to carry out his policy of ruining the ryots for the benefit of the planter. If, as he says, I had "patted the ryots on the back;" he knows very well that they would not have sowed one beegah of indigo. I, on the contrary, called them together and told them that it would only ruin them fighting; that they had better settle the matter amicably. They then agreed to sow on condition, the measurement was given up, and this both parties consented to, and there has been no disturbance. If Mr. Larmour had persisted in his measurement, he could have sown no indigo, and there would have been a most serious breach of the peace, which there will be now, if measurement is ordered.

8. If Mr. Larmour will specify how the ryots acted unfairly towards him, I will soon put the matter right, as they promised me to act fairly, and I feel sure they will do so; they refuse to go to Mr. Larmour's factory, as they say that they will be imprisoned by him for complaining to me, but if he treats them with fairness, they will do the same to him.

9. It is only by settling matters in this way, that the ryots of this district can be kept quiet. I would call your attention to the present position of the Baraset indigo concern as regards the ryots. Since I have settled all their disputes amicably, there is not a single complaint or case in court what was the case before.

10. I took particular pains before doing anything in this case, to discover if such a thing was known in this part of the world as an izaradar measuring. The answer from all European and native zemindars and ryots was, that it was quite unknown. Observe what Mr. Larmour's own mooktear says on the subject.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea division, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, (No. 58 Ct.), dated the 28 March 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 133, dated the 17th instant, with the native record of the Charchat case, which I now return.

2. I should have preferred that this letter had generally been in a more moderate tone, which I must point out that you are quite wrong in supposing that Mr. Larmour was out of order in laying his complaint before me. I do not find in the proceedings any judicial order of yours which admitted of being carried in appeal by Mr. Larmour before the sessions judge.

3. The objections of the ryots to you, in the first instance, were directed against the russee of the fifty-two guj with which Mr. Larmour's ameens were about to measure the village. They represented that the proper length of the russee was fifty-five guj, and that this had been ruled in the civil court so long ago as 1812. The prayer of the petition is not to stop the measurement, but to prevent the oppressive levy of atwals, the selection of the best lands for indigo, and any infringement of the declaratory decision of the judge in 1812. You had not, in my opinion, any right to order the darogah to stop the measurement, even as a temporary step, except under the apprehension of a most serious affray impending. There is nothing to warrant such an apprehension in the record, but your demi-official note to Mr. Larmour submitted by him, shows that you entertained it, and on your expressing your fears, Mr. Larmour considerably, as I think, withdrew his ameens in deference to your opinion. But as your order seemed to put him in the wrong in attempting to measure, he prayed for another order from you of a counteracting tendency; and this you gave him on the 3d instant.

4. Believing himself, however, to be in the right as to his power to measure the village under the terms of his lease, Mr. Larmour places the case before me, and complains of having been dealt with arbitrarily and unjustly. I do not find anything in his letter which justifies your applying to it the term of ungentlemanlike language. He thought that his rights as durputneedar of the village had been unnecessarily interfered with by the executive.

5. On the general question as to whether an under-tenant has the right, or can be vested with the right, of measuring the lands of his tenure, I think you are wrong. I am not aware of any authoritative ruling on the point, nor can I remember a case in which the right has been contested. Such measurements certainly are made, and the struggle between talookdar and ryots generally commences with the proceedings founded by the former in such measurement.

6. The construction No. 461 does not seem to me to bear on the question of a zemindar's power to delegate to his tenant his own undoubted right to measure. This right vests in the tenant by virtue of his lease of the ordinary terms equally with the right to distrain and sue summarily, but a condition may be entered in the lease debarring him from exercising the right to measure. It is, however, for the civil court to decide on all questions of this kind raised between the parties concerned.

7. I give you credit for the pains which you mention your having taken to settle amicably disputes between indigo factories and the cultivators; but in all such cases it is necessary to examine well the origin of the dispute, and to take care that neither party obtains police support in encroaching on the just rights of the other.

From the Honourable A. Eden, Officiating Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Nuddea Division, (No. 203), dated the 6th April 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 58 Ct., of the 28th ultimo, forwarding the Charchat case; I much regret that you consider the tone of my letter immoderate, but it was written under what I must still term great provocation.

2. An indigo planter, because I endeavour to check the oppression of his subordinates, after having agreed to my proposal for an amicable settlement, and thanked me for my offers of assistance, writes to complain to you of my conduct as arbitrary and unjust, and states what, however, is distinctly untrue, that I had passed no order in the case, although, as I before stated, he had been furnished with a copy of my order to which he made no remonstrance for nearly a month, and then without saying anything to me, or presenting any petition of appeal in the usual way, writes a letter containing the strongest charge that can be made against a judicial officer, viz. injustice. I think this furnishes me with ample cause of complaint.

3. If Mr. Larmour disapproved of my proposal, why did he not object to me before I passed the order; or why did he not in any way remonstrate with me with a view to my modifying the order? Why did he write to me approving of, and consenting to, my proposition, and thanking me for my offer of assistance? at his request I persuaded the ryots to settle the quarrel and sow indigo, and on my representations they agreed to sow indigo and remain on amicable terms with the concern. When he has got them under his thumb he turns round and wants to renounce his share in the agreement.

4. You state in the third paragraph, that the ryots' objections were not against the actual measurement, but against the length of the measuring rope. I am afraid that the petition has not been clearly laid before you, for I find in three places that there is a distinct statement that the ryots deny Mr. Larmour's right to measure, and object to his measurement; but independently of this written petition, I must inform you that the ryots came to me in a body, and followed me into the Mofussil, from place to place, and their continual petition to me was that the measurement might be prevented.

5. You also inform me that I had "no right to stop the measurement, even as a temporary measure, except under the apprehension of a most serious affray impending." You continue to say that "there is nothing to warrant such an apprehension in the record, although my demi-official note to Mr. Larmour, submitted by him, shows that I entertained it." To this I must reply that I was convinced, and am now fully convinced, that if measurement is persisted in there will be one of the most serious affrays that ever took place in Bengal. This, I think, Mr. Larmour will himself admit. Charghat contains several thousand Mussulman* inhabitants, all banded together to prevent any interference with their rights, real or supposed. They are nearly all rich men, and the question of measurement is one in which they are particularly sore, and without the assistance of the police, Mr. Larmour could not measure. The police must be guided by the decision of the civil court; the civil court has distinctly ruled that no jumma bundee or measurement can be made of Charghat without the orders of the court, and until this decision is overruled, I apprehend that there is no option as to abiding by it. If I was to wait until a formal complaint of likelihood of a breach of the peace was made, the district would be soon thoroughly disorganized. That the breach of the peace was impending between Mr. Larmour and his ryots on the question of measurement was known to me for months before any actual collision took place, and it was the talk of the whole district, and his right was frequently discussed.

* Ferazees.

1812.

6. As you say there is no authoritative ruling on the point of the general question of measurement, when this is the case, we can only decide by looking at the custom which obtains in a district; in this district it is not the custom for durputneedars to measure. If the putneedar thinks he has a right to measure (which by the judge's decision he has not in Charghat), why did he give Mr. Larmour a lease of these lands; for the mere purpose of getting them measured? Knowing Mr. Larmour to be an influential man, he thought his influence over the ryots would be such that he could do this without the question being raised. Mr. Larmour wanted the lease for a few years, and the only way he could get it was by consenting to try and measure, and this is the whole cause of the present dispute. What advantage is it to Mr. Larmour to increase the rents? he is only a holder for a short time. He could not get the lease without undertaking to measure, and thus entered into the views of the putneedar.

7. I cannot agree that the right of distraint and suing for rents is on precisely the same footing as the right to measure, for as you say, a prohibitory clause may be entered in a lease as regards measurement; lest this could not be done as regards distraints and summary suits, the same rule will not therefore, I think, apply to them.

8. But the whole argument of your letter, and of Mr. Larmour's complaint, appear to be founded on the assumption that I issued prohibitory orders on Mr. Larmour as regards measurement, but this is not the case. No such order was issued. My order merely states that Mr. Larmour having voluntarily given up the question of measurement, the darogah is to inform the ryots of this, and tell them to fulfil all their engagements for indigo.

9. What I objected to, and what I confidently expected you to obtain me redress for, was the terms Mr. Larmour had seen fit to apply to me—"arbitrary and unjust." I had no other way of obtaining redress than through you, and I again respectfully submit to you that, even throwing aside the whole facts of the case, and supposing for the sake of mere argument that I had given the order which it is wrongly assumed that I did give, and that this order would have been illegal, am I to be accused of injustice and arbitrary conduct because I gave a decision contrary to the interests of a European? The most that could be said would be that I had taken a mistaken view of the law. What are the ryots to me, or what is Mr. Larmour to me, that I should act unjustly? I never saw either one or the other of them till this case commenced. It is always the case here. If you decide in favour of a planter, the ryots go down to Calcutta, as they frequently have down here, and accuse you of being prejudiced in favour of the European; if you decide in favour of the ryot, the European accuses you of having "patted his ryots on the back," and instigated them to resist him; if one was to act up to the letter of the law, there would not be one beegah of indigo in Lower Bengal. This, I presume, even Mr. Larmour will admit.

10. I may add that I have daily complaints of the oppression of Mr. Larmour, and receipts have been produced in my court granted by him for illegal ababs. I have requested Mr. Mackenzie to inquire into the charges, as they are near his subdivision. I trust you will excuse my replying to your orders in the case. I have no objection to a fair appeal against any of my orders, but I think no magistrate should submit to have the epithet of "unjust" applied to his proceedings every time he decides a case against a European without remonstrance.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset (No. 59), dated 12 April 1858.

Sir,

In reply to your letter, No. 203, dated the 6th instant, I will not trouble you to send again the native record of the Charghat case, but I am confident that you will find the prayer of the ryots' petition correctly translated in the third paragraph of my letter. The text very likely objects to any measurement, but it was not the object of the petition that you had to deal with. The court's order too of 1812 will not bear the meaning which you have put on it, viz., that of a permanent interdict of all measurement of Charghat.

2. A district magistrate has a difficult part to play, do doubt, in all cases of dispute such as the present one. If a landholder has a right to measure or to send for a tenant, or to distrain, he has an equal right to the protection of the police in doing so, and if he be dissuaded from exercising his right by apprehension of a disturbance he has certainly grounds to complain of the inefficiency of the police authorities.

3. On the other hand, it is too well known that landholders will often exceed the powers which the law gives them, and the ryots should then be able to reckon on the assistance of the police in opposing all illegal demands. It is easy to say that all a magistrate has to do in either case is to prevent a breach of the peace, but the result of the dispute must depend immensely on the discretion with which he acts. If he espouses the wrong side, he must do injustice, and is not certain of succeeding in his object; if he fortunately espouses the right one, he, in nine cases out of ten, terminates the quarrel.

4. You are the best judge, of course, of the grounds on which you acted in this case. The opinion which I conveyed to you, and to which I must adhere, was formed only on the contents of the record and correspondence which were before me.

5. I do not lay the stress on the language of Mr. Larmour's complaint which you appear to do. Every order appealed from is considered imposed by the appellant, and is described as such in ordinary appeal petitions. Your supposition that this expression was used because you have in this case decided against an European is altogether unwarranted.

6. Should there still be serious apprehensions of a disturbance at Charghat, you should send out a portion of your police corps to be under the darogah's and Mr. Mackenzie's orders.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset (No. 81), dated 26 April 1858.

Sir,

ANNEXED is copy of my reply to another letter of strong remonstrance against your proceedings in the Charghat case, which has been made to me by Mr. Larmour. Referring to your remarks on this case in your quarterly report, I request that you will send me copy of Mr. Mackenzie's letter. I cannot, at this distance, say whether your call on Mr. Larmour for a further kyfeut was necessary. In all cases of such disputes, a clear statement of his object from the landholder is certainly the first requisite, but Mr. Larmour, I thought, had furnished you with one some time back. Unless you have good reasons for doubting the correctness of Mr. Mackenzie's conclusions, you should, I think, accept them and be guided accordingly.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, dated 23 April 1858.

Sir,

I REGRET being again obliged to address you on the subject of the prejudiced proceedings of the joint magistrate of Baraset.

On my appealing to you regarding the illegal orders passed previous to 8th March, the ryots of Charghat presented a petition complaining of oppression on my part towards them. An order was passed on the assistant magistrate of Kallarooah to investigate and report. A few days after this order had been issued, two of the ryots petitioned that the assistant of Kallarooah should not investigate, and an order immediately passed for the inquiry to be conducted by the native deputy magistrate of Baraset. Before this last order could reach the assistant magistrate of Kallarooah, he had been over the villages of Charghat, held his investigation and sent in his report now a fortnight since, and up to date no order has been passed: but this morning I received a perwannah from the Baraset Court, calling upon me for a kyfeut on a petition presented by the ryots on 20th instant, charging me with the intention of committing oppression towards them.

It is quite evident from this that the joint magistrate intends to persist in his policy of injustice towards me, and by his prejudiced conduct is giving the ryots every possible encouragement not to sow their indigo lands this year; and as the season is so far advanced, I now appeal to you in the hope of immediate redress, and that my case may be transferred to an officer who will give me justice.

My measurement of the villages was illegally put a stop to in the first instance, and when I appealed to the magistrate not to encourage the ryots in breaking through their indigo engagements, I received a bullying and offensive letter in reply, and am compelled to give a promise not to measure in order to get my indigo sown. The joint magistrate, not satisfied with injuring me in one respect, now shows his determination to ruin my indigo season if possible, and a reference to his proceedings since my appeal to you on 8th March will satisfy you, I do not complain without just cause; and unless immediate protection is afforded me, the indigo season will be passed.

Of the Turuff Charghat villages, three of them lie in Nuddea zillah, the ryots of which have no difference with me, nor have they ever complained of any intention on my part to oppress them in any way.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company (No. 42), dated 26 April 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 23d instant, and received late last evening, complaining of further proceedings on the part of the joint magistrate of Baraset, which you fear may have the effect of preventing the Charghat ryots from sowing their indigo lands.

2. Mr. Eden has informed me in his Quarterly Report, dated 21st instant, of the purport of Mr. Mackenzie's letter, to which, however, objections, he says, had been raised by some of the ryots. He states that he is now confining himself to preventing any breach of the peace. You refer to his order for calling on you for a kyfeut as having been passed on a petition presented by the ryots on the 20th, the date previous to his report. Such an order, however, need not necessarily be attended by the consequences which you appear to apprehend.

3. Mr. Eden further mentions that he understood your mooktear, on putting forward your first complaint, as stating that you wanted to induce the Charghat ryots to take advances, whereas from Mr. Mackenzie's letter it would seem that advances have already been made. It is probable, I think, that your local managers, or your Baraset mooktear, may have been misrepresenting to you the real state of the case. If you have furnished the kyfeut called for, a decisive order of some kind will, I should hope, have been passed by the joint magistrate.

From the Honourable A. Eden, Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 286), dated 29 April 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 81, dated 26th instant, with reference to further charges made by Mr. Larmour against my proceedings in the Charghat case. Not having been furnished with a copy of Mr. Larmour's petition, I cannot answer it so fully as I should otherwise have done. As far as I can gather from your reply, Mr. Larmour takes an objection to my having called upon him for a kyfeut on a petition having been presented to me by the Charghat ryots complaining of his oppression. To prove to you that I have acted legally, and merely with a view to keep the peace throughout, I beg to send you the papers of the case.

2. You will perceive that a number of ryots, as representatives of nearly the whole of the Charghat ryots, complained against Mr. Larmour. The deputy magistrate not having yet taken charge, I requested Mr. Mackenzie to hold an investigation. Before he went there the ryots protested against Mr. Mackenzie's being deputed, as they thought his intimacy with Mr. Larmour would be prejudicial to their interests. Under ordinary circumstances I should have taken no notice of this petition, but the place being out of Mr. Mackenzie's subdivision, and the deputy magistrate having just arrived, I thought it better to depute him, as, being new to the district, neither party would charge him with prejudice. I directed Mr. Mackenzie not to go to the spot, as the deputy magistrate was going; in the meantime he went and held a sort of inquiry, against which the ryots protest, and I think with some reason, for throwing aside the charges of having beaten the ryots, &c., his proceedings are very one-sided.

3. He went accompanied by Mr. Raysen, Mr. Larmour's assistant, and has merely recorded the evidence of a few men, principally Hindoos, who declare that they never heard of any collecting illegal cesses or other oppression. These men are a few ryots, who to save themselves have joined Mr. Larmour; and it is in their houses that the latteals of Mr. Larmour are said to remain. Now that their statement is partially true, is satisfactorily proved by the fact that receipts for such cesses have been produced in my court; for such proceedings however the ryots can obtain redress in the collector's court. Mr. Mackenzie has not taken the deposition of a single man amongst the petitioners, or the evidence of any of the ryots, with the exception of those few who are on the side of the factory. On the strength of such evidence Mr. Mackenzie sums up by saying to plant indigo is Mr. Larmour's right, as he has given advances. Mr. Mackenzie totally mistakes the rights of the case; if Mr. Larmour has given advances, he has no right to sow the indigo; it is for the ryots to sow, he cannot force them; "neither can he sow their lands by means of his own servants, nor has he a right to demand the assistance of the police for the purpose of compelling the ryots to fulfil his contract" (Construction No. 385). "Mr. Larmour's only remedy is in the civil court; the magistrate cannot interfere" (vide Construction No. 661).

4. Mr. Mackenzie proceeds to recommend that all the ryots who signed the petition should be fined 20 rupees each. He appears entirely to forget both the bad policy and the gross illegality of such a proceeding.

5. Being always anxious to assist the planters in every way in my power, and being unable to do so judicially, it has always been my custom to act in such cases rather as a referee or arbitrator between the parties than as a judicial officer, with what success I before pointed out to you; and with reference to this subject, I beg to refer you to a correspondence which took place between you and Mr. Mangles, in which you justly observe "that, however inadequate the remedies which existing laws offer to indigo planters for breach of contract on the part of ryots under advance, the executive is bound to punish any attempt on the part of the former to seek redress more." Disputes have been going on in the Baraset indigo concerns for years, but from my having interfered extra-judicially and acted as an arbitrator on first coming here, these disputes are now almost unknown between the planters and ryots. It was my intention to settle Mr. Larmour's disputes in the same way; but he petitioned against my proceedings after agreeing to them; and threw the whole question again into confusion.

6. Mr. Larmour appears to be under the impression that I have given no orders in the case. On the receipt of the last petition from the ryots, I called upon him as usual for an explanation, i.e., for his version of the story. It is true that I might have ordered an inquiry by the police, but apprehending that this might further complicate the question, and encourage further complaints on the part of the ryots, I merely sent for a kyfeut. To this proceeding Mr. Larmour objects; it is perfectly impossible to please him. Other planters have requested me, as a particular favour, always to send to them copy of any petitions against them, and call upon them for an explanation; because I follow the same friendly course towards Mr. Larmour, he complains to you of my having induced the ryots not to sow. In reply to that kyfeut he says that the land is his chattah land, that is land for which the ryots have taken advances; but as I said before, construction 385 entirely disposes of the question of his right to sow these lands by means of his own servants. Even, therefore, supposing his explanation to be correct I cannot help him; on the receipt of his kyfeut I issued an order which I submit is the only legal one I could give, viz., that the police should take care that there was no breach of the peace; again, in consequence of his sowing shower, I have considered it necessary this day to order that the darogah shall personally remain on the spot and prevent a breach of the peace.

7. I beg to call your most particular attention to the statement I took from Mr. Larmour's mooktear, as to the instructions he had received, and as to his master's wishes. This will prove to you that I have done everything for Mr. Larmour's interest that I legally could do. I was compelled to adopt the course of questioning the mooktear, as Mr. Larmour has not condescended to communicate with me in any way. By the mooktear's statement it will be shown that I have invariably told the ryots to sow indigo, and the mooktear acknowledges that I have given every order that could be given in favour of his client.

8. The mooktear states that it is his master's present wish that I should reissue the order I gave in February, yet it was against this order that Mr. Larmour appealed in such unmeasured terms. The mooktear also wishes that I should act as referee; the ryots wish this also: it is desirable for both parties that the disputes should be settled, and therefore I am willing to overlook Mr. Larmour's conduct on the previous occasion of my endeavouring to settle his quarrel, and I will act as referee if he will give a written agreement to abide by my decision. If he cannot consent to this, it would be better to refer it to any other planter or planters that both sides may agree to.

9. The ryots are willing to sow, but those who have not taken advances don't wish to do so, but are willing to sow without advances. I have taken the statement of the only Charghat ryots I could find in court this morning to enable you to judge of the real cause of dispute. My experience of disputes between planters and ryots satisfies me that, in nine cases out of ten, it is not the question of ryots taking advances and not fulfilling their contracts, but the ryots refusing to bind themselves to the factory by taking advances at all, that causes the greater portion of these disputes. You will see by the statement of Aristullah that he and the other petitioners have not taken advances and won't take advances. They are willing, in consideration of Mr. Larmour being their izaradar, to sow ten cottahs for every plough they possess with indigo, and to give Mr. Larmour the indigo without any payment whatever, anything rather than take an advance which would bind them in after years to the factory; he says he has not yet been paid for last year's indigo, and the gomastah refuses to pay him unless he takes advances for indigo. When advances are not given four bundles of indigo are taken for the rupee; each beegah produces on an average twenty-four bundles; the ryot, therefore, supposing him to be paid honestly without any deductions (which however seldom happens), would get six rupees per beegah; if he sowed the same land with tobacco he would gain, according to this year's price, sixty-two per beegah, and tobacco cannot be grown on the land which has already given a crop of indigo, yet Mr. Mackenzie thinks they may as well sow indigo, as the land will be otherwise fallow till October. After perusing these papers, I submit to you that if I have shown favour to either party, it has been to Mr. Larmour. If Mr. Larmour will come here, the ryots will all come too, and I can effect a settlement of the disputes in three days.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 241), dated the 30th April 1858.

Sir,

In reply to your letter of 26th instant, I have the honour to state that you have received an impression regarding the Charghat matter, which requires a few remarks for your information.

The ryots of Charghat villages have held advances and sown indigo last season, and ever since I have had charge of this concern, without any demur. The present difference has been caused by the magistrate stopping my measurement of the villages, and the ryots take advantage of that order, and have been backed up in refusing to fulfil their indigo engagements.

The joint magistrate may state to you that it is not his intention to ruin my indigo season; the effect of his orders is undoubtedly to do so; and under the cloak of preventing a breach of the peace, my servants are prevented from going near the villages situated within Baraset. The joint magistrate's proceedings are an exact repetition of what I suffered at the hands of Moulvee Abdool Luteef, who used the law to encourage and protect the ryots in not sowing indigo, and my sole offence has been to keep my promise with the zemindar (so as to ensure me a renewal of the Pymalmah), by measuring the villages.

The joint magistrate sends out his assistant to see if I intend any oppression towards the ryots; he gets his report, and instead of giving the ryots a reprimand, he takes a similar petition from them in rokcush, and calls upon me for a kyfeut; any better proof of prejudiced feelings towards me can hardly be wanting, when it is known ryots only require a wink from a magistrate to ruin the planter.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset (No. 95), dated the 6th May 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 286, dated the 29th ultimo, which I have shown to Mr. Larmour, who had come in here to see me on the subject of the Charghat case. I have also gone through the record of your proceedings, which accompanied your letter, and have had his mooktear's statement read out to Mr. Larmour.

2. You are quite right, as Mr. Larmour fully admits, as regards the state of the law, and he declares that he has never from the commencement thought of using compulsory measures, with a view either to making ryots under obligations fulfil them, or to sowing their lands by means of his own people. He disclaims any employment of lateals by his assistant, Mr. Raysen, and merely protests against the police interference, which has had for one of its consequences the encouragement of his ryots to pursue the course which they are now pursuing, for the first time, he says, for a series of years.

3. The question is a serious one for Mr. Larmour, whose letter of to-day, embodying an extract from Mr. Raysen's last report to him, I now enclose in original. If the darogah has notified to the ryots in the terms represented by Mr. Raysen, you should immediately, on receipt of this, rectify his notification, which was an improper one. He is not stationed at Charghat to protect the ryots any more than he is there to protect the farmer. The ryots should be told authoritatively that they should fulfil their obligations, whatever they may be, and that those who fail to do so will take the consequences.

4. Mr. Larmour assures me that when he was himself in Charghat, in March, purtalling the measurement, there was not an objection or complaint raised. I am bound to say that your order to the police to stop that measurement was one which was in every way likely to foster discontent, and it may not be so easy now to allay it. You incur responsibility if you do not exert yourself to dispel the impression under which the ryots are represented to labour, viz., that they have your support in refusing to sow. I request that you will send me a copy of the order which you may issue to the darogah on receipt of this, and as every day is of importance you will be so good as to see that it is issued without an hour's delay.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Co. (No. 55), dated the 8th May 1858.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter of the 6th instant, I beg to annex, for your information, extract paragraphs 2 and 3 from my instructions of the same date to the joint magistrate of Baraset, who, as I learn to day demi-officially, will himself proceed to Charghat on Monday next. I request that you will be good enough to go there and meet him, showing him, as you have already assured me was the case, that an ameen and two khulasees are the only factory servants of yours in the village.

From Honourable A. Eden, Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 319), dated the 6th April 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 80,* dated 31st ultimo, and to inform you that I immediately forwarded a copy to the deputy magistrate of Metterhaut, requesting him to carry out your instructions.

2. The intention and effect of my order was not in any way to interfere with any land upon which Mr. Larmour had any claim. Some ryots applied to me for protection from Mr. Larmour, who they said was going to plough up their lands and sow them with indigo. Complaints of the same sort had been made to me by a number of the ryots on various dates, commencing from November last; they denied having made over their lands, directly or indirectly, to Mr. Larmour, except in so far as they were compelled to do so by me last year, when I went out by your order to assist Mr. Larmour. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that I am bound, as magistrate, to grant the ryots the protection they demand. But in giving this protection, I was careful not to interfere with any right that Mr. Larmour might possess. I therefore inserted a condition that the protection was only to be given to those ryots whose lands were undoubtedly their own; and I submit that where their lands are undoubtedly their own, they have a right to demand protection from the authorities in the event of any party endeavouring to forcibly dispossess them. In cases where there is a doubt about the lands being theirs, or where another party claims them as having been made over to him for indigo cultivation, and the ryots deny that they have made them over, either permanently or temporarily, the dispute can only be settled by an inquiry under Act IV. 1840 (vide Constructions 385, 662, 651). But I never understood before that Mr. Larmour did claim a right to sow any of these lands. No pottahs or other engagements whatever have been filed in my court.

3. With reference to the explanation called for in your 2d paragraph, I would observe that, in my opinion, there is a very great difference between declining as magistrate to enforce a civil contract, and interfering as magistrate to protect property; the former is expressly forbidden in the regulations and constructions, and the latter enjoined.

4. With reference to your remark regarding the allegation of Mr. Prestwich and others, that I have imprudently allowed my subordinates to gather that I am opposed to the existing system of indigo cultivation, I would respectfully submit that I cannot be fairly called upon to answer such vague assertions. If Mr. Prestwich will make a specific statement of any conversation that I have had with any of my subordinates, of which he thinks he has a right to complain, I shall be happy to explain anything that has passed. It seems to me, however, extraordinary that, if Mr. Prestwich considers me prejudiced, and believes that I have influenced my subordinates to act contrary to the law, he should have applied so frequently lately for my interference, and have asked me to depute one of my subordinates to adjust his dispute with his ryots.

5. It is not very long ago since Mr. Warner expressed gratification at the deputation of this very deputy magistrate to Metterhaut, as he professed to consider that it would be beneficial to the interests of the concern. My subordinates have possibly observed that I am willing, to the best of my ability and judgment, to afford even justice to all men, irrespective of class, calling, or creed, but I cannot consider this a matter for reproach; my views of the indigo system, moreover, are on record in my letter, No. 500, dated the 19th June 1858, to your address. I see no reason to alter or modify anything that I wrote there.

6. In the 20th paragraph of that letter I pointed out what, in my opinion, were grave objections to merely giving an order to the darogah to keep the peace in indigo disputes. The police invariably construe such order into an instruction to assist the factory at the expense of the ryots, as the peace can be more easily kept by keeping down the ryots than by keeping the planter from aggressing on the ryot's land. Now I cannot believe that it is the duty of a magistrate to save himself trouble and annoyance by keeping the peace, when this can only be done by sacrificing the rights of the weaker party; the party, in fact, who have not the same powers and privileges of obtaining a private hearing for their complaints against the local authorities that is accorded to their opponents.

7. Again, I do not think that it is right to throw the whole responsibility upon my subordinates. I should not expect them to serve zealously if they found that I shirked responsibility where influential parties were concerned, and threw it all upon their shoulders. Giving an order to keep the peace is throwing very great responsibility upon a subordinate officer. He may either keep it by allowing the planter planter forcibly to sow the lands of the ryots (as in the Hobrah case last year), or he may keep it, by preventing the planter's servants and ploughs coming into the village. It is only by one of these means that he can do what he is ordered to do, and it is placing too much responsibility in the darogah's hands to leave it to him to determine which course he will adopt. The order which I gave, and to which you object, was, I think, clear and conclusive, and strictly according to law. I have, however, as in duty bound, modified it in accordance with your views.

P. S.—Since writing the above, I have received the deputy magistrate's diary, in which, speaking of these very villages, he says, as follows :—

“Camped at Ghosepore, held office, and visited the villages, as in column 2d; inquired into the particulars of indigo cultivation, on which it appeared that most part of the lands were sown with indigo seed.” This statement certainly does not agree with Mr. Larmour's statement, that he has been unable to sow his lands.

N. B.—Copy of the vernacular petition is herewith returned.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset (No. 90 Ct.), dated the 15th April 1859.

Sir,

In reply to your letter, No. 319, dated the 6th instant, I beg to point out that your order to the darogah implied, in the first place, an inquiry on his part as to what lands were, to use your own expression, undoubtedly the ryot's own. The mode in which he was to act was to depend entirely on the result of this inquiry. This is surely throwing on the police darogahs the whole responsibility of action, a course which you rightly look on as very reprehensible.

2. You say that it is enjoined on you, as magistrate, to protect property, whereas you are strictly forbidden to enforce a civil contract. In this you are quite correct, but you should give the same answer to both parties. The planter complains to you that certain ryots, under advances, have refused to sow lands for which the advances were made, and will probably oppose the servants whom he may send to see the lands sown; you remind him that the ryots' agreement is a civil contract, beyond your interference. The ryot complains that the planter is about to cause lands to be sown which he has not given up to the factory; you order the darogah to inquire whether the lands are undoubtedly the ryot's own, and, if so, to protect him from being obliged to sow by the planter. In this you are, in my opinion, inconsistent.

3. As you object to the order which I pointed out as the proper one for a petition like that from the Chargat ryots (your only grounds of objection, however, being that the police invariably misconstrue such an order), and maintain that your own order was clear, conclusive, and strictly according to law, I have submitted this correspondence for the consideration and orders of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

From J. H. Young, Esq., the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 82 Ct.), dated Allipore, 20th April 1859.

Sir,

In continuation of my letter, No. 74 Ct., dated 15th instant, relative to certain points connected with the disputes between Mr. Larmour and his ryots, I beg to forward, for the information of Government, copy of a letter from the joint magistrate of Baraset, No. 349, of the 18th idem, bearing on the same subject.

From the Joint Magistrate of Baraset to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 349), dated Camp Moneerampore, 18th April 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 90, dated 15th instant, and as you have forwarded the correspondence to Government, I should feel obliged by your permitting me this opportunity of explaining what you consider an inconsistency.

2. You consider that by directing the police to protect the ryots in the lands that are undoubtedly their own, I throw the responsibility on the darogah of determining what lands are the ryot's own. But I would submit that this is not in effect the case, the lands which are "undoubtedly" the ryot's own, would be such lands as were admitted by all parties to be the ryot's; and that where the planter claimed the lands as having been made over to him, the very fact of his claim would throw a doubt on the ryot's possession, which the darogah would report, and the dispute would then be decided under Act IV. of 1840. The mere fact of an assertion of a claim to the land by the planter would exclude it from the category of lands which were undoubtedly the ryot's own; and thus interpreting the order in the sense in which it was intended, and in the only fair way which it appears to me it could be interpreted, no responsibility was thrown upon the darogah. It must be borne in mind, that I at that time in no way understood that Mr. Larmour claimed the lands as his own, neither does it appear from anything that has been before me yet that he even does so now.

3. In reply to your 2d para. I would remark, with every respect for your opinion, that I can see no inconsistency in my refusing to protect the planter's servants, when they go "to see" the lands of a ryot (stated to have taken advances) sown with indigo against the ryot's will, and in protecting a ryot whose claim to the land is undoubted when threatened with having his lands forcibly sown by the planter.

4. In the first place, supposing the ryot has entered into an engagement voluntarily to sow indigo, which I think Mr. Larmour will admit is rarely the case, this engagement gives the planter no right whatever to sow the lands through his own servants, in the event of the ryot's refusing to fulfil his agreement. The ryot agrees that he will sow so many beegahs with indigo, not that the planter shall sow on his lands; the planter therefore has no right to send his servants "to see" that unwilling ryots sow, for this can only mean to force them to sow; and I think that I should, in the face of construction 385, not be justified in affording the planter assistance under such circumstances, for this would be to assert that the planter had certain rights which the Regulations and the rulings of the Upper Courts expressly declare that he has not; on the other hand, in directing the police to protect the ryots from the forcible dispossession of "lands which were undoubtedly their own," and to which no one laid claim, I should merely be affording them that protection which they have an undoubted right to demand and expect, and which rights are in no way dependent upon a civil contract.

5. It is with no wish to contest your orders that I have replied to your letter, but the question is one of vast importance to the people of this country, and I therefore trust that you will excuse my requesting you to forward this letter to Government in continuation of the previous correspondence.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 3502), dated Fort William, the 2d June 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to your office letters, Nos. 74 and 82, dated the 15th and 20th April last, submitting correspondence relative to a difference of opinion between the joint magistrate of Baraset and yourself regarding the propriety of certain instructions issued by Mr. Eden to one of his darogahs as to the way in which he should deal with certain indigo disputes between Mr. Larmour and the ryots of the Charchat Mehal, I am directed to request that you will forward for the Lieutenant Governor's perusal your letter dated the 31st March last, to which Mr. Eden's of the 6th April is a reply, and any other papers on which your said letter was grounded.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 116 Ct.), Fort William, dated Allipore, the 6th June 1859.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 3502, dated 2d instant, I beg to enclose in original my letter to the joint magistrate of Baraset, dated 31st March last, together with that from Mr. Larmour, with enclosures, on which my instructions were grounded.

2. It is only this moment that I have seen Mr. Eden's letter, dated 18th April, which was received in the office after my departure on leave, and which was forwarded to Government by Mr. Young on the 20th idem.

3. Notwithstanding the explanations in Mr. Eden's 2d para., I maintain that the order which I objected to left the course to be pursued by the police darogah contingent on the result of a previous inquiry, viz., was the land, to use Mr. Eden's own translations of his Bengallee expression, "undoubtedly the ryot's own."

4. But this translation gives an incorrect idea of the real point at issue between the planter (in this, as in most cases, landlord also) and the ryot, and of this Mr. Eden seems to be aware from the concluding sentence of his 2d para. Mr. Larmour had not disputed the fact of the lands being the ryot's own, but in performance of his part of the contract he had at the proper season sent his people with indigo seed to get the ryot to perform his part of it. This is the usual practice all over the country, though Mr. Eden seems to think that the planter's people have no right to be on the ground at all. The indigo crop, as Mr. Eden knows, is under the supervision of the factory from the time the seed is put into the ground, and is constantly visited by the planter and his servants till the season arrives for cutting it.

5. There is no doubt that Mr. Eden would not be justified in assisting a planter to sow against the ryot's will, unless indeed his written contract with the latter reserved to the former a right to sow should the other fail to do so. This condition is rarely if ever introduced into contracts within this division, though the right in question is very often asserted by planters. In my report, No. 94, dated 19th August 1856, I pointed out that in order to put an end to the serious disputes which prevail at sowing and cutting seasons, it might be expedient to legalise this right and to make the planter responsible for its exercise.

6. While making the above remarks on Mr. Eden's second letter, I consider that the latter bears rather on another part of an important and much-vexed question than on the single point which lies within my jurisdiction. If the joint magistrate misapplies the provisions of Act IV. of 1840, it will be for the session judge to correct him; the same if he should err in judgment when exercising his powers to punish. I have only to see that the police have not an unfair duty thrust upon them, but that they are used to prevent, if they can, actual disturbance of the peace, and if they cannot prevent, to arrest and bring to justice those who disturb it.

From A. Grote, Esq. to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset (No. 80 Ct.), dated Allipore, the 31st March 1859.

Sir,

MR. LARMOUR has handed me copies of the correspondence noted in the margin, with a letter, of which I append copy, and the enclosed unattested copy of a petition presented to you, bearing your order without date, referring the petition to the deputy magistrate of Metterhaut.

2. I cannot approve of such an order being given to a police darogah as that which you have here directed; and I cannot reconcile that particular passage of it, which I have underlined with pencil, with the non-interference principle which you profess in the concluding para. of your letter to Mr. Larmour. On this point I must request explanations.

3. I think it very probable that the effect of the order to the Charchat darogah has been, as Mr. Larmour represents, more especially if, as is alleged by Mr. Prestwich and others, you have imprudently allowed your subordinates to gather that you are opposed to the existing system of indigo planting; I request therefore that the deputy magistrate may be instructed to make it known through the same darogah that it was not the intention of your first order that police protection should be given to such ryots as had entered into engagements with the factory and are now on any pretext holding back from their performance.

4. I cannot help expressing my disappointment to find you again falling into a mistake which I had to correct last year. The proper order on such a petition as that of the Charchat ryots would have been a warning to the local police, that as there was dissatisfaction with the factory proceedings on the part of the ryots, they should be specially on the alert to prevent any threatened breach of the peace. The passage in the order actually issued, which I have above noticed, gives, on the contrary, as I read it, a dangerous latitude of discretion to the darogah.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, to the Commissioner of Nuddea, dated Mulnath, 28th March 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to my interview with you on 16th instant, as soon as the Courts opened on 21st instant I addressed a letter to the joint magistrate of Baraset, copy of which, with his reply, is annexed.

Mr. Eden denies having passed any order at all on the petition of the ryots; in making such a statement he appears to have quite forgotten himself, as the copy of the ryot's petition, with the several orders thereon annexed, will prove. Mr. Eden may defend himself by saying he gave no direct order on the Kollingah darogah.

The result of the order passed on the deputy magistrate has been that, after his remaining at Charchat for some days, two of the ryots put in petitions to say their lands had been forcibly sown.

The whole of Mr. Eden's proceedings could not possibly show greater prejudice and unfairness; he knows perfectly well that I have never resorted to force, and that force to compel a number of villagers to sow indigo is an absurdity; he has done all in his power to instigate the ryots not to sow indigo, and after the visit of the deputy magistrate to Charchat, conveying Mr. Eden's feelings more pointedly to the ryots, I cannot hope to have the remainder of my lands sown unless redress comes from you.

TRANSLATION of a Petition from Muneroodeen Mundle and others, dated 1st Chyete, 1265, B. S.

To the Joint Magistrate of Baraset.

WHEN the Charghat estate, consisting of Mouza Nuj Charghat, Rosae Sohoah, Kolatubar, and seven other Mouzahs in Pergunnah Ookrah, was purchased by Rammohun Banerjee, zemindar, he commenced measuring our Maurossee lands, with the view of raising the rents. But, on our ancestors objecting, the measurement was put a stop to by an order of the judge of Nuddea. Subsequently, when Baboo Eshwar Chunder Moostophee purchased this mehal, and during the time it was held on putnee tenure by Kylasnath Bromocharee, we were left in undisturbed possession of our lands.

To our great misfortune, about two years ago, Mr. Larmour, manager of the Moelatee and other factories, took a lease of these villages, and demanded from us the expenses which the izarah had entailed upon him, as well as other cesses. As we refused to pay, he at once proceeded to measure our land, which he had no business to do. In this, however, he has been stopped, by our petitioning the court. Still, in consequence of the enmity which he has on this account conceived against us, our lives, honour and property have been with great difficulty preserved during the last few months. As an instance of his oppression, we may mention that we had sowed our lands with sugar-cane and tobacco, and since congratulating ourselves on the fair prospects of our crop, when, on the 26th of Falgoon last, Dewan Nobin Chunder Chowdry, of the Barrorea factory of Mr. Larmour, Kazimuddy Ameen, Muloo Kholassee, and Jameeroodee Kholassee, accompanied by 50 or 60 lattials, armed with clubs, spears, and guns, and a Keranee Saheb on horseback, came to our villages, and having forcibly seized us, like judgment debtors, vowed vengeance to us and to our families, if we did not immediately sow our lands with indigo, and by forcibly bringing out the ploughs of some of the ryots from their houses, and by maltreating others by putting the ploughs on their necks, they got some of the lands cultivated with indigo. These people now come daily to our villages, and with similar parade practise oppressions. The oppressions of the indigo planters are beyond description. They have been mentioned in the "Englishman," "Hurkaru," and other papers, and several people have written on the subject, but no one has been able fully to describe them. Several officers of Government have devised, and we hear that the Government even now are devising, measures with a view to check these oppressions. But Mr. Larmour heeds them not. He has now adopted a plan by which he hopes to bring under his control some of the principal ryots of our turruff, by holding out to them hopes of employment. But, be this as it may, we, poor ryots, find no means for the protection of our honour, lives, and property. Police officers are posted for the preservation of the peace; yet even they dare not come forward at the critical time. We, therefore, pray that the huzoor will issue suitable orders to prevent the planters from forcibly sowing indigo in our lands, and to protect our lives and property. At the time we came to the huzoor, we left our families in the houses of our friends, residing in the neighbouring villages, and we do not know what may have happened in our own villages during our absence. We solicit that early orders may be passed for taking recognizances from the factory Dewan, Ameen, and Kholasees. We never took any indigo advances from Mr. Larmour, and even for the indigo, which, under the orders of the huzoor, we cultivated last year, Mr. Larmour has not paid us a cowree. We pray, therefore, that suitable orders may be passed on our representation.

First Order by the joint magistrate.—Since the ryots can sow in their lands whatever crop they like, no one can, without their consent and by violence, sow any other crop.

Ordered, therefore—

That the original petition be sent to the deputy magistrate of Metterhaut, in order that he may send a police officer to the ryots' lands, to prevent any disturbances that are likely to ensue from any compulsory cultivation of their lands, and instruct him that, if the land is really that of the ryots, not to allow any one to interfere with it. If the ryots wish to sow indigo, or anything else, the policeman will see that there is no disturbance.

Second Order by the joint magistrate.—It is not specified in this petition on what ryot's land, or upon what portions of his land, indigo has been sown. The ryots are, therefore, informed that if upon any person's land indigo has been forcibly sown, that person is at liberty to present a separate petition on the subject to the deputy magistrate of the Metterhaut subdivision, and the deputy magistrate will pass orders upon it in due course.

Order by the deputy magistrate:—

Ordered, That, in accordance with the above, the darogah be directed to send the Thannah Mohurrir immediately to the spot. Dated 16th March 1859.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., to the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, dated Calcutta, 21st March 1859.

Sir,

HAVING received information that the ryots of Roosooe Sooloah and Kantal Bare, in Turuff Charghat, have presented a petition in your court that I wish to sow indigo forcibly in those villages, I have the honour to state that in no instance have I attempted forcibly to sow their lands. These ryots, with the other eight villages of Charghat, made their accounts, took their advances, measured off their lands, and until the contents of the roobokarree, issued in the case of the Hobrah concern, in February last, were made generally known, these ryots showed no discontent. The effect of the roobokarree has been to make the ryots believe they will receive every encouragement from your court in not sowing indigo.

I now address you with the hope you will be pleased to modify your order on the darogah of Kollingah thannah, so far that those ryots who have taken their advances should in common honesty fulfil their engagements, and that he will disabuse their minds as to the impression that you will countenance their breaking through their engagement of last year (when I withdrew from the measurement of the zemindaree) as well as this.

From the Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to R. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for B. I. Company, Calcutta (No. 262), dated Camp Monnerampore, the 22d March 1859.

Sir,

I BEG to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, and to inform you in reply, that the petition you allude to was referred to the deputy magistrate of Metterhaut, in whose jurisdiction Charghat is situated.

2. I must observe that I fail to see how any roobokarree connected with the Hobrah concern can have had any influence on your ryots, beyond letting them understand that ryots were not to be forced to sign contracts against their will. I must, however, remark that you are mistaken in supposing your ryots showed no signs of discontent till February. They have complained to be in a body on several occasions of your oppression; I however declined to receive general complaints of oppression, and informed them that if they had any specific complaint to make, they should do so in the usual way.

3. It is not in my power to comply with your request to modify any orders that I have given to the Kollingah darogah, for I find that I have issued no order at all. Charghat being in the subdivision of Metterhaut, you should in the first instance address yourself in the prescribed manner, by petition, to the officer in charge of the subdivision. If you have reason to believe that you suffer injustice from him, you have the usual appeal to the judge or myself; your communications, however, should be in the form of petition, and on stamped paper, as I do not consider that it is desirable to carry on a correspondence with a party to a suit in my court on subjects connected with the case.

4. In reply to your last paragraph, I beg to remind you, that as magistrate, I have nothing to do with either the civil or moral obligations of the ryots to fulfil any engagements into which they may have entered. They receive no countenance from me in not doing so, and have always been advised by me, whenever they have spoken to me on the subject, to fulfil all their engagements honestly. They, however, have invariably denied that they have entered voluntarily into any contract. In the case of their breaking any engagements, you of course have your remedy like other people in the civil court.

From

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 4516), dated the 21st July 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of the letters from your office, noted in the margin with their original enclosures, and in reply to communicate the following observations of the Lieutenant Governor on the question which was referred by Mr. Grote for the orders of Government.

No. 74 Ct., dated the 15th April last.
No. 82 Ct., dated the 20th April last.
No. 116 Ct., dated the 6th June 1859.

2. It is not necessary, in disposing of this matter, to go further back than to the proceedings in 1859, out of which this reference has arisen. The facts of the case appears to be these.

3. Some ryots applied to Mr. Eden, the joint magistrate of Baraset, "for protection from Mr. Larmour, who, they said, was going to plough up their lands and sow them with indigo." Complaints of the same sort had been before made to the magistrate by a number of ryots, on various dates commencing from November last. On receiving the last complaint, Mr. Eden passed the following order, addressed to the deputy magistrate of the subdivision:—"Since the ryots can sow in their lands whatever crop they like, no one can, without their consent, and by violence, sow any other crop. Ordered, therefore, that the original petition be sent to the deputy magistrate of Metterhaut, in order that he may send policemen to the ryots' lands to prevent any disturbances that are likely to ensue from any compulsory cultivation of their lands, and instruct them, that if the land is really that of the ryots, not to allow any one to interfere with it. If the ryots wish to sow indigo or anything else, the policeman will see that there is no disturbance."

4. Mr. Larmour complained of this order, alleging that the effect of it had been to make the ryots believe that they would receive every encouragement from the magistrate's court "in not sowing indigo," for which some of them had received advances and contracted.

5. Mr. Grote thought Mr. Larmour's remonstrance well founded, and disapproved of the magistrate's order above quoted. Mr. Grote does not maintain, at least he does not in this correspondence assert, that Mr. Larmour can have had any right to compel the ryots by force to sow indigo, or any right himself to sow indigo on their land; and he does not deny that disputes in such affairs are matters for settlement in the civil courts. But he objects to that part of the order by which the police are directed not to allow any one to interfere with the ryots in the cultivation of their land, if the land is undoubtedly that of the ryots, on the ground that this condition involves an inquiry by the darogah into the point of ownership, as his action is to depend entirely upon the result of such an inquiry. This, Mr. Grote says, is throwing on the darogah the entire responsibility of action, a course which he looks upon as very reprehensible. He considers the magistrate's order inconsistent with the principle on which Mr. Eden himself founds, which principle Mr. Grote, as his Honour understands him, does not contest, namely, that the contracts between indigo manufacturers and ryots for the cultivation and sale of indigo plant, when disputes arise between them on the ground of alleged breach by either party, are matters exclusively for the settlement of the civil courts, and matters in which the magistracy and criminal courts have no jurisdiction, and with which the police have no right, and ought not, to interfere on one side or the other, any more than in disputes about other civil contracts. Disapproving of the order on the above grounds, Mr. Grote instructed Mr. Eden to amend his order by making it known that it was not the intention of the order, "that police protection should be given to such ryots as had entered into engagements with the factory, and were now on any pretext holding back from their performance." Mr. Eden obeyed these instructions, but he supported the consistency and propriety of his own views, explaining that in matter of fact the ryots in this case were undisputed owners of the land, and were in possession of it; that Mr. Larmour put forward no claim to it; and that the order applied only to land in such circumstances. Mr. Eden has urged his point with much intelligence and force. Mr. Grote, however, adheres to his original view, and holds that all that ought to be required of the police, in cases of such complaints as those made to Mr. Eden in this case, is, that they are to prevent, if they can, actual disturbance of the peace; and if they cannot prevent (a breach of the peace), "to arrest and bring to justice those who disturb it."

6. It is to be observed, that it is not to be assumed that in the case out of which this discussion arose, Mr. Larmour, or his servants, acted in any way improperly or illegally. Mr. Larmour has denied all intention to use force. The general question in no way depends upon the merits of this particular dispute; it relates only to the course which the police ought to adopt, when such disputes as this arise.

7. The question on which Government has to decide is, which of these two courses should be prescribed to the police, in disputes of this nature; the course of protecting the undoubted possessor of the land from the physical interference of strangers, who come upon the land, insisting that it shall be cultivated only with indigo, on the allegation that the possessor of the land has promised to cultivate a certain quantity of land with indigo, for sale to them at a fixed price; or the course of announcing that no protection will be given against such physical interference to ryots who are under engagements (for the cultivation and supply of indigo) with these strangers, and hold back from performing their engagements; and of standing by until the dispute reaches the point of a breach of the peace, when whosoever breaks the peace is to be arrested, and sent to the magistrate to be punished.

8. This is a most important practical question, and the Lieutenant Governor thinks it is strange that it has not been authoritatively determined before now, as cases of the sort are of daily occurrence. On the one hand, the manufacturer of indigo dye, which is one of the staples of these provinces, affirms that if the ryots are protected by the police from such interference with their cultivation as is described, no indigo plant will be cultivated wherefrom he can manufacture the dye. On the other hand, the ryot affirms that if he is unprotected, under such circumstances, he is deprived of the use of his possessions, and sent to prison for resisting the trespasser.

9. The Lieutenant Governor assumes that Mr. Eden's principle, as above stated, is beyond all question the true exposition of the law of the matter, as it stands; and he cannot agree with Mr. Grote in thinking that Mr. Eden's order was inconsistent with that principle. If Mr. Grote's objection is well founded, it is beyond the province of the police, as throwing undue responsibility of action upon them, to protect any man in the possession of his property against force, if the force is exerted by persons who allege promises in their favour. His argument is, that in all such cases the duty of the police is to stand still, unless a breach of the peace is imminent; in that case, they are to prevent such breach, if they can, and, if they cannot, they are to arrest whomsoever they find in the act of breaking the peace.

10. It appears to the Lieutenant Governor that this doctrine is untenable. He cannot suppose that any one would think of maintaining it where the property in question is personal. If a traveller is passing along the highway, and is surrounded by men who insist upon his delivering to them his purse out of his pocket, alleging that he had promised to do so, no one, the Lieutenant Governor believes, will maintain that a police darogah and his men, who are paid to repress all outrages, ought to stand by without interfering, on the ground that they cannot tell, without inquiry, whether the purse belongs to the passenger or not, and that, therefore, it is throwing too much responsibility upon the police to expect them to take any action in the affair, until there is a breach of the peace. Even so the Lieutenant Governor does not see how the police could escape the responsibility, eventually, of coming to a conclusion from the facts passing before their eyes, and taking a line of action founded upon that conclusion. For, suppose the passenger to prepare to resist those who offer to take his purse, are the police to hold his hands for fear of the parties coming to blows; or if he do resist, and so a breach of the peace occurs, is he to be taken up for causing it? That would be to act on the conclusion that the assailants had a right to force the purse out of the passenger's possession. Or are the assailants to be taken up? That would be a line of action founded on the contrary conclusion. As then the police must be driven at last into assuming the responsibility of coming to a rational conclusion, under the circumstances, as to whether the party resorting to force has a right to do so or not, what reason can there be to prohibit them from so acting at first, before any such calamity has happened?

11. The Lieutenant Governor is unable to see any difference of principle when the case is one of forcible entry, which is no less an outrage, when without colour of law, than the forcible seizure of personal property; and he believes that in any case unconnected with indigo, no one would question the propriety of the police interfering to protect a subject from such an outrage. Suppose the case reversed, and that these ryots, alleging that Mr. Larmour had promised to let them have the use of his houses and grounds, had entered that gentleman's premises, and insisted on sowing his garden with rice, or had taken possession of his factory to store their grain in it, the Lieutenant Governor doubts if Mr. Grote would hold that on Mr. Larmour's call on the police for protection it would be throwing too much responsibility on the darogah to expect him to act on the conclusion that Mr. Larmour had a right to such protection, under the circumstances.

12. Indeed every public officer must act in the exercise of his proper functions on his own responsibility; and he could not be relieved from that necessity without making him altogether useless. Nor is it easy to see a case in which the responsibility of forming a rational conclusion under the circumstances can be less than one in which a party pretending to no claim beyond what may or may not be a valid ground of civil action, and setting up no pretence of ownership, or possession, or right of possession, in a particular field, which field is known to be in the undisputed possession of another party, sends men upon that field to cause it to be sown with something the possessor of the field objects to.

13. It is the course which Mr. Grote has prescribed in the present case which appears to the Lieutenant Governor to be inconsistent with the principle above laid down, and certainly to be open to the objection that it throws undue responsibility on the police. By this course the police were prohibited from protecting, in the use of their own land, such ryots as had engagements with the factory, and were now "on any pretext" holding back from the performance of their bargains. How is the darogah to ascertain whether the ryot has or has not made such an engagement? There is nothing in what passes before his eyes to show how that fact stands. He cannot know the fact, or form a rational guess on the point, without quasi-judicial inquiry; and it is quite certain that he has no authority to enter into any such inquiry, and no power to obtain the evidence, without which no conclusion upon the question could be formed. This alone seems a fatal objection.

14. There is, however, a still stronger objection to this course of proceeding, namely, its substantial injustice. Supposing the police darogah to be a proper functionary to try the question of the mutual civil obligations of the two parties; he is, by the proposed course of procedure, directed, as it were, to execute judgment in favour of the plaintiff, if he decides the one issue of engagement or no engagement in his favour. The ryot may confess the engagement, and still have many irresistible pleas to avoid the consequence the opposite party insists upon. Nevertheless, judgment is to be given and executed against him, without hearing one of his pleas or pretences, as they are called. Such a system of procedure would be unjust.

15. For example, it is stated to be a common occurrence for a ryot to say that he is willing, according to his engagement, to sow so many beegahs with indigo, and that he has land fit for the purpose, but that he is not willing to occupy his best land with that comparatively unprofitable crop, as his best land is capable of growing what will be many times more remunerative to him. A fairer plea cannot be imagined; but it must be ignored in the course of procedure laid down by Mr. Grote; which, in fact, leaves the planter's peons to select for indigo what fields they please, supported passively, to say the least, by the police.

16. The Lieutenant Governor cannot but disapprove of a police order of this character.

17. The truth is that disagreements of the character in question are by their very nature subjects for judicial decision, which cannot be adjusted without fully hearing both parties. There is no doubt that as the law now stands the moonsiff's court, or the higher civil courts, are the only authorities who have lawful cognizance of them. To these courts, therefore, both parties should be left. If either party to the contract conceives himself to be wronged by the other, it is for him to sue the other party. In the supposed case, the indigo planter is the party conceiving himself wronged. It is for him, therefore, not to judge his own case, and to execute by his own peons his own judgment in his own favour, but to sue the ryot in the civil court, where an impartial decision is possible. The ryot has a right to be protected against any other course.

18. It may be that it would be well if speedier means existed of getting the case adjudged, and specific performance judicially ordered, or substantial damages awarded, than the moonsiff's courts afford. But to introduce, in effect, into the system of procedure in such cases the action of a power which cannot form a judgment on the question in dispute, and does not pretend to do so, is to take a step which certainly is not a step in the right direction.

19. In his letter of the 6th ultimo, Mr. Grote makes some remarks, from which the Lieutenant Governor infers that he is not sure that "the usual practice all over the country" in regard to the cultivation of indigo is supported by law. But anything is supported by law to which all parties interested agree. If the ryots agree to such minute interference with their crop as is described, all is as it should be; but whenever both parties do not agree, neither can be allowed to go beyond his lawful rights, whatever they may be.

20. It would be greatly to be lamented if anything should check indigo cultivation, so long as it is a wholesome commercial enterprise. But it cannot be supported at the expense of justice; and no wholesome trade requires such support. If the cultivation be, as it must be presumed to be, and certainly as it ought to be, for the mutual advantage of both the producer and the purchaser of the plant, it is not very easy to see why one party should be less eager for it than the other. If the ryot finds that on certain sorts of land, at the price offered him for indigo plant, that cultivation pays him better than any other; if he finds that when he cultivates indigo he is no less secure from ill-treatment than other people of his class, and if the peons and native servants of the factory are not allowed to harass him, so as to disgust him with the business, the manufacturer should be in no difficulty. In such a wholesome state of things he should have no more law suits to engage in, and should have no more cause either to fear or to hope from the interference of the magistrate and the police than any other man engaged in fair trade. It is this wholesome state of things which should be encouraged. But if the case be otherwise in any particular district, or with any particular planter, the obvious inference is, that either indigo is not naturally suited to that place, or that the remedy is in the hands, not of the police, but of the indigo manufacturer himself.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 4939), dated the 9th August 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to the correspondence noted on the margin, I am directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor, being desirous to have before him further information relative to the system on which indigo cultivation is carried on in Bengal, requests that you will have collected, and submit with as little delay as possible, any correspondence there may be in your office containing either facts illustrative of the system or the views and opinions of officers in the division who have given their attention to the subject.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 141Ct.), dated the 7th November 1859.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 4939, dated 9th August last, I beg to submit, in original, the correspondence noted in the margin,* which, but for other pressing duties, would have been laid before Government last year in continuation of the report† on the same subject, which I made on the 19th August 1856. No orders were ever passed on this report, and the object of my second call on the magistrates of the indigo districts was to enable me by means of a supplement to it to draw again the attention of Government to a most important question.

* Commissioner's Circular, No. 30, dated 17th May 1858.
Magistrate of Moorsshedabad, No. 451, dated 15th July 1858.
Magistrate of Nuddea, No. 246, dated 26th July 1858, with two enclosures.
Magistrate of Baraset, No. 500, dated 19th June 1858.
Magistrate of Jessore, No. 424, dated 29th July 1858, with an enclosure.

2. In the interim a case occurred in Baraset in which I had to amend what I considered to be a mistaken order issued to his police by the joint magistrate of that district; and as he adhered to the view which led to his order, I thought it due to an intelligent and zealous officer to lay his objections to my proceedings before Government. This reference has been disposed of during my absence from the office, and its purport, even if it were not for your present call, assures me that the great question which I reported on three years ago has at last been taken up in earnest.

3. Before remarking on the enclosures now forwarded, I shall ask permission to make one respectful observation on paragraph 7 of your letter, No. 4516, dated 21st July last, just referred to. The question which I intended to put to Government, in my reference in Mr. Larmour's case, was not that which is defined in that paragraph. I did mean to say that my order was that which Mr. Eden should have issued in the first instance, or, in the words of your letter, that the course of announcing that no protection should be given to ryots against physical interference, &c., was that which Mr. Eden should have adopted. My order was necessary and justifiable only as corrective of the misimpression which had been produced by the previous order of Mr. Eden. The question, as I wished to submit it, was whether Mr. Eden was right in the terms of his order, which were conditional, or whether he should have refrained from using such terms.

4. I now proceed to notice the Magistrates' reports.

5 Baraset.—Mr. Eden refers in his opening paragraph to the first Charghat dispute in 1858, the correspondence regarding which was submitted to Government for perusal with my letter, Nos 74 Ct. and 116 Ct., dated respectively 15th April and 6th June last. The features of this dispute were in the main similar to those of the last which the Lieutenant Governor disposed of, in your letter above quoted. In my opinion, the magistrate's orders interfered with Mr. Larmour's exercise of his powers as a landholder, and required modification. In this, as in the last Charghat case, this corrective order of mine went beyond what was called for by the state of the case as it came originally before the magistrate.

6. In the paragraphs which follow, Mr. Eden refers to the Hobrah case, some particulars of which have also been before his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, on the petition of Mr. Prestwich. The factory party appear here to have been entirely in the wrong, though the police declared otherwise. I note here an* expression of Mr. Eden which charges the police generally with partiality towards the planter.

7. Mr. Eden then goes into the general question of the indigo system, which I reserve for notice presently.

8. Nuddea.—Mr. Cockerell reports, that no serious disputes occurred in his district during the sowing seasons of 1857-58; 45 cases altogether had occurred in the two years connected with indigo cultivation; 29 of these were complaints by ryots, and in the majority of these, as of the others, the prosecutions failed. In the eight cases which proceeded to conviction, the ryots were punished in two; their landholders, as instigators against the planter, in two; and in four cases, one or both parties were bound down to keep the peace.

9. Moorshedabad and Jessore.—In neither of these districts had any serious disturbances occurred. Two partial affrays took place in the Magourah subdivision of Jessore, and the Magistrate's enclosed statement shows, that a great many petitions against planters' proceedings, and vice versa, had been presented in the same subdivision. Unfortunately the return does not show the result of inquiry into these complaints.

10. On the whole, the sowing seasons of the three past years have gone off quietly in this division. The magistrate was known to be on the alert in the three districts in which disputes generally occur. In Moorshedabad the Messrs. Watson have scarcely a rival factory to contend with, and their large zemindaree interests enable them to carry any point with their tenantry.

11. This practice of planters taking leases from the landholders has lately prevailed in Nuddea, and is being extended as much as possible to Jessore. By this means the planter gets rid of the local influence which he supposed to be always opposed to his factory interests, and concentrates it in himself. Large sums by way of bonus are given by many planters for these leases, and in some cases (Chowrasee, for instance, in Baraset, which is held by the Hobrah concern) the rent which they engage to pay under the lease is higher than the known Mofussil rental.

12. There can be no doubt that the comparatively few affrays which are reported now are due in a great measure to the withdrawal from the field held by the indigo concern of this adverse landholder interest, though in some measure also to the establishment of subdivisions, and to improved efficiency of our police. The ryot, knowing the various means of annoyance in the hands of a planter landholder, is disposed to comply with the latter's wishes, and will engage to grow plant for him, though protesting perhaps, while taking the factory seed, that he would much prefer to sow rice. In thus complying, he perhaps declines the proffered advance from the factory, under the idea that his acceptance of it will get him into trouble; perhaps it is convenient to him to take it, as he obtains it without interest. In no case, I quite believe, does the ryot deliberately grow indigo under the impression that the crop will yield him profit, and in many he grows it without reckoning on obtaining a return even of the rent which he has to pay for the land.

13. And that some degree of compulsion was exercised in the first days of the introduction of the manufacture into this country is to be implied, I think, from the tenor of the rules embodied in Regulation XXXIII. of 1795. The right of the Khoodkhast ryot to grow, or to refrain from growing, the plant, at his own pleasure, pleasure, is there proclaimed in a manner that suggests the presumption that he had not in the four years of experience at Benares at all events been treated as a free agent. From the mention made in this law, however, of the Bengal system of indigo cultivation, it would appear to have been one entirely of contract with the ryots, a system which Government then and have since encouraged. See Section III. Regulation XX. of 1812, enjoining the registry of indigo contracts, and Regulation VI. of 1823, which, recognising the advance system, and the reasonableness of giving the planter a lien on the crop, for the production of which he advances, supplies him with the means of obtaining summary redress for evasions or breaches of contract on the part of the ryots.

* "The Burkundazes were helping the factory, as the police always do when deputed to keep the peace."

14. Why this summary remedy proved insufficient can only be conjectured, but that it did so is announced in the preamble of Regulation V. of 1830, when breach of indigo contract was declared to be a misdemeanor, and subject to the penalties prescribed in Section V. Regulation VII. of 1819. Instigators to such breach were to be jointly liable with the contracting ryots; but while these stringent provisions were enacted for enforcing the performance of his contract, a mode of extricating himself summarily from arbitrary claims made on him by the factory was provided for the ryot, Section V.

This course is still open to him, though he is no longer punishable for misdemeanor for not performing his contract.

15. I believe these summary remedies have rarely been resorted to either by planter or ryot. Suits under both the above laws had to be instituted at the Sudder stations, for there were no local courts competent to entertain them till 1831. The process, too, was probably costly, and not always successful. Whatever may be the cause of these provisions being inoperative, it is certain that the planter has the means of indemnifying himself for loss of indigo crop to the extent of the evading ryot's property, and that the unwilling cultivator may deposit in Court any balance due from him under an expired contract, and relieve himself of all obligation to the factory.

Regulation V.

16. Mr. Eden, it will be seen, holds extreme views on the subject of the existing contract system. He holds that these contracts are not bond fide, and that it is only by means of oppression and compulsion that the planter succeeds in obtaining any indigo. There is, I remark, a great deal of bold assertion in Mr. Eden's statements. It is difficult to believe that the large produce of the districts of this division would be raised so quietly as it is were his description of the system a correct one. So far as my experience goes, I pronounce it incorrect.

17. I can believe that, under the practice of taking leases which now obtains, the planter does not lay the same stress as he formerly did on having written contracts from his ryots. He relies on his zemindaree influence to get his plant sown when the season comes round, and if he has ordinary tact, this influence would be quite sufficient. The same influence exerted by a native zemindar enables him to indemnify himself through his tenantry for many a disbursement incurred, such as payments of fines, marriage fees, &c. It is an influence which is gradually on the wane, and which will be well nigh brought to an end by Act X. of 1859, if the instruments for working this law effectually be made readily available.

18. Many planters urge that they would rather not be landholders, if they had but the means of enforcing the performance by the ryots of their contracts. It will be seen from some of the enclosures of Mr. Cockerell's Report, that the necessity for securing leases of estates at heavy expenditure is alluded to as a grievance. I venture to doubt the sincerity of this allusion. In these days of high market prices for agricultural produce no planter would find it possible to strike a bargain with a ryot for growing indigo who did not offer far better terms than it has been the custom hitherto to offer.

19. Mr. Cockerell takes a juster and more impartial view of the planter's position than Mr. Eden. He is not opposed to the re-enactment of the rescinded Sections of Regulation V. of 1830. Mr. Molony is in favour of a suggestion which was thrown out for discussion, rather than deliberately recommended for adoption, in my report of 1856, viz. the extension of the planter's lien on the land to actual occupancy if necessary. In their petition to the Legislative Council of last year, the planters have extracted paragraphs 13, 14, and part of 15 from my letter in question, in support of their statement of grievances, and as indicating the mode in which these should be redressed; but assuredly I did not intend that what had occurred to me as offering a partial remedy to obvious deficiencies in the existing law could be with justice applied off-hand. Such a provision could not indeed safely be applied at all, if plausible grounds offered for doubting generally, as Mr. Eden does, the genuine character of the contract.

20. The penal provisions for breach of contract, under Regulation VII. of 1819, have now been extended to the Presidency Towns by Act XIII. of 1859, for all fraudulent breaches of contract by artificers, workmen, and labourers under advances. The pleas for this extension, as the preamble to the Act states, are the loss and inconvenience which has been sustained by manufacturers, tradesmen, and others, and the insufficiency of remedy by suit in the civil courts for recovery of damages. These are exactly the pleas urged by the planters for an extension of similar provisions to fraudulent breaches of indigo contracts.

21. I am strongly in favour of giving every encouragement within reasonable limits to the manufacturers of indigo, and I am convinced, notwithstanding the strong assertions that have been made to the contrary, that they are by no means the unpopular class represented in Mr. Eden's Report. "It would indeed," as his honour has justly remarked in paragraph 20 of his letter referred to above, "be greatly to be lamented if anything should check indigo cultivation;" and, feeling this, I earnestly hope that the effect of the orders conveyed in that letter may not, by misinterpretation on the part of the district police authorities, be unfavourable to planting enterprise.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Magistrates of Jessore, Moorshedabad, Nuddea, and Baraset (No. 30), dated the 17th May 1858.

Sir,

REFERRING to your office letter, noted in the margin, in reply to my call, No. 60, of the 11th June 1856, I request the favour of your reporting on any disturbances connected with the sowing of indigo which may have occurred in your district during the two seasons which have since passed.

No. 425, dated 17th July 1856.
No. 672, dated 24th July 1856.
No. 178, dated 15th July 1856.
No. 376, dated 30th June 1856.

2. I shall be glad also to have the benefit of any remarks which may occur to you on the annexed extract (paragraph 12 to end) from my report to Government on that occasion, as I am about to draw the attention of Government again to the subject.

From W. C. Spencer, Esq., Officiating Magistrate, Moorshedabad, to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 451), dated the 15th July 1858.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 30, dated the 17th May last, I have the honour to report, for your information, that nothing worthy of the name of a disturbance connected with the sowing of indigo has occurred during the two seasons referred to, as I have been fortunate enough to nip in the bud any disputes which seemed likely to occur.

2. With advertence to your 2d paragraph, I beg to submit the following remarks:—No one can, I think, doubt the necessity for legislation on this subject, for, until some law be passed, planters will still continue to take the law into their own hands, and affrays will always be liable to occur in consequence; but it is easier to point out an evil than suggest a remedy. The interests of the planters appear to demand that some summary powers should be vested in them by law; but I would not go so far as to recommend the adoption of the principle of summary occupancy of the land by the planter on his own responsibility. The principle is a new one in legislation on contracts of such a commercial character as those between a planter and a ryot, who probably holds his land on some temporary agreement from some other zemindar, and it is almost an invasion of a zemindar's rights. Two liens on one piece of ground are dangerous privileges to grant. Imagine a zemindar insisting on distraining the indigo crop on the very day that the planter sends to cut it, or imagine contending planters, each holding a lien on the same crop, and the zemindar asserting his at the same time. I only give these as the most obvious instances, but hundreds of others would suggest themselves to a native zemindar, who could either compel or was secure of the co-operation of his ryots.

3. Another objection is, that the power of occupancy in the lands of an outsider is in itself an irritating species of authority to be avoided if possible. Its exercise is very apt to rouse a ryot to resistance, even against his better reason. The very best rules cannot prevent* by the Gomashta of a factory under any summary process, but the powers thus given them will rouse their inventive faculties to the highest point. The proposed clause exceeds in its summary character the laws of distraint and sale; for even under these laws the zemindar can only attach; he cannot take what he demands, and leaves the ryot to recover it; and for my own part, I cannot wish to see the principle of these laws extended in this country, even under European management, if better means can be devised.

4. Neither do I think that planters themselves as a body demand such a large accession of power. It is often insisted on as necessary, but this is partly owing to their present habit of taking possession of their rights, law or no law. The same demand is made by every one who finds himself cheated right and left. The only difference in this case is, that it is a question of time, a few hours making all the difference in the execution or breach of the contract. I should, nevertheless, prefer to see such contracts generally executed under a compulsory penal enactment than by the arbitrary agency of the other party. There is a general objection to such penalties as that proposed, viz. that it renders one party at least very careless after the contract is signed, and is only a slight incentive to honesty in all cases, whilst in many it is the very reverse, more particularly so in the case of Bengali ryots.

5. I am not sure that the planters would, in practice, thank us for the power given. They would prefer a law which compelled a ryot to work in his own field himself, for khamar cultivation does not pay them. I can very well imagine every ryot in a zemindaree ordered to abstain from sowing on the critical day (the order would involve no great risk). Could the planter on such a sudden notice sow the whole of the lands himself? But if each ryot knew that a month's imprisonment hangs over him, such evasions would be rare. I find, on inquiry, that most planters in this part of the country have only asked for the summary punishment of the ryots, appearing to have been satisfied with the working of Regulation V. of 1830; and I cannot help thinking that a year's experience of a similar penal law would have a better effect on ryots for the future than the granting to the planter of the lien proposed, with this advantage, that the land is left entirely in the ryot's own hands, being merely compelled to fulfil in person his own promise. We should thus know how far the new law is made of use. In the other case we could only hear how far it was abused, and probably not that completely.

6. I do not, however, see any reasonable objection to giving the planter a right of occupancy till the crop be cut by a decree of court, whenever he may think it necessary to apply for such power. A planter has generally some inkling of the plans of his ryots, and in ordinary cases could, by this means, protect himself from loss; but, in order to ensure this more efficiently, why should not a magistrate, pending the decision of a case, be empowered, when an expected inundation or other cause render it advisable, to give the crop to the planter, on cash or other good security being deposited, calculated according to the average value of indigo, if the crop is ready to be cut, or when the crop has only been lately sown, and not ready for cutting, a sufficient sum to ensure it from wilful injury, and in order to protect the planter against the danger of a ryot refusing to fulfil his engagement just at sowing time; a register might be kept at the magistrate's court, and the court of his sub-divisional subordinates, in which to register all indigo contracts between a planter and a ryot, a small fee being taken to defray the expense of keeping up the books, &c. ; for, though by this the work of the offices would be slightly increased, I feel sure that the results would be beneficial, as in that case the registry would be prima facie evidence of the existence of the contract, and all that would have to be determined would be whether the contract had been fulfilled or not, in which there could not be very much difficulty ; and every non-fulfilment of contract should be punished summarily, as recommended above.

7. I have had much other business to perform lately, and the subject itself is one which required some consideration and inquiry ; I trust therefore you will excuse the delay which has occurred in replying to your letter.

From F. R. Cockerell, Esq., Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 246), dated 26 July 1858.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report on the subject of your letter, No. 30, of the 17th May last.

2. There have been no disturbances involving any actual breach of the peace regarding indigo sowing during the seasons 1857-58, within this district.

3. The number of cases connected with this subject, instituted in the Foujdaree courts throughout the district during these seasons, has been in the year 1857 29 cases, in the present year 16. Of the former, nine cases were instituted by the zemindar or his local agent, three by the planter, and 17 by the ryot. The prosecution in nearly the whole number fell to the ground, it appearing from the records that in two cases only was it found necessary to take steps to bring the defendants into court, and in those two cases both parties were bound down to keep the peace for short periods in light personal recognizances. It is worthy of notice also that in 14 of the 29 cases the planters were natives, in 15, Europeans.

4. Of the latter (or the 16 cases instituted during the present year), 12 were instituted by the ryots and four by the planters : the prosecution in nine out of the 12, and one out of the four cases, fell to the ground ; in one case the ryots were sentenced to fine or imprisonment for instituting a false and vexatious complaint at the instigation of the zemindar ; in another case certain ryots of Kish-topore were imprisoned for committing a violent assault on the factory gomastah when he came to look after the sowings ; in a third both parties were bound over to keep the peace ; in two other cases the zemindar was convicted of instigating the ryots to oppose the planters, and bound over in personal recognizance to keep the peace ; and in the sixth case a factory gomastah was required to furnish personal security with the same object.

5. Scarcely any accurate conclusion can be arrived at as regards the sufficiency or otherwise of the existing law, as it affects the relations between planter and ryot, from these statistics, for the planter has generally found it necessary to acquire zemindaree rights wherever his indigo manufacturing line of operations extended, and thus again, a power of exacting the fulfilment of their contracts by the ryots who take his advances, which the present state of the law fails to afford him ; and throughout this district nearly all the indigo planters are for the most part their own zemindars.

6. On the subject of the remarks extracted from your letter to Government, and forwarded with your letter under acknowledgment, I have, as directed, communicated with those gentlemen engaged in the cultivation of indigo in this district, whose long experience of the working of the present system and chief interest in the subject must necessarily give weight to their opinion on any proposed amelioration of the existing law.

7. Mr. Larmour considers that the best remedy for the present practically unprotected state of the planter, in his dealings with the ryots, who receive his advances for sowing indigo, would be afforded by placing the enforcement of the contract within the jurisdiction of the magistrate's court, as by the provisions of Regulation VII. of 1819 the enforcement of the performance of a contract for any other specific work already lies. "Why," says Mr. Larmour, "should the planter be the only contractor unprotected by the power to institute summary process in the magistrate's court, the only kind of summary process that would prove effective in operation in the case of indigo producing contracts?" He considers that the present mode of redress afforded to the planter through a civil summary suit altogether useless, and a means that, in this district at least, is never resorted to. He further urges the expediency of re-enacting some such legal provisions as, under Section III. Regulation V. of 1830, rendered the instigator to a breach of contract for producing indigo liable to the penalties of fine or imprisonment. A hostile zemindar's power, in the present state of the law, to injure and embarrass the planter with impunity, by instigating his ryots, or indeed compelling them, to evade the performance of their contracts, is, Mr. Larmour considers, perhaps the greatest evil the planter has to contend with. He cites, as an instance, the case of Sham Chunder Pall Chowdhurree, who, coming into possession of the proprietary right of an estate of which he (Mr. Larmour) holds the putnee, failed in his attempt to obtain through the civil courts the annulment of the putnee tenure, actually summoned his ryots of another estate who had been in the habit of receiving Mr. Larmour's advances for producing indigo, and took from them personal recognizances in various amounts, binding them down not to sow a beegah of land for the Bengal Indigo Company.

8. Mr. Savi is of opinion that what is most required is the power to obtain by summary process, in the magistrate's court, a lien upon the land for the sowing of which advances are proved to have been made. He also takes the same view as Mr. Larmour regarding the urgent want of some legal provision that shall render the instigator to a breach of contract criminally responsible. The ryot, he considers, if left to himself, would comparatively rarely evade the performance of his contract, and that it is the arbitrary influence of the hostile zemindar in the majority of cases which makes the ryot who has received advances refractory.

9. Mr. Tissendie also points out the utter inefficacy of the remedy afforded to the planter against the ryot evading his contract through the civil courts, and urges that necessity has compelled the planter frequently to have recourse to arbitrary measures to enforce his rights, the maintenance of which the present state of law is practically insufficient to guarantee; he considers that, to make the law effective in this respect, the evasion of contracts to produce indigo must be treated as a criminal offence.

10. The other gentlemen whom I consulted have replied to my communication in a joint letter, copy of which I annex for your information, as the most forcible and concise expression of their views on this all-important subject.

11. No better argument can be adduced of the insufficiency of the civil courts to afford redress to the planter, against the ryot evading his contract, than the generally asserted fact that recourse is never had to those courts to obtain redress in such cases. The generally expressed opinion is, that summary process in the magistrate's court alone affords a remedy applicable to the circumstances of the case, and the issue which it contains appears to me unanswerable, "Why should the breach of all other contracts for a specific work be treated as a misdemeanor, and the person refusing to cultivate indigo, for the labour expended on which he has received advances, be held amenable to the civil court only?" If theoretically the enforcement of a civil contract by penal enactments be regarded as wrong in principle, the theory, if at all, should be uniformly adopted; the circumstances of the country which rendered it expedient to treat the artizan failing to perform his contract as a misdemeanor, are no less applicable to the refractory cultivator, who pockets the money advanced to him for producing a certain quantity of indigo and subsequently refuses to meet his engagement.

12. I think that the re-enactment of the rescinded sections of Regulation V. of 1830, or the framing a new law, that shall embrace the several suggestions conveyed in the communications of the indigo planters, as above-mentioned, accompanied by such restrictions for the protection of the ryot as Regulation VII. of 1819 contains in regard to other contracts, is much required, and that the introduction of some such measure would have a very salutary effect in all indigo-growing districts. I would give jurisdiction to the magistrate's court to the extent of entertaining all summary suits instituted to enforce the performance by the ryot of his contract to produce a certain quantity of indigo, both at the time of sowing the seed and cutting the plant. The magistrate should be empowered to order the land to be sown, or the plant to be delivered, for the benefit of the person making the advances. If the ryot should prove recusant, and elect to undergo the penalty for non-fulfilment of contract, the planter should, I think, be guarded against the loss of his crop by obtaining in such case a lien on the land to the extent of producing thereon the crops for which he is proved to have made advances. Such penalties also should be provided for the offence of instigating a ryot to evade his contract as would serve to secure the person making advances for the cultivation of indigo from the mischievous effects of the ill-will of a zemindar. On the other hand, if the breach of contracts of this nature is to become a criminal offence, these contracts must be of a more specific and definite character than I take to be the prevailing custom at the present time—they must be written, and the conditions specific as regards the amount of cash advance, the quantity of indigo to be produced, and the extent and identity of the land upon which it is to be grown. I would limit the period of contract to three years, and if some inexpensive mode of registration of such contracts could be adopted it would give a more bonâ fide character to the transaction. Unless the contract could be shown to be of the specific nature above-mentioned, the suit instituted to enforce the performance of it would be rejected, as, whilst it is doubtless expedient to provide some effective summary process by which the planter may legally enforce the fulfilment of the contract, care must be taken to ascertain that the engagement which the ryot has failed to perform was voluntarily entered into by him, and that its conditions were clearly laid down and understood by the contracting party. The remedy through the civil courts is practically no less insufficient for the protection of the ryot in one sense than for the planter in another. Practically the ryot who has once taken advances for the cultivation of indigo is held to be under a perpetual engagement to produce so much indigo, or it may be an increased quantity from time to time; he has not the option of continuing or abandoning the cultivation of the plant, as he may find most profitable to himself. Whilst therefore it is expedient to afford legal protection, in the only way in which, under the circumstances of the case, it can prove effective to the planter, care must be taken that the ryot is not made criminally liable for the performance of a contract which he did not undertake of his own free will.

13. At Mr. Forlong's request I take this opportunity of forwarding a statement with which he has favoured me, showing the proportion of lands appropriated to the cultivation of indigo and other produce throughout the whole estates of Messrs. Hills and Company in this district.

From W. Forlong, F. Maclagan, E. Roberts, J. White, J. W. Smith, H. Sibbald, and J. Burrell, Esqrs., to F. R. Cockerell, Esq., Magistrate, Zillah Nuddea, dated 30 June 1858.

Dear Sir,

WE duly received your letter of the 5th instant, which would have met with more immediate attention from us had not some of us been from home, and in place also of each addressing you separately, we have thought it better to offer our united opinions relative to the important suggestions made by the Commissioner in his letter to the Government of Bengal, No. 94, dated 19th August 1856.

2. We are glad to see that the Commissioner confesses that the law is deficient in the way of affording the planters redress, when the ryot is guilty of a breach of his contract with him to sow the land for which he had duly received an advance. This indeed is the chief grievance of which the planter has to complain in conducting his business; and surely the legislature might arrive at some proper solution of this difficulty by an Act that would fairly protect both the planter and the ryot.

3. We wrote the Commissioner remarks relative to the repeal of Regulation V. of 1830, in as far as it relates to its two most important Sections, II. and III.,

but we are not aware that these clauses were repealed from any reason save that it was thought unjust to visit the breach of a civil contract with penal consequences; nothing in the working of the Act proved that it had operated oppressively, but on the contrary it is well known that the then Governor General, Lord William Bentinck, looked upon the Act as one of the most beneficial he had passed, and that its operation had proved most satisfactory. The Act, we are aware, was regarded with anything but approval by the home Government; but Lord William, seeing how favourable its practical results were, refused to adopt the opinions of those who, uninformed as to the circumstances which made such an Act necessary, could only prove that in law it was theoretically wrong; and that the breach of the civil contracts between the planter and the ryot could only justify civil proceedings on the part of the former against the latter, and which proceedings, in a country like this, and with such a crop as indigo, left the planter practically without any redress whatever.

4. The Act was repealed we think in 1835, shortly after Lord William Bentinck left India, and since that time the planter has been absolutely without any redress when ryots have been guilty of a breach of their engagements with him, a state of things which has only forced upon the planter an immense expenditure to secure the cession to him of zemindaree rights, so as to leave him not quite so much at the mercy of either the law or ryot. The Commissioner justly observes that redress through the civil courts is subject to so much delay, and in many respects is so inoperative that he doubts whether planters have recourse to the law at all as it now stands; such doubts may indeed in this district be reduced to a certainty, for no planter ever thinks of taking such a step to recover his just due against any ryot.

5. With reference to the suggestions of the Commissioner, that some summary process should be created so as to compel the ryot to act up to his engagement with the planter, we thank him for the same, but unless such redress is to be obtained through a magistrate's court it would be fruitless: in a Moonsiff's Court few planters would think of proceeding against a ryot in the hope of gaining lands of which the ryot was conspiring to deprive him.

To give the planter the right by a summary process, through the magistrate's court, to the occupancy of the land for which he had advanced, for the time being, for his indigo crop, would undoubtedly be beneficial, and an Act which would greatly tend to putting a stop to disputes about indigo cultivation, and also make the ryot much less at the mercy of influential parties opposed to the planter, who so often, for selfish objects of their own, induce the ryots to evade their engagements with the factory. Against such parties also the planter ought to have some summary criminal redress. Any Act would be most incomplete in only punishing the ryot for breach of contract, leaving unscathed the very parties under whose coercion he had acted in so doing. Every planter could offer numerous instances of ryots having been compelled against their will to break their engagements with him; and when such conspiracy to injure can be brought clearly home to any party, the law should enable the magistrate to take up the case as a serious misdemeanor, and punish the same accordingly.

6. We might now make some remarks as to what the Commissioner observes relative to unpopularity of the indigo crop, and we think that we could easily show that, as regards this district at any rate, there has been great exaggeration as to the dislike of the ryot to cultivate indigo. We believe many are under the impression that the planters in Nuddea have almost a monopoly of the lands for indigo cultivation, and that the same acts as a great burden on the population generally, the truth being that not a third of the population of the district is connected with indigo, and we believe that even in the zemindarees held by planters, not above one-fifth or one-sixth portion of the lands are in any instance cultivated for indigo, and generally a much smaller proportion. We may add also that not above five per cent. of the area of the district is at all given up for indigo purposes.

This subject, however, would lead to the present communication extending to too great a length, and we must therefore leave it for some future opportunity.

ABSTRACT of the Cultivated and Uncultivated Lands, Crops, Population, &c., in the Villages constituting the Neechindipore, Katcheekatta, Hurrah Sonadah and Nundunpore Concerns.

In the five Concerns there are 32 Factories comprising 467 Villages, of which 304 Villages are held in Putnee Talook or in izara.

Total lands attached to the 467 villages -	9,51,775	Beegahs, of which 7,49,618 beegahs are cultivated, and 2,02,157 beegahs uncultivated.
Total dwelling-houses -	50,153	Houses, inhabited by 2,73,542 people, averaging 5½ per house, and in the proportion of 1,22,375 Hindoos to 1,51,167 Mahomedans.
Total lands cultivated for rice -	5,24,539	Beegahs, of which two-thirds are again available for cold weather crops sown in October, such as linseed, wheat, gram, pepper, sursah, teal, &c., &c., &c.
Lands cultivated by the Ryots for other crop, such as tobacco, sugar-cane, pepper, mulbury, &c., &c.	1,30,789	Beegahs.
Total lands cultivated for indigo -	94,290	Beegahs, of which 76,215 beegahs are cultivated by ryots, and 18,075 beegahs neezabad or factory private cultivation.
Total Beegahs -	7,49,618
Estimated value of crops from the above cultivated lands.	5,24,539	Beegahs rice, averaging say 3 maunds per beegah, and present value in the Bazaar 1.8. per maund -	Total value, Co.'s Rs. 23,60,425
Again -	3,02,295	Beegahs, or two-thirds of the above rice cultivation in oil seed crops, &c., &c., as above, and averaging about 3 maunds per beegah; estimated present value 2.4. per maund -	20,40,491
Again -	1,30,789	Beegahs for cold weather crops, averaging 3 maunds, per beegah, and value at present -	8,82,825
Again -	94,290	Beegahs, cultivated for indigo, producing this season 3,000 mds., or 40 mds. per 1,000 beegahs, factory measure, equal to 1,250 beegahs zemindaree measure, present value 220 per md. -	6,60,000
		Total value of produce from the above lands -	59,43,741
Proportion of the indigo cultivation to the total lands, one anna, nine pie.		Proportion also of the indigo cultivation by ryots, not including the factory private land, one anna four pie to the total land.
Ditto, to the total cultivated lands, two ans.		Ditto, the same to the total cultivated, one anna eight pie.
Population of the Neechindipore Concern	85,699	No. of indigo ryots	8,235
" Katchikatta "	1,06,760	" "	5,741
" Nundunpore "	37,331	" "	1,878
" Hurrah "	30,761	" "	2,156
" Sonadah "	12,991	" "	1,047
Total Population -	2,73,542	Indigo ryots -	19,057
Proportion of value of the indigo produced to the other crops, about two annas.
Estimated rent receivable from the above 467 villages, about 6 lacs 60 thousand.
Proportion of rent on the value of the crops produced, one-ninth.
The indigo crop only occupies the land for half the year, as, immediately the crop is cut in August, the land is available for a cold weather crop, or is left by the ryots for a crop of indigo seed.

Each representing one house, and showing at 5½ per house, rather more than one-third of the population interested in indigo.

From the Honourable A. Eden, Joint Magistrate of Baraset, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 500), dated 19 June 1858.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter No. 30, of the 17th ultimo, calling for a report on any disturbances connected with the sowing of indigo which have occurred in my district during the last two seasons, I have the honour to report that during the season of 1857 we had no dispute at all worth recording. There were a few misunderstandings between Mr. Hampton and his ryots, which were all amicably settled.

This year there have been two disputes, I can hardly call them disturbances; the first was the Charchat case, which has been fully reported to you, and regarding which much correspondence has passed between us, and with respect to the rights of which case I believe we entertain very different opinions. It will suffice to say that a dispute arose between Mr. Larmour and his ryots regarding his right as dur-izaradar on a short lease to measure the ryots' lands, with a view to increase their jumma.

The

The question, however, was settled out of court by Mr. Larmour's agreeing not to measure if his ryots would sow indigo for him; both parties agreed, and the ryots took advances from him. After they had done so, Mr. Larmour wished to get released from his part in the agreement, and appealed to you. The ryots evidently thought this unfair, and complained to me. To punish them for complaining, Mr. Larmour's servants committed great oppression, marking all their best lands and levying cesses. A serious affray appeared to be impending. I deputed a darogah to keep the peace. Mr. Larmour considered that this was equivalent to my preventing the ryots from sowing, and complained to you to this effect. You appeared to be of his opinion, and directed me to the effect, "That the darogah is not there to protect the ryots any more than he was there to protect the farmer; the ryots should be told authoritatively that they should fulfil their obligations whatever they may be, and those who fail to do so will take the consequence."

2. I accordingly, in pursuance of your wishes, went to Charghat, and the ryots sowed two beegahs for every plough they possessed, without any disturbance.

3. The next case I reported to you in my letter No. 431, dated 7th June 1858, after investigating it myself in the Mofussil. This case might have led to a serious disturbance. The Baraset Indigo Concern has this year sown very much more than it has ever sown before for years without the slightest disturbance, until after the sowings were properly all over; then, from some unaccountable causes, Mr. Hampton sent his sudder zemindaree amlah to sow the lands in villages with which the factory had had no dealings for years. These amlah collected some 200 ploughs, and ploughed up all the best lands of two villages, rice crop included, and sowed indigo: for the greater portion of these lands no attempt or excuse is made, for some of the lands claimants are brought forward from other villages, but the men do not make the slightest attempt to establish any claim, and three of these false claimants actually complained to me that they had been ordered to claim the lands under threats of a fine of 20 rupees each, and applied for protection from my court, as they did not wish to do so. The other claimants have all run away, and never came near me when I was in the mofussil investigating the case. Mr. Cockburn, the assistant, who in Mr. Hampton's absence acted for him, did not, I am bound to say, attempt to screen the factory people by any false witnesses or claims. He accompanied me over all the lands, and acknowledged that the oppression had been very great.

4. In one village the ryots turned out and drove the factory people off the lands, and beat them slightly, and are charged with having confined two police burkundauzes. This latter fact, however, I do not credit. The burkundauzes were helping the factory as the police always do when deputed to keep the peace, and were in my opinion instigated to make this complaint by the factory amlah. However, I believe that in the crowd they took the burkundauzes off to the village and let them go again, their object being to induce them to give evidence on their side. I instructed the ryots that they might do what they liked with the crop, with the exception of a small piece claimed by a man who says he has advances from the factory, but from the mofussil investigation I am satisfied that this man has nothing whatever to do with the lands. The case is now under investigation. The factory proceedings on this occasion will tend very much to reduce the factory sowings next year.

5. As regards the extract of your letter to Government, forwarded with the letter under reply, I beg to remark that, although in my opinion it is very objectionable that the police and criminal courts should take cognizance of and have jurisdiction in mere mercantile transactions, such as enforcing the fulfilment of contracts to cultivate particular crops, yet the planters would be entitled to ask for a more summary and satisfactory process than they have at present if such a thing as a real bona fide contract to cultivate indigo existed.

6. From information derived from planters and ryots of every district, regarding which I have had an opportunity of making inquiries, I am perfectly satisfied that contracts, i. e., engagements voluntarily entered into by both parties for the purpose of mutual benefit, are almost entirely unknown. The manner in which the so-called contracts are made is as follows :—

The blacksmith of each village furnishes the planter with a list of every plough in the village. The owners of the ploughs are then sent for into the factory, and are informed that they will have to sow a certain amount of land, generally two beegahs for each plough. This estimate being made, each man receives 2 rupees per beegah advance, whether willing or not; from this 2 annas are deducted, or in some cases subsequently charged to the ryot's indigo accounts for stamps. The ryot then signs his name on stamped paper, generally blank, and this is called a contract. No particular spot of land is mentioned even where the paper is filled up; it is generally considered preferable by "high planters" that the papers should be kept entirely blank, so that whenever the ryot demurs to obey a factory order, he is brought to submission by a threat of filling up his stamped papers as a heavy promissory note. I have heard this threat made use of more than once myself.

7. The only men who ever go to the factories willingly for advances are those who go openly with the intention of defrauding either the planter or the ryot. These are the middlemen, generally prosperous ryots, who have a number of jotedars under them. When in want of money for a law-suit or any other purpose they go to the planter who gives a large advance, but this man never sows a cottah of indigo himself; he makes all his jotedars sow five cottahs or a begah, and thus produces the requisite quantity of plant, sends it all to the factory in his own name, and takes the price himself, and never pays a farthing to the jotedar who has actually grown the plant. The planter never oppresses these men, as they have too much influence, and they are the only men who really ever make money from the factories, except the amlah. In nearly every village in the indigo-growing portion of this district one pucca house may be seen, the history of its owner will be nearly always found to be such as I have related above. There is another class who come for advances. These are men of notoriously bad character whose sole intention is to get money to defraud the factory. If the planter chooses to give advances to such men, he must run the risk without expecting aid of the police. The Agra Bank, or any other commercial house, might as reasonably demand the assistance of the police to recover money advanced without sufficient security.

8. I should quite agree with the remarks contained in your letter to Government if these contracts were willingly entered into, but as I am perfectly convinced that they are not, I think that the less summary the process to compel their fulfilment the better. If these contracts were willingly made by the ryots, the planter would have little cause to have recourse to any court at all. The whole of the crops in Bengal are grown under advances, yet we never hear of the mahajuns complaining that the ryot won't sow his rice, or jute, or tobacco crop; the reason is, that they sow their crop on what land they like, and sell it at the market price. Ryots have been known to get over 100 rupees per beegah from their tobacco crop this year. The average of an indigo crop is two per beegah, that is 10 bundles, at 5 bundles for the rupee; at the very highest rate known the crop never exceeds 25 bundles, which would give 5 rupees, from which the advance, the price of seed and cultivation are to be deducted, for the price never varies; there is no market price. The mere fact of the way in which the ryots deliver their plant when cut is sufficient to show the spirit in which it is sown. They never take it to the factory themselves. They cut it and send it in, and make no inquiries about it. They are quite indifferent as to what amount has been credited to them. They know that if they have sent enough to pay their advances twice over, care will be taken to leave a balance in the favour of the factory, so that there will be a hold over them for the next year. The planter's sole object is not to recover his advances, but to prevent their recovery. I believe that there is scarcely a ryot in Bengal who would not pay up his advances to-morrow if it would exempt him from future cultivation of indigo.

9. If the planter was to pay a fair price for his plant, and one that would remunerate the ryot, there is no reason why he should be less willing to sow this than than any other crop. There is no crop that requires so little care; it requires neither irrigation nor manure.

10. There are other reasons which render the cultivation of indigo so unpopular, viz., that the ryot is constantly sent for to the factory regarding his indigo; if he does not bribe the ameens, his indigo is reported as dirty. Twenty or 30 coolies are then sent to weed it, and the expense is charged to the ryot's account; this is very unsatisfactory for the ryots, but satisfactory for the planter. It increases the ryot's debt, and is another link in his chains.

11. After he has made the so-called contract, the ameens come to mark his land and enter it in the chitta. They of course choose the very best land the man possesses, and generally select one or two plots manured for tobacco, or else close to his house, to prevent which he has to pay the ameen a bribe equal to three or four times the value of the indigo he will grow. Again, although the planter is generally the izaradar also, he never remits the rent of the land which is under cultivation for him, and he insists upon the indigo land being changed every year, so that the same crop may not be sown on the same land twice running. All this annoys and irritates the ryots.

12. If planters want indigo they must make up their minds to pay for it. There is no reason that I can discover why a planter should not take a jumma of each plot of land that he requires. This would settle all disputes at once; the expense would be no more than it is now, as a stamped paper is taken every year from the ryots, but all such pottahs should be registered, and I think for indigo contracts a lower rate of registration fee might be allowed, such as allowing the whole lands of a village to be registered in one paper. The cost would be trifling, and the ryot would not then deny that he had given the land and made a contract, but even then they would frequently have to make contracts under coercion; the planter being also the landlord has the ryots so entirely in his hands. The real cause of the oppression in indigo cultivation arises from this combination. Again, the oppression of the factory servants is beyond description. They are generally selected for their unscrupulous character; very frequently a troublesome educated ryot opposes the factory merely that he may obtain employment by being brought over with an appointment at the factory. He then turns against the ryots whom he first instigated to opposition. Many of them are retired or discharged mooktears employed for their known powers of chicanery and getting up cases, teaching false witnesses, &c. They are all underpaid, and it is an understood thing that they are to collect what they can from the ryots. One of the great causes of complaint of the Charchat ryots to Mr. Larmour was the gross oppression exercised by his naib in collecting illegal cesses from them under the head of parbunny. Mr. Larmour refused altogether to entertain such complaints, as it was an established custom; in fact, if the ryots did not pay the servants, the factory would have to do so.

13. In Messrs. Watson's establishment, it used to be, and I believe is still, the custom only to pay servants' wages on the average of the crop; thus, if the indigo crop averaged six bundles per beegah, they received six months' pay; eight bundles, eight months', &c. As the crop rarely exceeds ten bundles, the men scarcely ever receive a year's pay: they of course make the ryots pay the difference. But perhaps the principal cause of disputes regarding sowing, is the total inaccessibility of the planter to the ryot. In the greater number of the factories of Bengal, the ryots can never go and complain to the planter of the oppression of his subordinates. Every complaint comes through the amlah, and the planter is guided entirely by the amlah's report. The planters are in the habit of expatiating of their superior knowledge of the condition and sentiments of the Bengallees from being so constantly in communication with them, but an inquiry would prove that, so far from this being the case, there is no class in India so inaccessible to their own ryots as the planters.

14. In fact, the ryots dare not go to a factory, unless protected by a letter from the magistrate. Ryots frequently come to me and ask for a letter stating their cause of complaint, that they may thus get an interview with the planter. Both in the Charchat case and the Morukpore case alluded to above, before the dispute occurred, some of the principal ryots came in each case, and asked for letters to Messrs. Larmour and Hampton. In the first case, they went to Mulnath, and

Mr. Larmour would not see them, although they had actually come to offer to sow indigo for him; all he said was, "let the ryots go home;" as some of the ryots afterwards said to me, "if he had only abused us, it would have been something." Mr. Hampton also believed his naib's statement, that the men I sent were turbulent characters, and instead of settling the dispute and sowing his indigo quietly, he was led into the forcible sowing already reported. When I was at Charchat, on the border of Nuddea district, a number of ryots came to me, and asked me to represent their case to the magistrate of Nuddea. On asking them why they did not go into Nuddea, or to Mr. Larmour, they said that they could not speak to Mr. Larmour if they went to him, and that the whole district belonged to him, and they could not get to Nuddea without being stopped and brought back by the factory servants. Of the merits of their cases, I know nothing, as it was no part of my duty to inquire.

15. I think the present laws are ample protection for the present system of cultivation, which deserves no protection. The reason why the planters have not recourse to the civil courts is, that they have no proofs and no written bond fide contracts. The Baraset concern professes to have advances due for many thousand rupees, but they have no proof whatever in support of their claim. They have no one to blame but themselves that their accounts and settlements have been conducted in such a slovenly way. It appears to me outrageous, that they should look to the police to recover balances which they are unable to substantiate in a court of justice, and it must be remembered that the present balances are all founded on these old arrears and their interest. On the sale of a factory, these advances are not, I imagine, paid for by the new purchaser: he therefore has no claim on them. A very small portion of these balances of old advances are actual money paid by the factory: they arise from the system of making up accounts.

16. The planters in general will, I believe, admit the hardship of the present system as regards the cultivator, and acknowledge that if a remunerative price were paid, the ryots would willingly sow indigo as they do other crops on advance received from the native mahajuns. But they argue that "if we were to pay a higher price, the indigo would not pay, and if we did not give advances, we should have no hold over the ryot, and he would take his plant into the market, and competition would then raise the price to such an extent as would prevent the manufacture of indigo being carried on." This is an evil that would, in my opinion, cure itself, for the planter would not give a pice that would not remunerate him. The rise in price would therefore have a limit. But whether it pays or not, appears to me a matter of secondary consideration. Government cannot be expected to keep up a system of forced cultivation, and a forced market, to make the fortunes of a few hundred Europeans at the expense of millions of natives. The question appears to resolve itself into this: which is of the most importance, that a certain quantity of a particular blue dye should be annually exported, or that a great and daily increasing cause of discontent and misery to the whole agricultural population of Bengal should be removed? That this discontent is increasing, and is the constant topic of conversation amongst every class of natives, cannot be denied by those who have an opportunity of judging of the real feelings of the natives; and I believe that this feeling has been very much enhanced by an idea that the Government is determined to uphold the planter against the ryot; and I think that there is cause to view with considerable alarm, the enactment of any measure which will encourage the belief that the planter will be invested with more summary powers. If there is any difficulty in sowing indigo in this country in a fair, honest, and legal way, it will be surely better that the cultivation of indigo should be left for Africa and other countries, where it can be produced without oppressing the people; there is an ample field for speculators and capitalists to invest their money in other products in this country, which would mutually benefit them and the cultivators.

17. I quite think that some change in the law is requisite, although I doubt whether it should be, under present circumstances, in favour of the planter; at present, as I pointed out in my report of the 17th May 1858, the magistrate is frequently placed in the awkward position of having to carry out the instructions of his executive superior by ignoring the rulings of his judicial superior.

18. In the case of deputy magistrate Abdool Luteef, he endeavoured to protect some ryots from having their lands forcibly sown by Mr. Larmour. Mr. Hope was directed to re-investigate, and reprimanded Moulvi Abdool Luteef, and punished the ryots. Mr. Hope's decision was approved by Government, but upset, with severe animadversion, by the judge.

19. You directed me, in the Charghat case, "to instruct the ryots authoritatively that they should fulfil their obligations whatever they may be, and those who fail to do so will take the consequences," which consequences, as far as my court was concerned, were nil. My direct interference, therefore, could only be construed into an illegal attempt on the part of the police to assist the planter against the ryot. By the Constructions 385, 661, the Nizamut Adawlut ruled that a planter had no right "to demand the assistance of the police for the purpose of compelling the ryots to fulfil their contracts, and that their only remedy is in the civil court, and that the magistrate cannot interfere in such cases." The only order which a magistrate can give is to depute the police to keep the peace, which may mean anything or nothing. Take, for instance, a case in which a ryot wants to sow his rice on a particular plot of land in which the planter wants to sow indigo; the darogah may keep the peace by letting the planter sow, and keeping the ryots quiet, or letting the ryots sow, and driving away the planter's men, or preventing either party from sowing, and thus virtually attaching the land. Whichever he does, one party is sure to be dissatisfied, and there can be no doubt that the ryot is the only party who really has a claim on the land. He may have contracted, either willingly or under compulsion, to sow a certain quantity of land for the planter, but what land is not specified in the contract; the planter may have selected this particular plot of land after the contract was made, and put his mark upon it, but he has no legal right to do so. Yet if the darogah was to prevent him sowing, he would never hear the end of it.

20. A case under point is now before me. The darogah of Hobrah was deputed by me to keep the peace between Mr. Hampton and the ryots. Mr. Hampton's men came with some 200 ploughs, and ploughed up the rice crop and sowed indigo. The darogah stood and looked on. On my going out and seeing the state of the case, and that these lands belonged to men who had nothing to do with the factory, I reprimanded the darogah for allowing them to be sown. He said, "What could I do?" I was ordered to keep the peace, not to inquire into the right of the factory to sow. I could keep the peace by keeping the ryots quiet, but not by stopping the factory people; they threatened to sue me for every hour's delay in sowing the seed. I suspected they had no right to sow, but had no order to stop them if I thought they were acting illegally. I did not punish him, for I saw what a difficult position he was in, and I am aware that if he had stopped the sowing, the factory people would not have rested till they had ruined him.

21. Mr. Larmour complained to you that I had caused all his ryots to refuse to sow, by saying that it was optional with them to sow or not, as they liked. You appeared to think that I had acted wrongly if I had done so. I never did do this, as I explained to you. But what can be said of a system, the consequence of which is that such an expression should be able to stop the cultivation of a particular crop. I am aware that if I was to express such an opinion to the ryots it would tend to put a stop to the cultivation of indigo. But it would take a great deal of positive force to dissuade them from sowing a cottah less tobacco, jute, or rice, than they intended.

22. An honest determined committee of inquiry would soon show that all I have stated is true, provided that a guarantee was given to the cultivators that measures would be taken to protect them for the future, otherwise they would only injure themselves by stating the truth, and would conceal their real condition through fear of the consequences.

23. You will excuse me if you consider that I have said more than is befitting an officer holding the subordinate office that I do, but I think it is the duty of every man to give his opinion fully on so important a subject, even although it may be opposed to the expressed opinion of his superiors.

P.S.—Another reason suggests itself to me why the criminal court should neither adjudicate summarily in questions of contracts to sow indigo, nor compel their enforcement.

Even supposing such contracts to be voluntary engagements, their non-fulfilment would not necessarily imply fraud. The ryot might have taken the advance with the distinct intention of sowing the amount of indigo he engaged for, but by oppression of his zemindar, or loss of his cattle or other misfortune, be unable to carry out his intention without the slightest mala fides. It would be very unfair that he should be treated as a criminal, and it would become a mere question of adjudication as to what amount of the advance and what interest he should return.

This, I apprehend, would only be decided as a civil suit, and as such objections would in all probability be raised in every case of non-fulfilment of contracts, the magistrate's office would be converted into a civil court to adjust a question of damages.

From E. C. Molony, Esq., Magistrate of Jessore, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 424), dated 29 July 1858.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter No. 30, dated the 17th of May, calling for a report on the disturbances connected with the sowing of indigo during the past two seasons, I have the honour to forward a statement for the two years ending May 1858, similar to the one I submitted in 1856.

There have been three affrays in which parties were said to have been killed, in one of which only the fact of murder was established satisfactorily. There have been others of a less serious nature.

I have generally found that where there has been systematic and active resistance by combination to the sowing of indigo, it has been excited by some influential party, or by some reasons apart from the general dislike to the cultivation of indigo. This I ascribe to the fact of its being the weak point with the planter, and consequently the one assailed with the best chance of doing injury, and with the least chance of being injured. I would certainly recommend the enactment of a law to allow the planter to enforce the fulfilment of his contract by summary process. If the process of allowing the planter himself to enforce his right to sow, as recommended in the 15th paragraph of your report to Government, is adopted, the abuse of it would require to be guarded against by very strict rules as to the contracts that would be recognized in the court to which the ryot would have the option of appealing. Mr. Beaufort, I recollect, when Joint Magistrate of Pubna, wrote a note on the subject of contracts for indigo, at the request of the Lieutenant Governor. I have not been able to find this note for reference, but I recollect that it contained some valuable suggestions, and it will doubtless exist in your office.

— No. 10. —

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to J. Cockburn, Esq., Deputy Magistrate, attached to the Dacoity Department, Moorshedabad (No. 7243), dated 17 December 1859.

Sir,

THE Lieutenant Governor having been informed that you were for several years employed as an indigo planter in this country, has desired me to request that you will favour him with your opinion, formed from your experience, of the present system of indigo cultivation, giving any information and mentioning any facts illustrative of that system which may be within your knowledge.

From J. Cockburn, Esq., Dacoity Deputy Magistrate, in Charge of the Jessore Office, to Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 31 December 1859.

My Lord,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 7243, dated the 17th instant (received on the 24th), requesting me to state, for the information of his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, my opinion, formed from experience, of the present system of indigo cultivation, and to mention any facts illustrative of the system which may be within my knowledge.

In reply, I beg to state, that I have ever considered the present system a great mistake, but a mistake which, if any endeavour were made to rectify, would, I think, bring certain ruin on most planters at the time, however well it may thereafter answer.

My experience has been derived from the system pursued in the district of Baraset, and the Kishnaghur factories bordering on it. I believe there is less of what is called "zooloom" there than anywhere else, for the ryots are proverbially more independent about those parts than in any other part of Bengal.

There are two entirely different systems pursued in "Illaka" and "Bay Illaka" villages, in making advances for the cultivation of indigo plant. In the latter generally it is a matter of choice; in the former it is compulsory. In a "bay illaka" village, or a few villages of the kind entirely surrounded by the planter's "illaka" ones, or if the zemindar were friendly to the planter, of course choice would be out of the question, but a village or villages quite distinct and at some distance from the planter's "illaka," and the zemindar of which favoured his ryots, it would be impossible for the planter to force advances on them, or even if they held former advances (which is often the case), to get them to settle their accounts. The most miserable and destitute of these men are those who come into the factories when in distress and beg for advances, fully resolved, when the time for sowing came, to evade any contract they may make (and in this they would to a certainty be backed up by the zemindar). The planter is fully aware of this, but his great object being to show an increasing cultivation on the books of the factory, thereby increasing its value, he makes the advance trusting to his luck at some future time to prove in the courts that his advance was taken voluntarily, and the contract entered into unfulfilled; and if an order can be procured from the magistrate of the district to compel the ryot to sow, or a darogah is sent out to prevent a breach of the peace while the planter is sowing his own lands (which is much the same thing), why, the lands of the ryots who took advances are not only sown, but adjoining lands belonging to other "bay illaka" ryots, who have never had advances, are at the same time finished off, the darogah being present the whole time and ready to report that no "zooloom" was committed in his presence! These ryots, whose lands have thus been forcibly sown, seeing they have no help for it, come in afterwards and take the usual advance of two rupees per beegah, thinking it just as well to get something for their lands at once, for they know full well that if they waited till the time of cutting and manufacturing it is very little plant they would be credited with. This is the way cultivation originates generally in bay illaka villages.

There is another way also, which is this, and is common about the large concerns in Kishnaghur and Jessore.

If a few "bay illaka" ryots with small and unprofitable jummas can be persuaded to sell them to the planter, he will pay them ten times the value of the jumma, as his object is only to get a footing at first in the village. As soon as he is in possession, he will sow the lands (which are intermixed with those of the other ryots) with indigo. This plant will be most carefully watched by his servants, four times as many servants being often allowed for the protection of these lands than would be allowed for the same amount of land in any other part of the concern, the object being to seize all cattle that may be found trespassing on or near the lands, and bring them into the factory; this will necessarily bring in the owners of the cattle, who are willing enough to pay any fine the planter may impose for damage done his plant, but this is not what he (planter) wants. The cattle are not released till the ryots, knowing full well what is required, at last agree to sow a few beegahs of indigo, but without taking advances: this is agreed to, and the cattle released (or perhaps they may be confined till the lands are sown). This being done, they are for the future factory ryots, for at the end of the year, whatever the produce of the lands may be, still the ryots will find that they owe the factory something upon which an account is at once opened, and they and their successors booked for ever. It does not require a particularly sharp mohurir to manufacture such an account.

In an "illaka" village it is quite a different thing: the method there adopted is summary and refreshing.

Immediately a planter gets the izara of a village, his principal object is to ascertain how many ploughs it contains (two beegahs to a plough being the lowest allowance). Of course, if he sent his servants from house to house to ascertain how many ploughs each ryot possessed, his returns would be decidedly erroneous and much below the correct number, for the ploughs would be concealed at the bottoms of tanks, or sent away to some adjacent "bay illaka" village, or disposed of in some other way till the inquiry ceased; then at the time of ploughing and sowing, when they would be reproduced, a few annas judiciously judiciously applied would blind the factory servants more effectually. The planter, knowing this, adopts a certain and satisfactory means of obtaining the information he requires by at once seizing and bringing into the factory the village blacksmith. He of course has had the making and repairing of every ploughshare in the village, is paid annually a certain sum by each ryot (in money or grain) for every plough in use throughout the year, and can tell exactly how many each man has.

Another person sent in for at the same time is the village barber, but this is merely to bind him down to report the marriages which occur in the village, as on the marriage of a girl the izzadar gets a nuzzer, called "Bâtee Salamee," of three rupees, and on that of a boy one rupee; however, this has nothing to do with the cultivation of indigo plant, and is exacted by all zemindars.

The information relative to the ploughs being obtained, the ryots are sent in for an advance of two rupees per beegah, at the rate of at least two beegahs (and sometimes six beegahs) per plough is made them; their signature (if they can write, if not they simply touch the pen) is taken to a blank stamp paper, the value of which (two or four annas, as the case may be) is added to the amount advanced (I mean to their account). The ameens and kalashees then go to the fields, and put the factory mark on the best lands (unless bribed), which may have been reserved and manured for months for the cultivation of a remunerative crop, and certainly not indigo, which cannot pay, as I shall show.

The ryot gets a nominal advance of two rupees per beegah. I say nominal, because, after he has made the usual present to the amlah, &c., there is very little of the two rupees left; but say he gets his two rupees, at the end of a good season his account per beegah would stand so:—

A beegah of the very best plant, 20 bundles, at five bundles for the rupee		Rs. a. p.
Deduct expenses incurred by ryot in cultivating that same beegah —
	Rs. a. p.
Stamp paper	2 -
1. Seed	10 -
2. Five ploughs	10 -
3. Sowing charges	3 -
Weeding ditto	6 -
4. Cutting ditto	4 -
5. Rent of land	1 -
6. Balance in favour of Ryot		13 -

1. Whatever the price of seed may be, the ryot is always charged at the rate of 10 annas per beegah.

2. Lands that have grown a previous crop, and are consequently partially broken up, require to be ploughed at least five times before being sown. Ploughs are generally hired at the rate of eight for the rupee.

3. This is the cost of one plough required at the time of sowing, previous to the seed being thrown into the ground, as also the cost of a bashee or bamboo ladder, which is drawn over the land by bullocks after it has been sown, and the cost of the hire of which is one anna.

4. It requires three labourers to cut a beegah of good plant in one day; this (if the ryot is unwilling to do it himself) is accomplished by the factory coolies, who are paid at the rate of 2. 8. a month each.

5. This is supposing the rent of the land to be 1. 8. per annum. The first six months of the Bengalee year (that is, from Bysack to Assin) are supposed to yield the most profitable crop to the ryot (this is the season for indigo), and the zemindar invariably receives two thirds of the annual rent for that period. If a ryot rented a beegah of land, the rent of which was 1. 8. per annum for only the latter six months of the year, he would pay the zemindar only eight annas, the crops raised in those six months being considered far less valuable than those capable of being raised in the previous six months.

6. It must not, however, be supposed for a moment that the ryot receives these 13 annas! Having been paid four rupees for his plant, the amlah are entitled to two annas on each rupee, which reduces his profits to five annas, and from this he has still to fee the ameen, kalashee, &c.

The amount of the original advance is never deducted from the value of the plant, if by so doing it releases the ryot from his liability to the factory, but the value of plant is paid him in full, and the original advance still stands against him on the factory books.

Every planter, on the above account being shown him, would select some different item to object to. One would say I never charge a pice for weeding, because I never have it done. I grant some lands, especially about Kishnaghur, do not require weeding, the land is so favourable to the growth of indigo that, in spite of grass, &c., it grows luxuriantly; but if they deduct the amount stated by me (six annas), they should be asked to state what the ryot is charged for the carriage of indigo plant to the vats. This is paid by some factories, but in many the ryot has to pay for the conveyance of his plant. Again, on those lands where weeding is not necessary, the ryot loses quite as much or more than would have been debited him for weeding expenses, from the loss sustained in rent; for lands on which weeds and grass are not found must have undergone great cultivation, are superior lands, and rented accordingly.

I may here add, that in factories not situated on rivers or lakes, and to the vats of which plant cannot be conveyed but by carts and bullocks, the ryots are even greater sufferers than where water-carriage is available, for this reason, that during the manufacturing season mofussil roads (where there are such things) are in a fearful condition, and the damage done their carts and bullocks is very considerable. They are paid at the rate of five rupees per 100 bundles; and when one comes to think that a cart cannot possibly bring in more than four bundles at a time, which, by factory measurement come to two or two-and-a-half bundles, and that a bullock never brings in more than three-fourths of a bundle at a time, and that perhaps the plant is being brought in from lands two or three miles distant from the vats, and from which more than two loads cannot possibly be brought in in a day, profit is a thing not even to be hinted at.

Another planter will say that a beegah of good plant will yield from 25 to 30 bundles; but they would find it difficult to show by their books that a ryot was ever credited with that amount of bundles to the beegah. During the whole period of my experience I never saw a beegah yield above 20 bundles, and that very seldom.

An average of 10 bundles to the beegah is thought a first-rate season; the general average in most good concerns is eight bundles.

When plant is sufficiently high to calculate the probable amount of bundles each beegah will cut, an average statement, called a coot, is made, in which the lands are divided into first, second, third, and fourth quality.

The coot of a thousand (1,000) beegahs of good plant would stand so:—

“Coot” of 1,000 Beegahs of good Plant.

	Beegahs.
First quality lands, which are expected to yield 20 bundles per beegah	250
Second quality lands, which are expected to yield 12 bundles per beegah	300
Third quality lands, which are expected to yield seven bundles per beegah	250
Fourth quality lands, which are expected to yield three bundles per beegah	50
TOTAL	850

The other 150 beegahs would have nothing fit to calculate, and would be entered as looksan, or loss.

I should mention, however, that the books of my own late factories would show a ryot who held an advance of 10 beegahs credited with 400 bundles in one season! But then that ryot was also the gomashta of the factory, and cut every other ryot a few bundles, which he added to his own account. The gomashtas and their relatives (if ryots) make of course a profit. No ryot, I am certain (by honest means), yet made a profit by cultivating indigo under the present system.

Some planter may, to confound me and confute the above statement, request Government to depute one of their servants to the concern nearest Calcutta, viz., Baraset. Here it is true that in nearly every village he will show a pukka upper-roomed house, surrounded with "golas," and every other sign of affluence, belonging to the headman of the village, and that same headman will allow that he made all his wealth by the cultivation of indigo; but then the question is, how? His word must be taken for it; he has no books or accounts to support his statement beyond those of the factory, which are so much waste paper, so far as the actual truth is concerned. Call on any mohurir of any factory to swear to the truth of any such account written by him, and he is certain to raise an objection.

The way these headmen have made their money is this: they hold an extensive jumma in the village, which they let out in small portions to the poorer ryots, who consequently become their "jotedars."

At the time the advances are being made at the factory, this headman goes in and says, "I will get you sown 100 beegahs in my village;" such and such a ryot will sow so much, another so much, and so on. The advances are written off in the names of those ryots, and the headman receives the money! When he gets back to his village he sends in for his "jotedars," informs them that each man is to sow a certain quantity of indigo for him, and perhaps, if in a particularly generous mood, he lets one off an old debt of a few seers of paddy (for he is their mahajun also), or gives another eight annas, and so on. The lands are sown, and the plant when cut and taken into the factory is accompanied by the headman, who dictates to the "Amdanee nobeesh" (or mohurir, who writes the plant account) what number of bundles he is to credit each man with, and what number himself (headman). This is the only way in which the cultivation of indigo pays the ryot.

The most convincing proof that indigo honestly cultivated is an unprofitable crop, and that the expenditure is by no means covered by the returns, is evident from the fact that most concerns have altogether discontinued or considerably reduced their neezabad sowings. I mean the neezabad that requires actual cultivation, not churs!

Where it is still carried on, the cost per beegah (exclusive of ground rent and price of seed) is never under Rs. 3. 4., vide margin.

I have put weeding down at six annas per beegah here, as also in a former part of this letter; but I don't mean to say that is what it really costs. It depends on the description of land, and may cost labour equivalent to two rupees per beegah; but six annas is the average of what a ryot generally gets to procure extra hands, and get his lands cleared rapidly; his own labour is in no case considered.

The books of some factories may show a profitable neez account, in fact they generally do, but they are never to be depended upon, the object of the amlah being to show that this cultivation pays, for this reason that, in consequence, a deal of money passes through their hands, the dishonest expenditure of which cannot easily be perceived; they consequently screw the ryots, and add a few of their bundles to the neez account, showing thereby each beegah to have cut some extraordinary number of bundles. Besides, neez bundles are measured fairly, that is, the measuring chain is put over the middle of the plant, whereas ryotty plant is invariably measured with the stocks protruding on each side of the bundle, the soft or leaf part of the plant being in the centre, over which the chain being passed with the whole strength of one of the strongest of the factory servants, the leaves and soft branches are compressed, and what with fair measurement would be two bundles, or a bundle-and-a-half, or perhaps more, is put down at one bundle!

I believe, however, I have far exceeded the limits it was intended that I should have confined myself to. I beg to apologise for having done so, but cannot conclude without saying this, that the ryots of a European indigo planter are far better situated than those of a native zemindar who works his own factories. These latter never receive a pie of advances, are never paid either the value of their plant or the amount expended in conveying it to the factory. The only expense to the zemindar is the price of seed (and a few of them keep a manager, whom of course they must pay); beyond this, and the cost of packing and conveying to Calcutta, I do not believe they expend a single pice! This I have witnessed with my own eyes, for I was surrounded by native factories, and saw for years the system they were carried on under.

Again, most European planters listen to the complaints of their ryots; and if they don't afford them redress, still the Bengal ryot is generally quite satisfied if he can only get at his "moneeb," and relate his grievances in his loudest voice. He can then go back to his village and brag about the friendly way he was treated, and this no doubt keeps the lower factory servants somewhat in check. But it is next to impossible for the ryot of a native zemindar to get to him. In the first place, he generally resides miles away, or in quite a different district from his factories, and an ordinary ryot cannot afford the time the journey there and back would occupy; besides, no ryot would attempt to face his zemindar without a rupee in his hand as a nuzzur. If he was fool enough to present himself without this necessary article, the result would undoubtedly be a shoe-beating and a summary ejection; in fact, it would be next to impossible for him to get to his zemindar without previously feeling the amlab, and showing them that he had the necessary nuzzur about him. And most ryots cannot afford this expensive style of visiting.

Whatever acts may be passed for the protection of the Bengal ryot will only affect the most blameless of planters, and those in whose concerns there is the least "zooloom." I allude to those planters who have no zemindary, &c., and who are consequently obliged to be more just and conceding in their dealings with their ryots. Those, on the contrary, who have zemindary, &c., will laugh at any laws that may aim at a reform in the present system; not that they would openly resist them, but that the law could never be brought to bear upon them, for this simple reason, that no ryot of theirs would dare to put himself under its protection, while his jumma, and in fact all he possessed in this world, were in the hands of the planter.

PETITION of Sreemunt Holdar and others, inhabitants of Collinga, Thannah Handrah, Zillah Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal; dated 12 August 1859.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT your Honor's petitioners most humbly beg leave to present to your Honor that Eshure Chunder Mitter, Gomashtha of Mr. William White, son of John White, of Bansbarria Indigo Factory, accompanied with thirty or thirty-two lattials, shurkeewallahs, together with hackeries, attacked their houses on 26th April, and plundered the ornaments of gold and silver, including the plates made of brass and bell metal, and in cash, as also the paddy, mustard seed, linseed, gram, wheat, cows and calves, &c., and drove the owners (your petitioners), together with their families.

Your Honor's petitioners, after having informed this catastrophe at Thannah, laid their complaint before the magistrate. The magistrate referred this suit to Mr. Howell, the deputy magistrate, who, after taking their respective complaints and witnesses, summoned the defendants by summon, and went to make a personal and local inquiry. After the local inquiry, he told both the plaintiffs and defendants to decide the dispute or complaint by arbitrators. Both the plaintiffs and defendants consented to it, and the case is not yet decided by the arbitrators.

The servants of the indigo planter has driven your Honor's petitioners from their houses, and has plundered their estates, amounted to six or seven thousand rupees; and the suit that was instituted for these is still pending on. It has costed your Honor's petitioners many rupees for the brick-built houses; they have their paternal jammy lands and trades; they have to get upwards of twenty or twenty-five thousand rupees from their debtors, and how they can leave these estates and retire to a different place?

Owing to their misfortunes, the Criminal Judges have not ever attempted to check the aggressions of the indigo planter, who is oppressing the ryots of Gobindpore, and has undone the Biswas family of Poragatcha.

It is not unknown to any one that the indigo planters are rich, violent, and cruel men.

Your

Your Honor's most humble petitioners most humbly pray that an order from your Honor should be issued to the Sessions Judge or the Commissioner of Circuit, or even at least to Baboo Dwarkanauth Dey, the Deputy Magistrate, to investigate the case, and thereby the oppressions of Mr. White would be discovered, and by means of which your petitioners would be able to recover their losses, and to go back to their respective houses.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

PETITION of Okhil Chunder Biswas, Inhabitant of Dariapore, Thannah Meherpore, Zillah Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal; dated 12 August 1859.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT your Honor's petitioner was a servant of Mr. William White, son of John White, of Bansbarria Indigo Factory; in his ordering your Honor's petitioner to oppress the ryots, both of his and others, your Honor's petitioner refused to do it; consequently, Mr. White, being much irritated, discharged him from his situation; after that, on the 21st April, he deputed one Omesh Chunder Ghose, inhabitant of Kistopore, with seven or eight men (shurkeewallahs), who having arrested your Honor's petitioner from the village of Joypoor, and carried him away, your Honor's petitioner's nephew, Beepin Behary Biswas, in order to release your Honor's petitioner from their hands, laid complaint before the magistrate on the 28th April; proofs were called upon from him, and referred the case to the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. Howell, who, after taking proofs, sent perwannah to the local police, with orders to release your Honor's petitioner; on this the mooktear of Mr. White sent the information to Mr. William White, who, and his servant, Omeshchunder Mookerjee, after consulting themselves, brought ten or twelve shurkeewallahs, who in the night time having apprehended your Honor's petitioner; carried him away within the limits of Mr. White's talooks, farms, and putnee estate, from village to village, giving nothing to eat but paddy. In this miserable state, on the night of the 28th May, being rainy, he made his escape and applied before the magistrate, and on his laying the complaint, he referred the suit to Mr. Howell, the Deputy Magistrate, who took his deposition on the 30th May and issued subpoenas on the witnesses, namely, his four witnesses, who, having appeared, gave their depositions. Of the remaining witnesses, your Honor's petitioner repeatedly petitioned to the deputy magistrate that they should be summoned by the darogah of the thannah, and also he verbally applied for the same repeatedly; but that officer, instead of hearing his proposal, now and then advised him for the sake of Mr. White to withdraw the case by a compromise. It is to be lamented that Mr. Howell advises your Honor's petitioner for compromise. Mr. Howell always dines with Mr. White, of Bansbarria factory, and writes letters to him frequently, and on his not trying the cases impartially, belonging to this factory, the oppression of that gentleman having been increased gradually, plundered at once three or four villages, and have ruined the innocent ryots of the village.

As your Honor's petitioner is a poor ryot, and the indigo factors are powerful and rich men and riotous, he therefore most humbly prays that his case be referred to the Deputy Magistrate, Dwarkanauth Dey, or to the Sessions Judge, or to the Commissioner of Circuit, for reinvestigation and trial, that the officers may summon his remaining witnesses through the police darogah, and to take their depositions by him, by means of which the defendants would be punished, and the amount of the loss of your petitioner might be recovered.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

PETITION of Ramcoomar Biswas and others, Inhabitants of Gobindpore, Thannah Hanshkhally, Zillah Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated 12 August 1859.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT your Honor's poor petitioners most humbly beg leave to represent their miserable situations before your Honor's awful presence.

That owing to the various kinds of oppressions made upon them by the indigo factors of this district, which if at full length are stated will be a very long representation, representation, therefore it is briefly stated as follows, for your Honor's favourable consideration and orders, that they may be able to inhabit in this country retaining their respects.

That the son of Mr. John White, Mr. William White, of Bansbarria Indigo Factory, and Mr. Hampton, the manager of Hanskhally Indigo Factory, the latter having arrived in this country after having ruined the ryots belonging to the Patkabarria and Hobrah, &c., indigo factories.

Now having engaged to Mr. White; he began to oppress your Honor's petitioners and others.

Messrs. J. and W. White having taken from the zemindars and talookdars their estates in farm and putnee in an enhanced annual jumma and value; some of the zemindars have given the same by their own will, but who have not at first consented to give their estate to them. They, by means of instituting groundless suits against them in the courts, and made them to expend much money, and having shown fears of different kinds, forcibly took possession of their estate; afterwards on demanding the excess rents from the ryots (your poor petitioners), not consenting to the same, and refusing to pay the enhanced rent, and not taking the advances of indigo plants, their houses are plundered, their cattle, &c., are forcibly carried off, and annoying them by not allowing them to cultivate the lands, keep them in confinement in the indigo cake godown, and are in the habit of taking their lives.

On their prosecuting for the same to the magistrate of the zillah, who at first does not ascertain whether the prosecutors' friends, who are in confinement in the factory, are still living or dead, but calling for proofs of his complaint.

Your Honor's poor petitioners being ryots, and the defendants indigo factors, rich and wealthy persons, who having held in farms and taking putnee of all the estates, every person resided therein are dependents and obedient to the factory gentlemen, they do not come to give the evidence in the court for the fear of the factory gentlemen. Should any one dare to come before the court for the purpose of giving his testimonies, the said gentlemen punish and ruin them in the manner above described, consequently it is impossible to produce any witnesses in court to prove the grievances. Now, the aforesaid gentlemen and Shomenauth Gangolee, the gomashtha of Hanskhally indigo factory, having entered to advance your Honor's petitioners by force, they refused to take the same. Being exceedingly irritated, and with a view of plundering their houses and properties sent some lattials and shurkeewallahs in their service, and carried off by plundering their cattle, and both paddy for their supporting and seed paddy for sowing; consequently, for want of paddy and cattle, they could not cultivate their lands for a year; their families are dying for want of sustenance; and that one Seetul Turufdar, an inhabitant of the village of Gobindpore, was carried off forcibly on the 9th Assin last, whether murdered or kept in prison is uncertain. For the release of that individual your Honor's petitioners have repeatedly reported to the police and petitioned to the magistrate; the police officers being satisfied with the pecuniary remuneration from the factory gentlemen, do not adopt necessary measures for the release of the man, and the zillah criminal authorities, unfortunately, do not pay any attention to the complaint; and, secondly, with the persuasion of ruining your Honor's petitioners, the factory gentlemen falsely instituted suits for balance of rents either in self or benamee, but Mr. C. S. Belli, late Collector of this district, being an upright and impartial judge, your petitioners have obtained redresses from those complaints.

Your Honor's petitioners being exceedingly distressed for supplying the costs of the aforesaid suits, they could not support themselves and their families with ease for the present, and it is impossible for them to gain the suits which are instituted against them by the wealthy indigo merchant.

Your Honor's petitioners most humbly beg to solicit, that in order to prevent the oppressions of the aforesaid indigo merchant (who, exclusive of his ruining the village of Gobindpore, has also ruined the haldars of the village of Collinga, and the Biswas family of Poragatcha), an order may be issued upon the Sessions Judge of this district, or the Commissioner of the division, to relieve the aforesaid Seetul Turufdar from the confinement of Mr. White's prison, and adopt such a measure that your Honor's petitioners are enabled to retain their respective abodes.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

PETITION of Ram Gopaul Biswas and others, Inhabitants of Poragatcha, Thannah Hanshkhally, Zilla Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated 12 August 1859.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT your Honor's petitioners most humbly beg leave to represent to your Honor the oppression which William White, son of John White, of Bansbarria Indigo Factory, has exercised, and which he is now exercising, will be discovered as related below.

At the time of Mr. Patrick Smith, the shareholder and manager of the factory of Bansbarria, the uncle of mine (Ramgopaul Biswas), named Joynarian Biswas, was Dewan of that station for many years. A misunderstanding arose between William White and Patrick Smith; the latter left his situation and went to a different place. After his departure, Mr. William White told your Honor's petitioner's uncle "that you possess great estates, and therefore give me those things," but on the refusal of your Honor's petitioner's uncle, he bought some paddy from him.

Not long after this, Mr. William White dismissed your Honor's petitioner's uncle from his situation, and began to dispossess Joynarain and his nephew Gopaul Biswas of their jammy and rent-free lands, gardens, &c., and, for the purpose of driving them from the village, he collected 400 or 500 lattials, shurkeewallahs. To get rid of this impending danger, they petitioned before the magistrate on the 26th and 27th April and proved the same, yet the magistrate, out of his attachment to Mr. White, dismissed the case.

On the 26th April, the lattials of the above-mentioned indigo planter plundered your Honor's petitioner's relations, Umbica Churn's, Ukhoy Churn Biswas' and Nobin Chunder Sircar's houses. On their laying complaint before the magistrate, who appointed naib darogah of Handrah, to make a personal and local inquiry.

During the staying of the police officer, he cultivates the soil by his own hired men, and enjoys the production of the soil, as also the fruits of the mango and jack trees, and the fishes of the pond.

To remedy this calamity, your Honor's petitioner, Ram Churn Biswas, presented a petition to the magistrate, on the 23d June, relating the whole affairs; the magistrate, out of his attachment to Mr. White, did not do anything to prevent the oppression.

The above-mentioned indigo planter has deprived your Honor's petitioner's estate upwards of 1,00,000 rupees, an oppression unexampled in the British Government.

In the village, your Honor's petitioners escaped for some time from the assaults of Mr. White's lattials. Your Honor's petitioner, Umbica Churn Biswas, then petitioned on the 9th, 10th, 25th and 28th May, and removed his families and of some his estates into Goarry.

The above-mentioned causes enraged Mr. White, who plundered their paddy, and dispossessed them of their trade, amounting to 80,000 or 90,000 rupees, and even without letting them to enjoy the fruits of the mango and jack trees, &c., the fishes of the pond, or letting them to cultivate their own land. Mr. William White has dispossessed them the greater part of the estates what their forefathers did by their labour, and has driven them off from the abodes of their ancestors; the petitioners do not dare to go to their mother village, for fear of losing their lives.

The petitioners therefore humbly beg to entreat your favour of ascertaining the fact from the native gentlemen of the villages, and to refer their grievances for trial either to the Session Judge of the district, or to the Commissioner of Circuit, and thereby the oppression done will be fully discovered, and the perpetrators of it will be punished, and also they solicit that an order for the realization of the amount of properties so plundered, and to replace them to the abodes of their forefathers.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

PETITION of Umbica Churn Biswas, and others, Inhabitants of Poragatcha, Thannah Hanshkally, Zillah Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated 12 August 1859.

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT your Honor's petitioners most humbly beg leave to represent to your Honor that Umbica Churn was in the situation of Judge Ameen, and Ukhoye Chunder was mohurrir in the employment of Mr. John White, of Bansbarria Indigo Factory. Mr. William White, son of the said Mr. John White, ordered your petitioners to offer violence and oppress the ryots of Gobindpore, and to ruin their houses, but on your Honor's petitioners expressing utmost dissatisfaction, he dismissed them from their respective situations. Enraged at this conduct, Mr. William White afterwards ordered Holodhur Ghose to plunder your Honor's petitioner's houses. Holodhur Ghose, accompanied with 30 or 32 lattials, shurkeewallahs and hackeries, attacked the houses on the 26th April, about 4 o'clock A.M., committed as a dacoity, and plundered the ornaments of gold and silver, including the plates made of brass and bell-metal, and in cash, as also paddy, mustard seed, linseed, gram, wheat, and also cows and calves, &c. Your petitioners' houses are about six or eight miles from the thannah, and all the lands between Poragatcha and Hanskhally are Mr. White's. Apprehensive of falling into the hands of Mr. White's lattials, your Honor's humble petitioners, instead of going to inform the police officer of Hanskhally, laid their complaint (according to the practice) before the magistrate, on the 28th instant. The magistrate, according to your Honor's petitioner's (Umbica Churn's) petition, ordered the naib darogah of Handrah to make a personal and local inquiry of the fact, and referred the three cases to Dwarkanauth Dey, the deputy magistrate, who, after hearing their statements, the depositions of their witnesses, and the report of the naib darogah, considering the three cases being of a similar nature, ordered, on the 30th July, that Holodhur Ghose should be imprisoned for three months, and to pay a fine of 50 rupees in lieu of labour; the other defendants shared the same punishment, except 30 rupees in lieu of labour. The deputy magistrate has also recorded in his opinion that all the defendants jointly should have to pay (according to Act XVI. of 1850) the plaintiffs the value of the properties lost. The magistrate, in reversing the proceedings of the deputy magistrate, recorded his own opinion that the plaintiffs (your Honor's petitioners) were formerly servants of Mr. White's, and on their being dismissed they removed their properties to some distance, and at the time of removing the properties, some grain, &c., have fallen on the yard, and in the houses, which proved somewhat like plundering; the magistrate also stated that the plaintiffs not having laid their complaint at Thannah, and of their complaining three days after the occurrence to the magistrate, of their acting themselves as witnesses at their respective suits, that at midnight the occurrence said to have taken place as a dacoity of accusing Mr. White for the plunder, and of driving his ryots from their ancestral abode, are unworthy of credit. Sure, there is no rule for the appeal of the Fouzdary suit after its dismissal.

The manners with which the indigo planters oppressed them are beyond the idea of any man in the British Government. The magistrate, without minding their petitions, or looking at the report of the naib darogah, the order of the deputy magistrate as appeared in his own mind contrary to the circumstances alluded to in the record of the cases.

1st. That it is rather beyond probability of your Honor's petitioners flying from the debt of Mr. White's, because if they fall in debt their masters often make settlements for its recovery with them, as often happens in this country, rather than leaving their brick-built houses and the abodes of their forefathers. If they owe anything to Mr. White he can complain against their name according to the laws of the country, and can obtain it by decree rather than plundering the houses.

The plundering, though proved by the depositions of the witnesses, by the report of the naib darogah and by the proceedings of the deputy magistrate, yet the magistrate having acted upon supposition dismissed this serious case, by which the defendants set at large.

2d. Of the magistrate's recording in his opinion that the plaintiffs have not made their statements at Thannah, but they have already stated that the lands between

between their house and thannah Hanskhally are Mr. White's, while the magistrate's court is six miles, and they have made their statements at thannah Kotawally on the 27th, and laid their complaint before the magistrate on the 28th April, and in consequence of this dilatoriness, the magistrate on a firm belief dismissed the case, having set at large these men of notorious bad character, on the part of the gentlemen of the indigo planter, has given this order for the purpose of ruining your Honor's petitioners who now claim justice from you, otherwise there is no hope for them.

3d. Under the circumstances which is not alluded to in the record of the case or anything apparent in the statements of the defendants.

The magistrate having relied upon his own consideration disbelieved the report of the naib darogah, and the proceedings of the deputy magistrate, has released the defendants, who were people of Mr. White's, and has discontinued the allowing of the damages done to your Honor's petitioners; besides these they have sufficient proofs of the truthness of the offence having been perpetrated, and which has been reported frequently by Mofussil police. If there arose any doubt, the spot was not far from the station; on a personal inquiry it would have been convinced that the fact was really perpetrated.

It is rather very strange that such a serious case was at once unfortunately dismissed by the magistrate. It is most favourable to the above-mentioned indigo planter, that all the ryots of the three villages, viz., Poragatcha, Collinga, Gobindpore, having been entirely oppressed and excluded from their respective houses, and were dispossessed from their respective gardens by Holodhur Ghose, the new Gomashta of the factory, who was solely appointed by Mr. White for the purpose, yet the magistrate has done nothing to check it.

All the ryots from time to time have frequently made applications to the magistrate for its remedy, on which it was proper for him to make a personal and local inquiry of the truthness of the oppressions.

Your Honor's petitioners humbly beg to solicit that should your Honor kindly visit these three villages, then it would be clearly shown to your Honor the ruined state of the houses of all the ryots therein residing.

It is very improbable that your Honor's humble petitioners, being subjects of Mr. White's, would enter to such an action by means of which they would be deprived from the abodes of their forefathers. Your Honor's petitioners most humbly pray that an order from your Honor should be issued to Session Judge or the Commissioner of Circuit, or even to your Honor's Secretary, to call for the record of this serious case, then the oppressions of Mr. White would be discovered, and by means of which your petitioners should be able to recover their losses and to go back to their respective houses.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, with the Lieutenant Governor on tour, to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 15), dated 15 August 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward in original the accompanying five petitions from inhabitants of the Handra, Meherpore, and Hanskhally thannahs, complaining of the oppression practised upon them by Mr. White, of the Bansbarria Factory, and to request that you will make a careful inquiry into the subject of the complaints, and report the result.

2. The return of the petitions is requested with your reply.

From H. M. Reid, Esq., Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 49), dated 9 September 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 15, dated the 15th ultimo, forwarding for report five original petitions, which were presented to the Lieutenant Governor on the occasion of his late visit to this station, by certain inhabitants of villages of the Handrah, Maharpore, and Hanskhally thanahs, complaining of the oppression practised upon them by Mr. W. White, of the Bansbarria Indigo Factory, and as directed, I have the honour to submit the following particulars relative to the complaints brought forward by the petitioners.

petition (No. 1) of Ramgopaul Biswas,
Umbica Churn
Biswas, and two others, inhabitants of Poragatcha.

2. These petitioners state, that Joynarain Biswas, the uncle of the petitioner Ramgopaul, was formerly dewan of Bansbarria Factory, at the time when Mr. Patrick Smith, the nephew of Mr. John White, was the manager of it; but that Mr. Smith having given up the management, and having been succeeded in it by Mr. William White, Mr. John White's son, the dewan was also, after a time, dismissed from his appointment, owing to his being unable to withstand the oppression exercised against him by the new manager; that thereupon Mr. White commenced oppressing the petitioners, with the object of making them leave their village, Poragatcha, and himself succeeding to their property and trade, upon which they petitioned the magistrate for protection; but that, during their absence from their village at the Sudder station for the above purpose, Mr. W. White plundered their houses of a considerable amount of grain and other property, and that their trees were cut down, and they have not since then been able to return to their houses, the approaches to which are all shut up by Mr. White's people.

petition (No. 2)
Umbica Churn
Biswas and two others, residents of Poragatcha, thanah
Hanskhally.

3. The person (Umbica Churn Biswas) whose name heads this petition, is one of those whose name is also shown in petition No. 1; and the purport of the petition (No. 2), presented by him and his co-petitioners is, that they were formerly servants of Mr. White's factory, and that owing to their refusal to be the instruments of oppressing the ryots of mouzah Govindpore, they were dismissed from their employment by Mr. W. White, who caused their houses to be plundered; that the deputy magistrate, Baboo Dwarkanath Dey, after investigating the case, sent it up to the magistrate, with a recommendation that certain of the offenders should be fined and imprisoned, and that the value of the plundered property should be recovered from them, and be returned to the petitioners, but that the magistrate did not attend to the recommendation, but dismissed the case.

4. I find on a careful examination of the records (four in number) connected with the above two petitions, that Ramgopaul Biswas and others, presented a petition to the magistrate on the 14th Bysakh, or about the 25th April last, complaining of Mr. White having wrongfully cut down their trees, having deprived them of their lakheraj title-deeds, and having dug up the lands in the vicinity of their houses, so as to prevent their obtaining ingress thereto, and that he further endeavoured to prevent them realizing a balance of 40,000 rupees which was due to them by ryots of the neighbouring villages on account of trade transactions, but that the magistrate dismissed the case on the 28th April, considering that the charges brought were not proved by the evidence adduced in support of them.

5. The other three cases, in which Umbica Churn Biswas, Ookhye Chunder Biswas, and Nobin Chunder Sircar were respectively complainants, were instituted on the 15th Bysakh, or about 26 April 1859, and the gist of them was that Mr. White, with the aid of his factory servants, had plundered their houses and carried off their crops. The cases were made over to Baboo Dwarkanath Dey, deputy magistrate, who, on the 29th July 1859, reported that he considered them fully proved against four of Mr. White's adherents, who were accordingly recommended by him to be fined, one in a sum of 50 rupees, and the three others in sums of 30 rupees each, and to be imprisoned for three months each, and jointly to make good a sum of 1,600 rupees on account of the injury sustained. The magistrate did not however attend to this recommendation, but dismissed all the three cases as not proved.

6. On reviewing the evidence in the several cases above referred to, I am of opinion that the magistrate had sufficient warrant for dismissing the first charge, i. e. that which was brought before himself by Ramgopaul Biswas; but that in the other three cases there were, I think, on the whole, sufficient grounds for convicting the defendants; for, besides the evidence adduced before the magistrate, there was the report of the naib darogah, stating it to be his opinion, after personal inquiry on the spot, that the outrages complained of had actually taken place; place; and I have since been informed by Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell, who visited the village of Poragatcha when inquiring into another case in the same locality (which will be adverted to further on) that he observed traces of such outrages having been committed, and that the doors of some of the smaller houses in the village had been wrenched off. I would at the same time remark, that the magistrate may perhaps have decided rightly in dismissing the cases.

7. The next petition is that presented by Sreemunt Holdar and two others, inhabitants of Collingah, who charge Mr. White with having plundered their houses and cattle on the 26th April last, and object to the order under which Mr. Howell, deputy magistrate, to whom the case was made over for decision, directed it to be referred to arbitration. They further request that the case may be transferred to the file of deputy magistrate Dwarkanath Dey.

8. I find that this case was first of all instituted before the police, and that the petitioners failed to attend the police investigation; that they subsequently petitioned the magistrate on 6th June, who made over the case to Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell; that some of the defendants were summoned and attended; and that the case was eventually made over, on the 29th July, to arbitration, the petitioners and Mr. White respectively agreeing that it should so be disposed of. The arbitrators could not, however, do anything in the case, as the real defendants (i. e. the parties who had been summoned, and had attended) were not parties to the arbitration. They reported accordingly to this effect on the 15th August, and on the 24th August the deputy magistrate directed that the case should be proceeded with. I have given instructions that it is to be disposed of without further delay, and the result reported for the information of this office. The case was clearly not one for arbitration, and the deputy magistrate was wrong to have resorted to that method of adjusting it. Had the parties wished to "compromise" the case between themselves, of course there would have been no objection to their resorting to that way of settling it.

9. The next case is that of Ookhil Chunder Biswas, of Dariapole, who complains of having been unjustly confined by Mr. White for upwards of a month, and that after effecting his escape he petitioned the magistrate, who made over his case to Deputy Magistrate Howell, who, instead of summoning all his witnesses, endeavoured to persuade him to compromise the case. Petitioner begs that his case may be made over to Deputy Magistrate Baboo Dwarkanath Dey.

10. It appears from the petitioner's statement, which was given before the deputy magistrate on the 30th May last (a previous complaint on the subject having been lodged by his nephew, Bepin Beharree), that having gone near Mr. White's factory, for the purpose of collecting some outstanding debts due to him by some of the ryots, he was seized and taken off to the factory by one Hurchunder Ghose and other lattials of Mr. White's, whose names he mentions; that, while in the factory, Mr. White flogged him with his own hand with a stirrup leather; and that he was taken about from factory to factory for a space of one month, when he effected his escape; the cause of the above oppression being that he had formerly been a servant of the factory, and that, having been dismissed from his employ, he refused to take any advances for sowing indigo for it. The evidence in this case was complete on the 8th July, as far at least as the defendant Hurchunder Ghose was concerned; but the deputy magistrate, Mr. Howell, does not appear to have passed any further order in the case till the 29th July, and even then not a definite one; and I find that it was not till the 17th August that he ordered the case, as regards the above-named defendant, to be disposed of; and that on the 24th a further period of five days was allowed to Mr. White's mooktear to produce him. There is no sufficient reason discernible on the record for so long a delay in the disposal of the case. There was sufficient evidence (if the deputy magistrate believed it) for the conviction of Hurchunder Ghose, and the deputy magistrate should have proceeded to dispose of the case, as far at least as the above defendant was concerned.

11. There is another point in which I think the deputy magistrate's mode of proceeding in dealing with his case was faulty. He asked the complainant Ookhil Chunder, when the latter was being examined before him on the 30th May, whether he still bore any marks of the flogging said to have been inflicted upon him by Mr. White. His answer was, "Yes, but on a part of my person which I cannot expose." I think it would have been proper for Mr. Howell to have at once certified himself by personal inspection whether such marks really existed or not, instead of leaving the matter in doubt; and that if he had found them to exist he should have summoned Mr. White to answer the charge, but if otherwise, he would have been warranted in at once dismissing the case.

12. The petitioners in this case are ryots of mouzah Govindpore, and besides complaining of various acts of oppression committed upon them by Mr. White, in increasing their rents, forcing them to take advances for the cultivation of indigo, plundering their houses, and carrying off their crops, paddy, and cattle, they bring against the followers of Mr. White the specific charge of having carried off, on the 9th Assar last (not Assin, as inadvertently stated in their petition to the Lieutenant Governor), their fellow villager Seetul Turufdar, who has ever since been missing, and who they assert is under confinement by Mr. White, they further say that they have frequently petitioned the magistrate for his release, but without obtaining it.

13. It appears, from a perusal of the record of the case in which Seetul Turufdar is said to have been abducted, that it arose in the following manner: the Govindpore people were taking off to the government pound some cattle belonging to some of the factory ryots, which they asserted had been trespassing on their crops, when they were intercepted by the factory people. Meerjan Sheik, the plaintiff, was slightly wounded on the head, the cattle were rescued, and it is said that Seetul Turufdar, one of the villagers who was accompanying the cattle to the pound, was carried off, and has not since been heard of. The case was promptly brought to the notice of the magistrate, and was made over by the magistrate to deputy magistrate Moulvie Yatazad Hossein, who, on the 27th July, convicted six of the factory people, and sentenced them to be imprisoned for four months each, with a fine in lieu of labour, which order has since been confirmed in appeal by the Sessions Judge.

14. In concluding my remarks on the cases above enumerated, I beg to mention that I have instructed the present officiating magistrate to recall to his own file such of the above cases as may still remain undisposed of, as well as, for the present, any others in which Mr. White and the servants of Bansbarria concern may be parties. I have at the same time instructed him to use every proper precaution for preventing the ryots being oppressed, and to institute the strictest inquiry as to what has become of the missing man, Seetul Turufdar.

15. I think the details which I have given above warrant the conclusion that some degree of oppression has been exercised against the ryots by the factory people.

16. I beg to annex, for the Lieutenant Governor's information, copy of a letter relative to the subjects complained of by the petitioners, from Mr. Cockerell, the late magistrate of the district, and in forwarding it I deem it proper to state that I have no grounds whatsoever for supposing that either Mr. Cockerell or Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell have any undue bias in favour of Mr. White, but on the contrary, that they have dealt with the cases in which that gentleman has been concerned with strict impartiality, though not perhaps, in the case of Mr. Howell, with that amount of judgment which could have been wished for, and which might have been expected in an officer of greater experience than Mr. Howell possesses.

17. The original enclosures of your letter under reply are herewith returned.

From F. R. Cockerell, Esq., Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 53), dated 24 August 1859.

Sir,

I BEG to return the original petitions marginally noted,* which were forwarded with your office memorandum No. 50, dated the 20th instant, and copy of a letter

* 1. Petition of Umbica Churn Biswas and others, residents of Poragatcha.
2. Petition of Ramgopaul Biswas and others, residents of Poragatcha.
3. Petition of Ramcoomar Biswas and others, residents of Govindpore.
4. Petition of Sreemunt Holdar and others, residents of Collingah.
5. Petition of Ookhil Chunder Biswas, resident of Dariapore.

letter* from the Secretary to Government on the subject of them, for inquiry and report. * No. 15, dated 15th instant.

2. I find that all these petitions have reference to alleged occurrences which have already formed the subject of local investigation by the police, and regular judicial trial by myself and my subordinates, and consequently I do not see in what direction I can myself institute further inquiry, except under special instructions from higher authority. I observe also, that the tone of these petitions constitute an appeal, as it were, especially against my proceedings in these cases, and the partiality by which, it is asserted, those proceedings have been influenced.

3. Under these circumstances, it appears to me, that the best course is, to submit for your perusal, all the papers connected with the cases to which these petitions refer, and you will then be able to direct such further special inquiry on any points connected with them as may seem to you to require more particular investigation.

4. Of the five cases, Nos. 1 and 2, have been regularly investigated, and disposed of by myself, and my written decision will be found attached to each. No. 3 was a mere petition containing general charges, in support of which no proof was forthcoming; the only definite charge brought forward by the ryots of Govindpore, was touching the forcible rescue of some cattle whilst being conveyed to the thannah pound (the papers of which case also are forwarded). The case was tried by the deputy magistrate, Moulvie Yatazad Hossein, and the factory servants were convicted and punished. Nos. 4 and 5 were made over to Mr. Howell for trial. In one, he recommended arbitration, to which both parties agreed; the arbitration failed, and the final award is still pending. In the other case, there is nothing to show that any compromise was suggested, and no final orders have yet been passed.

5. It only remains for me to bring to your knowledge certain facts which the petitioners have either partially or wholly suppressed. The Biswas family, who are the promoters of these petitions, and the plaintiffs in most of the cases instituted, realized their fortunes, more or less, in the service of the proprietor of the Bansbarria Factory; they were discharged from this service but a short time previous to the commencement of the disputes which led to these cases.

6. Working on the capital realized in this service, they have for years carried on a considerable trade, in their own and surrounding villages, as mahajuns. About the time of their discharge, Mr. White determined that he would undertake the mahajunee business throughout his zemindarree villages, and to this end entered into dealings with the Biswas, Holdars, and other mahajuns, throughout his elaka, to purchase their vested interests in his line of business, and secure a monopoly to himself within his own talooks. This course is not without precedent, or unusual, I believe, amongst indigo planters holding zemindarees in this district. In taking over the stock of these mahajuns, disputes arose as to terms, and the factory proprietor doubtless made use of his influential position, as their zemindar, to press his own terms. It is stated, that force was used to gain possession of the full quantity of grain, &c., which the zemindar asserted that he was to receive, according to the terms of the transaction, for the transfer of the mahajunee rights and interests. On such foundation, it is probable that the charges of the Poragatcha and Collinga ryots were brought forward, and these charges amounted to little less than actual dacoity. Of such charges, the factory servants could not be convicted on the evidence adduced; and the exaggeration and falsity of the charges is apparent throughout the proceedings.

7. In regard to such passages in the petitions as reflect on Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell and myself, personally, I may state, the former has only once visited the Bansbarria Factory, and that was on the occasion of his going to make a local investigation on the subject of one of these cases at Collingah, which village is situated within one or two miles of the factory, and that, except on purely business matters, I have myself, for the last year and upwards, held no communication whatever with either of the Messrs. White, of Bansbarria.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 6124), dated 23 October 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of Mr. Reid's letter, No. 49, dated the 9th ultimo, submitting the report called for in Orders, No. 15, of the 15th August last, on the five petitions presented to the Lieutenant Governor, when at Kishnaghur, by certain inhabitants of the Handrah, Meherpore and Hanskhally thanahs, complaining of the oppressions practised upon them by Mr. White, of the Bansbarria Indigo Factory.

2. The report shows that Mr. White, in the several cases referred to in petitions, Nos. 1 and 2, was charged with having plundered the houses of the petitioners to a considerable amount of property, cut down their trees, deprived them of their lakheraj title-deeds, and caused the lands in the vicinity of their houses to be dug up, so as to prevent their obtaining ingress thereto, and that the cases were all dismissed by the magistrate as not proved, although in three of them, viz., in the plunder of property complained of by Umbica Churn Biswas, and in two others, the deputy magistrate, Baboo Dwarkanauth Dey, to whom the cases were made over, recommended that certain of the offenders should be fined and imprisoned, and required to make good the value of the plundered property.

3. The second case noticed by Mr. Reid is that in which the petitioners charge Mr. White with having plundered their houses and cattle, and object to the order of Mr. Howell, the deputy magistrate, referring the case to arbitration. The Officiating Commissioner remarks that the case was clearly not one for arbitration, and the deputy magistrate was wrong in having resorted to that method of adjusting it. It is understood that this case, which was instituted so far back as the 6th June, is still undisposed of, and that Mr. Reid has given instructions for its being brought to a speedy termination.

4. The case next adverted to is that of Okhil Chunder Biswas, who (as represented by the petitioner himself) was seized when near Mr. White's factory, collecting some debts which were due to him, and after being dragged to the factory by Mr. White's men, was flogged by Mr. White himself. The petitioner has there described how he was conveyed as a prisoner from factory to factory for a space of one month, when he escaped; the cause of all this oppression being that he had formerly been a servant of the factory, and that having been dismissed from employ, he refused to take advances from Mr. White for sowing indigo. The Officiating Commissioner remarks on the delay on the part of Mr. Howell in the disposal of this case, which was commenced on the 30th May, and was still pending at the end of August, on his neglect to examine the complainant's person when he first appeared before him to charge Mr. White with the assault and false imprisonment, and on his endeavour to persuade the plaintiff to compromise the case.

5. The trial of the other case of oppression, in which Seetul Turufdar was carried off by Mr. White's men, has resulted in the conviction of six of the factory people, though the individual who had been seized is not yet forthcoming.

6. The Officiating Commissioner reports that he has instructed the present officiating magistrate to recall to his own file such of the cases of the petitioners as may still remain undisposed of, as well as, for the present, any others in which Mr. White and the servants of the Bansbarria Factory may be parties, and to institute the strictest inquiry as to what has become of the missing man, Seetul Turufdar.

7. The Lieutenant Governor directs me to inform you that he agrees with Mr. Reid in his remarks on the proceedings of Mr. Cockerell, the magistrate, and Mr. Howell, the deputy magistrate, in the cases of these disputes, and approves of Mr. Reid's orders in the matter, but I am at the same time desired to observe that the Lieutenant Governor has derived an unfavourable impression of the manner in which the people have been protected by the magisterial authorities of Nuddea from oppression, such as has beyond doubt been exercised in the cases brought to notice.

8. The

8. The Lieutenant Governor heard in a general way, when on his tour at Nuddea, of complaints from natives that in indigo cases they did not get real protection; and this string of unsatisfactorily investigated and hastily dismissed cases now reported upon, makes it impossible for him to feel certainly convinced that every thing that can be legitimately done has been usually done in that district to repress abuses of this class. The Lieutenant Governor does not impute partiality to any of the officers concerned, but he cannot escape the impression that more active and intelligent measures would have had more satisfactory results; whereby all parties should have been made to feel that their disputes must not be settled by the strong hand.

9. The Lieutenant Governor is surprised that Mr. Cockerell, in his report to the Officiating Commissioner, has omitted all mention of the charge of wrongful imprisonment for a month brought against Mr. White, which as yet stands unrefuted.

10. These cases, which are known to be of daily occurrence, in which ryots are kidnapped and imprisoned, and carried from place to place by zemindars and planters with impunity, are a disgraceful blot upon the district administration in Bengal; and it is the duty of every magisterial officer to strain every nerve to bring them home to the offenders, when they can obtain a clue to them. On the present occasion there was the person wronged before Mr. Howell, whose evidence, if credited, would prove the case. Instead of doing all that could be done to ascertain the truth, and acting, it must be presumed, in the belief that the charge was true, the deputy magistrate recommended a compromise; as though the case had been a trifling squabble or a nominal assault, instead of a charge of one of the grossest acts of oppression and cruelty that can be imagined, short of injury to life or limb.

11. Mr. Cockerell must be called upon to explain his silence in this most grave matter. A magistrate should not allow himself to be kept by a subordinate in ignorance of such a case having been disclosed; and if Mr. Cockerell was informed of it, his conduct would appear to be quite inexplicable.

12. So much blame appears also to be attached to Mr. Howell in these proceedings that the Lieutenant Governor must call upon him for his defence in order to take into consideration what orders should be passed on him personally.

13. On receiving Mr. Howell's explanation, you will be so good as to forward it with an expression of your opinion as to whether Mr. Howell is yet sufficiently qualified to exercise the special powers of an assistant to a magistrate with which he has lately been vested.

14. In conclusion, I am desired to request that you will insist on the remaining cases against Mr. White being thoroughly sifted, and that you will call upon the present officiating magistrate to dispose of them himself, with all the consideration which cases involving such charges may appear to require.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 151 Ct.), dated 19 November 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 6124, dated 23d ultimo, conveying the orders of his Honor the Lieutenant Governor on my predecessor's letter, dated the 9th September previous, and with reference to its 11th paragraph to submit copy of a letter dated 17th instant, containing the further explanation called for from Mr. Cockerell.

2. The judgment which has been formed by his Honor of Mr. Cockerell's proceedings in the five cases under notice, was formed on a report made after an examination of the records, and as I have not seen these I must leave Mr. Cockerell's present letter to make its own impression. It appears that Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell did not recommend a compromise in the case referred to in paragraph 10 of your letter.

3. In justice to Mr. Cockerell, and to myself who have now administered this division for nearly four years, I venture respectfully to state it as my conviction that no such general feeling prevails amongst the inhabitants of Nuddea as that which is alluded to in your 8th paragraph as having been made the subject of complaint to the Lieutenant Governor on his tour through the district. I believe that all know well that full protection will be afforded by the police authorities at the station to such as choose to take the trouble to seek it. The punishment inflicted by Mr. Cockerell on Mr. Tripp, of Bamoondeah, some two years back, had the effect of convincing parties that their disputes would not be allowed to be settled by the strong hand.

4. Possibly the people of the Hadrah thannah, one of the quarters from which the Lieutenant Governor was petitioned on his tour, did for a period entertain some doubts whether it was intended that they should have any real protection in indigo cases; for in 1857 they saw the head of all the concerns in that thannah empowered as an honorary magistrate. It was Mr. Cockerell who, I well remember, brought to notice the undue influence which Mr. Forlong's assistants exercised in that thannah consequent on the latter gentleman's having had charge of its police. The magisterial authorities are not responsible for the doubts which the late experimental measure raised in the minds of the Nuddea people.

5. I have marched through this district from end to end, have visited its subdivisions, and have talked with and listened to the people, high and low, and I have never heard anything which led me to doubt the general feeling of confidence in Mr. Cockerell, and it is my opinion that he is one of those officers who would, to use the expression in your 10th paragraph, strain every nerve to bring home to the offenders any case of oppression which came to his knowledge.

6. But it behoves all magistrates, when dealing judicially with such cases, to guard against the bias which the complaint of the weak against the strong is apt to engender. The character of the oppressed ryot may be readily assumed, and is so, I believe, oftener than is suspected by many philanthropists.

7. The information called for in paragraphs 12 and 13 of your letter shall be furnished hereafter. Mr. Cockerell being anxious that his justification of his proceedings should be laid before Government without delay, I have thought it expedient to reply at once partially to your call. It is my duty, moreover, before making over temporary charge of this office, to endeavour to undeceive his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of an impression which, if well grounded, reflects on my administration as well as on Mr. Cockerell's.

Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, dated 17 November 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE only just received the papers connected with the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas, which, for the reasons explained in my letter of the 7th instant, it was necessary for me to refer to, in order to submit the explanation required in the letter, No. 6124, dated 23d ultimo, from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, forwarded with your letter, No. 130, of the 2d instant.

With reference to the 9th and 11th paragraphs of the Secretary's letter, I beg to point out that the case alluded to in the 4th paragraph of my letter to the Commissioner, on the subject of the several petitions, as No. 5, is that of Okhil Chunder Biswas. My letter contained no report of the particulars of any of the cases, because I did not conceive myself called upon to do more than inform the Commissioner to what cases the petitions presented to the Lieutenant Governor had reference, and how those cases had been disposed of, as well as to add such particulars, not to be found in the record, explanatory of the subject of the different charges against Mr. White and his people, as my knowledge of the existing relations between the parties concerned enabled me to supply; for the rest, I submitted all the records of the cases for the Commissioner, to judge himself of the merits of the complaints submitted by the petitioners to Government.

In

In the cases investigated by the deputy magistrate, Baboo Dwarkanath Dey, and finally disposed of by myself, Mr. Reid, the (Officiating Commissioner, after describing at some length the particulars of the charges against Mr. White and his people, as contained in the original complaints and depositions of the petitioners, without giving any detail of the evidence for or against these charges, and after stating the judgment formed by the deputy magistrate, and the punishment which he proposed to inflict upon the accused, remarks: "the magistrate did not however attend to this recommendation, but dismissed all the cases as not proved;" the inference from which would appear to be (and that such is the impression derived by the Lieutenant Governor from Mr. Reid's report, is to be gathered from the expression "hastily dismissed cases," used in the 8th paragraph of Mr. Lushington's letter) that I had summarily and hastily set aside and disregarded the judgment of my subordinate, and had unreasonably dismissed cases in which the charge preferred was substantially proved.

Now, I respectfully submit that an inspection of the record will not justify such a conclusion. However erroneous my judgment may have been in the matter, it certainly was not a hasty one. My decision was formed after much deliberation and a very careful consideration of the entire subject of the charges and the evidence in support of them; and the grounds upon which it was based were recorded in my own handwriting. Mr. Reid, in his letter, though attaching weight to the evidence for the prosecution and the report of the police officer, is not prepared to say that the decision may not have been a correct one; and I venture to think that it would be affirmed and approved by higher judicial authorities, as in accordance with the general evidence and other matters on record.

In regard to the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas, the charge of arrest, assault, and imprisonment, was first brought forward by his nephew in a petition presented to me. I disbelieved his statement, first, because he represented that his relative had been seized and maltreated about nine days previous to his appearance before me, and although this was alleged to have taken place very near the police thannah, and within a few miles of the station, he could assign no satisfactory reason for not having instituted his complaint earlier, or given information to the police; second, because he and his relative belonged to a Kyburto family, many members of whom had until recently been in the factory service, and, since being discharged from employ, were at feud with Mr. White, for reasons which I have already described in my previous letter on the subject of the petitions; third, because the plaintiff, whilst admitting, on being questioned, that he did not accompany his relative to the factory, nevertheless described in detail all that happened there, without showing how he became acquainted with the particulars.

I did not consequently attach such importance to the case, or proceed myself with its investigation, as I otherwise should have done, but made it over for trial and report (not for disposal, a circumstance that has not been brought to the notice of Government in Mr. Reid's report) to Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell. Subsequently, Okhil Chunder Biswas, who was said to have been assaulted and confined, appeared, and presented a petition, which I immediately made over to Mr. Howell, as he had been previously entrusted with the investigation of the case, who without delay took down his deposition. The man's statement was to the effect that he had been bound with cords and beaten with a leather strap. His body was then carefully examined, as he said he still bore marks of the assault; and when no mark or scar of any kind could be discovered, he represented that they were on a part of his person which, unless he was stripped naked, could not be seen. Now, in regard to this statement, by his own account, upwards of a month had elapsed since he was beaten. The stripes of a rattan inflicted on a fleshy part of the person could not possibly be visible so long after the date of their infliction, much less those of a leather strap. Moreover, the petitioner stated that he had been bound with cords; the marks or scars caused by such binding, tightened as it would be by the convulsive struggles of a man undergoing the lash, are far more indelible than the stripes of a rattan, and yet the plaintiff had not the vestige of such score on his arms or any part of his person when examined by the deputy magistrate. The assertion, therefore, that he still bore marks of a flogging, administered, according to his own statement, some six weeks previous, on a part of his person which he knew would not be examined, was, I consider, a deliberate misrepresentation, intended to give support to his charge.

charge. His account of the manner in which he effected his escape from alleged imprisonment was equally improbable. He stated that he was last confined in the Mahutpore Factory, and escaped on a dark night. Mahutpore is a Sudder Factory; and, supposing his statement as to his confinement there to be true, there was scarcely any possibility of his making his escape from such a place.

From the time that this case was made over to Mr. Howell for investigation and report, I neither saw nor heard anything of the proceedings, until the petition presented by Okhil Chunder Biswas to the Lieutenant Governor was forwarded to me. If the petitioner was at any time dissatisfied with the deputy magistrate's investigation he might have made a representation on the subject to me, but this he did not do. Mr. Howell, it appears, was very dilatory in his proceedings, and it may be considered that I should have prevented this. It is the practice for any case committed by the magistrate to any subordinate, for investigation and report, to be temporarily removed from the former's file until returned with report for final orders. And the files of my subordinate come under review only at the close of the quarter. Hence, in any case that had not been three months pending, dilatoriness in the investigation of cases by subordinates would not necessarily come to notice at the time, unless such delay in the proceedings was specially represented by the parties concerned.

There is nothing in the record of this case, as I observed in my former letter, to bear out the petitioner's assertion that Mr. Howell suggested a compromise in the matter of such a serious charge; and the deputy magistrate distinctly affirms that he never did so. I observe that, coupled with the assertion of the suggested compromise is that of the deputy magistrate having at the same time refused to call for the further evidence which he tendered. An order endorsed on the plaintiff's petition for the summons of fresh witnesses through the police, shows this to be a misrepresentation. The deputy magistrate, on the ground that sufficient cause was not shown, declined to summon the witnesses through the police, but passed an order for their being subpoenaed. The plaintiff neglected to take out this process, and in his petition charges the deputy magistrate with refusing to summon his witness at all, and recommending a compromise.

If a return be called for from the Nuddea Magistrate's Court, it will be found that, save in very rare instances, I invariably disposed of all important cases myself, and in such I ever included all charges against Europeans owning property in the district, and their servants and dependents. It has been my practice to make over cases for investigation and report to those of my subordinates who had had but little experience, and thus gradually test their fitness to be entrusted with the absolute disposal of judicial business.

In this way Mr. Howell, who has not been long employed as a deputy magistrate, had had but few cases made over to him, save of the most trivial description, for absolute disposal. Many, as in the instance of the cases now under notice, were made over to him for investigation and report, and I have had therefore ample opportunity of judging of his capabilities. He has generally given me entire satisfaction. Previous to his employment as a deputy magistrate, he served under me as an overseer of the district roads, and I have always found him a very painstaking and laborious officer, and a person of strict integrity. Whilst located, as he was for a considerable period, in the interior of the district, he was always well spoken of by the people; he is thoroughly well acquainted with their language and customs, and ought on every account to be well qualified to discharge his present duties. If he has shown a want of despatch and judgment in his proceedings in these cases, it is to be attributed to diffidence, arising out of inexperience rather than inactivity and incapacity.

It only remains for me to express my very deep concern at the strong condemnation passed by the Lieutenant Governor on the general conduct of the magisterial authorities of the Nuddea District, as expressed in the 8th and 9th paragraphs of Mr. Lushington's letter. It is well known that the present system of indigo cultivation, as it obtains in Nuddea and the surrounding districts, is regarded with no small general dissatisfaction by the mass of the people, and it is no more than what might be expected that the Lieutenant Governor, on his tour through the chief indigo-growing districts, should hear general complaints against the promoters of that system, who, by reason of the system itself rather than their own individual acts, are regarded by the majority of the people with more or less distrust and dislike.

I submit, that if there had been any want of readiness on my part to entertain generally complaints of oppression of this class, and to institute the fullest inquiry, and grant the utmost redress that it was in my power to do, some representation on the subject must have reached you as my immediate official superior; and yet, as far as I am aware, not a single representation of the kind has been made during the two years that I filled the Nuddea Magistrate's Office, at least no explanation or report has ever been called from me on such subject.

But it is not protection from oppression, in the way of acts of violence, I maintain, that the agricultural population of the indigo-growing districts consider themselves to be really in want of, for oppression of such kind is at least of no commoner occurrence in those districts than elsewhere; the protection which they desire, and which no magisterial authority can give them, is freedom from their obligations to cultivate the indigo plant, when their land could yield them a far more remunerative return by other produce.

As regards the repression of crime and acts of violence against person and property in the Nuddea District, and the opinion formed by my superiors of my general conduct as magistrate, I solicit reference to the criminal and police reports for the last two years. It is not for me to attempt to justify myself as to the degree of intelligence that may have guided my measures in the general administration of the district for that period, but I trust I may be permitted to say that, during the four and a half years in which I have filled the office of magistrate, at different periods, in three of the most important districts in Lower Bengal, that want of activity and zeal in the discharge of the various duties of a magistrate, to the best of my ability, has never been imputed to me.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 7055), dated 9 December 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your predecessor's letter, No. 151, dated the 19th ultimo, submitting the further explanation called for from Mr. Cockerell, late Magistrate of Nuddea, relative to his proceedings in the cases of oppression stated to have been practised by Mr. White, of the Bansbarria Indigo Factory, which formed the subject of complaint in certain petitions presented to the Lieutenant Governor on the occasion of his late visit to Kishnaghur, and the particulars of which were reported in your letter, No. 49, dated the 9th September last.

2. The Lieutenant Governor, having fully considered Mr. Cockerell's explanation, desires me to observe that he does not impute blame to that officer for his judicial decision in the case investigated by the deputy magistrate, Baboo Dwarkanauth Dey, to which Mr. Cockerell has satisfactorily shown that he gave all proper care and attention when disposing of it judicially. But the result of the whole affair is that, apart from the sworn evidence in the case, it seems clear, from the report of the naib darogah after personal inquiry on the spot, and from what Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell afterwards observed when he visited the village in question, that outrages such as were the subject of complaint, which were of a violent and very public character, impossible to be really concealed, were committed by some people or other; and it is certain that no one has been or ever will be punished for them. For such a result no credit can be claimed by the magisterial authorities of the district, at the head of which was Mr. Cockerell.

3. Such acts as above referred to, I am desired to observe, are not committed without its being perfectly known by every villager on whose part they are committed; otherwise there would be no motive for the acts. No one will suppose that the police do not know what every one else knows; a single case, it is true, in itself proves nothing; but presuming it not to be really doubtful on whose part the open outrages in question were committed, it must be held that, as far as a single case can go, the fact of an open outrage of this sort, though formally complained of, passing over with absolute impunity, does tend to support the complaint of the petitioners that in this class of cases the ryots have not been duly protected by the public authorities.

4. The denial of Mr. Howell that he recommended a compromise of the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas, is considered by the Lieutenant Governor to be perfectly satisfactory on that point; though, considering the nature of the charge, and the languid and dilatory manner in which it was dealt with, it is not surprising that the complainant should have got an impression that he was expected to compromise. In all other points, however, both in respect of Mr. Howell's dealing with the case and of the magistrate losing sight of a case of such a nature, the original opinion formed by the Lieutenant Governor of the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas, as derived from your report of the 9th September last, remains unshaken.

5. The remaining cases noticed in your report above referred to, have not been touched upon in Mr. Cockerell's letter.

6. The Lieutenant Governor accepts with much satisfaction Mr. Grote's assurance that no general feeling exists in Nuddea that the people do not in some cases get real protection; although it is not the less certain that some persons either have or pretend to have such a feeling. It may also be observed that it was only in the district of Nuddea that any petitions such as those out of which this correspondence has arisen, were received during the late tour. Much importance, however, is attached by the Lieutenant Governor to Mr. Grote's remark on the effect of entrusting the police of a thannah to a person deeply engaged in mercantile concerns in that thannah.

7. In conclusion, I am desired to add, that although the impression originally made upon the mind of the Lieutenant Governor by the complaints of the petitioners, in connexion with your report upon them, has not been affected by Mr. Cockerell's explanation, the Lieutenant Governor attaches due weight to Mr. Grote's general testimony in favour of that officer, whose efficiency and zeal in the performance of his duties generally, the Lieutenant Governor has never doubted.

From H. M. Reid, Esq., Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 166 Ct.), dated 13 December 1859.

Sir,

IN continuation of Mr. Commissioner Grote's letter, No. 151, dated the 19th ultimo, I have the honour to submit copy of a letter dated the 18th idem, containing Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell's explanation on the subjects referred to in your letter, No. 6124, dated the 23d October last.

2. In the 2d to 5th paragraphs of his letter, Mr. Howell enters into an explanation of the circumstances under which the case of Sreemont Halder and others was referred to arbitration, and of the subsequent delay which occurred in disposing of the case on the failure of the arbitration proceedings. Mr. Howell's defence amounts to this, viz., that the arbitration proceedings were had recourse to, not at his instance, but at the request of the parties concerned, and that there was no unnecessary delay in his subsequent conduct of the case. I am of opinion that the deputy magistrate committed an error of judgment in allowing the parties to arbitrate the case through the medium of the court, even although they themselves requested it to be so dealt with, and he was the more wrong in having done so when the case was made over to him, not for final decision, but, as explained by the magistrate Mr. Cockerell, merely for report. The explanation about the delay which occurred in the subsequent disposal of the case cannot, in my opinion, be regarded as satisfactory.

3. Mr. Howell, in the 6th to 11th paragraphs of his letter, explains his conduct regarding the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas, and states his reasons for not having insisted on the complainant exhibiting the marks alleged to be borne on his person. Mr. Howell further denies that he ever directly or indirectly recommended the complainant to compromise the case; and he further offers explanation of the delay which occurred in the case being disposed of.

4. I am of opinion that Mr. Howell's explanation on the first point can scarcely be regarded as sufficient, in the absence of any memorandum on the record record of his having carefully, in the first instance, examined the complainant's legs and arms and the rest of his body, and having found no marks of any beating upon them. Such a memorandum is usually recorded in cases of the like description, and it would have been satisfactory had one been recorded in the present case. Mr. Howell's emphatic denial of his having ever advised a compromise in this case is, I consider, quite satisfactory, and there is nothing on the record to show that he recommended one. There seems, I would remark, to have been some misapprehension on the part of Government regarding this point (vide concluding part of your 4th paragraph). It will be found, on referring to that portion of my letter which has reference to this case, that the assertion that Mr. Howell had ordered it to be compromised was made by the petitioners in their petition to the Lieutenant Governor, and that, in summing up the real facts of the case, as shown by the record, I did not make any allusion to the compromise, which I should of course have done had it been apparent from the record that Mr. Howell had directed one to be made. Mr. Howell's explanation regarding the delay which has occurred in the disposal of this case is not, in my opinion, satisfactory.

3d paragraph of Government letter. 7th and 8th paragraphs of Officiating Commissioner's letter.

4th, 10th, 12th, 13th paragraphs of Government letter. 9th to 11th paragraphs of Officiating Commissioner's letter.

5. With advertence to your 13th paragraph, I would beg to observe that, although Mr. Howell's proceedings in the cases under report evince some want of judgment and unnecessary delay, yet that I am not prepared to recommend to Government, until I have seen something more of his work, such an extreme measure as taking from him the special powers with which he has recently been invested. I propose reporting further on the subject shortly. In the meantime it is my opinion that Mr. Howell should not at present be posted to the charge of a sub-division, nor should his powers be further increased until he shall have passed the higher standard examination.

6. I take the opportunity of drawing the attention of Government to Mr. Grote's letter, No. 152Ct., dated the 22d ultimo, in which he recommends that Mr. Howell should be transferred to the district of Rungpore, to which he originally stood appointed, the number of Deputy Magistrates and Deputy Collectors at Nuddea being larger than requisite.

7. With advertence to your 14th paragraph, the instructions contained in which have been duly communicated to the magistrate, I have to report that the cases of Sreemont Halidar and Okhil Chunder Turufdar are still undisposed of, owing, as the officiating magistrate reports, to the non-attendance of the parties.

8. I find further, on referring to the record of the case of Ram Coomar Biswas, that the missing man, Seetul Turufdar, who is alluded to in the 12th and 13th paragraphs of my letter of the 9th September last, is reported by the police darogah to have been carried away in a wounded state to the factory of Lindooree, in the district of Jessore, and there to have died of epilepsy. The present magistrate, Mr. Drummond, has been instructed to make a thorough investigation into this very grave assertion, and the magistrate of Jessore has been directed to afford him every possible aid in elucidating the real facts of the case.

9. The Nuddea magistrate has further been instructed to give his best attention to the early and careful disposal of the above two cases referred to.

FORWARDED to the Commissioner of Circuit, Nuddea Division, with reference to his office memorandum, No. 161Ct., dated the 2d instant.

From J. E. Howell, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Nuddea, to L. R. Tottenham, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea; dated 18 November 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your office memorandum, No. 266, dated 6th instant, forwarding Government letter, No. 6,124. In reply I beg most respectfully to state, that I cannot help regretting that the Officiating Commissioner should have taken so unfavourable a view of my proceedings in the two cases* made over to me for report.

* Sreemont Haldar
and Okhil Chunder
Biswas.

2. Adverting to the 3rd paragraph of the Secretary's letter, I beg to observe that, after I had gone over the papers of Sreemont Haldar's case, I resolved on going to the spot, that I might satisfy myself whether the injury complained of by the plaintiff has been really sustained by him or not, or to what extent.

3. On my arrival on the spot, in village Colinga, I was surprised to find everything in good order, and to all appearance as if no injury whatever had been sustained by the complainant; and when asked to point out the injuries complained of, I found that he could not do so. The petitioner must have imagined that there would have been no actual inquiry on the spot, but simply that he would have been called upon to adduce proof by witnesses alone, and was quite unprepared for an inquiry on the spot, for he had stated in his petition that his houses had been forcibly entered, and the whole of his moveable property and grain plundered and carried off by Mr. White and his servants, and what could not be removed, destroyed or greatly damaged. While on the spot the property seemed not to have sustained any injury whatever. I also recollect that he had admitted, when cross-questioned, that he had sold a good portion of his grain in the Bungaljee Bazar, while he stated that he had been plundered of the whole by Mr. White and his servants.

4. The plaintiff perceiving that he was quite unable to prove on the spot the circumstances alleged in his complaint, he now begged to be allowed, with Mr. White's consent, to put the case into arbitration; and as I considered that the case would be best settled in this manner, if both parties were willing to this mode of settlement, I told the plaintiff that, if he obtained Mr. White's consent (for he had made Mr. White the defendant in the case), and that if both parties, by separate petitions, expressed their willingness to a settlement of the case in this manner, I would not object to it. But I distinctly affirm, that the suggestion to subject the case to arbitration did not emanate from me, but from the plaintiff himself, and I only agreed to it on the expressed wish of both parties. Both parties having agreed to this mode of adjustment, the case was made over to arbitrators, and a reasonable time allowed them to dispose of the case, on the expiration of which period the arbitrators applied for a further extension of time to enable them to settle the case; time was granted them. In the meanwhile the Lieutenant Governor arrived, and the plaintiffs having presented a petition to him, the arbitrators came forward and returned the case to the court, now for the first time (after they had had the case nearly a month) stating that they could not dispose of the case, as Mr. White, the defendant in the case, so long allowed to be as such, was not the real defendant. I leave you to judge whether it required them a month to find this out; or was this merely an excuse to get rid of the case?

5. On the case being received into court, I ordered that it should be forthwith proceeded on without any further delay. At this stage of the proceedings the magistrate called for the case, and forwarded it to the Officiating Commissioner, with his remarks and report, since when it has not been returned to my file.

6. In reply to the 4th and 10th paragraphs of the Secretary's letter, referring to Okhil Chunder Biswas' case, I beg most respectfully to urge that I cannot perceive how the Officiating Commissioner assumes, from the proceedings, that I suggested a compromise, or that the case has sprung out of an attempt to force indigo advances on the plaintiff by the defendant, for I cannot see that this view of the case can be received from any of the papers on the file.* How, then, the Officiating Commissioner arrived at this conclusion I am at a loss to imagine.

7. I intentionally took a long time in the consideration of this case, because I deemed

* Vide depositions

Biswas.

Biswas. Evidence

deemed it one of a grave nature, and wished to give the plaintiff every means in his power to substantiate his plaint. The witnesses he brought in the first instance I did not consider as trustworthy, for they were nearly all discharged servants of the factory, and their evidence is full of discrepancies; and, in cross-questioning them, some have so contradicted themselves as to have destroyed their own testimony, and others did not await cross-questioning, but absented themselves. Plaintiff perceiving this begged to be allowed to put in another list of witnesses, who he said were Mr. White's servants, but respectable men, who saw the ill-treatment being inflicted on him. Desirous to let him substantiate his case, I ordered a summons to be sent in the usual manner, accompanied by an English letter, to the employer to produce the parties named by the plaintiff. On hearing this, the plaintiff, Okhil Chunder Biswas, objected to the mode adopted, stating that if Mr. White became aware of the circumstance, he would tamper with the witnesses before they came into court. He wanted them to be summoned through the darogah. Had Okhil Chunder Biswas not objected to their being summoned in the manner generally adopted in calling in the servants of employers, and had the employer failed to attend to the requisition of the court, the plaintiff would have had the benefit of this refractory disposition shown in not attending to the court's process, but he would not have this.

8. Plaintiff states that he was tied up to a puller, and beaten most unmercifully by the defendant with a stirrup-leather.

9. With respect to this circumstance, I beg to state, that on his appearing before me I carefully examined his arms, back, seat, thighs, but found no marks. I examined his arms more particularly, as I imagined that, if he had been flogged as he stated, his attempts to release himself in his struggles would have left some marks of the rope ties, while those from a piece of leather might have been obliterated between the time the injury was said to have been inflicted and his appearance before the court (one month), while the chances were that some marks on the skin from the rope fastening might be still visible. But I beg to add that no mark whatever was visible to my examination. After this careful examination I again asked the plaintiff how it was that he could not show a single mark, after he had received so severe a beating as he represented, to which he gave the response on record.

10. Had the man been so severely beaten as he said, it is likely there would have been marks over his person, and not only in one place, as he asserted. Had the mark been of any consequence it would have been visible through the very gauze-like cloth that his loins were wrapped in. A beating given under the struggles of the party on whom it was inflicted could not have been laid on only in one place, but must have been laid on over the whole seat, which I inspected, and not only in one invisible part that the man from shame could not expose. It must be borne in mind that the plaintiff came into court a full month (or more) after the beating, and wounds from a strap of leather, however severe, had full time to heal within this period. I considered the charge of a grave nature, and was desirous to give the man every chance in my power to adduce proof, which caused the delay in disposing of the case. Had I not been impelled by this motive, I should have summarily dismissed the case as not proved by the evidence adduced.

11. Lastly, I beg emphatically to deny that in this case I either verbally, or by written order, recommended or even suggested a compromise. There is nothing in the proceedings from which it can be inferred that I did so, and the petitioner's assertion in this respect is entirely false.

12. From the explanations given relative to the cases alluded to in the 3d, 4th, and 10th paragraphs of the Secretary's letter, I trust that his Honor the Lieutenant Governor and the Commissioner will see that every facility was allowed the plaintiffs to prove their cases, in order that their grievances might be redressed.

13. I beg most respectfully to draw attention to the magistrate's report on these cases.

No. 53, dated
24 August 1859.

14. I further beg most respectfully to refer to the opinions entertained and expressed of me in the reports to the Officiating Commissioner, noted in the margin, formed, no doubt, from my general conduct, and from the manner in which I had conducted my duties under them, my late immediate superiors, Mr. Belli and Mr. Cockerell.

15. And that I have not slackened in my efforts, or in energy, ability, and zeal in the discharge of my duties now, I most respectfully appeal to my present immediate superiors, the Collector and Officiating Magistrate, who, I have no doubt, will respectively testify to the manner in which I attend to the performance of my present duties.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 135); dated 21 January 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 166 Ct., dated the 13th ultimo, submitting, with remarks, the explanation required from Mr. Deputy Magistrate Howell, regarding his proceedings in the cases of oppression said to be practised by Mr. White, of the Bansbariah Indigo Factory.

2. In reply, I am desired to intimate that the Lieutenant Governor agrees in the view taken by you in regard to the compromise point, and Mr. Howell's explanation is quite satisfactory; but the delay, considering the nature of the charges, whether true or false, is not. Mr. Howell, the Lieutenant Governor doubts not, will avoid such an error in future.

3. Mr. Howell will hereafter be transferred to some district where there is more need of a Deputy Magistrate. At present the Lieutenant Governor refrains from acting on Mr. Grote's suggestion for his transfer to the district of Rungpore, lest it should appear that the fault found with his proceedings in Nuddea has been more serious than it really is.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 5); dated 29 March 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my predecessor, Mr. Reid's letter of the 13th December last, No. 166 Ct., I have the honour to annex copy of the late Magistrate of Nuddea, Mr. Drummond's decision in the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas.

2. The case of Seetul Turufdar is still pending. No trace of the missing man has yet been found, and that of Sreemont Haldar has been compromised.

Horochunder Ghose.
Mr. W. White.

Defendant.—Defendant was a Gomashta, and was dismissed; did not give his Nikash, and has brought this false complaint, as the Saheb was going to complain against him. Defendant 2 denies.

Beepin Beharry Biswas.—My uncle was defendant's Tusseeldar of Dukhinparah, &c. He was dismissed. He came to Joypore village to carry on his affairs. On the 9th Bysack, while sitting in Omesh Mookerjee's house, six or seven laltials came and carried him off. I know defendants, and he pointed out my uncle. Don't know where he is. I was sitting near him. His name is Okhil Biswas. The laltials told me that Mr. White gave the order. (The neighbours are respectable, but they are defendant's ryots.)

Mody Sheikh.—I and Rodim were going to Hematpore to buy cows. Met Okhil and the laltials, and asked him, "Where are you going?" &c. (Not very credible.)

Modoosoodun.—On the 10th, two dond bela, they took him to the south of the Saheb's house, tied his hands, and the Saheb beat him with a stirrup-leather. Oomesh Chundro and Holodhur Ghose Dewan were there; they said "Wash him." I got my juwab four days after.

Moozdeen Nikaree.—I and Golab, going to buy mangoes, met four or five laltials. Same as Mody Sheikh.

Golab Sirdar, sitting near Okhil Biswas; he was taken away.

Okhil Chundro Biswas.—I was formerly Gomashta of Dukhinparah. Mr. White told me often to bully the ryots, and dismissed me in Ashar because I would not. In Bysack I was in Joypore on my own affairs. On the 9th I went to the Saheb's Mal Gomashta there; just then defendant Oomesh Ghose, Okhil Ghose, Gadey Sheikh, three others. Defendant said, said, "Do you obey the Saheb?" They took me to the cutcherry; (my nephew, plaintiff, was there.) Oomesh Chundro, superintendent, said, "Have you brought the 300 rupees?" I was unwilling to give a fine. Rameshur Bagdi, &c., beat me. Wanted five rupees a day? Next day defendant gave order. Rameshur Bagdi, &c., took me to the south verandah, beat me with a stirrup-leather. Then the Saheb send me to Gacha Factory to Issur Mitter. I was beaten well. I remained two days at Puleanpore, in a Polatokee Bagdee's house, in Madary Sheikh's jumma. Then three days in Boidonauth Sirdar's house. Then I went five days to Tarachand Paik's house at Peepragatchee. Then to Gongadhur Biswas' house. Next day was taken back to Bansberriah, one day there; again for seven days at Boidnath's house. Then one day in Tebooleah Sheikh's, at Gatcha. Then seven days in the Khooty there. Three days at Mohotpore Khooty. On the 5th of this month I ran away from there in a dark night. Have got marks of beating; can't show them.

Oomesh Chundro Roy.—Saw Okhil in Tara Chand's house at Peepragatchee. Had gone to look for a cow. Lattials were there.

Ukhoy Chundro was a godown Mohurir. Saw Okhil there.

I consider that the evidence recorded above clearly proves that Horochunder Ghose, the defendant, was one of those who carried off the plaintiff Okhil. There are no discrepancies, and I put faith in Okhil's story. I am sorry that the part relating to his being taken to Bansberriah, and being beaten by Mr. William White, is not better proved. I cannot put faith on the evidence of Modosoodun, a dismissed servant of White's; and without that there is not enough to convict White, although I cannot help thinking him guilty. The defendant Horochunder denies the charge, but fails to clear himself. He is the principal offender in this outrage, and I think is deserving of a very severe punishment, in order to put a stop to this sort of conduct of White's, by making his instruments see that they will be punished. I am sorry there is not enough to punish White upon, but I must order him to be released. The defendant Horochunder will be imprisoned for six months, and pay a fine of 50 rupees, or labour.

29 December 1859. Magistrate.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 1,446); dated 2 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 5, dated the 29th ultimo, enclosing a copy of the late Magistrate of Nuddea, Mr. Drummond's decision in the case of Okhil Chunder Biswas, and in reply, to inform you that in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor it is a clearly substantiated case of the class known to be so common, of kidnapping and lengthened false imprisonment in different places.

2. It is much to be regretted that the principal party, in whose interest the offence was committed, has escaped all punishment. For it is impossible to suppose that the prisoner sentenced committed the outrage on his own account.

3. I am desired to request that you will be so good as to forward to this office another copy, more carefully written, of Mr. Drummond's decision, as the one sent by you is full of clerical errors.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 63Ct.); dated 6 March 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to lay before his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, copy of a letter, No. 64, dated 25th ultimo, from the Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea.

2. In reply, I inquired whether Bishto Ghose had himself been concerned in Seetul Turufdar's case, and what might be the general character of the evidence which he professed himself ready to give. I find now that he was not concerned in the above case, but that he was at the Bansberriah Factory when Seetul Turufdar was taken there. This much he admits, but he will say nothing more till he is assured of pardon.

3. Mr. Herschel repeats his recommendation, and expresses a hope that no legal objection may interfere with its being complied with. By doing so we are laying ourselves open to be duped, and but little weight can attach to a statement tendered under such circumstances. Unless Bishto Ghose's story is one that admits of being proved by the evidence of other disinterested witnesses, we shall not gain much by listening to it.

4. I would tell Bishto Ghose that if, on the information which he gives us, the offence of kidnapping Seetul Turufdar is brought home to conviction, a report for his enlargement from jail, under his present sentence, will be submitted for the favourable consideration of Government.

From W. J. Herschel, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 64); dated 25 February 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report that Bishto Ghose, the Jemadar of lattials in Mr. White's Factory, of Bansberriah, who was summoned in the Bansberriah case (in which Mr. White was punished), has appeared and given his defence. He has been convicted of the crime, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment, being the same punishment as was assigned to others of similar guilt.

2. Previous to the decision, the plaintiffs had put in a razeenamah in the case, Bishto Ghose having offered to give important evidence in the case of Seetul Turufdar, if allowed to go free in this case. Mr. Drummond rejected the razeenamah. I have now the honour to request that an application be made, with all practicable speed, to Government, for a conditional pardon to the prisoner, the condition being that he should give full evidence in the case of Seetul Turufdar.

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 929); dated 14 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 63, dated the 6th instant, and in reply to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor is pleased to give a promise of pardon to the prisoner Bishto Ghose, on the condition that he gives full, true, and material evidence in the case of Seetul Turufdar.

— No. 12. —

From J. Forlong, Esq., Indigo Planter, to E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal; dated 24 November 1859.

My dear Sir,

THE enclosed correspondence will duly reach the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor through the usual channel of the Commissioner and the magistrate of this district. As I am anxious, however, that the letters should come without delay under the Lieutenant Governor's notice, may I beg you will be good enough to hand them to him, and also acquaint yourself with the same. I feel assured that the letters addressed to the magistrate and to the Reverend Mr. Blumhardt will meet with Mr. Grant's approval. A most extraordinary impression has gone abroad that Mr. Grant is extremely hostile to indigo planters, and has a desire to put a stop to planting altogether. This, I know, is a mere idle tale, insidiously circulated among the people, but still, most strange to say, it is among the ryots very widely credited.

In this country, and especially in an indigo district, an Englishman comes in collision with petty interests altogether opposed to European enterprise; every effort is made to place him in a false position, and ryots often set up to assume independent action against him, who know not the meaning of the terms, and who are little better than slaves to their mahajuns. At present, from the high price of everything, the necessaries of life are procured with difficulty by the mass of the people, and a small talookdar or mahajun, who supplies the ryots with food, sometimes compels them to act against the planter, whose crop interferes with others they wish the ryot to grow, at a rate certainly to the ryot not more remunerative than indigo, however advantageous such crops may be to themselves.

There is no instance of late years of any large zemindar in this district quarrelling with a planter, and in every case where opposition to the planter arises it is to be traced to the middleman, or mahajun, who is in the habit of supplying the ryot with food at rates almost incredibly usurious, and who, under the pretence of releasing the ryot from subjection to the planter, has only the wish to place him more under his own. There are evils and annoyances connected with planting of which I am quite aware, and which are much to be regretted, but they arise from causes not to be overcome by any skill or even liberality on the part of the planters, and which, in the present state of education and morals among the agricultural population, are utterly beyond his control.

I am certain, and that after long years of experience, that the result of an inquiry made by the Lieutenant Governor would show that the condition and general comfort of the ryots in any large indigo district much exceeded what the same class possessed in any district in which indigo planting, or any sort of enterprise making the settlement of Europeans in the district necessary, were unknown.

I trust the Lieutenant Governor will kindly excuse my troubling him as I now do.

From J. Forlong, Esq., Indigo Planter, to L. R. Tottenham, Esq., Magistrate of Zillah Nuddea; dated 23 November 1859.

Sir,

I BEG to send you copies of certain letters I have just sent to the Reverend Mr. Blumhardt, the senior missionary in this district. The letters will, I think, prove to you how anxious I am, and have always been, to see justice done to every ryot connected with the large property under my charge.

In my letter of the 7th I mentioned my anxiety to redress any wrongs the Pathurgatha village ryots had to complain of; but what I said then, as to the ryots being under the influence of people who had no desire they should come to me, has turned out quite correct. The people in question have merely a desire to use the ryots for a time to forward their own selfish views, and create mischief between them and myself as their landlord, thinking that by doing so money would find its way into their hands. Nuzzimooddeen Sheikh, a dismissed jail darogah, and now a mooktear, has had much to do in the way of misleading these ryots. He is known to be a man of the worst character, and is always plotting mischief for the purpose of getting cases, no matter how disreputable, placed under his management. I need not comment upon Mr. Bomwetsch's conduct, for my letter to Mr. Blumhardt says enough upon this subject.

As I hear the ryots, accompanied by Nuzzimooddeen, acting also under the advice of Mr. Bomwetsch, have gone either to Mr. Reid, the Commissioner, or with a view of appealing direct to the Lieutenant Governor, may I beg you will be good enough to forward to the Commissioner copies of the letters I now send you; also copy of my letter to you dated the 7th current, and at the same time solicit the Commissioner to forward the letters to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, for the perusal of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, who, I feel assured, will approve the spirit the letters display.

Mr. Grant's name is now being used by some designing men for the purpose of creating mischief between planters and ryots. I am quite aware how grossly unjust this is to Mr. Grant, and that no man could more resolutely desire to be strictly just and impartial than he wishes to be; but the act shows what mischievous schemes are in operation, when the name of one holding his high position can be used in the unscrupulous way it is. In fact, only yesterday, a gentleman who manages large zemindaries, and who has nothing to do with indigo, told me that recently some hundreds of ryots have asked him if it was the Lieutenant Governor's order that they were not to cultivate any more indigo, a tale which has been most insidiously sent abroad, and, among a strangely credulous people, easily believed.

Kishnaghur; dated 21 November 1859.

My dear Mr. Blumhardt,

As the senior missionary in this important missionary district, I beg to bring the following matters under your consideration:—

Immediately after Mr. Halliday's visit, in May 1858, I wrote Mr. Schurr two letters, dated the 19th and 24th of that month, copies of which I enclose, for the purpose of showing him, and also the other missionaries in this district, the feelings which animated me towards them and their duties, and also my desire to heal discord that had existed, and my anxiety at the same time to secure their co-operation in the way of preventing the slightest act of misconduct on the part of any factory servant, by their reporting it to me, should the same at any time come under their notice.

I am not aware that, since the time I wrote the letters enclosed, anything has arisen in the least calculated to show that my feelings have in any way changed, or that I am less anxious now than I was then to see, as far as lay in my power, justice done to every one; and but lately, you know, when the Bullubpore Mission was in such serious difficulties, that the slightest shadow of hostility on my part would have ruined and made all the expense and pious efforts of years fruitless, I proved the sincerity of my feelings to the missions, by discountenancing the Roman Catholic clergyman, and refusing him either ground to build upon, or any support whatever.

With such feelings towards the missions in my neighbourhood, it has both pained and surprised me to find the Reverend Mr. Bomwetsch, of Santipore, displaying such bitter hostility towards the gentlemen acting under me, and also towards myself. Mr. B. is in fact making himself a mooktear, acting as the agent for any discontented ryot who chooses to go to him; and he lately got up some serious charges against Mr. Sibbald, all of which were dismissed by the magistrate.

You are well aware what a high character Mr. Sibbald possesses, and that there is not a man in India disposed to be more liberal and just, nor is there a man more respected by every one who knows him. I ask you, therefore, what you think of Mr. B. taking up cases against such a man without the ordinary courtesy of communicating with him.

You know that any communication from Mr. Bomwetsch to Mr. Sibbald would have had the most respectful consideration, and Mr. Sibbald would have been glad indeed to have had any misconduct brought to his notice, and would have instantly redressed it.

Mr. B., however, not content with the above, is now acting in a similar spirit with some discontented ryots in the village of Pathurgatha, near Ruttonpore, and has, I believe, forgotten himself so far as to take into his counsels a man named Nuzzimooddeen Sheikh, a discharged jail darogah, and now well known as the most disreputable mooktear hanging about the Fouzdarry Courts at Kishnaghur. Rumour, indeed, says that he intends sending the ryots to complain to the Lieutenant Governor, a measure that would have been most proper if they had failed in getting justice elsewhere, but they have never asked it from me, although I have begged them to come and do so. Now, all this is very sad conduct on the part of a clergyman, and surely I have some reason both to be angry and grieved at it.

I see now no other measure left me but to request you to forward this letter to the Bishop, and point out the impropriety of Mr. B.'s proceedings to him; and also to make him aware, that if a bad feeling does arise on the part of planters and factory servants towards the missions, and discord and mischief result, in place of the kindly feeling I have been so anxious to maintain, neither the responsibility nor reproach will rest with me. I am certain you cannot think me capable of refusing justice to any one who comes to me for it, for no one is more anxious than I am to redress wrongs, and punish my servants when they merit it. But when ryots do not come to me, on the contrary, when they listen to evil counsels, and put themselves, not in the hands of the landlord, but in the hands of a few designing men, who wish to use them for a time for their own selfish purposes, what can I do?

It is vexatious that Mr. Bomwetsch should act in a spirit not only so unlike the fair, honest, open dealing you could expect from a clergyman, but also with such an utter absence of the courtesy of a gentleman.

I enclose you copy of a letter received not long ago, from one of the most intelligent native gentlemen in Calcutta, the editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," not for the purpose of indulging in any unworthy vanity, but simply to show that, if a native gentleman thinks fit to address me such a letter, it can only have arisen from feelings of not a very estimable nature that the Reverend Mr. Bomwetsch was induced to act towards me with the irregular want of courtesy he has displayed.

19 January 1858.

My dear Mr. Schurr,

YOUR kind visit when Mr. Halliday was here was, I trust, only a prelude to the renewal of the intimacy that formerly existed between us.

Let me again say, if, in the heat of the unfortunate controversy which took place, I expressed one word which gave you pain, I greatly regret having done so; and I state this, believe me, in as sincere a spirit as it is possible to do.

To treat any one with a want of courtesy, I think you will do me the justice to admit, is not my wont, and I am sure it gives me pleasure now to free myself from the possible reproach of having used a hasty expression in a controversy with a clergyman, by offering the fullest atonement in my power, in the event of your thinking I was so to blame.

Mr. Halliday's recent visit will, I think, be the means of doing much good; and one most happy result has attended upon it already, in healing discord which so unfortunately prevailed. I believe Mr. Halliday's visit to the missions was a source of much gratification to him.

In all matters relating to the mission, where you think I can do any good, command my services as you like.

You cannot ask anything in which my sympathies, at any rate, will not be with you; and in factory matters, whenever an act of injustice is brought to your notice, please bring it immediately to mine.

Do not scruple about troubling me, for even should what you bring to my notice at any time prove, on inquiry, incorrect, rest assured I have too much respect for the position you occupy as a clergyman, to feel a shade of annoyance at your acting up to what you think a conscientious discharge of your duty.

What I say to you, I equally do so to Mr. Linckè, to whom please send this letter, with my kindest regards.

I intend having the pleasure of renewing my attendance at the Bengalee service on the Sunday morning, and all I can do to give your converts confidence in their intercourse with me, and with kind regards to Mrs. Schurr, believe me to remain, &c.

P.S. Mr. Schurr acknowledged this letter by a short note, showing a very becoming spirit on the part of Mr. Linckè and himself; but thinking that I owed an apology to some other members of the missionary body. This remark called for my second letter, which Mr. Schurr acknowledged to be all that he could wish.

24 January 1858.

My dear Mr. Schurr,

I HAVE just received your kind note of this morning, and I acknowledge the paragraph in your former letter (to which you refer) did vex me a little.

I thought, after the frank and unqualified terms of my letter of the 19th instant to you, that it was unnecessary. However, my wish is so sincere to have only the most friendly relations with you, that I beg to say, that should any unhappy controversy arise again between the missionaries and planters, and should I interfere at all, I shall do so on broad grounds, and take care to avoid the slightest expressions which can be construed into a personal allusion by any one of the missionary body.

In the late, to me, painful controversy, this rule was possibly a little forgotten; and feeling that, at any rate, you might think so, I at once, on writing to you on the 19th, offered to Mr. Linckè and yourself, as my immediate neighbours, the most unreserved expression of my regret, in the event of your thinking I had been to blame. To no one else, however, am I at all aware that I owe any apology. I cannot retract opinions, though I may express and feel regret for having stated them too forcibly, or so as to have given to any one unnecessary pain.

Planters and missionaries going hand in hand, may do much good; their misunderstanding each other, much evil.

What we have lately seen is enough to make all long more anxiously for success to attend upon all missionary schemes, and to bind Europeans of all classes more to each other. And to no class in India do I feel the same respect as to that to which you belong; or so heartfelt a desire to aid any one of the good men of which it consists, in doing what, as a clergyman, he would desire.

Laymen, as well as clergymen, can all do some good in their own little circle; and I have seen sufficient of life, and known also too deeply its sorrows, not to feel where good can be done, how sad it is to sacrifice one hour in idle strife, in place of devoting it to promoting peace and good will.

Again, with every feeling of respect, both to Mr. Linckè and yourself, and kindest regards to Mrs. Schurr, believe me, &c.

P.S. I go to Kishnaghur to-morrow for a few days, otherwise it would have given me pleasure to have called and seen Mr. Vaughan.

From J. Forlong, Esq., Indigo Planter, to L. R. Tottenham, Esq., Magistrate of Zillah Nuddea; dated 7 November 1859.

Sir,

I AM just favoured with your letter of the 3d, and have had the papers read to me which you have kindly forwarded. The papers bear the impress of what they contain, having been got up by the influence of the mooktear Nuzzimooddeen, much more than by the unbiased feeling of the ryots. Nuzzimooddeen was at Pathurgatha when the police held the inquiries to which you refer, and the ryots were, in fact, tutored by him what to say, his object being to create a quarrel between them and the factory, with the view of the same being profitable to himself. Nuzzimooddeen's statement as to the ryots being prevented coming to me, is quite untrue. On the contrary, I have begged the ryots to come and see me, and it is my earnest desire to redress any wrong under which they may possibly labour, and the ryots well know that I am accessible to them at all times. The Nichindpore head gomashtha, Hurris Chunder Mookerjee, is also well known to be about the most respectable trusty servant in this district, and has the best possible name with the people.

To prove, however, how desirous I am to do justice to the ryots, if you would wish to send Baboo Greesh Chunder Bose, darogah, again to Pathurgatha, I will go to Ruttonpore Factory, and the ryots can come before me in his presence, when I pledge myself to see they have the most ample justice done to them.

It is not the ryots at all who are at present disposed to give either you or myself trouble, but certain parties who make use of them for their own selfish purposes, and who think, if they can make any mischief between the factory and the ryots, they will profit in the confusion that may ensue.

I am most desirous to prove to the ryots, as I have always shown, how much I am their friend, and how much I wish to see justice done to them; but if they will listen to evil councils, and not come near me, I cannot redress their complaints as I would wish. Believe me, I am most desirous to be kind, just, and considerate to every ryot connected with the large property under my charge; and I am sure a reference to any of your native subordinates will confirm what I say.

From Baboo Hurris Chunder Mookerjee, to J. Forlong, Esq., Indigo Planter ; dated 12 March 1859.

My dear Sir,

EXTREME press of business prevented my replying to your very excellent letter earlier. I was anxious to write to you at length upon the very interesting subject you have touched upon, and so was looking out for more leisure than I have for some days had.

As regards yourself personally, allow me to add my humble but sincere testimony to that given on any side by every class of people who have known you, or heard much of you, that no English gentleman in Bengal stands higher in the estimation of his native fellow subjects than yourself. In private society, when the system of indigo planting in Lower Bengal forms the topic of conversation, and the conduct of planters is, as is generally the case, condemned, Mr. James Forlong is almost always excepted by name, and so even in public discussions in which our countrymen take any part.

It were to be wished that the generality of your countrymen in India felt as you do for us. The position of an English gentleman residing in the Mofussil is one in which his power to do good is great ; his intelligence, and the civilization in which he is bred up, enables him to confer benefits of a nature which the generality of our countrymen, including the highest classes, know not how to extend to each other. You cannot blame us if we measure your conduct and criticise it by a higher standard than we think of testing the conduct of our own countrymen by. It is this principally which, confined with (I confess) party purposes, that will account for the severity of the articles in the "Hindoo Patriot" on indigo planting.

I have mentioned party purposes. You will yourself, I am sure, recognise a sign of future improvement in the capacity manifested of late by some of our countrymen, though very few of them, and their disposition to mix in politics. One cannot interfere, however, in political matters without being more or less a partisan ; and I feel sure you will agree with me that it is far better to be a partisan than to be the cold apathetic being Bengalees so often are.

I hope you will allow me sometimes to have the pleasure of hearing from you ; for there are many things I would like to address you about connected with matters in the Mofussil, and have your valuable opinion regarding them.

From J. C. Brown, Esq., Civil and Sessions Judge of Kishnaghur, and others, to J. Forlong, Esq., Calcutta ; dated 30 April 1853.

Dear Sir,

WITH reference and in reply to your letter to us, dated the 25th instant, we are happy to have it in our power jointly and individually to bear witness to the exemplary, gentlemanly, and honourable way in which you always conducted yourself during the period we have known you as a resident indigo planter in this district. Some of us have witnessed, while others have only heard of the high estimation in which you are held, and the respect entertained for you by all those you had under your control and authority while you were resident in this district. Your constant endeavours to ameliorate the condition of the poor and needy that came under your notice are deserving of the highest eulogy.

We regret that the change in your affairs should have deprived us of the pleasure of meeting you occasionally at the station, and we sincerely trust that the commercial engagements you have now entered into may lead to your prosperity and happiness.

P. S.—To my signature attached to the accompanying letter I can add my individual testimony to the uprightness of Mr. Forlong's conduct. During the time I have been Surveyor in the Nuddeah district, I have travelled over I may say every village connected with Mr. Forlong's factories, and I can confidently say that I never heard an European resident in any district so well and so affectionately spoken of by the highest and lowest natives. From the great zemindar down to the poorest ryot all found equal justice at Mr. Forlong's hands. I am enabled to state this from conversations I have had with all the natives of this district, and often since his departure I have heard expressions of regret that

Mr. Forlong is no longer among them. I desire also to add that, in the prosecution of the public duties of the survey; I have met with every assistance from him, as also his subordinates, and I have no recollection of being obliged to report to him any instance of a refractory ryot, or any individual under him, offering any obstruction to the progress of the Government Survey.

(signed) Ralph Smyth, Artillery,
Superintendent of Survey.

MEMORANDUM by J. Forlong, Esq., Indigo Planter; dated 25 November 1859.

THIS letter was sent me when I left the district for a few months in 1853, and after I had resided at Kishnaghur for 16 years, keeping that concern and Kotungal under my own special charge; and upon which two properties there was a population of 2,75,000 people, I may say, nearly all more or less united with the factories. I think the letter shows that I am not likely to be harsh to ryots, or refuse them justice.

From Mr. John White, Mohutpore Factory, to E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal; dated 25 November 1859.

My dear Sir,

I HAVE just heard that the ryots of certain villages in my Mohutpore Division have been ordered by their talookdar, Prankisto Pal, to go down to Calcutta to present a petition to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor against me, for the purpose of evading their engagements of cultivating indigo. To prevent his Honor from coming to a hasty conclusion and issuing orders without first being duly informed of the circumstances of the case, I take the liberty of addressing you, pledging my honour as a gentleman to the truth of what I am about to state. There are two brothers who own a number of villages in my indigo concerns, named Prankisto Pal and Nobokisto Pal; these men are in deadly feud with each other, and have been for many years past. I had a large tract of land called the Deeper Maut, part of which was cultivated by the ryots of each party; this land was much coveted by both, and very lately I made an exchange of this land with Nobokisto Pal for some equivalent land in return, which gave great umbrage to Prankisto Pal, who was most anxious to possess it. He tried all in his power to induce me to make an arrangement with him instead of his brother, and failing in this, he became most bitterly opposed to me and my factories, forbidding the ryots of all his villages to sow their October indigo, which they were engaged in at the time of this occurrence. There was up to this time no bad feeling between the ryots and the factories, nor does any exist in reality at the present moment, in proof of which I shall here mention what occurred a short time ago. One of the deputy magistrates of this district was in the neighbourhood of the villages above alluded to, and was requested by the magistrate to make inquiry of the ryots if they had any complaints against the factory or my superintendent, Mr. Adam Hume Smith, which he did, and got for answer "they had none, but were ordered to discontinue sowing, and to hold no further intercourse with the factory, under penalty of a fine of 25 rupees for each man. This was given in to the magistrate in a written report by the deputy magistrate, and can be found in the records of his court. This talookdar and his son are now both under bond for 5,000 rupees to keep the peace for one year. They have armed men continually in their employ to enforce their orders. On a former occasion, when Mr. E. Trevor was magistrate of this district, he sentenced the two brothers to six months' imprisonment, with fines, for assembling lattials, of which he had ocular demonstration. A reference to the magistrate here will confirm all I have stated. I beg you will lay the above statement of facts before his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, with the concluding observation that there is a strange impression abroad in this district that Government are opposed to indigo planting, and have determined to put a stop to it, and that those who assist in so doing will find favour in their sight. This report has, I think, been spread by designing men for their own advantage.

MEMORANDUM.

Mr. Forlong was informed in a demi-official letter that the Lieutenant Governor was sorry to hear that so unfounded an idea had gone abroad as to his supposed hostility to indigo planters, his desire being to do equal justice to all classes. The Lieutenant Governor is not aware of ever having done or said anything which if not misunderstood would account for such an idea being prevalent.

Should Mr. Forlong be coming down here, it would give the Lieutenant Governor much pleasure to see him.

MEMORANDUM.

Mr. White was informed, in a demi-official letter, that there was no danger of the Lieutenant Governor's coming to any conclusion on the complaints of the people alluded to upon their mere petitions. In such cases either complainants are referred to the local authorities, or a report, after inquiry, is called for from those authorities.

It was intimated to Mr. White, that the Lieutenant Governor was sorry to hear that there was an impression in his district that the Lieutenant Governor was opposed to indigo planting. The Lieutenant Governor wishes, as every one else does, the rights of all persons of all classes to be respected, and all persons to be protected from violence or oppression; and when any case is brought to his notice, in which he thinks it necessary to enforce these principles, he does so without the slightest regard to the class of person who may happen to be interested in that particular case. Sometimes such cases may have to do with indigo, and sometimes not. The Lieutenant Governor does not think that a point of any consequence. And so far from being opposed to indigo planting in general, the Lieutenant Governor thinks that, if conducted on wholesome and sound commercial principles, with due regard to the rights of all parties, it must be a great benefit to all concerned and to the country at large.

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot" (No. 7341), dated 23 December 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to the article in your issue of 10th instant, headed "Indigo Planting in Nuddea," I am directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor will be much obliged by your communicating the names of the persons referred to, on whose authority the statements in that article were made, to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, who has received instructions to forward their statements to the local authorities at Kishnaghur.

2. The Lieutenant Governor trusts that, for the sake of the interests of justice, the parties will not hesitate to communicate full particulars to the Commissioner.

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta (No. 7342), dated 23 December 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to the accompanying copy of a letter this day addressed to the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," I am directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that you will be so good as to take down the statements of the parties whose names may be communicated to you by the Editor, and forward them to the local authorities at Kishnaghur for investigation.

From the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," dated 31 December 1859.

THE Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot" has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Under Secretary Lord H. Ulick Browne's letter No. 7341, of the 23d instant, and with reference thereto to state, that he will make every endeavour to induce the parties concerned to appear before the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, for the purpose mentioned.

The Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," however, begs leave to observe, that no statements were made in the article noticed on the writer's own authority, or on that of any one else, the paper containing only comments upon a Government letter which furnished the facts.

From S. Wauchope, Esq., Commissioner of Police, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 3), dated 5 January 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter No. 7342, of the 23d ultimo, directing me to take the statements of the parties whose names might be communicated to me by the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," I have the honour to forward copy of a letter addressed to him by me and of his reply, sending me a number of ryots from the Kishnaghur District, who state they had come to Calcutta to seek justice from the oppression of certain indigo planters in that district.

2. Although these ryots are evidently not the persons on whose authority the statements in the issue of the "Hindoo Patriot" of the 10th December were published, I have taken down in writing what they had to say, and beg to enclose their statement for the orders of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal

From S. Wauchope, Esq., Commissioner of Police, to the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," Bhowanipore (No. 1072), dated 29 December 1859.

Sir,

WITH reference to the letter No. 7341, of the 23d instant, from the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal to your address I have the honour to inform you that if you will be so good as to let me have the names of the correspondents to whom you refer in the article headed "Indigo Planting in Nuddea," I shall be happy to take their statements at any time or place which may suit them best, so that they may suffer as little inconvenience as possible.

Bhowanipore, "Hindoo Patriot" Office,
4 January 1860.

THE Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot" has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a letter dated the 29th ultimo, from the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, and in compliance with the request contained therein, begs to send some persons concerned in the matter alluded to in the articles headed "Indigo Planting in Nuddea," in the recent issues of the above journal. They are not the identical individuals referred to in Mr. Secretary Lushington's letter No. 6124, of the 23d October last, to the address of the Commissioner of Nuddea, but they will probably be able to throw some light on the cases treated of in the letter.

Other individuals interested in those inquiries accompany, whom the Commissioner of Police, if he thinks fit, may examine. The Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot" understands that Umbica Churn Biswas and Okhil Chunder Biswas named in Mr. Secretary Lushington's letter are somewhere in Hatkhola in Calcutta.

DEPOSITION of Sheikh Khosal Mundol.

THE information of Sheikh Khosal Mundol of Patorghatta Gobindopore, taken upon solemn affirmation by me S. Wauchope, Esq., one of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, in and for the town of Calcutta, at Fort William in Bengal, the 5th day of January 1860, who, on solemn affirmation, saith: I live in the village of Patorghatta, thannah Hattea, zillah Kishnaghur. Our village is a very long distance (10 or 12 coss) from Hanskhallee, and what has taken place there we know not anything of our own knowledge. I know nothing of Seetul Turufdar or what has become of him.

The factory of Ruttonpore is about two or three coss distant from my village. It belongs to Mr. Goldsmith, who is under Mr. Forlong, who stays at Nichindipore. Mr. Goldsmith has committed much oppression on the ryots of my village. On the 13th of last Kartick, by Mr. Goldsmith's orders, Judoo Roy, the Dewan of Huttra Factory, seized Chunder Biswas and Boroo Mundol and Anundo Biswas and Sheikh Jumeet; the last of whom made his escape from Ruttonpore Factory. The other three were taken away and since then we have seen or heard nothing of them. The reason why these men were seized was, that the indigo planter wished them to sow indigo by force which they refused to do. Then the indigo planters' people, to compel them and us who refused to sow indigo did all sort of oppression, looted us, and placed elephants and laltials from the factory in various places, so as to damage our crops and ourselves. We were about to petition the magistrate, and in order to compel us to settle the matter, the planter carried off the men in question. We petitioned the magistrate but received no advantage from it. The magistrate was a friend of all the planters and would not listen to us poor men. I believe the Kotwallee zillah darogah made a mofussil inquiry. What report he made I know not, but we got no justice; and whether the three men are dead or alive I know not. There are 14 of us who have fled from our village who are here present. We have fled because we are so oppressed by the indigo planter Mr. Goldsmith, acting under Mr. Forlong, that we can in no way stay in our village. We can relate no other particular instance of persons being kidnapped from the village, but, in all sorts of manners, fines and dues are extorted from us. We are forced to sow indigo, and on our not doing so are oppressed. We cannot sow indigo for we are not paid a sufficient sum for it to keep ourselves and our families.

Sheikh Khosal Mundol × (his mark).

The under-mentioned 13 individuals having also appeared before me, state that they can give no additional facts regarding kidnapping ryots, but confirm Sheikh Khosal's statement regarding the manner in which they are oppressed by Mr. Goldsmith and Mr. Forlong, and Nobin Chunder Biswas and Judoo Roy. They state that they came to Calcutta for justice, and with them about 50 others. That they presented a petition to the Lieutenant Governor on Saturday, the 31st December 1859, and the rest, not being able to support themselves in Calcutta, have gone home.

From S. Wauchope, Esq., Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 12), dated 9 January 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 7342, of the 23d ultimo, and in continuation of mine, No. 3, of the 5th instant, I have the honour to report that the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot" having forwarded to me 11 ryots of the Kishnaghur District, I have taken the statement of the man amongst them who was best acquainted with the circumstances attending the alleged kidnapping of Situl Turreefdar by Mr. Hampton, of Hauskholee Indigo Factory, and have sent it, with the names of others, to the magistrate of Kishnaghur.

2. I believe, however, that everything now communicated to me has already been reported to the Kishnaghur police.

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," (No. 395), dated 27 January 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to the second paragraph of your letter, dated 31st ultimo, I am directed by the Lieutenant Governor to inform you that the article headed "Indigo Planting in Nuddea," which gave rise to this correspondence, appeared in your issue of the 17th December (page 396), and not in that of the 10th, as stated in my letter, No. 7341, dated 23d of that month, an error occasioned by a misprint of the date of your paper at the page above mentioned.

2. I am desired to request that you will be so good as to communicate to the Commissioner of Police the names of the correspondents alluded to in the article now indicated, in order that their statements may be taken, and forwarded to the local authorities at Kishnaghur.

"INDIGO PLANTING IN NUDDEA.

"THE publication of the Bengal Secretary's letter on the doings of the planters and magistrates of zillah Nuddea, has induced some of our correspondents, who are personally acquainted with the cases commented upon, to communicate to us a few facts relative to them. The Lieutenant Governor, our readers will remember, directed that strict search should be made for Seetul Torufdar, the missing man. We are informed that all search for the man in this world would be vain. He was kidnapped near the Hanskalee Factory of Mr. White, which is under the superintendence of Mr. Hampton, of Patkabariah notoriety. He was first taken to that factory severely wounded. He was thence conveyed to the Bidjlee Factory, belonging to the same concern, in zillah Jessore. He died some time ago at the latter place.

"The Mr. Howell, who figures so conspicuously in Mr. Lushington's letter, was formerly a road overseer. He obtained his deputy magistracy through some of the occult influences which reigned so strongly in Mr. Halliday's court. Raised to that high dignity, it occurred to him that fit homage thereto should be exacted in the mode discovered by the North Western Provinces' officials. He always carried with him a whip in the streets, which he applied to the back of every one who did not, meeting him, salaam him. Men of respectability, if of weak appearance, were not exempted from this display of magisterial authority. This man's incompetence and partiality have created universal dissatisfaction; and even the planters, whose tool he has become, do not speak very respectfully of him."

From Lord H. U. Browne, under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta (No. 396), dated 27 January 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, Nos. 3 and 12, dated respectively the 5th and 9th instant, and in reply to inform you that if any of the persons who subscribed the deposition taken by you are still in Calcutta, they should be directed to prefer their complaints to the local authorities.

2. I am desired at the same time to forward to you the accompanying copy of a letter this day addressed to the Editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," from which you will perceive that the article in that newspaper, to which allusion was intended, was incorrectly indicated in the first instance, owing to a misprint in the issue which contained it.

3. Should the Editor furnish the names of the correspondents mentioned in the article now pointed out, you are requested to be so good as to take down their statements, and transmit them to the local authorities.

ABSTRACT TRANSLATION of a Petition from Gurub Mundle and others, of Adodiah and other Villages in Thanna Handra, in Zillah Nuddea, dated 13th Pous 1266.

STATE that Mr. Hill, indigo planter of the Nischeendeepore factory, having purchased Rultonpore and other factories situated in the petitioners' villages, is practising great oppressions on the people; that they obtain no redress from the magisterial authorities of the zillah, who, being friends of the planters, dismiss the complaints instituted by the petitioners, while the planters, on being informed that the petitioners had complained against them, get angry, take possession of all their property, and compel them to forsake their habitations. That Beeroo Mundle, Anund Biswas, and Chunder Biswas were arrested and carried off by the planters, and it is not known to this time whether these persons are now living. That nothing has been done in the matter by the present magistrate. That the superintendent and native servants of the above factories are persons of notoriously bad character, and constantly commit murder and plunder. That the Budmashes retained in their employ plunder the property of the ryots in open daylight.

That the factory gomastah and amlah forcibly compel the petitioners to cultivate indigo without paying them any remuneration, and the ryots are also forced to sow indigo in the lands prepared by them for the cultivation of paddy, &c.

That the factory amlah extort money from them on several pretences, and the ryots are compelled to pay fine for their cattle which the factory men seize and carry away from the road. That they forcibly cut off the trees belonging to the petitioners, without paying them anything. That the ryots are not allowed to take water for their use from the river or from tanks without paying a certain fee to the planter. Pray that they may be relieved from the oppressions described above.

PETITION from the Inhabitants of Thanna Handra, Zilla Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated the 20th January 1860.

THE humble petition of the undersigned inhabitants of zillah Nuddea, thanna Handra,

Respectfully sheweth,

1. That your petitioners are sorely oppressed by the proceedings of the superintendents and other servants of the Handra indigo concern, the manager of which, on the part of the proprietor, Mr. Hill, is Mr. James Forlong.

2. That these servants of the indigo concern would compel them to grow indigo, and on noncompliance with their demand, use every device of oppression to coerce your petitioners into compliance.

3. That on application to the police for aid and protection, your petitioners are refused such aid and protection.

4. That on complaining to the magistrate of the district their complaints are not heeded.

5. That your petitioners have brought these circumstances to your Honor's knowledge by petition, but although many days have passed, your petitioners are not aware of any orders having been passed on their petition.

6. That those attempts on the part of your petitioners to obtain protection and redress have further incensed the servants of the indigo concern above-named, who, to revenge themselves and to make your petitioners submit to their demands, have collected armed men and posted them near about the villages in order to intercept and seize and carry away to the factories your petitioners and other similarly obnoxious persons.

7. That further, your petitioners' families are being molested by the paths leading to their homesteads being dug up, and by the trees covering their houses being cut down, and insulted by menaces.

8. That from motives similar to the above, men have been seized and carried away from the village of Patturghatta, and several men were assaulted and wounded in the village of Beerpore, and your petitioners expect no better treatment.

9. That under these circumstances your petitioners pray for an order on the magistrate of zillah Nuddea, directing him to take prompt action upon the petitions presented to him by your petitioners.

Lieutenant

Lieutenant Governor's Camp, Hazareebaugh:—RESOLUTION (No. 231), dated the 30th January.

READ two petitions, dated respectively the 10th and 20th instant, from certain inhabitants of zillah Nuddea, complaining against the oppressions of the indigo planters of the district.

Order.—Ordered, that the petitioners be informed that on any occasion of oppression or injustice being really committed to their injury, by any person whatsoever, they can complain to the magistrate, adducing evidence to prove the truth of the complaint, when, if their proof is satisfactory, the offenders will be punished. Petitioners need not fear, that true cases, supported by true evidence, will not be justly tried, whoever may be the accused party; or they may prosecute the persons who injured them or the employers of such persons, or both, for damages in the civil courts of the district, no matter to what class they belong; and if they prove their case, they will be reimbursed by the judgment; or they may take both civil and criminal action simultaneously if they please. All this the petitioners can do in the local courts, when a true ground of complaint exists. But it is of no use to make vague and general complaints to Government without proof. For no one can tell how true or how false such complaints may be.

If petitioners contract to cultivate indigo, and take advances, they must expect to be required in a lawful way, by the other party, to fulfil their contracts; but no one can force them to contract, if they do not wish to do so.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, (No. 223), dated Camp Hazareebaugh, the 30th January 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you in original two petitions dated respectively the 13th Pous 1266, and 20th instant, from certain inhabitants of zillah Nuddea, and to request that you will be good enough to inquire into and report upon the allegation therein made of ryots having been illegally seized and forcibly carried off from their villages.

2. This is the only point in the petition upon which you are now required to report.

3. The return of the petition is requested with your reply.

PETITION from the Inhabitants of Nuddea, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated Calcutta, the 16th January 1860.

THE humble petition of the undersigned inhabitants of zillah Nuddea,

Respectfully sheweth,

That your petitioners being sorely oppressed by certain proceedings on the part of certain indigo planters and others, in the district of Nuddea, and having unfortunately met with no redress or protection from the district authorities, respectfully appeal to your Honor for the same.

That your petitioners having refused to take advances for the cultivation of indigo from the Handra concern, the superintendent of which, on the part of Mr. Forlong, the manager, and Mr. Hill, the proprietor, would force them to take contracts at very insufficient rates, were in various ways molested and oppressed, whereupon your petitioners complained to the magistrate. That on the 28th October last Boroo Mundle and Chunder Biswas, ryots of your petitioners' village, were by force carried away by armed people belonging to the factory, and they have not since been heard of.

That their complaints before the magistrate were dismissed (although proved on local investigation), on the ground that that functionary had no authority to interfere in such cases.

That your petitioners appealed to the Commissioner of the division, who has not yet passed any orders thereupon.

That your petitioners appealed to your Honour.

That your Honour having been pleased to direct the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to receive the statements of your petitioners, that gentleman has been kind enough to record them. That these efforts made by your petitioners to obtain justice have irritated the planters, and on the 2d December, Anund Sirdar, of Gobindpore, was carried off. Subsequently, again, on the 8th instant, Oojul Mollah and Patan Shaike were carried away from Soneprokooreah; six other ryots of Soneprokooreah have also been carried off.

That moreover, the factory people have dug up all the paths and avenues of the village, and have resolved to punish all those who may, even by chance, tread upon the ground thus appropriated.

That the police, on being applied to, refuse to interfere.

That your petitioners dare not approach their native villages, as they are sure to be carried off to some factory if they are caught.

That your petitioners are in various other ways, too numerous to detail, oppressed and injured.

That your petitioners, despairing of redress and protection from the magistrate, humbly entreat of your Honour such orders as may suffice for their protection, pending the inquiries now being carried on in the Calcutta police office, which your petitioners doubt not will end in the full establishment of the truth of their complaints.

That your petitioners believe that stringent orders upon the magistrate to receive their complaints, and act promptly thereupon, will, in a great measure, conduce to their protection.

They therefore pray that such orders be passed.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea, (No. 233), dated Camp Hazareebaugh, the 30th January 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter No. 223, of this date, I am directed to forward to you in original, for report, another petition from certain native inhabitants of zillah Nuddea, complaining of oppression, &c., on the part of the indigo planters of the Handra concern.

2. The petitioners in this case, you will see, were made to appear for examination before the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, but this proceeding, I am directed to explain, arose through a misunderstanding of orders given in another case, and Mr. Wauchope was subsequently directed to refer these petitioners to the local authorities of their zillah.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 47 Ct.), dated Allipore, the 18th February 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, Nos. 223 and 233, dated 30th ultimo, and in reply to report as follows, on the petitions therewith forwarded:—

Letter No. 233, dated 30 January 1860.

Petition from certain inhabitants of Putterghattah.

The purport is that Mr. Forlong's people oppress them in various ways in order to induce them to cultivate indigo, and that they can get no redress from the magistrate nor the Commissioner.

2. The magistrate reports that on the 20th September last Chand Mundal, Pataroo Mundul, and others, of Putterghattah, Gobindpore, petitioned him that Mr. Gow Smith, of Rutunpore factory, and his dependant, Nobind Chunder Biswas, had been trying to force them to cultivate indigo against their will. The magistrate, after inquiry, ordered the darogah, on the 2d October, to tell the ryots to adduce proof of any specific charges they might have to bring. On the 27th January, the case was struck off the file owing to petitioners' non-attendance; but on the 1st instant, the magistrate had it restored to the file, and ordered the plaintiff to take out subpoenas. The witnesses came in on the 2d, and stated generally to this effect, that defendants took money from them as fines, cut their bamboos, and annoyed them in several ways to make them sow indigo; but they declined, with one exception, to advance any specific charge against the defendants. A case of extortion is still being prosecuted by one of the petitioners, but no witnesses have yet been brought in.

3. A second case from Putterghattah is as follows:—On the 7th November, Nuffer Mundal and Soonder Biswas petitioned the magistrate that Rotoo Mundul and Chunder Biswas had been carried off by Mr. Gow Smith's lattials to Handra, and thence to Ruttenpore, and since which they had not been heard of. The magistrate caused all searches to be made, but in vain. The plaintiffs and their witnesses were sent for on the 30th November, but they could not be found. At last, on the 7th ultimo, the darogah reported that the plaintiffs had engaged to produce the missing persons in three days; but they never appeared before the magistrate.

4. Case 3d.—Again, on the 16th ultimo, Rowaz Mollah and Alady Sheikh, of Putterghattah, petitioned the magistrate that Oozal Mollah and Pata had been carried away by some lattials of the Phoolbarry factory, and the magistrate caused strict search to be made for the missing parties, but with no better success. He ordered the darogah, on the 30th ultimo, to send in the plaintiffs and their witnesses, and the case still pends.

5. Case 4th.—On the 27th September last, the ryots of Putterghattah complained that the factory people were assembling, which the darogah, on the 16th October, reported to be the case, but that the villagers had assembled likewise. A lattial caught in the Phoolbarry factory was tried and put in jail for six months; mochulkahs were taken from the servants of the factory, and from the leading ryots of the villages, to keep the peace for a year.

6. The magistrate reports that Golam Sheik, of Beerpore, petitioned him on the 5th ultimo, that his house had been looted by Mr. Hill's factory people, who had wounded Neeloo Sheikh and two others, and had carried away Mothoora. The darogah could not find the missing party anywhere. Phoolshaha put to the same effect on a separate paper. These cases were all struck off on the 27th ultimo, on default.

Letter No. 223, dated 30 January 1860.

This petition is to the same purport; the only point on which Government wants a report is on the allegation that villagers have been forcibly carried away.

7. The petition of Khosal Mundul to this office was sent to the magistrate by Mr. Reid, with orders to send up his proceedings in the case for inspection after he should have completed them. As yet, the kidnapping case is not decided. I shall extract here paras. 12 to 17 from the officiating magistrate's report. The parties have more than once sent representatives to me, and have been referred to the magistrate, who will spare no pains, if they spare none, to bring offenders to justice.

"Para. 12. The real truth of all these petitions and complaints seems to me, from what I have seen of the district, as I said before, merely to be that they are intended to excite sympathy for the ryots in their real grievance about indigo, or as I have said above, Nuzbooty Ry waste (the only case that I have seen of real importance is Seetul Turruddar, and I am not quite certain that I know the rights of that yet, not having seen the witnesses myself). They are then followed by complaints and petitions on the side of the factories as an offset. I have a fixed order for each class of case, and I am sure if these ryots, whose petitions I am answering, knew the orders passed by me on the factory petitions, they would allow that the planters might, with an equally good case complain that I give them no redress.

"13. What the real fault of indigo planting is, I hesitate to say, not having sufficient experience of the system pursued in this district to express a decided opinion; but there is a fault, I think, and I believe the planters will in some instances have to alter or modify their present system, viz., pay a little more advance, and take fewer bundles for the rupee, with other minor changes; and therefore, believing the ryots to have good grievance, I am very sorry to see the the course some of them pursue to get redress, viz., heaping false complaints, vague complaints and exaggerations on a good case, and so really injuring themselves, by rendering it difficult to pick out an instance where they may have suffered violence.

"14. I explain to them all to be careful to adhere to the truth, and (instead of making vague complaints, as many have done) to refuse their advances, if such be their wish; to adhere to that refusal steadily, and as soon as ever the slightest injury be really done them in consequence, to complain to me. The darogahs have orders to see they are not forced to cultivate against their wish, or molested, and I believe this course has given them satisfaction; at least, they always appeared to me to go away satisfied.

"15. But since the question of advances had arisen there are also instances in the districts which persons who have old grudges to the factories have made use of the ryots as a cat's paw to bring false cases for their own benefit.

"16. The whole question is one of difficulty. There is at present seemingly a run against some factories and not against others, and I have not yet local knowledge or experience enough to understand the subject thoroughly, but I believe that the real grievances are matters which can only be settled amicably, and will soon be so. All I can fairly do, I have done, to protect the ryots from open violence; but at the same time, I have been careful that no deed or order of mine could be construed as leaning one way or other. As I said before, I give an order with regard to the class of petition. Whoever presents it, the same order is passed.

"17. You will perceive that some of the present petitions are among those from whom it has been necessary to take moochulkas, and this fact has great significance, when considered with the petition I am reporting on."

8. The original enclosures of your letters under reply are herewith returned.

RESOLUTION, No. 1260, dated the 26th March 1860.

READ a petition, dated the 16th January last, from Chand Mundle and others, of Nuddea, complaining of the oppressions practised upon them by the indigo planters of the Handra concern, and stating that they have met with no redress or protection from the district authorities.

Read also the following reports thereon, submitted by the Commissioner of Nuddea:—

"The magistrate reports that on the 20th September last, Chand Mundle, Pataroo Mundle and others of Paterghattah, Gobindpore, petitioned him that Mr. Gow Smith of Ruttunpore factory and his dependant, Nobinchunder Biswas, had been trying to force them to cultivate indigo against their will. The magistrate, after inquiry, ordered the darogah on the 2d October to tell the ryots to adduce proof of any specific charges they might have to bring. On the 27th January the case was struck off the file, owing to petitioners' non-attendance, but on the 1st instant, the magistrate had it restored to the file, and ordered the plaintiffs to take out subpoenas. The witnesses came in on the 2d, and stated generally to this effect, that defendant took money from them as fines, cut their bamboos, and annoyed them in several ways to make them sow indigo; but they declined with one exception to advance any specific charge against the defendants. A case of extortion is still being prosecuted by one of the petitioners, but no witnesses have yet been brought in."

It appears that the statements made by the petitioners were general, and that they declined to bring specific charges, excepting in one case, which is now pending, but in which the petitioners have as yet brought in no witnesses; further, that in every case the magistrate has at once inquired into their complaints.

Ordered that the petitioners be informed that there is no reason for the interference of Government in their case, and that it was extremely wrong of them to have made such a false complaint to the Lieutenant Governor, as every application of theirs has been received with attention by the local authorities.

READ a petition from certain inhabitants of thannah Handra, in zillah Nuddea, dated the 20th January last. The petitioners, who appear to be inhabitants of Patterghatta, aver that having been oppressed by the servants of an indigo factory because they refused to grow indigo, they complained to the magistrate, but their complaints were not heeded by that officer; they also aver that the servants of the indigo factory being incensed at the endeavours of the petitioners to obtain redress against them, and in order to make the petitioners submit to their demands, have collected armed men for the purpose of seizing and carrying away the petitioners and others; have dug up the paths leading to the petitioners' houses, and have cut down the trees overhanging their houses. They further complain that men have been seized and carried away from the village of Patterghattah, and that others have been assaulted and wounded in the village of Beerpore from similar motives.

2. Having caused inquiry to be made, the Lieutenant Governor finds that it is not true that the magistrate has not heeded the petitions of these petitioners. He finds that when certain inhabitants of Patterghattah petitioned the magistrate, complaining that certain persons were trying to force them to cultivate indigo against their will, they were called upon to make specific charges, and to adduce evidence thereto. But nevertheless in only one case would the complainants make a specific charge, which case is now under investigation. In another case, a complaint of kidnapping two persons was made, but the complainants abandoned the case. In another case arising out of a similar charge, inquiries are still pending. And in a fourth case arising out of a complaint of the people of this place a factory lattial was punished, and all parties were bound down to keep the peace. It does not appear that any petition from the petitioners or other inhabitants of Patterghattah were not heeded by the magistrate, and it does appear that when these petitioners were required to reduce their vague complaints to specific charges, and to bring evidence thereupon, only a very few charges were made, on all of which very just and proper measures were taken by the magistrate.

3. It is extremely wrong of the petitioners to have made this false complaint.

4. The petitioners know that when they have any real wrongs to complain of, their cases will always be fully inquired into, if they make a specific charge, and adduce evidence to support it. But vague general complaints cannot be attended to.

Order.—Ordered that a copy of the above Resolution be forwarded for the information of the petitioners.

— No. 16. —

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, (No. 5690), dated the 19th September 1859.

Sir,

THE Sessions Judge of Rajshahye having submitted to the Lieutenant Governor his remarks to the registrar of the Nizamut Adawlut on the trial noted in the margin, I am directed by his Honor to forward a copy of these remarks for your information, and to request that, in consequence of the apparently very insufficient inquiry which has been made with reference to Mr. Cockburn's alleged criminality in this case, you will immediately depute the present officiating magistrate of Pubna to the spot, and there to make a most strict and searching inquiry as to what part Mr. Cockburn did actually take in this most serious and fatal affray.

Bughir Khan and others. Affray with murder, &c.

2. After the officiating magistrate has spared no exertion to ascertain the exact state of the case, and there should appear to him in consequence sufficient grounds for ulterior proceedings against Mr. Cockburn, he will submit the evidence and proceedings, according to the prescribed practice, for the opinion of the Advocate General as to the expediency of committing Mr. Cockburn for trial to the Supreme Court.

3. If, however, such a course should not appear advisable, the magistrate will report the result of his investigation to Government, stating his reasons for the conclusion at which he may have arrived.

From L. S. Jackson, Esq., Judge of Rajshahye, to the Registrar, Nizamut Adawlut.

Sir,

I TRANSMIT for the purpose of being laid before the Nizamut Adawlut the record of the trial noted in the margin held at the late Pubna sessions.

2. The case is one of those agrarian outrages not unhappily very uncommon in the district, but in this instance deplorable alike from its apparent origin and from the fatal result.

3. It appears that Mr. W. Cockburn was proprietor of the Chulla concern^{*} thannah Shazadpore, in the subdivision of Serajgunge.

4. Not far from the factory of Chulla is the village of Subgachi, owned by several proprietors, Mr. Cockburn holding in farm the share of one of them.

5. Mr. Cockburn, it seems, required for the purpose of his indigo cultivation, the ploughs of the Subgachi people, and as they were unwilling to give that accommodation, endeavoured to take it by force. The assistant in charge of Serajgunge, who committed the prisoners for trial, has quite inaccurately observed that it was brought only to make the villagers work out the advances they had received, but it appears quite conclusively, not only from the evidence of the witnesses, but specially from the confessions of some of the prisoners (Moh-butoola, alias Mofta, and Bulok), that the Subgachi people were not under advances, and that consequently there was no semblance of right to compel the use of their ploughs.

6. The facts which the evidence appears to establish are these: that on the forenoon of Wednesday the 23d March last, as several of the Subgachi people were at work ploughing their fields to the south of the village, a considerable body of men, 100^{*} or more, were seen approaching, armed, from the direction of the factory. Some four or five of these men came up to within a little distance, and asked the villagers whether they would give the use of their ploughs or no? They said they would not, some of them adding that they had already supplied their ploughs on several occasions without receiving payment, and were then engaged in their own cultivation.

7. The men (sirdars)^{*} then replied they would have to give the ploughs whether they liked it or not, and, it is said, then went to report the result to their employer, who was at a little distance (about 250 yards off), on horseback. The witnesses go on to say that Mr. Cockburn, being apparently excited by the refusal, used abusive language towards the villagers, and after ordering his men to plunder the place and mar the people, rode off towards his factory.

8. This may be the proper place to observe that the assistant magistrate who went in person to the spot, considers it certain that Cockburn was not upon the ground, first, upon certain discrepancies in the evidence, which he has not specified, and second, because from actual inspection he was unable to discover, in the locality indicated, any horse-hoof prints; and I think it my duty to remark, that in the first place, in default of actual evidence to the point, it does not appear why horse-hoof marks should have been observable on the ground after 24 hours had elapsed, in the latter end of March; and in the next place, if there is any one point on which the evidence for the prosecution seems to agree more than upon another, it is as to the first, of Mr. Cockburn having ridden to within a short distance (200 or 300 yards), of the village lands, received the report of his messengers, and then after showing signs of anger, and giving certain orders to his men there assembled, having gone away to his factory, on which the affray begun. To this point I should have occasion to recur presently, but I must say that if the statements of the witnesses on this head should be deemed utterly without foundation, as they have been considered considered by the assistant magistrate, it will be impossible to place reliance in any part of their story, and the prisoner will, in my judgment, be entitled to an acquittal.

Bughir Khan and others. Affray with murder, &c.

* This number is probably exaggerated.

* The word "sirdars" in this part of the country is always used in the sense of "lattials."

9. Immediately on receiving these directions, the sirdars previously assembled, began to shout "kali, kali,"* and made towards the village; the Subgachi men most of them ran off, some of them first loosening their oxen from the ploughs, and some leaving them as they were.

* This is the lattials' war cry with which they advance upon an enemy.

10. A few, amongst whom were Munim, Kotubdi and Sadoolla Tukee, offered some sort of opposition, by standing and protesting against the attack. The assistant magistrate conceives that the villagers threw clods at the assailants, and it is not impossible that they may have armed themselves for resistance, but there is no evidence of the fact, and at all events it is certain that some of the lattials were hurt, while on the other hand the three men last mentioned were all wounded by means of "surkies," or light spears, Kotubdi and Sadoolla slightly, one in the fleshy part of his thigh, the other in the palm of his hand, but the third, Munim, received in the first place a wound in the abdomen, which was fatal. He turned and fled a short distance, his course being marked with blood, but was overtaken and received another wound in the back, close to the shoulder-blade, which brought him down, and the lattials coming up inflicted a third, and then other wounds. The rest escaped.

11. After this some plunder seems to have taken place, though the evidence is not satisfactory as to this, but undoubtedly the most part of the cattle of the village, upwards of 100 head, were driven off to the factory, whence they or part of them were taken to the thannah-pound of Shazadpore, under one or more challans said to bear Mr. Cockburn's signature, and were afterwards claimed and recovered by their owners.

12. When the aggressors retired the villagers came back, and some of them went to the assistance of Munim, who was found by his cousin Jeetoo Sheikh (witness No. 15,) nearly prostrate upon his face and knees, evidently dying. He was taken up and carried to his home, where, after some inarticulate or barely articulate attempts at speaking, and after taking a little water, he almost immediately died.

13. It is stated by Jeetoo, also by the prosecutrix, widow of the deceased, and by his mother, Chundra Bam (witness No. 36,) that with his dying breath Munim declared that he had received his mortal injuries from Bughir Khan and Luckun (prisoners 1 and 2,) at the command of Cockburn, but I find it impossible to place any reliance in this statement.

14. The friends of the deceased then prepared to carry his remains to Serajunge, and after an altercation with two burkundauses, who sought to make them proceed by a road which lay through the factory lands (with the purpose, as they conceived, of getting the body into Mr. Cockburn's power), they carried their point, and reached Serajunge that evening. There information reached Mr. Harvey, the joint magistrate, and the body was subjected to medical examination, the result of which is detailed in the evidence of Luchmun Gree, the native doctor (witness No. 32), and leaves no doubt of the manner in which the deceased came by his death.

15. There has been in this case no investigation by the mofussil police, Mr. Harvey having gone in person to the scene, where he arrived only the next evening, and at once entered upon his inquiries, which have resulted in the commitment of the prisoners, of whom four have been acquitted by this court, in concurrence with the law officer.

16. As to the remainder of the prisoners, the evidence appears ample for conviction; in the case of Goomani alone the identification is slight, and might not probably suffice if it were not most strongly confirmed by his own confession, recorded before Mr. Harvey, the assistant magistrate, to which of course the court will refer, as it accompanies the record.

17. Before me the prisoners have all pleaded not guilty, and for the most part have endeavoured to set up alibis, but without success. Bughir Moolook, Kudum and Goman (first mentioned) have declined to call any witnesses, and as to the others not a single one has substantiated any point in their favour. As to Lall

Khan, against whom the evidence for the prosecution is least conclusive, his own witnesses show that he was a factory servant, and do not in any way support his alibi. He is also warned in the confessions; he is a man of somewhat singular appearance, having been originally an up-country brahmin, and recently converted to Mahomedanism. Punchoo is identified by Kotubdi (witness No. 1), specially as the man who wounded him; as to Bumin (No. 12), who has been identified by five witnesses, two of whom knew him by name, he chose to examine only one witness in his defence, who proved that he was a servant of the factory.

18. Bughir Khan, who is stated to be (as indeed his appearance and manner denote) the factory jemadar (of lattials when required), was undoubtedly one of the foremost in the attack upon the village, and I think there is good reason to believe that he inflicted at least one of the wounds which was fatal to the prosecutrix's husband Munim Sheikh. I would therefore propose in his case a sentence of transportation for life.

19. For the rest, as to whose degree of criminality I do not see much ground for establishing distinctions, I would propose a sentence of 14 years each, imprisonment with hard labour in irons.

20. There are observations upon this case which I think it my duty to make, and in which I trust the Superior Court will concur. One of them relates to the insufficiency of the joint magistrate's proceedings as to the proprietor of the factory. In a case so very serious as the present, in which the direct evidence was so strong against that person, where moreover the assistant magistrate has himself recorded that the "factory had collected men for the attack," and also that Mr. Cockburn had sent the plundered cattle to Shazadpore, thus indisputably connecting him with the offence, both before and after the fact, regard being had to the whole circumstances of the case, it does appear to me that further proceedings in regard to Mr. Cockburn were called for, and that the fact or the degree of his guilt should have been made matter for the decision of a jury. It seems to me that a total failure of justice in such a case as this reflects seriously upon the administration of the district, and that it will be hard to make native zemindars responsible for any crimes committed by their dependants, if in the case of an English planter, seriously compromised in a matter of this description, no steps whatever are taken to bring the offender to trial.

21. The next point to which I must advert is the conduct of the two police burkundauzes on this occasion, and to the manner in which the assistant magistrate has dealt with it. I have already on more than one occasion stated my strong objection to the system of "Mudud*" burkundauzes, that is, two very inferior policemen sent down ostensibly to watch the proceedings of specified persons, but who are usually domesticated with the persons whom they are supposed to watch, and naturally end by neither preventing a disturbance, or affording the least assistance when it takes place, either to the parties assailed, or to their own superiors in the subsequent investigation.

* Mudud, assistance men sent ostensibly to keep the peace without favour to either of the contending parties, but who do not once in fifty times act firmly in this spirit.

22. This is precisely what has happened in the present case. Two burkundauzes, deputed (as Mr. Harvey proclaims) to prevent breaches of the peace, allow a force of lattials to be assembled before their faces, accompany them as amateurs throughout their day's proceedings, and finally, it would seem, do their best to prevent the case from coming in its actual and proper shape before the magistrate.

23. The assistant must have come to one of the conclusions regarding these men, either that they were helpless and blameless, which indeed he seems to say, but in that case they should have been made witnesses in the case, and ought to have given most important and unimpeachable testimony, or else they must be considered as accomplices in the crime, at any rate grossly failing in the performance of their duties, but then they ought to have been put upon their trials, and either committed to the sessions, or summarily dealt with under his general powers, by the assistant, with powers of joint magistrate.

This is neither a deposition upon oath nor a defence. It is a kind of statement without prejudice.

24. Neither of these things has he done. The burkundauzes have laid their statement or "Istifsar" taken, and there as far as they are concerned the case has rested.

25. It is evident that Mr. Harvey has not been wanting in activity, and I know know he is not deficient in shrewdness, but the inquiry has not in these points been closely and judiciously followed up. It may not be matter of surprise that a young officer should fail in these qualities (I mean judgment and decision), but certainly his shortcomings ought to be made up by the vigilance and determination of his superior in charge of the district. It seems too much the case even in difficult cases, and in respect of the most inexperienced officers, to give way to a feeling of laissez faire, and to abstain from all interference with the proceedings of subordinates. This is a misfortune to the public, and also unfair upon the young officer, as either his faults and omissions are not corrected, or perhaps when corrections have taken place, they are roughly handled by superior officers, who must consider that in theory all officers exercising the judicial powers of a magistrate are alike.

26. Upon this subject the court may perhaps think it worth while to direct a communication to be made to the commissioner of the division, or even to Government.

From H. B. Lawford, Esq., Officiating Registrar of the Nizamut Adawlut, to E. H. Lushington, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 548), dated 16 September 1859.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Court to forward to you, for the purpose of being laid before his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, the accompanying copy of a letter, dated the 15th ultimo, from the Sessions Judge of Rajshahye, referring the trial of Bhoga Khan and others, charged with murder, wounding, and plundering, with the remarks recorded thereon by Mr. Samuells, who concurs with the Sessions Judge in the opinion that the employment of two burkundazes for the purpose of preventing an indigo affray is absurd. He is of opinion that a party of military police, with an European officer, civil or military, should, when practicable, be invariably employed on such duties.

REMARKS by the Presiding Judge on the Trial of Bhoga Khan and others.

THE evidence against the prisoners 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, and 12, is of a much more satisfactory character than we usually have in these affray cases. I cannot doubt that they formed part of a body of armed men which proceeded from Mr. Cockburn's factory towards the Gabgachee village for the purpose of compelling the ryots to plough the factory lands; that after some altercation, and upon the refusal of the villagers to work for the factory, they attacked the deceased and his fellow villagers, with surkies and lathies, killed the deceased and wounded two of the villagers, the others flying before them and offering no opposition.

Bhoga Khan, alias Majun, appears to have taken the most prominent part in the outrage; and the evidence of his having inflicted at least one wound on the deceased is clear and consistent. The widow of the deceased stated, when examined by the joint magistrate immediately after the occurrence, that her husband had murmured the names of Bhoga Khan and Lall Khan, as those of his murderers, before he died. Panchoo Khan is satisfactorily proved to have wounded Ketabdee. Who wounded Sadoolla seems uncertain: he himself was unable to say. That the prisoners went to Gabgachee village armed with deadly weapons, which they were prepared to use upon any opposition, and that they were all united in a riotous manner in the prosecution of one object, and that an illegal one, seem certain. I therefore convict them all of wilful murder, and looking to the intention of the various prisoners, fairly inferable from the nature of the case, as the rule for apportioning the punishment laid down in Section LXXV. Regulation IX. of 1793, sentence Bhoga Khan to imprisonment for life in transportation beyond sea; Panchoo and Lall Khan to fourteen years; and the others to ten years' imprisonment, with labour in irons, and in banishment from the district.

I concur with the Sessions Judge in the opinion that the employment of two burkundazes for the purpose of preventing an indigo affray is absurd. A copy of the Sessions Judge's letter of reference, and of this judgment, will be sent to the Government of Bengal, with an expression of the Court's opinion that parties of military police, with an European officer, civil or military, should, when practicable, be invariably employed on such duties.

I do not agree with the Sessions Judge in his censure of Mr. Harvey's proceedings relative to Mr. Cockburn. I have gone carefully over the papers, and I think Mr. Harvey was justified in the conclusion at which he arrived, that Mr. Cockburn was not on the ground where the affray took place either before or during the affray. The persons who first gave information of the murder did not mention Mr. Cockburn as having been present. Mr. Harvey was on the spot next morning, and made the people point out to him the locality of the attack. He saw the marks of the men's feet distinctly, and if they could be seen, the impression of a horse's hoof could have been seen also, but there was nothing of the kind visible, although the ground, Mr. Harvey says, was soft in one at least of the places which were particularly pointed out to him.

Whether evidence might not have been procured of Mr. Cockburn being an accessory before the fact, it is quite impossible from a mere perusal of the record to say; certainly when a body of armed men issue from a factory and proceed to use force against the ryots of a neighbouring village to compel them to work for the factory, there is a strong presumption that the owner or manager residing in the factory must have employed them on their unlawful errand, and the magistrate should always in these cases direct his attention to this point; but I see nothing on the record to induce me to conclude that Mr. Harvey has neglected his duty in this matter, or to compel me to bring his conduct unfavourably to the notice of Government; on the contrary, I have been much pleased with the energy and intelligence which are apparent in Mr. Harvey's proceedings, and must say that I have seldom seen an affray case better investigated.

From G. G. Morris, Esq., late Joint Magistrate of Pubna, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 12 November 1859.

Sir,

THE "Englishman" newspaper of yesterday's date contains the report of the case noted in the margin, from which I perceive that a copy of the Sessions Judge's letter of reference, and of the judgment of the Nizamut Adawlut, have been sent to the Government of Bengal. As the letter of the Sessions Judge, Mr. Jackson, contains some apparently severe animadversions on my conduct, or rather want of conduct, as joint magistrate of Pubna, and superior of Mr. Assistant Harvey, in connexion with this case, I beg to submit, in justification and explanation, the following observations for the consideration of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

GOVERNMENT AND JAUBEE BEWA,
BAGA KHAN AND THIRTEEN OTHERS.

CHARGED—With being concerned in an affray in which Mymen Sheikh was killed, Ketabdee and Sadoollah wounded, and the cattle of the Gabgachee villagers plundered.

2. The Sessions Judge, looking only to the criminal record before him, appears to regard me as merely an uninterested spectator of the case, in consequence of whose want of vigilant and judicious supervision of his assistant's proceedings, and laissez faire system, insufficient steps were taken to bring Mr. Cockburn, the proprietor of Challa factory, to justice. The Sessions Judge could not have been ignorant that this case must necessarily, at its outset, have been reported to me by Mr. Harvey, and by me again to the commissioner of the division. What further communications passed between Mr. Harvey and myself could easily have been ascertained on reference, and had Mr. Jackson adopted this course he would have been informed that Mr. Harvey kept me informed demi-officially of his proceedings; and that, in regard to Mr. Cockburn's connexion with the affair, I particularly desired that a statement might be sent, showing what proofs could be brought of Mr. Cockburn's participation, either directly or indirectly, sufficient to warrant his being included as a defendant in this case.

3. His Honour is aware that in the month of July 1858 I was engaged for a fortnight at Challa in investigating charges of oppression, &c., brought against Mr. Cockburn, and in determining the serious disputes between him and Mr. Barry and the Pakrassee and Sandyal zemindars. The punishments which I inflicted on Mr. Cockburn's servants were upheld on appeal, and my proceedings were approved by Government. The main and real point of contention, however, related to the farm of a number of villages in the neighbourhood of Challa, which, it appeared to me, the Pakrassee zemindars had originally given to Mr. Cockburn; but, on learning of Mr. Barry's hostility to Mr. Cockburn, these zemindars ignored their previous lease and gave a fresh one to Mr. Barry. I was satisfied, after local inquiry, that Mr. Cockburn had taken and been in undisputed possession of these villages prior to the interposition of Mr. Barry on the strength of the second lease. In the Act IV. case that arose on this point, I gave a decree accordingly in favour of Mr. Cockburn; and in consequence of this decision, and looking also to the moral effect of my presence, which had assured the ryots of receiving protection from the authorities, I entertained great hopes that there would be no further cause of inquietude in connexion with Challa. Unfortunately Mr. Jackson, on appeal of the Act IV. case, took an entirely different view of it, ousted Mr. Cockburn, and gave Mr. Barry possession. Thus the old feud was renewed, and the consequences that followed were such as might have been anticipated. I would here beg also to remind his Honor that the circumstance of my visiting Challa, and taking the investigation of all the cases relating to Mr. Cockburn out of the then deputy magistrate of Serajgunge, Mr. Mackenzie's hands, into my own, led to a very unpleasant disagreement between that officer and myself. Mr. Mackenzie was greatly dissatisfied with this act of authority on my part, and the matter ended in his removal to another district. Mr. Harvey succeeded Mr. Mackenzie, and was vested with the full powers of a magistrate, as joint magistrate of Serajgunge. He had been with me at Pubna as assistant, and was well aware of all the proceedings that had occurred, as well as my own and the Sessions Judge's view of them. I had therefore every confidence in Mr. Harvey's experience and ability in the event of another complication at Challa. The opinion recorded by the Nizamut Adawlut of Mr. Harvey's "energy and intelligence" has shown that that confidence was not unfounded.

4: When, then, the case at Gabgachee arose, it will be easily understood why I refrained from any personal interference, but contented myself with requesting Mr. Harvey to report the circumstances to me, and more particularly those affecting Mr. Cockburn. I was glad to see that immediately, on the occurrence of the fatal affray, Mr. Harvey hurried to the spot, and before any line of policy could be adopted by either party, elucidated the real facts himself. The Sessions Judge, adhering only to the letter of the record, and to the evidence of the witnesses examined by him, does not attach that credit to Mr. Harvey's local investigation, and to his reasons for acquitting Mr. Cockburn, which the Nizamut Adawlut have justly done. It is surprising to me, with his knowledge of the previous animosity existing on the part of the native zemindars towards Mr. Cockburn, that the Sessions Judge should draw no distinction between the value to be attached to the evidence of the witnesses of the prosecution in regard to the actual affray, and in regard to Mr. Cockburn's actual presence. Nor is it apparent why the Sessions Judge, who has convicted all the prisoners, "should find it impossible to place reliance on the statement of Jeetoo, also of the prosecutrix, widow of the deceased, and of his mother, Chundra Bewa (witness No. 36), that, with his dying breath Monim declared that he had received his mortal injuries from Baga Khan and Lal Khan (prisoners Nos. 1 and 2, at the command of Cockburn)," and yet arrive at the conclusion that, "if the statements of the witnesses on this head" (i. e., Cockburn's presence and demonstrations of anger and command at the scene of the affray), "should be deemed utterly without foundation, as they have been considered by the assistant magistrate, it will be impossible to place reliance in any part of their story, and the prisoners will, in my opinion, be entitled to an acquittal." I have no doubt that, had a sufficient interval elapsed, the witnesses on the spot would have given just as direct and straightforward evidence in condemnation of Mr. Cockburn, before Mr. Harvey, as they subsequently did, several months later, before the Sessions Judge. When, therefore, in answer to my communication, Mr. Harvey informed me that, after careful investigation, he had come to the conclusion that there was not sufficient proof on which to bring a prosecution against Mr. Cockburn to a successful issue, or to prove his complicity in the affray, and that he had accordingly released Mr. Cockburn from detention, and committed the principal assailants to the sessions, I felt satisfied with his decision, and did not deem it necessary to look into the minor or collateral parts of the case. Under these circumstances, and looking to the remarks of the Nizamut Adawlut, I trust his Honour the Lieutenant Governor will acquit me of the charge of supineness and want of supervision, in a case of such importance, which the Sessions Judge has thought fit to bring against me, and which I have this day learnt only for the first time in the columns of a newspaper.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 212), dated 24 January 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 5690, dated the 19th September last, and its enclosure, I have the honour to forward a copy of one from the officiating magistrate of Pubna, of the 13th instant, No. 24, together with a copy of the report furnished by the assistant magistrate, Mr. Harris, who made the inquiries directed during the time he was officiating as magistrate of the district.

2. It will be seen that, after making a full and searching inquiry on the spot where the affray occurred, and in its neighbourhood, Mr. Harris was unable to obtain any reliable evidence of Mr. Cockburn's direct complicity in the case; and I must add my opinion to that of the presiding judge of the Nizamut Adawlut (of which a copy is appended), to the effect that the censure passed by the Sessions Judge on Mr. Harvey's proceedings was wholly undeserved.

3. The case was promptly and thoroughly investigated at the time it occurred. Mr. Harvey was on the spot 10 hours after the affray took place, and spared no pains to elicit the true facts. It may therefore be presumed that, had Mr. Cockburn taken an active part in the affray, as alleged by the opposite party, sufficient trustworthy evidence of the fact would then have been obtained, but there was no such evidence, as will appear from the following extract of Mr. Harvey's report on the case:—

"Although in my own mind I had concluded, from the discrepancies in the evidence, that Mr. Cockburn could not have been on the spot, yet, to put the matter beyond a doubt, I made a searching examination of the ground he was alleged to have ridden over, and although the land was in such a state that I could distinguish the prints of a number of men's feet, yet I could not in any one single place see the prints of horses' feet, either with or without shoes; one place especially, where the plaintiff and witnesses pointed out as soft and likely, even there they could not show the prints of any horses' feet."

4. This seemed to me conclusive as to the falsity of the plaintiff's assertion that Mr. Cockburn had directed the attack on the village in person, and I did not consequently consider it necessary at the time to order further inquiries; I was quite satisfied that Mr. Harvey, who is an active and intelligent young officer, had neglected no means of arriving at the truth.

5. The case, though serious and fatal in its results, was a very simple one. About 25 or 30 men, of whom some, if not all, were armed, went from Mr. Cockburn's factory of Challa to the village. They tried first by persuasion, and then by force, to get the ryots to bring their ploughs, but the latter refused, and began to pelt the party with clods, while retreating towards the village. The factory people followed them up, and the deceased was struck just as he entered the village, receiving three or four separate wounds from a "soolfee." They then passed through the village, wounding two more of the ryots, and carrying off all the cattle.

6. It may be presumed that Mr. Cockburn was not ignorant of this party having left his factory with such an object, and in so far he may justly be held blameable, but I can find no sufficient grounds for ulterior proceedings against him.

From H. Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 24), dated 13 January 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to the correspondence noted in the margin, I have the honour to forward, in original, the report called for, prepared by Mr. Harris, assistant magistrate, who made inquiries on the spot during the time he was officiating as magistrate of the district.

Mr. Harris clearly points out great discrepancies in the evidence of the witnesses, witnesses, who were the parties aggrieved in the case; I do not therefore consider it proved at all that Mr. Cockburn was on the spot either before or during the time the affray took place. It will be seen from Mr. Samuells' decision, that when complaint was first made of the affray, no mention was made of Mr. Cockburn having been on the spot. I therefore cannot but think that the witnesses must have been tutored to say that Mr. Cockburn rode up, appeared very angry, and ordered his people to mar the ryots. This bit of the evidence is exactly repeated by each witness, but on cross examination as to the colour of Mr. Cockburn's dress and horse, and as to the route he took after giving orders, differs so materially, I do not think that any dependence can be placed on any of the evidence as to Mr. Cockburn having ridden to the spot and given the order for the attack.

From Secretary to Government of Bengal to Commissioner, No. 5690, dated 19th Sept. 1859.

Commissioner to Magistrate, No. .
763, dated 12th
October 1859.

2. As regards Mr. Cockburn's being an accessory before the fact, there is no evidence at all on this point. Although I cannot but suspect that Mr. Cockburn must have been aware that his servants were going out to force the ryots to give their ploughs, and, as he resided so close to the place, he is morally guilty of not looking properly after his servants.

3. As regards Mr. Cockburn's being an accessory after the fact, there is strong presumption that he may have known how the cattle had been seized, but still there is no direct proof on this point; and though Mr. Cockburn has sold the factory since the affray to the zemindars, whose ryots were the parties attacked in the affray, yet Mr. Harris was unable to obtain any clue to Mr. Cockburn's conduct in the case, or knowledge of what had taken place.

4. Under these circumstances, and also laying great stress on the opinion given by Mr. Samuells, a judge of the Sudder Nizamut, copy of which is enclosed, I consider that there is no evidence against Mr. Cockburn, and therefore I do not forward the papers of the case.

5. The difficulty of punishing the instigators to affrays demands, I think, the serious attention of the Legislative Council.

The servants of Mr. Cockburn in this case did not commit an affray for any end of their own, but manifestly for the advantage of their employer; and I would propose that in all cases in which the proof of the affray shows that it took place solely for the advantage of the assailant's employer, and that the employer cannot prove that he knew nothing of the matter, and that the employer did not aid the magistrate in bringing the offenders to justice, that the property regarding which the affray took place should be confiscated to Government.

6. As it may appear that delay has occurred in preparing and forwarding this report, I have the honour to state that the letter of the Government of Bengal was received on the 28th October; that Mr. Molony, then officiating magistrate, was shortly after removed to Jessore on the 28th October; and that Mr. Harris, the assistant magistrate in charge, applied to the Commissioner to know if he was to investigate the case, or let it remain till Mr. Molony's successor arrived.

7. Besides these reasons, the original papers of the case were only received back from the Sessions Judge on the 27th ultimo, and the assistant magistrate had to compare the evidence given before him with that given in the previous trials before the Joint Magistrate and Sessions Judge.

From G. L. Harris, Esq., Assistant Magistrate of Pubna, to the Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, dated 9 January 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report the results of the re-investigation of the late Gabgachee affray case, as carried on by me, in accordance with the Commissioner's memorandum of the 12th October 1859.

2. Beyond the fact of the men who committed the affray being his servants, I have been unable to detect any direct complicity on the part of Mr. Cockburn.

3. I may mention that the plan adopted by me in collecting the evidence was to ride in person every morning to the villages between Gabgachee and Challa factory, factory, and interrogate whomsoever I happened to meet on the road, or found engaged in the ordinary avocations at home. All whom I got in this manner were then brought to my tent, where their depositions were taken on oath.

4. Almost the entire mass of the evidence thus collected by me bears only on the single point of Mr. W. Cockburn's actual presence on the field. On that point I have to make the following observations :—

1. Witness Jeetoo says—Mr. Cockburn went in the direction marked A D upon leaving the field. Dookhyram and Ramchundro Chungo give A B as the direction in which Mr. Cockburn went away, and Rohim Pramanik, Anundo Chundo and Sadoolah, say A. These are discrepancies which I cannot reconcile with the truth, for the men were so close to Mr. Cockburn (see map) that it is impossible they could differ so widely from one another if they were really deposing to what they say.

Bishunath Ghose.
Golok Sircar.
Kallee Pramanik.
Januki Bewa.

Jogur Aurut.
Kisto Pramanik.
Haroo Soonderi.
Roton Bewa.

2. The witnesses named in the margin, who deposed to having seen the men, say that no Saheb was among them.

3. Ketabdee (one of the men wounded in the affray) deposed on oath before Mr. Harvey that Mr. Cockburn was riding a red horse, and that he wore a black hat and black clothes. Before me the same man swore that Mr. Cockburn was on a white horse, and that his dress was white. Regarding this man's perjury, I have no doubt you will pass the necessary orders.

4. One man (Anundo Chundo), who says he saw Mr. Cockburn come on and go off the field, declares he did not hear him give any order. Now, this man was standing as close to Mr. Cockburn (for I made him point out his exact position) as Jeetoo, Sadoolah and others, who depose to having heard the order.

5. I find from the old papers of the case, which came to hand after my investigation, that Mr. Harvey placed Mr. Cockburn on his defence, and on this point acquitted him. Mr. Harvey says, although in my own mind I had concluded from the discrepancies in the evidence, that Mr. Cockburn could not have been on the spot, yet to put the matter beyond a doubt, I made searching examination of the ground he was alleged to have ridden over; and although the land was in such a state that I could distinguish the prints of a number of men's feet, yet I could not in any one single place see the prints of horses' feet, either with or without shoes. One place specially, where the plaintiff and witnesses pointed out as soft and likely, even there they could not show any horse's imprints. "Mr. Cockburn I acquit, as far as my court is concerned, of being concerned personally in the riot."

6. The accompanying is an extract from the Nizamut Adawlut's decision in this case.

7. I have therefore come to the conclusion, that to place Mr. Cockburn again on his defence on this point would be useless, and out of the question.

8. I now come to consider the evidence against Mr. Cockburn as an accessory before or after the fact.

9. I may mention, by the way, that, a few days after the affray, Mr. Cockburn sold the Challa concern to the Sandeals of Sollop, who are the present proprietors of it. These Sandeals were having continual disputes with Mr. Cockburn, which disputes finally resulted in the affray.

10. I made every endeavour to procure the evidence of persons who were servants of Challa factory in Mr. Cockburn's time, and with this object made personal inquiries at the various factories around Challa, including those at Seraj-gunge, Jamirta, Mohungunge, &c.

11. I succeeded in getting only four Boona coolies, who knew nothing of the matter.

12. It may not, perhaps, be wondered at that I did not succeed in getting any of Mr. Cockburn's old servants, when we consider the length of time that has elapsed, the affray having occurred in March 1859, a few days after which Mr. Cockburn left that part of the country, and the concern fell into the hands of other parties (i. e. the Sandeals).

13. From the evidence of the pound-keeper at Shahazadpore, it appears that the plundered cattle were brought to him, as being found trespassing on indigo, by some Challa people, bearing a challan having Mr. Cockburn's signature upon it. I have been, however, unable to discover any clue which might lead to the apprehension of these men, nor any trace of the challan.

14. But of this there can be no doubt (as I have intimated above), that the affray was committed by persons in Mr. Cockburn's service; and I am certainly of opinion that, if a man allows or takes no measures to prevent his own servants from going about armed with spears, &c. &c., and this at a time when he is at feud with the whole surrounding country (as was the case in this instance), he should be held, to a certain extent, responsible if anything serious takes place.

15. I believe that the servants of the factory in this case would not have armed themselves thus if, in doing so, they thought that they were acting contrary to Mr. Cockburn's wishes; and I certainly think that Mr. Cockburn should on this point be put on his defence.

EXTRACT from the Remarks by the Presiding Judge on the Trial of Baga Khan and others.

"I DO not agree with the sessions judge in his censure of Mr. Harvey's proceedings relative to Mr. Cockburn. I have gone carefully over the papers, and I think Mr. Harvey was justified in the conclusion at which he arrived, that Mr. Cockburn was not on the ground where the affray took place, either before or during the affray.

"The persons who first gave information of the murder did not mention Mr. Cockburn as having been present. Mr. Harvey was on the spot next morning, and made the people point out to him the locality of the attack. He saw the marks of the men's feet distinctly, and if they could be seen, the impression of a horse-hoof could have been seen also, but there was nothing of the kind visible, although the ground, Mr. Harvey says, was soft in one at least of the places which was particularly pointed out to him.

"Whether evidence might not have been procured of Mr. Cockburn, being an accessory before the fact, it is quite impossible, from a mere perusal of the record, to say. Certainly, when a body of armed men issue from a factory, and proceed to use force against the ryots of a neighbouring village, to compel them to work for the factory, there is a strong presumption that the owner or manager residing in the factory must have employed them on their unlawful errand; and the magistrate should always in these cases direct his attention to this point. But I see nothing on the record to induce me to conclude that Mr. Harvey has neglected his duty in this matter, or to compel me to bring his conduct unfavourably to the notice of Government; on the contrary, I have been much pleased with the energy and intelligence which are apparent in Mr. Harvey's proceedings, and must say, that I have seldom seen any affray case better investigated."

16 September 1859.

Judge.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 393), dated Camp Muneer, 18 February 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 212, dated the 24th ultimo, with its enclosure, submitting your report on the case against Mr. Cockburn, of the Challa indigo factory, and to inform you in reply, that as nothing has been discovered which would warrant proceedings being instituted against that gentleman, as being concerned in the affray in question, no further orders appear to be necessary.

2. I am also desired to state, that, taking into consideration the circumstances now adduced, together with the opinion expressed by the presiding judge of the Sudder Court, which was not before the Government when the instructions of the 19th September, to your address, were issued, the Lieutenant Governor is satisfied that the censure passed by the sessions judge on the officers employed in the investigation in question, was undeserved; and a communication to that effect has been sent to Mr. Morris, late joint magistrate of Pubna, who, separately, directly addressed the Government on the subject.

3. The register of the Sudder Court, in forwarding the copy of the opinion above referred to, represented it to be Mr. Samuells' opinion, "that the employment of two Burkundauzes, for the purpose of preventing an indigo affray, is absurd; and that a party of military police, with a European officer, civil or military, should, when practicable, be invariably employed in such duties." The Lieutenant Governor, I am directed to state, entirely concurs in the propriety of these remarks; and you are accordingly requested to desire the magistrates under your control to give effect to them whenever circumstances permit.

From E. H. Lushington, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to G. G. Morris, Esq., c. s., late Joint Magistrate of Pubna (No. 394), dated Camp Muneer, 18 February 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 12th November last, and in reply, to inform you that the explanation submitted by you of your proceedings in the affray case, in which the people of the Challa Indigo Factory were concerned, in conjunction with the remarks of the presiding judge of the Sudder Court on the trial, exonerate you from any blame.

—No. 17.—

PETITION from the Inhabitants of Zillah Nuddea to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated Joyrampore, 16 February 1860.

Most respectfully sheweth,

THAT your poor petitioner's village lies in the vicinity of the Lokenathpore factory, the present manager of which is Mr. J. Mears; that Mr. J. Mears is unbearably oppressive towards them.

1st. That two rupees is advanced for every beegah of land which your poor petitioners are compelled to cultivate for indigo; that one beegah measured out to them for the purpose is equal to one-and-a-half beegah of ordinary measurement; that for every plough used by them they are required to cultivate four such beegahs; that they are made to employ themselves in cultivation almost without interruption from the month of Magh to Choit, that is, till the rain falls and indigo is sown; that as soon as the plants come to have four leaves, they are pressed to commence weeding, and are not allowed to cultivate their paddy fields till the month of Joit; that ten beegahs can be cultivated at most with one plough, of which six are taken for indigo, and the remaining four beegahs, which are suffered to be sown with paddy, yield almost nothing, owing to the sowing being unseasonable.

2d. That the working of 20 ploughs is required to prepare one beegah of land for the sowing of indigo, the cost of which is two rupees eight annas; that the weeding charge is one rupee; the price of seed cannot be accurately estimated, varying as it does in different years. It can, however, be fairly reckoned to be, upon an average, one rupee; the cost of reaping and carriage per beegah is eight annas, and the rent is (1-4) one rupee four annas. Thus the total cost of growing indigo on one beegah of land, and carrying the same to the factory, generally amounts to six rupees four annas. In settling the price of plants, the factory amlah pass one cartful of plants for one bundle, so, unless the crop is exceedingly good, good, your poor petitioners' produce per beegah may not pass for five or six bundles. Your poor petitioners are paid at the rate of six bundles per rupee. So, for every beegah sown on advance, they incur a loss of four or five rupees, or 16 rupees, or 20 rupees for each plough they use.

3d. Besides the heavy loss your poor petitioners suffer from the planting system, they are obliged to protect themselves from maltreatment from the factory amlah by payment of 8 or 10 rupees a year by way of commission and presents.

4th. The advance being once made, your poor petitioners are ever to stand in debt to the factory; and as the amount of the debt increases year by year, the number of beegahs they are required to cultivate for indigo increases till their utter ruin.

5th. Besides the lands cultivated by your poor petitioners on advance, Mr. Mears cultivates about 1,000 beegahs for Lokenathpore factory immediately at his own expense; of this about 700 beegahs lie in Joyrampore. For these 700 beegahs he has only seven ploughs. The quantity of land which can be cultivated by seven ploughs, is at most 70 or 80 beegahs, so the cultivation of the 700 beegahs, minus the 70 or 80 beegahs cultivated by his own ploughs, falls upon the head of your poor petitioners. This task they are made to do after they have done sowing indigo on the lands allotted to them on account of the advance. Formerly, the cultivation of indigo was not so expensive; then there did not exist the practice of weeding, and the bundle was measured with a chain of three cubits length, instead of its, as above stated, being determined at the pleasure of the factory amlah; the vat, whereof the contents then passed for 150 bundles, now being loaded with one-and-a-half times as much plant, passes for 70 bundles only.

6th. The lands cultivated by Mr. Mears at his own expense in the village of your poor petitioners, are their jummi and bromotur lands. For these he pays rent at the rate of eight annas per beegah, although the proper rate is 12 annas 3 pie. Besides these lands, he causes an equal quantity of land to be left fallow, without paying any rent for the same; therefore, taking both the cultivated and fallow lands into account, the rate comes to four annas per beegah; on the other hand, your poor petitioners have to pay to the zemindar at the rate of six annas per beegah.

7th. Some of your poor petitioners have bamboo clumps and trees, which the factory people cut and carry away at their pleasure, and never condescend to pay properly for the same. Such even of your poor petitioners as, having no plough or bullock, grow by manual labour plantains, brinjals, &c., do not escape the rapacity of the planter's people.

8th. At the manufacturing season three rupees is paid in advance to cart-drivers. The proper wages of a cart-driver is five or six annas per diem; during a whole day he can carry indigo from the field to the factory twice or thrice. A cartful of plant generally passes, as above noticed, for one bundle; and for the carriage of 100 such bundles the driver is paid 2 rupees 8 annas, out of which the amlah deduct their commission and other dues. Thus, unless the driver works for the period of two whole months, the sum of three rupees advanced stands unliquidated.

9th. The village inhabited by your poor petitioners is held in ijarah by the said sahib; that over and above the rental to which he is entitled, as representative of the zemindar, he exacts one anna per every rupee of the rental as his ijardaree, a cess positively prohibited by law; that he destroys date plantations and pepper which they grow on their lands, saying that there would gradually be a scarcity of indigo lands if the ryots be suffered thus to appropriate their lands to their own use.

10th. That all these acts of oppression fall very hard upon your poor petitioners, especially as the price of articles of food has risen so high of late years; that to such deplorable poverty most of your poor petitioners are reduced, that although they labour hard from morning to evening they are hardly able to preserve their families from starvation; that if any one be bold enough to apply to the lawful authorities for remedy against these oppressions, the factory people send lattials, take him to the factory, fine him, and exact the fine by the sale of his chattels, or inflict on him hard corporal punishment. That truth of these grievances will be made clear by reference to Baboo Obhoy Churn Mullick, deputy collector, deputed to ascertain and give compensation for lands which have fallen in the Eastern Bengal Railway, who has had, during his stay in the neighbourhood, sufficient opportunities of witnessing and hearing of the same.

11th. Your poor petitioners having complained of these acts of oppression to Mr. Reid, the late Officiating Commissioner of Nuddea division, and Mr. Drummond, magistrate of Nuddea, about a month ago, during their late inspection tour, Mr. Mears and Mr. Tweedy, his assistant at Lokenathpore factory, have been incensed against your poor petitioners, and to gratify their revenge have assembled numerous lattials and spearsmen in different factories, viz., Lokenathpore, Ramnugger, Chandpore, Taltolla, and have appointed Wooma Nath Roy, of Monohurpore, commander of this force, and threaten to plunder and set fire to your poor petitioners' village, imprison and put them to torture in the factory godown, and to do other acts of lawless cruelty.

Under these circumstances, your poor petitioners humbly pray that your Honor will be pleased to take their perilous situation into your favourable consideration, and make some provision for their protection and deliverance from the oppression stated above.

RESOLUTION, 28 February 1860.

READ a petition, dated the 16th February 1860, from Takoordoss Bhutta-chargee and certain other inhabitants of Joyrampore, Zillah Nuddea, complaining of the oppressions practised on them by Mr. J. Mears, the present manager of the Lokenauthpore Indigo Factory.

Order.

Ordered, that the petitioners be informed, in regard to their complaint of the low price allowed for their indigo plant, that the Government cannot interfere with the price which any persons may offer ryots for any sort of crop, and that whether for indigo plant or for any other sort of produce, it is for them and those who deal with them, by mutual agreement, to make their own bargains. Their complaint, therefore, against a certain planter for requiring from them more indigo for a certain amount of money than they can afford to give, is one that Government cannot entertain; as it is optional with them to agree to cultivate indigo, or to decline to do so, or to make what bargains they please in the matter. If they and other ryots and indigo manufacturers cannot come to agreements as to the price of indigo plant, which will be to the advantage of both parties, it will be a subject of regret, but it will not be a matter in which Government can interfere in favour of either party.

With reference to the next complaint of the petitioners, namely, that to protect themselves from maltreatment by the factory servants, they are obliged to pay them eight or ten rupees a year by way of commission or presents, the petitioners are informed that if such bribes are given to induce the factory servants to cheat their master, they are very wrong to give them. If the factory servants, as the petitioners allege, induce the petitioners to give such bribes by threats, they should complain to the master of the factory, who must ultimately be the greatest sufferer by such extortion, and if in consequence of their refusing to pay such bribes any more, they are really maltreated by any one, they should make a specific complaint, supported by proof, to the magistrate, or sue for damages in the moonsiff's court, or adopt both courses. It is futile to make general complaints to Governments in such cases, which no one can know to be either true or false.

As to the consequences of taking advances, it is optional with the petitioners to take advances and to enter into contracts for indigo, or not to do so. In this matter they require no assistance beyond that of the law, which is equally fair to all parties. But if they enter into lawful contracts of their own will, they must expect to be required to fulfil them.

As to the complaint of being obliged to cultivate Mr. Mears' land with indigo, the petitioners are informed that as no zemindar, planter, mustagir, or other person has any right to force ryots to cultivate his lands, unless they have agreed to do so for a consideration, the same remarks are applicable. And so of the complaint that Mr. Mears takes and cultivates the jummi and bromotur lands of the petitioners at an inadequate rent.

If in reality any persons, whether factory servants or others, unauthorisedly cut the petitioners' bamboos and trees, their remedy is to prosecute the wrongdoers in the civil or criminal courts, or in both. Such acts cannot be done without evidence thereof being easily attainable.

If the complaint of the illegal exaction of one anna a beegah is true, the petitioners have remedy by prosecuting in the collectorate courts under Act X. of 1859.

As to the fears of the petitioners from the alleged assemblage of lattials in certain factories in order to punish them for making complaints of aggression, that is a point which, if true, the petitioners should represent to the darogah and the magistrate, giving at the same time proof of the fact. The Lieutenant Governor has no doubt that, if they do so, the district officers will take all proper precautions to prevent outrage.

(No. 581.)

COPY of the above Resolution, and of the Petition to which it is a reply, forwarded to the Commissioner of Nuddea, with especial reference to the last point of the order.

— No. 18. —

From the Inhabitants of Chur Ramnuggur to the Honourable J. P. Grant, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, dated Moorshedabad, Chur Ramnuggur, 7 January 1860.

Honoured Sir,

WE, the undersigned, most humbly beg, for the inhabitants of Chur Ramnuggur, to submit before your Honor a statement of our grievances given in, with some details below, and earnestly hope for redress through the gracious interference of your Honor.

Chur Ramnuggur is a Government khas mehal, held formerly by Sheeb Soondree Dassia and others, under a lease, subject to be removed at will; and when, we are happy to say, we enjoyed comparative ease and happiness. Some years ago unfortunate difference having taken place with some of the ryots of the village and the Messrs. Watson & Co., the two parties, Sheeb Soondree and Messrs. Watson & Co. fell out with deadly hatred against each other. In the meantime, Messrs. Watson & Co. applied to the Collector of Moorshedabad for an ijarah lease of the said mehal, offering to pay an increase of rent, and notwithstanding all our remonstrances and protestations to the contrary, the collector agreed to let out the mehal on an ijarah jumma, and apprehensions we then entertained have now been but too well verified. It would appear from the subsequent proceedings on the part of the managers of Messrs. Watson & Co., that they took the ijarah of the said mehal, not so much to facilitate the business of their trade as to wreak their vengeance upon Seeb Soondree, by tyrannizing over the indigent and helpless ryots, many of whom seeing no other hope have since found safety in flight, and in this act the Government officials, whether consciously or not we will not aver, have lent their assisting hand. We will here enumerate few of the acts of their oppression.

They forged Kishun Salie pottahs or contracts for the supply of indigo plants, bearing signatures of illiterate men, and brought cases of violation of such contracts against many of the ryots before the criminal court, two of these having been first dismissed by the Deputy Magistrate, Baboo Sreeshchunder Vidyarutna, and the Sudder Ameen, Baboo Greeshchunder Ghose. Appeals from their respective judgments were preferred before the sessions judge, who in spite of the prohibitions of the existing regulations to hear such appeals, ordered them to be re-tried by the magistrate in person. The magistrate, agreeably to the instructions of his superior, sentenced the prisoner to imprisonment, and similarly disposed of the rest. Your Honor is well aware how easy it is to fabricate such documents, and to torment the poor illiterate peasantry of a village; the whole fraud will come to light on an inspection of the records of the case.

2. A dispute having taken place with regard to the sowing of indigo seeds in those lands of ours already sown with pulse and other grains, a case of fictitious murder has been got up, implicating many of us. Further, the magistrate has ordered the police to assist the servants of Messrs. Watson & Co. to sow seeds in the aforesaid lands, a copy of this is herewith appended.

Our village lies within the jurisdiction of Thannah Goas, the late darogah of which place, Baboo Mohun Lal Mozoomdar, was a good man, and would not act according to the wishes of the aforesaid planters, and whom it was their interest to remove. On one occasion, therefore, the police thannah was assaulted with clubs and lattials, with Messrs. Loudon and Loggins at their head, and the case being proved against them, they were summarily sentenced to pay a fine of 10 rupees each. The object of the managers was gained at last; the darogah was subsequently suspended indefinitely for not having assisted them in another case.

4. In another case of dispute with respect to the sowing of indigo, Shohobut Shekh was shot through one of his legs; the case is still pending before the magistrate. Another case of lootteraj has again happened, and it is undergoing local investigation.

Hoping that the above case will meet with your Honor's favourable consideration.

From the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 82), dated 19 January 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you, in original, the accompanying petition, purporting to be from certain inhabitants of Chur Ramnuggur, in the district of Moorshedabad, complaining of the proceedings of the local authorities in supporting Messrs. Watson and Co. in compelling them to sow indigo, and to request that you will be good enough to favour the Lieutenant Governor with a report thereon.

2. It is noticed by the Lieutenant Governor that all the signatures are seemingly in one handwriting.

3. The return of the petition is requested with your reply.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 26 Ct.), dated Allipore, 31 January 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 82, dated the 19th instant, which appears to have been addressed to this office through inadvertence, I beg to state that I have this day forwarded it, together with its enclosure, in original, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, requesting him to submit the required report to Government.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 5 Ct.), dated Berhampore, 28 March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to the Officiating Secretary's letter to the address of the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, No. 82, dated the 19th of January last, which was was transferred to this office by Mr. Grote, I have the honour to forward, in original, a letter from the officiating magistrate and collector of Moorshedabad, No. 203½, dated the 17th instant, with enclosures, reporting on the petition purporting to be from certain inhabitants of Chur Ramnuggur, which is herewith returned.

2. Under the circumstances stated in the 3d para. of Mr. Beaumont's letter, it seems evidently objectionable that the farm of the Government estate should revert to Sheebsoondree Dassea, or rather to her manager, Bejaikisto Shaha, who has been inciting the ryots to oppose the present lessees, Messrs. Watson & Co. I have accordingly instructed the collector to withhold from the former the option of taking the farm at the expiration of the present lease, which he had been formerly authorised to allow her.

From W. Morris Beaumont, Esq., Officiating Magistrate and Collector of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, Beaulah (No 203½), dated Berhampore, 17 March 1860.

Sir,

In reply to your letters, No. 166 and 291, of the 9th ultimo, I have the honour to inform you that I directed Mr. Assistant Kean to proceed to the spot and investigate the truth of the statements made in the petition sent to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor.

I have now the honour to submit the report of his proceedings received from Mr. Kean.

A very large proportion of the cultivation of Messrs. Watson & Co.'s factory at Hairampoor belongs to the village of Ramnuggur, and in consequence of differences existing between them and Bejaikisto Shaha, under whose influence the late farmer, Sheebsoondree Dassea, widow of Gour Soondur Shaha, was; Messrs. Watson & Co. last year, through their manager, Mr. Gordon, offered an advance of 300 rupees for the farm. I recommended the acceptance of the offer, as the late farmer, when given the option, refused to pay what was offered by Messrs. Watson & Co. You sanctioned the arrangement, and our new farmers were installed. From that day to this, however, they have been prevented from collecting their rents, and opposed in every way by Bejaikisto Shaha, whom the ryots are afraid to disobey, because Messrs. Watson & Co.'s lease is for one year only, and they would suffer when the mehal reverted, as under your orders it will next May, to the former farmer upon the expiration of the present lease.

The foregoing explanation will show distinctly the quarter from which this fictitious petition from the ryots has come.

From H. Kean, Esq., Assistant Collector and Assistant Magistrate, Moorshedabad, to W. M. Beaumont, Esq., Officiating Magistrate and Collector, Moorshedabad (No. 194), dated Berhampore, 16 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you that in accordance with your instructions I proceeded to Thannah Goash, and inquired into the particulars of the petition said to have been signed by the ryots of Char Ramnuggur, and forwarded by them to the Government of Bengal.

In the first place, as regards the allegations of the petition,—

I.—1. Under what circumstances Messrs. Watson & Co. really obtained,* for one year, the izara of Chur Ramnuggur, you are, of course, well aware; you will remember that they offered 300 rupees in excess of the Jumma, as then held by the former izaradar. They have not, however, as you are aware, been able to collect their rents, or indeed to go near the land at all.

* In May 1859.

2. No remonstrances were made by the ryots at the time of the transfer of the izara.

3. It does not appear that the ryots "found refuge in flight."

II. With regard to the cases of violation of contract, alleged in the petition to be false.—1. That before the deputy magistrate (and which is a case of breach of contract in the supply of gharis, and not of "indigo plants," as alleged) was dismissed in July last, on the following grounds:

"From the nathis of the counterplaint instituted by the ryots against Messrs. W. & Co., for having forced them to sign hath-chittas, it is sufficiently proved that the ryots did not voluntarily agree to supply gharis, the suit therefore is not cognizable by Act VII. 1819, and is dismissed."

2. This decision was appealed against, and the case ordered for re-trial by the sessions judge for the following reason:

"The deputy magistrate has mistaken this case altogether; he had no business to take up the two* cases together; each ought to have been decided on its own merits; instead of which he has mixed up the two cases, and without taking the defence of either party he has dismissed this one. . . . It is therefore ordered, that the appeal be admitted, the decision reversed, and the case remanded to the magistrate, with a recommendation that he take it up himself."—18 August 1859.

3. In accordance with this order, the magistrate took the case up himself, and the defendants were sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment each, as "it was proved by the evidence for the prosecution and the ekrarnamah filed by the petitioners, that the defendants had taken advances to perform a certain amount of work with their gharis, which they have failed to perform."

4. The other case (of the same nature) was dismissed by the sudder ameen, appealed, and ordered for re-trial by the sessions judge, for the following reasons:

"The sudder ameen quotes the circular order of the 20th May 1836, and says, that by it cases of this nature are not disposable of by the Foujdaree Court, but if he had examined that circular order he would have found that if a party agrees to supply his own carts and bullocks, the provisions of Regulation VII. 1819 are applicable to a suit against him in the Foujdaree Court, and as the agreements filed do not show that the defendants made agreement to supply other than their own carts, his order is incorrect. The appeal is admitted, the decision reversed, and the magistrate is requested to take up this case himself."—18 August 1859.

5. The magistrate sentenced the defendants to 14 days' imprisonment each, for the reasons alleged in the first case.

6. There is nothing to lead one to suppose that the shattahs or contracts in these cases are "forged;" on the contrary, they were not denied at the time they were filed.

III. With regard to the murder case, said to be "fictitious," the facts of the case are as follows:—On the 18th Kartick 1859, Mr. Landall, on the part of Messrs. Watson & Co. sent out from Hazrampore Factory 60 or 70 ploughs, with ploughmen, &c., to sow indigo on the right bank of the Lugal Maree River. While thus engaged, the ryots of the neighbouring village of Kalinuggur turned out, armed with lattees, at the sound of the danka, and resisted the sowing of the indigo, alleging that their kalai would be destroyed. Messrs. W. & Co.'s people, being the weakest as to numbers, had to give way, and one of their ryots, by name Pathan Sekh, is said to have been murdered; this happened in the partial affray that occurred. On making a local investigation into the matter, I reported the murder not proved, no sufficient evidence of the actual perpetration of the murder having been adduced; this opinion was subsequently confirmed by the magistrate, but still as Pathan Sekh is up to this time missing, the murder cannot be said to be "fictitious," but merely not proved.

IV. The real order to the darogah of Thannah Goas, was as follows:—

"You will go in person to the spot, and having been informed, in the presence of Messrs. Watson & Co.'s people, and of the ryots of Chur Ramnuggur, what lands on this spot have been sown with indigo before, wheresoever there is no cultivation, cultivation, there Messrs. W. & Co.'s people may sow indigo."—29th November 1859.

* The breach of contract and the counterplaint.

V. With regard to the alleged assault on the thannah by Messrs. Landall and Login, the real facts of the case are these: Messrs. Landall and Login having to pass Brajyo Kishto Shaha's cutcherry (where armed men were known by them to be stationed), on their way to demand assistance at the thannah, in an assault which had just been committed on Mr. Dalrymple, armed themselves in self-defence with pistols; Mr. Landall being annoyed at the delay made by the darogah in rendering assistance, made use of some angry expressions, which he did not deny, and for which he was fined 10 rupees, and not for assaulting the thannah, as alleged.

VI. The real reasons of the darogah being suspended for three months, and not "indefinitely," as alleged, were as follows:—

1. The jemadar, who was stationed by the magistrate at Chur Ramnuggur, reported to the darogah that "several persons of both sides had assembled, and that an affray was imminent, and called upon the darogah to come at once to the spot, but the darogah never went.
2. The jemadar's report was made on the 17th of the month to the darogah, he however did not send it on to the magistrate till the 19th.
3. A man was reported by the jemadar to have been seized and wounded; the darogah made no mention of the occurrence.
4. The darogah never inserted the report in his roznamcha. For these four reasons the darogah was suspended, and not, as is alleged in the petition, for "not having assisted in another case."

VII. The other two cases mentioned are at present under trial. The first arose out of a second dispute about indigo sowing, and in which the ryots again turned out armed, and Mr. Landall, who was there armed with a pistol, fired once or twice, as he says, "over their heads." Shahamut Sekh is alleged to have been shot in the leg, but is not forthcoming, though he has been repeatedly summoned by the magistrate. The other case is before me, and still pending; it is a case of Lutaraz; I have no doubt of the truth of the charge.

VIII. And now as regards the actual writing and signing of the petition, to inquire into which I more particularly confined myself in the local investigation. I was only able to obtain the deposition of 19 of the ryots, the rest were not to be found; whether purposely concealed or not, I don't know.

1. They all state that the petition was written by a mohurrir, but they all deny knowing his name, his place of residence, or anything about him; now the person who really did write the petition must have been well acquainted with the circumstances of the case, yet they all declare they never saw him before, and he is said to have written the petition in two hours.

2. They all agree in not stating accurately where the petition was written.

3. Most of them state that the petition was written on stamp paper; it is written on plain.

4. Some assert that the stamp paper was procured from the office; others, that the mohurrir supplied it, receiving two rupees.

5. Most of them allege the petition and its signatures were written on one piece of paper; they are really on separate pieces; this statement alone would tend to show that the ryots had never seen the petition.

6. Several of them deny having signed the petition, although their "marks" are attached thereto.

7. They all state the petition was written at Berhampore; the address on the petition is "Chur Ramnuggur."

8. They none of them can state accurately when the petition was written.

9. Some declare the mohurrir took the petition to the post office, others that Panchamandal did so; some assert that he went alone; one man declares he went with him.

10. One or two can write, yet they never signed their names to the petition.

11. They cannot state the contents of the petition.

For the above reasons, I consider there is no doubt whatever that the ryots never signed the petition; that it was never written in their presence, and that they never saw it; on the contrary, I think it is most evident that it was really written by the other party, who is said in the petition "to have fallen out with deadly hatred against Messrs. Watson and Co."

No doubt that after the petition had been written and sent, a few of the ryots were told that such a petition had been forwarded, and that their names had been affixed thereto.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Secretary to the Board of Revenue (No. 1494), dated 3 April 1860.

Sir,

Petition of certain inhabitants of Ramnugur, dated 7th January 1860; letter No. 5, dated 28th March, from Commissioner of Rajshahye, with enclosure.

I AM directed to forward, for the purpose of being laid before the Board of Revenue, a copy of the papers noted in the margin, relative to a complaint preferred by some of the ryots of Chur Ramnuggur, in the district of Moorshedabad, against the proceedings of the local officers in having given the farm of the village to Messrs. Watson and Co. for the present year, in preference to the old farmer, notwithstanding their remonstrances, thereby giving Messrs. Watson and Co. the power to oppress and compel the ryots to sow indigo.

It appears from the reports of the local authorities that a very large portion of the cultivation of Messrs. Watson and Co.'s factory at Hairanpore belongs to the village of Ramnuggur, and that in consequence of differences existing between them and one Bejoikisto Shaha, who is stated to have possessed some influence over the late farmer of the estate, Messrs. Watson and Co. last year offered an advance of 300 rupees for the farm.

The offer was accepted, and the farm let out for the present year to Messrs. Watson and Co. In sanctioning this arrangement, the Commissioner instructed the Collector to give the former lessee the option of again taking the lease after the expiration of the year. It is now reported that as Messrs. Watson and Co. have been unable to collect the rents from the ryots, owing, it is alleged, to the opposition of Bejoikisto Shaha, the Commissioner has thought proper to cancel his instructions to the Collector.

It may, I am desired to observe, be proper to withhold the option of again taking the lease from Shebsoondree Dasse, the former farmer; but the mere circumstance of the existence of a dispute between Messrs. Watson and Co. and Bejoikisto Shaha, with which it does not appear that the Government is concerned, is no good reason for such an act. The Lieutenant Governor trusts that the local officers have taken no part in any private dispute of this sort in favour of either party. If, however, the local officers have it in proof that the lady in question, or any one on her part, has instigated the ryots not to pay their rents duly for the current season, that would be a good reason for the measure. It is not stated, however, on what authority the assertion is made.

From the account given it seems quite possible that the dispute may be really between the ryots and the lessee for the current year. It is to be gathered that the village of Ramnuggur, which is a Government khas estate, was let for the present year in farm to Messrs. Watson and Co., over the head of the old farmer, not at a jumma fixed with reference to a jumma bundee formed with the ryots, but seemingly at a rack rent, after the manner of an auction, because Messrs. Watson and Co., outbid the former farmer by 300 rupees. It is not shown that the legitimate rental of the village, as demandable from the ryots, warranted this increase of jumma, and it is stated that Messrs. Watson and Co.'s object, in bidding so high, was connected with their quarrel with Bejoikisto; whilst it is to be suspected that Messrs. Watson and Co. may have looked for their reimbursement, not to the rental lawfully demandable from the ryots, but to some profit in their indigo manufacturing business. In such a case it is not improbable that the ryots may have just ground of dissatisfaction.

It is new to the Lieutenant Governor to hear of Government farming out its khas mehals in the way of auction, without any form of settlement for the protection tection of its ryots, and for the avoidance of all the fatal evils of over-assessment. The Lieutenant Governor had thought that the old principle of making a settlement of khas mehals, and of fixing, in order to the protection of the lawful right of the ryots, the jummaundee of all land in cultivation by hereditary cultivators, and of refusing all offers at rates in excess of what could honestly be realized, according to the jummaundee, was still in force. But though all this may have been done in this case, the reports of the Commissioner and of the Collector do not lead to the inference that it has been done.

If, as seems possible, the village has been farmed without a settlement to the highest bidder, who looks for his reimbursement and profit over and above the lawful rent to illegitimate means, which must cause a corresponding loss to the ryots, a great irregularity and injustice has been committed. If in any case a jumma is assessed, which cannot be paid by legitimate means, the Government drives the malgozar to resort to illegitimate means. And if such transactions are usual in Moorshedabad, no one need look far to discover at least one cause of the present excitement in that quarter.

This case may be susceptible of most satisfactory explanation, but, as it appears at present, the Lieutenant Governor has thought it right to put the Board of Revenue in possession of it, in order that it may be properly inquired into.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1453), dated 3 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 5, dated the 28th ultimo, submitting a report from the officiating magistrate of Moorshedabad, on a petition purporting to be from certain inhabitants of Chur Ramnuggur, complaining of oppressions practised on them by the present farmers of that village, Messrs. Watson and Co., and in reply, to inform you that the case has been referred to the Board of Revenue for inquiry.

From A. Forbes, Esq., Acting Secretary to the Indigo Planters' Association, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 2), dated 13 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE been requested by his Honor the Lieutenant Governor to forward to you the following extract of a letter from Mr. Tripp, manager of the Bamundie concern, to Messrs. R. Thomas and Co., of Calcutta.

"I more than regret to inform you, that the ryots of most of my villages adjacent to those who are all up in arms belonging to the Katcheekatta concern, have commenced with me, and declare they will follow, for better or worse, the example all round. I am much afraid, indeed I am pretty certain, it will in a day or two extend all over the concern, and from what I can learn also throughout Meerpoore, which, if correct, Salgumoodia, I am afraid, can't escape. A general rebellion throughout Lower Bengal is, in my opinion, inevitable, unless strict and decided measures are, without delay, taken by Government to put it down. They have solely caused this disaffection amongst the ryots, which has now extended, I may safely say, over the Kishnaghur district, and which, I regret to add, it is entirely out of the planter's power to quell without the aid of Government.

"Unless matters take a favourable turn towards the planters, within a fortnight, not a man's life will be safe, leaving alone the destruction of property that must be the result.

"I would strongly recommend, if Mr. Kenny has started for England, that he be telegraphed for, to return to Calcutta by the first opportunity."

From H. Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 122), dated Camp Bachamara, 18 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you, that I have just received your Memo. No. 928, dated the 14th instant, and its enclosures.

I have the honour to state, that this is the first intimation of the matter I have received. Mr. Tripp has neither presented any petition to my knowledge, nor has he written to me to tell me what is going on in the Meerpore concern.

I was at Meerpore and in its neighbourhood on the 24th and 25th January, and no complaint was made by the ryots against the planters, nor did Mr. Kenny's assistant make any complaints against the ryots.

I have addressed Mr. Tripp, and requested him to write to me at Pubna, as I intend returning there in two or three days, and I shall start for the spot immediately, whether or no I receive a reply from him, if necessary.

I have not received any reports from the police ghattee, within half a mile of Meerpore, of any probability of a disturbance, or of any uneasy feelings between the planters and ryots.

— No. 20. —

The humble PETITION of the Indigo Planters' Association in Bengal to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

Showeth,

THAT your petitioners are largely engaged in a cultivation which they are told, on the highest authority, it is the object of the Supreme Government to foster and encourage. Mr. Wilson, who, in the opening of his Financial Statement of the 18th ultimo, stated that he had in his proposals "the fullest, the amplest concurrence of the noble Earl, the Governor General, and of his other colleagues in Council," also distinctly objected to increase the export duty on indigo, because, among other reasons, "it is one of the few cultivations in India which attract British capital and skill to direct native labour." Mr. Wilson goes on to say, "that is the kind of industry which, above all others, the Government would wish to encourage, and on that account alone they would feel precluded from placing any impediment in the way of its extension. It would be more in consonance with our views to remove what little duty there now is, as soon as circumstances will permit. The value of the influence of European gentlemen settled in our country districts cannot, in our opinion, be over estimated, and it will be the steadfast policy of the Government to encourage it in every way we can."

Your petitioners learn that you yourself, sir, have expressed sentiments similar to those of the Supreme Government on this subject. In a letter, of which we are sorry to say very bad use has been made, you say, "it would be greatly to be lamented if anything should check indigo cultivation, so long as it is a wholesome commercial enterprise."

But at the moment such favourable expressions towards us are being uttered by the Supreme Government, and that of Bengal, we find the manager of the Sindoorie

Sindoorie concern writing to us, under date of the 21st February, "the ryots are fully under the impression that Government wish to suppress the cultivation of indigo, and will support them against the planter, and they certainly have every reason for saying so, for they are often told so by the police." He also states, that "it is impossible to bring any cases against the ryots in the Mofussil courts, as we cannot get witnesses to prove them; even our servants dare not go into court to give evidence." And on the 29th he writes, "The ryots are at present in a great state of excitement; in fact they are mad, and ready for any mischief. They daily try to burn our factory and seed golahs. Most of our servants have left us from fear, as the ryots have threatened to murder them and burn their houses; and I fear the few that are still with us will soon leave, for the ryots prevent them getting food from the neighbouring bazaars. If some most stringent steps are not taken by the Government at once, none of us will be able to remain in the Mofussil, and then there will be a general loot of the factories, rather a serious state of affairs when you consider what is at stake. Even now it is not safe to ride from factory to factory. The whole country is up; and if it goes on much longer in this way there is no saying what may happen. The police are all against us."

The manager of the Bengal Indigo Company writes, that his assistants are attacked in the open field, and go to their business in fear of their lives. He says, "I never had a difficulty with my ryots except at the instigation of Government officers. I have induced young men of the highest respectability to join the Bengal Indigo Company's employ as assistants; but how can I expect them to remain or carry on business if they are to be maltreated when riding quietly over their cultivation." He states that the disturbances in his concern are owing to the "current belief that the Government is determined on putting a stop to all indigo planting."

The manager of the Neeschindeepore concern writes, on the 15th of February, "For the past four months every indigo property in this district has been, and still is, in the most serious danger; and only great prudence and activity will prevent mischief. An indiscreet order on the part of the magistrate would set the district in a blaze." And again, on the 29th of February, "Some villages of Katcheekatta have begun to behave badly, all caused by the extraordinary outbreak at Lokenathpore, and which is daily getting worse."

The manager of the Carragoda Factory writes, on the 1st March, "I am sorry to say that the ryots of the Soobdy Factory have been told by the ryots of Kadjoorah Factory of the Goldar division, and by those belonging to Ailhass Factory of the Sindoorie division, to join with them to present a petition against us. My ryots said that they have nothing to complain of, whereupon they were told that they would not be allowed to remain in their villages. I am doing my best to keep them quiet; but the whole district is in revolution, and the mutinous ryots say they will not sow indigo, having the Lord Saheb on their side, who has told them they need not sow indigo if they do not like to do so."

But your petitioners would bring to your notice that these are not mere reports unsupported by facts. Mr. Campbell, assistant in the Mulnath concern, was attacked and beaten, and left for dead on the field. Mr. Hyde, assistant in the same concern, was pelted with clods, and only saved himself by the speed of his horse.

The factory houses at Kadjoorah, in the Lokenathpore concern, were plundered and burnt down.

Toltollah Factory, in Lokenathpore, was threatened.

The out-houses of Chandpore, in the Goldar concern, were burned down.

Your petitioners would submit that these outrages are not the effect of any oppression on the part of the planters, for the managers of concerns throughout Bengal have of late years made large concessions to the ryots with regard to payments, being necessitated to do so by the great rise in wages, and increase in the price of articles of food, which has taken place during the last five or six years.

Your petitioners would, moreover, state that neither is it a consequence of the unprofitableness of indigo growing, as has been often stated, and they court the fullest inquiry into this point.

Your petitioners conceive that the cause of the unusual outbreak in many of the quietest concerns in Lower Bengal is the diligent propagation, by a late magistrate of Baraset, among his subordinates and others, of the notion that the Government of Bengal intended, by its letter, No. 4516, of 21st July 1859, to the address of the Commissioner of Nuddea district, to aid the ryots, by the police, in evading their contracts to sow indigo.

Your petitioners have received copy of a perwannah, issued to the darogah of thannah Kolarooah, of which the following is a translation :—

(No. 1603.)

To the Darogah of Thannah Kolarooah.

Be it known,

A LETTER of the magistrate of Baraset, dated 17th August 1859, has arrived, enclosing extract of a letter, No. 4516, from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 21st July 1859, and addressed to the Nuddea Commissioner, which, in referring to certain indigo matters, states that the ryots are to keep possession of their own lands, sowing thereon such crops as they may desire; that the police should take care that neither indigo planters, nor other persons, should interfere with the ryots; that indigo planters shall not be able, under pretence of the ryots having agreed to sow indigo, to cause indigo to be sown by the use of violence on the lands of those ryots; and that if the ryots have indeed agreed to do so, the indigo planters are at liberty to sue them for the same in the Civil Court, the Fouzdaree Court having no concern at all in that matter; for the ryot can bring forward numerous objections to their cultivating indigo, and in respect of their denial of the above agreement.

Therefore this general perwannah is addressed to you, that you may act in future as stated above.

20 August 1859.

Your petitioners would submit that such an interference as the above, between the capitalist and labourer, is unwarranted by the practice of any civilized country. Your petitioners would also remark, that were such an order as the above issued by any magistrate in the manufacturing or mining districts in England, strikes would inevitably occur among the labourers, as much more dangerous in character than those in Bengal, as the Englishman is more dangerous and energetic than the Bengallee.

Your petitioners would observe, that in the case of opium cultivation, where Government holds a similar position to that of the indigo planter towards the ryot, a special law for the fulfilment of contracts for the cultivation of opium was required, and has long been enacted. A special law, Act XIII. of 1859, exists for the punishment of breaches of contract by artificers, workmen and labourers in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. A law to provide for the summary enforcement of contracts between workmen on railways and other public works and their employers has just passed the Legislature. If Government, and railway contractors, armed with some of the powers of Government, and receiving assistance from Government officers, and tradesmen in the Presidency towns, who have the advantage of the Supreme and Small Cause Courts, require special laws for compelling the fulfilment of contracts, surely the unprotected Englishman settled in the interior does so much more, and surely this will not be denied to "that kind of industry which above all others the Government would wish to encourage."

Your petitioners would therefore pray for the issue, on the part of the Government of Bengal, of some notification which shall disabuse the minds of the ryots of the idea that it is the intention of Government to interfere in any way with the cultivation of indigo, and that his Honor the Lieutenant Governor be pleased to move the honorable member of the Legislative Council for Bengal to introduce a Bill for the summary trial and punishment of breaches of contract in the Mofussil.

And your petitioners shall ever pray, &c. &c.

W. Wise, Chairman.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 926), dated 14 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to forward to you herewith a notification which I am to request you will, as speedily as possible, have very carefully translated into Bengalee, and distributed extensively in those districts of your division in which misunderstanding has occurred, or is likely to occur, in connexion with the cultivation of indigo.

2. You can have any number you require of these notices struck off, either at the Allipore Jail press, or in that attached to my office.

3. You will understand, and the Lieutenant Governor desires that you will be careful to explain to the magistrates to whom you forward these notices, that it is not intended by this notification that the police should interfere for the purpose of enforcing any civil contract. Breaches of contract between indigo planters and ryots can be remedied only in the manner authorized by law. The object of the notification is to do away with a false impression, which there is reason to suppose exists, as to the views of Government in regard to the cultivation of indigo, and which is alleged to have had its origin partly in the injudicious publication of the perwannah submitted with your letter of the 9th instant, in which perwannah an Order of Government was inaccurately represented.

NOTIFICATION.

It appears from the reports of local officers, as well as from complaints which have been preferred to the Lieutenant Governor by indigo planters, that a misapprehension prevails in the minds of the ryots of some districts as to the views of Government in regard to the cultivation of indigo; and that in some places it has been falsely represented, by designing persons, that the Government is desirous to discourage the cultivation of indigo; and even that the police will protect ryots in the evasion of contracts entered into by them with indigo planters. It is surprising that such foolish reports should have obtained credence. Nevertheless it is proper that they should be authoritatively contradicted. Wherefore it is hereby declared that although it is always optional with ryots to take advances and to enter into contracts for indigo, or not to do so, as they may think best for their own interests, and in this matter they require no assistance beyond that of the law, which is equally fair to all parties, still if they do enter into such contracts lawfully, and of their own will, they must expect to be required to fulfil them. If they dishonestly refuse to act up to their engagements, they will be liable to the lawful consequence of such misconduct.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 74 Ct.), dated Allipore, 16 March 1860.

Sir,

REFERRING to your letter, No. 926, under date the 14th instant, received yesterday, I have the honour to state for the information of Government that the orders communicated have been duly carried out.

2. Twenty-five copies of the accompanying Bengalee notification, the same being a translation of that enclosed in your letter, were forwarded to each of the districts of Nuddea and Jessore by yesterday's post, and 300 more are now under dispatch to those districts. I am also issuing 140 copies to the magistrate of Barraset, whose attention, as well as that of the magistrates of Nuddea and Jessore, have been especially drawn to para. 3 of the orders.

P.S.—The magistrates have been told to indent for further copies if necessary on the Allipore Jail press.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioners of Dacca and Rajshahye (Nos. 1059 and 1060), dated 21 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to forward to you, for distribution to the officers in charge of those districts of your division in which indigo cultivation is extensively carried on, 500 copies of a Bengallee notification, issued by Government in consequence of the excitement at present prevailing in some parts of the lower provinces in connexion with this matter.

2. The Lieutenant Governor expects that the district officers will use their discretion as to publishing this proclamation in their respective districts. Where the erroneous belief, because of which the proclamation was published in Nuddea, does not prevail, the proclamation should not be published. Wherever that erroneous belief does prevail, if the magistrate is satisfied that it will do good, it may be published.

From J. S. Spankie, Esq., Magistrate of Maldah, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Judicial Department, Fort William (No. 51), dated Maldah, 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I REQUEST you will have the goodness to send me up sundry copies of the Lieutenant Governor's notification to the ryots of Kishnaghur, &c., by dawd post. I shall be glad to receive as many as you consider it possible to send by letter post.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Magistrate of Maldah (No. 1249), dated 26 March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 51, dated the 22d instant, I am directed to inform you that 100 copies of the Government notification therein referred to have been despatched to your address by this day's post.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. Sconce, Esq., Legislative Member for Bengal (No. 1065), dated 21 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you herewith a copy of a petition presented to the Lieutenant Governor by the Indigo Planters' Association on the 13th instant, and of a recent correspondence on the subject to which it relates.* Further correspondence and any papers which can be traced in this office connected with the passing of the several Acts referred to in Mr. Grote's letter of the 7th November Petition of Indigo Planters' Association.

November last, No. 141C., will be sent to you hereafter; and I am to request that you will be good enough carefully to consider the whole subject of contracts between indigo planters and ryots, and that you will favour the Lieutenant Governor with your opinion as to the expediency of special legislation with reference to these contracts, and the nature of the provisions of the Bill, if any, which you would advise to be introduced for adjudicating cases arising out of them.

From A. Forbes, Esq. Officiating Secretary to the Indigo Planters' Association, to the Honourable J. P. Grant, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal (No. 2), Old Post Office Street, 21 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to state that I am directed by the central committee of the Indigo Planters' Association to remind you of your promise to their deputation, to consult with Mr. Sconce as to the advisability of introducing a law for the summary punishment of breaches of indigo contracts, and to communicate your decision to the association.

The committee is induced to press this matter upon your consideration in consequence of its having been found that the notification issued by the Bengal Government on the 14th instant has failed to have the desired effect. The committee would suggest that a law should be immediately passed, empowering magistrates to punish with fine and imprisonment any ryot who may be proved to be under advances to sow indigo for this season, and who may refuse to fulfil his engagements.

With this feeling, it is the intention of the Indigo Planters' Association, in case you should not think it proper to recommend the law yourself, to petition the Legislative Council for such a law.

As the matter is very pressing, the committee would beg the favour of an early reply.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. Forbes, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Indigo Planters' Association, dated 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated yesterday, and in reply to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor has communicated with Mr. Sconce, as promised, and that he believes that a Bill will be introduced in the Legislative Council on Saturday next, for the summary enforcement of indigo contracts.

From the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal to A. Sconce, Esq., Legislative Member for Bengal, Belvidere, dated 23 March 1860.

My dear Sconce,

I SEND you a fair copy of the Bill, which, I think, will do for a first and second reading pretty well as it is; I have tried to introduce the alterations determined on this evening.

My reasons for recommending the Bill are in short these:—

That there is ground for believing that a great commercial calamity is threatened by the feeling which has suddenly manifested itself amongst indigo ryots to repudiate their agreements to cultivate indigo, although advances have been made to and accepted by them, only a short time ago, in the usual manner, and upon the usual understanding, namely, that they should cultivate indigo for the planters at the usual rates. I am myself of the opinion that the indigo cultivators have and long have had great and increasing ground of just complaint against the whole system of indigo cultivation. But if they desired to break off their connexion with that system they should have done so before receiving the season's advances. After working off existing engagements, for which they have received the usual advance, they will have it in their power honestly to refuse to grow another plant of indigo unless it is made for their own interest to do so. It will be monstrous if they are not allowed, not merely by the theory of the law, but in effect, to exercise their legal and moral right in this matter. But they have, in my opinion, no moral right, and certainly they have no legal right, to turn suddenly round upon the planters, and with nothing to complain of now, more than they had before, to refuse to do what up to this moment they have led the planters to expect that they would do according to custom and agreement. I conceive, that whether the custom is good or bad, and whether the agreement on the ryot's part be provident or improvident, and whether the general position of the ryot who grows indigo be or be not, for the time being, one of great hardship, no individual ryot has a moral right to break his agreement. And still less can I think that a mass of ryots who have agreed, and accepted advances in the usual manner, have any moral right to combine for the purpose of simultaneously breaking their agreements in order to ruin the other party. Against such a combination,—and for the purpose of saving from ruin, if possible, a great commercial interest, which, however false its position may long have been, has certainly done nothing to the injury of the ryot since the last advances were made and accepted in usual course a few weeks ago,—it appears to me that a law giving a very summary but still a fair trial, and inflicting penal damages on the party who after a fair trial is found to be determined wilfully to break his engagements, is both justifiable and proper. The draft of a law which I enclose does no more than this, but I am of opinion that no law that could be framed regarding indigo planting at the present moment should be more than temporary. Especially, I think that no law in the interest of the planter could, at the present moment, be honestly proposed which should have any effect beyond the season now running on. We all of us know that the system is full of abuses. If we had never heard a word about indigo planting since we arrived in India; if there was not upon record a single case of abuse, on the part of an indigo planter or a zemindar (and in this respect I desire to draw no invidious distinction between one class and another), the mere fact of the existence of the present difficulty would in itself prove that the system is rotten, and that the rottenness consists in this, that in practice the ryot is made to act like a slave, not like a free man. Under a wholesome and fair system of trade there must be in all dealings between two parties mutual gain, or at least the hope of mutual gain, and both parties to every dealing must be free agents. If, therefore, the indigo planting trade were in a wholesome and fair state, and an equal law were practically applicable to the rich and to the poor in dealings between planter and ryot, it is certain that the ryot would be as much afraid of the manufacturer not buying his plant, as clamorous for a special law on his side, as the manufacturer is afraid that the ryot will not cultivate and supply him with enough of the plant, and clamorous for special law on his side. We see that the present struggle on the part of the ryots is to avoid the cultivation of indigo. From this it is certain that ryots who cultivate indigo are forced to do so by illegitimate coercion. The same men who fight for the privilege of cultivating a field with rice, for sale in the open market, are now almost in rebellion in order to escape the calamity of cultivating a field with indigo for sale (if sale it can be called) to the planter.

There must be a thorough inquiry into the whole system. There would have been such an inquiry long ago, I believe, if people had not been afraid of bringing on such a crisis as has now occurred. The system was such that sooner or later a crisis was certain; it has now come in the natural course of things, and there is no longer an excuse for shirking the disclosure of the disease, and the application of the remedy. For these reasons I could recommend no law other than a temporary law, and no law of any sort unless its promulgation to the ryots may be accompanied with a promise of full and thorough inquiry into past practice, and thereafter of a well considered law which shall afford practically equal and complete protection to the ryots as well as to the planter.

A BILL to enforce the Fulfilment of Indigo Contracts.

WHEREAS it is expedient, pending a commission of inquiry into the practice of indigo planting in Bengal, which the executive Government purposes to appoint after the close of the present season of cultivation, to make temporary provision for enforcing by summary process the execution of agreements entered into for the cultivation of indigo plant; and better to provide for the punishment of certain unlawful acts connected with such cultivation; it is enacted as follows:—

I. If any person who has received a cash advance upon his agreement to cultivate indigo plant during the season now current, shall wilfully delay or omit from and after the 24th day of March 1860, to cultivate according to the conditions of his agreement, the whole quantity of land which he has agreed to cultivate, and for the cultivation of which the cash advance was made, it shall be competent to the magistrate to entertain a complaint made to the above effect on oath by the planter who has made the advance, or by any person on his behalf, and to summon the person complained of to appear before him, in order to the investigation of the complaint preferred. If the magistrate has reason to believe that the person complained of will not appear in obedience to the summons, he may issue a warrant for the arrest of such person.

Preamble.
Magistrate may, complaint, issue summons for appearance of a person who has received a cash advance, and delays or neglects to cultivate land according to agreement.

II. On hearing the answer of the person complained of, and on taking such evidence as both parties may adduce, if the complaint be established to the satisfaction of the magistrate, the magistrate shall assess a certain sum as damages not exceeding five times the said advance made, and five times the value of any seed that may have been furnished to him for such cultivation, to be paid by the defendant; and failing the immediate payment of the damages assessed, may order the defendant to be imprisoned in the civil gaol for a term not exceeding three months, and may, on the motion of the complainant furthermore proceed to levy the damages assessed from the property of the defendant in the mode provided for enforcing decrees of court under Act VIII. of 1859 (for simplifying the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature not established by Royal Charter). Provided, that if the amount of the said damages is paid or levied within the aforesaid term of three months, the defendant shall be released from gaol on that amount being paid or levied.

Penalty.

Proviso.

III. If any person from and after the 24th day of March 1860, shall by violence, threats, or otherwise, intimidate, or attempt to intimidate any other person who shall have entered into any such agreement as aforesaid, with the intention of inducing such person to break the conditions thereof; or if any person from and after the date aforesaid, shall conspire with any other person or persons for the purpose of causing the breach of any such contract or contracts as aforesaid, he shall, on conviction before a magistrate, be liable to a sentence of imprisonment, with or without labour for a period not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, or to both; such fine being commutable, if not paid, to a further period of imprisonment not exceeding six months.

Penalty for intimidation, &c.

IV. If any person shall maliciously destroy or damage, or if any person shall maliciously command, compel, or persuade, or shall with others maliciously conspire to command, compel, or persuade any other person to destroy or damage any growing crop of indigo, he shall on conviction before a magistrate, be liable to be sentenced to imprisonment with or without labour, for a period not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, or to both; such fine being commutable, if not paid, to a further period of imprisonment not exceeding six months.

Penalty for destroying or damaging crop

V. No appeal shall lie from the decision of a magistrate under this Act.

No appeal.

VI. The power of a magistrate under this Act, may be exercised by any person vested with the full powers of a magistrate, and by any assistant magistrate or deputy magistrate specially empowered on that behalf by the local Government.

Jurisdiction.

VII. This Act shall have effect from and after the 24th day of March 1860, within the territories subject to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. And no complaint or prosecution shall be entertained under this Act, unless preferred within six months from the date aforesaid.

Duration of Act

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioners of Nuddea and Rajshahye (Nos. 1273 and 1274), dated 27 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to draw your immediate attention to the "Bill to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts," which was read a first and second time in the Legislative Council on Saturday last.

2. This Bill, as it is framed, when passed into law will take effect from Saturday last the 24th instant, and the Lieutenant Governor directs that its provisions be immediately enforced by magistrates, as though the Bill were law at this moment. The wording of the Bill shows that this is the intention and object of the Legislative Council.

3. The provisions of this Bill, so far as they affect the ryots, must be very carefully explained to them. In the Lieutenant Governor's opinion this explanation will be best made by the several thannadars, each in his own thannah.

4. With this view it will be proper for you to issue forthwith through your subordinates, for promulgation in all those places where any excitement or unusual feeling in relation to indigo planting exists, a notice in conformity with those provisions.

5. It must be stated that it is the desire of Government that those ryots who have received cash advances, upon their agreement to cultivate indigo during the current season, shall honestly fulfil that agreement. It must be explained that any such ryot who refuses or delays so to fulfil his agreement shall be liable to be brought before a magistrate, on the complaint of the indigo planter who made the cash advance; and if the magistrate, after hearing both parties and taking evidence, decides that the ryot has broken his agreement, that ryot may be ordered immediately, in presence of the magistrate, to pay five times the cash advance, and if he has had seed advanced to him, five times the value of the seed; failing which he will be sent to gaol, whilst the amount of the fine will be levied by the sale of his property. This, it may be said, is the order of Government.

6. It should, moreover, be explained that any person who shall by threats or otherwise attempt to prevent ryots who have entered into contracts of the above nature from fulfilling those contracts, or who shall conspire with others in any such attempt, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment or both; and any person who shall maliciously destroy or damage, or shall conspire or attempt to persuade others to destroy or damage any growing crop of indigo, shall be similarly punished.

7. But it must also be explained that the order extends only to the current season; and it is the intention of Government before the period of taking advances for next season arrives, to institute searching inquiry into the causes of the disputes between indigo planters and ryots engaged in the cultivation of indigo; and to pass such further laws and orders as will ensure to both parties their just rights, and shall remove any reasonable causes of dissatisfaction which the ryots may have to show. With this object a special commission of inquiry will very soon be appointed.

(To Commissioner of Nuddea.)

8. It is very desirable that wherever there is a large indigo cultivation, and the probability of numerous disputes regarding indigo agreements, there should be in the close neighbourhood an officer at hand to carry out this new Act, and with this object three additional officers with full magisterial powers have recently been placed at your disposal, and can be located wherever you consider they are most likely to be required; other officers now in your district are, of course, also available for the same duty. If any of those officers who have not now full powers, are, in your opinion, competent to decide cases under this Act, they will be specially vested with the requisite powers for this particular purpose, on your recommendation. You will bear in mind what was said in a late letter

(To Commissioner of Rajshahye.)

8. It is very desirable that wherever there is a large cultivation, and the probability of numerous disputes regarding indigo agreements, there should be in the close neighbourhood an officer at hand to carry out this new Act. All officers having full powers of a magistrate, who are now in your districts, are, of course available for this duty, and can be located as may seem to you advisable. If any other officers who have not now full powers, are, in your opinion, competent to decide cases under the Act, they will on your recommendation be specially vested with the requisite powers for this particular purpose. Mr. Furrell, of the Aurngabad sub-division, has this day been vested with those special powers. Should you require an additional number of officers to give effect to the Act letter regarding the necessity of giving every officer deputed into the interior of a district where excitement prevails, a sufficient guard of military police to maintain his authority.

Act in any district, you should lose no time in applying for them. It is necessary that every officer deputed into the interior of a district for the purpose of carrying out this Act, should be attended by a sufficient guard of the military police to maintain his authority, and to put down immediately any disturbance.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 3), dated Kishnaghur, 29 March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 1273, of the 27th instant, I beg to append for his Honor's information, copy of my instructions of this date to the three magistrates in whose districts suits under the new Act will be instituted.

2. I have applied demi-officially for further copies of the Bill, and to have Mr. Assistant Maclean and Mr. Deputy Magistrate Platts empowered to decide these suits.

3. My impression is that the mere promulgation of the purport of the new law will remove all hesitation to sow on the part of those ryots who have received money.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Officiating Magistrates of Baraset, Nuddea and Jessore (No. 6, Circular), dated Kishnaghur, 29 March 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to annex for your guidance extracts from Government orders, dated 27th March 1860, No. 1273, on the subject of the new Bill for enforcing indigo contracts already forwarded to you, which you will observe is to be enforced as law at once.

2. Orders to the purport of para. 3 of the above letter must be issued to the police immediately on the receipt of this.

3. I apprehend that the first suits will be instituted in the thannahs of the Damoorhoodah and Bungong sub-divisions, and in those of Hadrah and Meherpore of Nuddea, and in Thannah Kaloopole of Jessore.

4. In the latter thannah, Mr. Molony and Mr. Skinner will so distribute their camps as to enable them to dispose as fast as possible of the suits so instituted. Mr. Deputy Magistrate Betts, who arrived this morning, will be directed to join Mr. Molony's camp to assist in their adjudication.

5. In Bungong, Mr. McNeile will be probably equal to disposing of all the suits which may be instituted there, whether from Nuddea or Baraset, in which latter district he has also full powers.

6. In Damoorhoodah, Mr. Maclean (for whom I have applied for full powers) will be assisted if necessary by Mr. Herschel and Mr. Taylor, who on his arrival may, I think, be made to hold kucherry at Haut-Boleah.

7. At Meherpore, Mr. Platts, for whom also I have applied for full powers, will dispose of such suits as are instituted there or at Bamoondee.

8. Mr. D. M. Mackenzie, who arrived on Tuesday, should be sent to Hadrah.

9. Each of the new officers must have with him two omlahs on 20 or 25 rupees per month, for the purpose of recording evidence. It would be convenient if the magistrates could furnish these men from their fixed establishments, filling up their places temporarily there.

10. Each officer should have a small party of military police at hand, wherever he may for the time be holding his court. The present distribution of Captain Raban's battalion is as follows :—

Subdhee.—Jessore Magistrate's camp, 50 men under Lieutenant Howard, and 50 men of Major Miles' battalion, under Lieutenant Smith, are on their way to join him.

Damoorhoodah.—Eighty men under Lieutenant Duff.

Haut-Boleah.—Thirty men under a native officer.

Meherpore.—Fifty men under Lieutenant Robertson.

11. I have to-day requested Captain Raban to detach 30 men under a native officer to Bamoondee, supplying their place from head quarters, which will be strengthened in a day or two by the arrival of the guards relieved at the Presidency.

12. I have also told Lieutenant Baker to march his party of 50 men to Hadrah.

13. On the arrival of the Lahore Light Horse, which may not be till after my departure, Mr. Herschel is requested to instruct the commanding officer to detach 60 men to Damoorhoodah, half to remain at that station, and half to proceed to join the Jessore magistrate's camp at Subdhee; 20 men should be sent to join Mr. Platts at Meherpore. The remaining should be kept here to accompany Mr. Herschel to whatever part of the district he may be called.

14. Mr. Molony, Mr. Maclean and Mr. Platts should be desired to collect small supplies of live stock, and other necessities, for provisioning European troops for the time they are likely to be quartered in the district.

15. I return to Alipore on the 1st, to hold the half-yearly examination, and communication should be addressed thither after the 31st.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1535), dated 31 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 3, dated the 29th instant, submitting a copy of your circular to the officiating magistrates of Baraset, Nuddea, and Jessore, on the subject of carrying out the provisions of the new Bill for enforcing the fulfilment of indigo contracts, and in reply to inform you that the arrangements which you have prescribed appear very judicious, and are entirely approved by the Lieutenant Governor.

The 31st March 1860.

THE following Bill, as read a third time this day, is published for general information :

A BILL to enforce the fulfilment of Indigo Contracts, and to provide for the Appointment of a Commission of Inquiry.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to issue a commission of inquiry into the practice of indigo planting in Bengal, and the relations between the indigo planter and the ryots and holders of land in Bengal, and to make temporary provision for enforcing by summary process the execution of agreements entered into for the cultivation of indigo plant; and better to provide for the punishment of certain unlawful acts connected with such cultivation; it is enacted as follows :

Magistrate may on complaint, issue summons for appearance of a person who has received a cash advance, and delays or neglects to fulfil his agreement.

I. If any person who has received a cash advance upon his agreement to cultivate indigo plant during the season now current, shall wilfully delay or omit from and after the 4th day of April 1860, to cultivate according to the conditions of such agreement the whole quantity of land which he has agreed to cultivate, or otherwise to fulfil his engagement, it shall be competent to the magistrate to entertain a complaint made to the above effect on oath by the planter who has made the advance, or by any person on his behalf, and to summon the person complained of to appear before him, in order to the investigation of the complaint preferred. If the magistrate has reason to believe that the person complained of will not appear in obedience to the summons, he may issue a warrant for the arrest of such person.

II. On

II. On hearing the answer of the person complained of, and on taking such evidence as both parties may adduce, if the complaint be established to the satisfaction of the magistrate, the magistrate shall assess a certain sum as damages sustained by reason of the breach of the contract. If it shall appear to the magistrate that the person who has agreed to cultivate the indigo plant is still able to perform his contract, the magistrate shall order him specifically to perform the same, and shall also in such case award a certain sum to be paid as damages, as an alternative. In cases in which the land to be cultivated with the indigo plant is defined by the agreement, the magistrate may order the attachment, as a security for the amount of the damages assessed or to be assessed for the breach of the agreement, of any other crop of the defaulter that may at any time during the present season be growing on such land. If after an order for specific performance of agreement, the defendant fail to perform the agreement, or to pay the amount of damages ordered to be paid as an alternative, or if, after an order for payment of damages, the same be not immediately paid, the magistrate may order the defendant to be imprisoned in the civil gaol, for a term not exceeding three months, and may, on the motion of the complainant, furthermore proceed to levy the damages assessed from the property of the defendant, in the mode provided for enforcing decrees of court under Act VIII., of 1859 (for simplifying the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature not established by Royal Charter). Provided that if the amount of the said damages is paid or levied within the aforesaid term of three months, the defendant shall be released from gaol on that amount being paid or levied.

Remedy.

Proviso.

III. In case it shall appear to the satisfaction of the magistrate that the agreement has been obtained by means of fraud, force, or unlawful intimidation, the complaint shall be dismissed.

If agreement obtained by force or intimidation, complaint to be dismissed.

IV. If any complaint preferred under this Act be dismissed for want of proof or appearance of the complainant, or for any other cause, the magistrate may order the complainant to pay such amount for costs and compensation as he may think reasonable. In default of payment of any such amount, the same may be levied by distress and sale of the property of the person ordered to pay the same.

In what cases magistrate may levy costs and compensation from complainant.

Penalty for intimidation, &c.

V. If any person from and after the 4th day of April 1860, shall by violence, threats, or otherwise intimidate, or attempt to intimidate, any other person who shall have entered into any such agreement as aforesaid, with the intention of inducing such person to break the conditions thereof, he shall, on conviction before the magistrate, be liable to a sentence of imprisonment, with or without labour, for a period not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, or to both, such fine being commutable, if not paid, to a further period of imprisonment not exceeding six months.

VI. If any person shall maliciously destroy or damage, or if any person shall maliciously command, compel, or persuade any other person to destroy or damage any growing crop of indigo, he shall, on conviction before a magistrate, be liable to be sentenced to imprisonment, with or without labour, for a period not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding 200 rupees, or to both, such fine being commutable, if not paid, to a further period of imprisonment, not exceeding six months.

Penalty for destroying or damaging crops.

VII. No appeal shall lie from the decision of a magistrate under this Act.

No appeal.

VIII. The power of a magistrate under this Act may be exercised by any person vested with the full powers of a magistrate, and by any assistant magistrate or deputy magistrate specially empowered on that behalf by the local government.

Jurisdiction.

IX. A decision of a magistrate shall be a bar to any further proceeding for the same breach of agreement. No decision under this Act shall have any force or effect in regard to anything not to be performed during the current season.

Effect of decision of magistrate under this Act.

X. This Act shall have effect from and after the 4th day of April 1860, and shall not extend beyond the territories subject to the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. And no complaint or prosecution shall be entertained under this Act, unless preferred within six months from the date aforesaid.

Duration and territorial scope of Act.

Limitation of action.

XI. All orders made or acts done before the 4th day of April 1860, which would have been lawful if the Bill "to enforce the fulfilment of Indigo Contracts," as read a second time on the 24th day of March 1860 had then become law, are hereby declared to be valid. And all magistrates, and other public officers, are hereby indemnified for any acts done before the said 4th day of April 1860, which would have been justifiable under the said Bill if the same had become law on the said 24th day of March 1860.

Certain post order declared valid.

Indemnity.

XII. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal shall, as soon as conveniently may be, issue a Commission to such persons as the said Lieutenant Governor shall think fit, for the purpose of inquiring into and reporting on the system and practice of indigo planting in Bengal, and the relations between the indigo planter and the ryots and holders of land in Bengal aforesaid. The said Commissioners shall fully inquire into the matters aforesaid, and shall, as soon as they conveniently can, report to the Lieutenant Governor the result of their inquiries, and shall in their report or reports suggest such alterations, if any, as may in their opinion be beneficially made in the law relating to the system and practice and the relations aforesaid.

Appointment of Commission of Inquiry.

Death or resignation of any of the Commissioners.

XIII. In case of the death or resignation of any of the said Commissioners, or of any of them becoming unable or refusing to act, it shall be lawful for the other Commissioners or Commissioner to act alone, and all the powers by this Act given to Commissioners shall and may be exercised by the continuing Commissioners or Commissioner alone, but only until such vacancy can be filled up. It shall be lawful for the said Lieutenant Governor from time to time, and he shall as soon as conveniently may be, without issuing a new Commission, appoint some other person or persons to act as a Commissioner or Commissioners jointly with the continuing Commissioners or Commissioner, and in such case all the powers conferred by this Act shall and may be exercised by the said newly appointed Commissioner or Commissioners jointly with the continuing Commissioner or Commissioners.

Attendance of witnesses.

XIV. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners aforesaid, by a summons under the hand of any one of them, to require the attendance before them, at a time and place to be mentioned in such summons, of any person or persons whomsoever, residing or being within the Lieutenant Governorship of Bengal, whose evidence shall in the judgment of the Commissioners aforesaid be material to any of the matters of the inquiry aforesaid, and to require the person or persons so summoned to bring and produce before them all such books, papers, deeds, and writings as to them the said Commissioners shall appear necessary for arriving at the truth of the matters directed to be inquired into by the said Commissioners, all of which persons shall accordingly attend before the said Commissioners, and shall produce such books, papers, deeds, and writings as shall be required of them, and shall be in their custody and control, or in the custody and control of any one of them, according to the tenor of the summons. Provided always, that no person shall be compelled to attend before the said Commissioners or to give his evidence at a greater distance than 50 miles from the place where such person shall be residing.

Proviso.

Examination of witnesses on oath or affirmation.

XV. It shall be lawful for the Commissioners aforesaid, or one of them, to administer an oath, or in the case of persons allowed by law to make affirmation instead of taking an oath, an affirmation, in such form as to them the said Commissioners shall seem fit, to all persons who shall be examined before them touching the matters to be inquired into by them as aforesaid. Provided that nothing herein contained shall render it necessary for the said Commissioners to take evidence upon oath or affirmation unless they shall think fit or expedient so to do.

Proviso.

Witnesses neglecting to attend, &c.

XVI. If any person upon whom any such summons shall be served, by the delivery thereof to him or by the leaving thereof at his usual place of abode, being a person living within 50 miles of the place at which he shall be required to attend, without reasonable cause (to be allowed by the Commissioners aforesaid) fail to appear before them at the time and place mentioned in the summons, or shall refuse to be sworn or to make affirmation (as the case may be), or shall not make answer to such questions as shall be put to him touching the matters directed or which may hereafter be directed, to be inquired into by the Commissioners aforesaid, or shall refuse or fail without reasonable cause (to be allowed by the Commissioners aforesaid) to produce and show to the said Commissioners any such paper, book, deed, or writing being in his possession or under his control as to the Commissioners aforesaid shall appear necessary for arriving at the truth of the matters to be inquired into by them, the Commissioners aforesaid shall have the same powers in all respects touching any such person so failing to appear or refusing to be sworn or to make affirmation, or not answering such questions as shall be put to him, or refusing to produce and show any such book, paper, deed, or writing as aforesaid, as the principal court of original civil jurisdiction within the limits of which the said person shall be residing, may by law exercise against any person for making default of appearance or for refusing to be sworn or to give evidence on any issue joined in any action pending in such court.

Expenses of witnesses.

XVII. Whenever a summons is issued for the attendance of a witness under this Act, the Commissioners may, if they think fit, order such witness to receive from the Collector such travelling and other expenses as he would have been entitled to receive had he been summoned to appear and give evidence in the principal court of original civil jurisdiction in the district.

Punishment for false evidence.

XVIII. Every person who upon examination upon oath or affirmation before the Commissioners aforesaid shall wilfully give false evidence, shall be liable to the punishment of perjury.

M. Wylie, Clerk of the Council.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioners of Nuddea and Rajshahye, dated Fort William, 4 April 1860.

Sir,

THE Bill "to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts and to provide for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry," as read a third time, and passed in the Legislative Council on Saturday last, differs in some respect from that read the first and second time, in regard to which general instructions were conveyed to you in my letters Nos. 1273 and 1290, dated the 27th and 28th ultimo respectively.

2. It is necessary therefore that the state of the law, as it will now stand when the anticipated assent of his Excellency the Governor General is given to it, so far as it affects the ryots, should be very carefully explained to them, in the same manner that the provisions of the Bill in its former state were explained to them.

3. The following are the most important changes made:—

4. The summary and exceptional process available by this law may be applied to the whole matter of any agreement to cultivate indigo during the present season, for which any advance in cash has been received, instead of being restricted to so much of it as was made in consideration of the advance in cash; and there is no maximum to which the damages assessable by the magistrate are restricted in proportion to the amount of cash advance received. Moreover, the magistrate may now decree specific performance: he may decree costs and compensation against a complainant failing to prove his case: and his decision bars all further proceedings in the matter of the contract in question. The provision that there shall be no appeal from the magistrate's order remains as it was before it was proposed to give him these extended powers. These changes add materially to the responsibilities of the officers vested with magisterial powers under the Act; and they make it more than ever imperative on those officers to give their utmost attention to the equitable principles it will fall to them to apply, and to the careful ascertainment of the facts whenever there may be any dispute of facts regarding the nature as well as regarding the existence of an agreement such as is provided for. On this point, I am directed to request that attention may again be directed to the remark made in paragraph 4 of my letter of the 28th ultimo, No. 1290.

5. The special provision in Section III. of the Act will point the magistrate's attention to the general principle, that fraud and force, and unlawful intimidation vitiate agreements.

6. As the Legislature allows no appeal from the decisions of officers vested with powers under this Act, it becomes doubly incumbent on Commissioners to keep themselves constantly informed of the manner in which these officers discharge the very difficult and responsible duty now imposed upon them, and of the principles by which they are guided in their decisions. These powers, and the opportunity of acting upon them, must not be retained for a day in the hands of any officer who may show himself not competent to exercise them in such a manner as to do full and substantial justice to all parties.

7. The Act will have effect from this date; but under Section XI. public officers are indemnified from any acts done before the 4th instant, which would have been justifiable under the Bill as read on the 24th ultimo.

8. One hundred copies of the Act in Bengallee are herewith forwarded to you, and should be circulated.

From Baboo Issur Chunder Singh, Honorary Secretary British Indian Association, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Committee of the British Indian Association to request the favour of your laying before his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, for his consideration and orders, the accompanying petition of the Committee, praying for a Commission of Inquiry into the cultivation of indigo in Lower Bengal.

To the Honourable J. P. Grant, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

The Humble Petition of the British Indian Association.

Showeth,

THAT your petitioners have viewed with much concern the contest which has sprung up within the last few months between the ryots and planters, engaged in the cultivation and manufacture of indigo in Kishnaghur and other districts in Lower Bengal.

The contest has, within the last few weeks assumed a serious aspect, and things have approached to a crisis which is much to be lamented, though your petitioners have good reasons to believe that the accounts published in the newspapers are greatly exaggerated, and they have not been surprised to perceive such to be the case from the report of the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division.

Your petitioners cannot view the contest in any other light than as a natural struggle between labour and capital, and as such, its settlement, they are of opinion, ought to be left to the operation of economical laws uninterfered with by the Government or Legislature on any side.

But circumstances have arisen, your petitioners regret to state, which call for the interference of the authorities. Both parties have appealed to the Government for intercession and aid, and both are loud in declaring the truth and justice to be on their side. Further, it has been declared on behalf of indigo planters, that inaction on the part of Government may lead them "to take the law into their own hands," and it has even been circumstantially stated that "planters (at Kishnaghur) are engaging sailors in Calcutta as a preliminary measure against such a contingency." As a confirmation to the above, your petitioners observe certain indigo planters of Kishnaghur stating in an official letter of theirs to the Secretary to their association at Calcutta, that failing attention from Government, "we must endeavour to do what is best for ourselves." This, if true indicates a state of things fraught with danger to the peace of the district, and requires in the judgment of your petitioners the prompt attention of Government.

Your petitioners do not pretend to judge between the two contending parties, and emphatically disavow hostility to either. They, however, feel persuaded that the question is surrounded by such difficulties, by reason of the strong personal interests involved in it of both the parties, that without a public and efficient inquiry it will be hopeless, your petitioners believe, for Government as well as the public at large to arrive at a correct and impartial solution in regard to it.

There are two subjects connected with the cultivation of indigo, which your petitioners think above all others particularly call for this inquiry. Your Honor is aware that among other things the loudest complaints have been made by the ryots, whether with justice or not, your petitioners do not feel competent to decide, against the low rates of remuneration, compared to other articles of cultivation, of rice given for the cultivation of the indigo plant, and the system of advances in vogue in the indigo factories of Lower Bengal.

In 1856, your petitioners, in common with the estimable and philanthropic body of Protestant Missionaries of Bengal, prayed of the Government for a Commission of Inquiry of the kind referred to above. In the present prayer, however, they feel it a particular pleasure to be able to state that they have the concurrence of the European planters immediately interested in the cultivation of indigo, who in their recent petition to your honour have openly "courted the fullest inquiries."

A Commission of Inquiry of the kind prayed for has long been desiderated. Whether as regards the interests of the planters, or those of the ryots, a searching, patient, and unbiassed inquiry has been held to be the only means by which a true solution of this intricate and important question can be discovered, and the real character of the facts so vehemently disputed on both sides established. It is believed to be the sole means which will, above all, settle the position of the ryot, who has been unceasing in his complaints, and clear up the future of British enterprise in the interior; the fusion of which with native capital and industry is justly considered to be the main security for the progress of the country in material prosperity.

Your petitioners have observed with regret that it has been recommended to your Honor to bring "special legislation," to bear upon British enterprise in the Mofussil, by way of encouragement. Much as your petitioners value British enterprise in India; much as they hope for the introduction of British capital, energy, and skill into this land, as the pioneer of progress; much as they look to European science and its application for the development of the inexhaustible resources of this country, they would reckon it as humiliating, as discreditable to British settlers, and unfortunate for the people, if those excellent advantages, which cannot be undervalued without gross positive injustice, could not be obtained without the aid of "special legislation."

Your petitioners would therefore pray that your Honor may be pleased to consider the propriety of issuing a Commission of Inquiry, consisting of such a number of persons as your Honor may deem fit, into the cultivation of indigo in Lower Bengal, with special reference to the rates of remuneration and the system of advances connected therewith.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

From

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal to the Honorary Secretary to the British Indian Association (No. 1540), dated 5 April 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter of the 22d ultimo, I am directed to refer you to the Act "to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts, and to provide for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry," which was passed by the Legislative Council on Saturday last.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Secretary to the Indigo Planters' Association (No. 1539), dated 5 April 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter to your address of the 22d ultimo, I am directed to refer you to the Act "to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts, and to provide for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry," which was passed by the Legislative Council on Saturday last, which the Lieutenant Governor trusts will meet the objects of the association.

From A. Forbes, Esq., Officiating Secretary of Indigo Planters' Association, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated Calcutta, 10 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1539, dated the 5th instant.

I am directed by the Central Committee of the Indigo Planters' Association to express their thanks for the law to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts, and to state that they hail with much satisfaction the provision made in that Act for the appointment of a Commission of Inquiry into the relations between indigo planters and the cultivators of the soil, and to express a hope, on the part of the Association, that the appointment of the Commission shall not be long delayed. If the Commission commence its inquiries immediately after the present sowing season, it is to be hoped that its labours might be completed before October next, when the sowings and arrangements for the next season must commence. Enough would be then known at least to set at rest the question whether indigo planting, as conducted at present, is to be permitted by law to continue, or whether the Government intends to interfere to any considerable extent between the planter and the cultivator, and arrangements might be made, modified according to the extent of such interference, for the cultivation of indigo for the next season.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 98 Ct.), dated Allipore, 16 April 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to lay before Government an original reference from the magistrate of Nuddea, dated 13th instant, with its enclosures. As I had previously sent to the Legal Remembrancer for copies of the Jessore magistrate's letter, I beg to append it also, and its enclosures.

2. Not concurring in Mr. Beaufort's view of the law, I had drawn up the accompanying note, which I had intended to submit for the approval of his Honor the Lieutenant Governor.

3. It will be seen that I support, generally, Mr. Herschel's opinion, and if I remember rightly, what was said by the Right honourable James Wilson, when he moved the amendment of the second section of the Bill, on a construction of the law, is that which was intended to be put on it.

4. I request the return of the original enclosures.

From W. J. Herschel, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Nuddea Division (No. 101 Ct.), dated Nuddea, 13 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honor to enclose copy of a letter received from the Legal Remembrancer on a reference made to him by the magistrate of Jessore and myself, putting certain questions to him as to the meaning of the new Indigo Bill.

2. I have no copy of the letter that went to him, nor of the questions put; but I think I am stating them fairly thus:

Question 1. A ryot having taken cash advance upon agreement to cultivate for a specific number of years, including the current season, does the wording of the law admit of the case being adjudicated by the magistrate?—On this we agreed that the law applied to such a case.

Question 2. A ryot having taken advance in some former year to sow indigo, but without fixing any specific limit to the number of years for which the agreement was to hold, can the magistrate order him to sow this year on any ground but one, viz., that by receipt of a cash advance this season the ryot has confirmed the contract?—It appeared to me that he could not. The magistrate of Jessore considered (as I understand him) that any act of the ryots which proved his consent to the continuance of the contract, gave force to the law against him, provided he received cash originally.

3. As in a meeting of six magisterial officers we were equally divided in this point, we decided on referring the matter to the Legal Remembrancer for his opinion.

4. His reply has been received, but it appears to me so difficult of adoption that I must beg for a more distinct statement of the meaning of the law from higher authority.

5. I know not whether it is quite proper of me to put forward arguments opposed to the view of the Legal Remembrancer, but as concisely as may be, I venture to state the grounds on which I adopted my own view, and to show why I still think them intact.

6. The terms of the law are: if any ryot "has received a cash advance upon his agreement to cultivate indigo plant, during the season now current, the magistrate shall, if it be still feasible, order him to sow, and shall fix an equitable sum as damages for failing to comply with the order.

7. It appears to me that the magistrate has no option on the case thus put, to decline giving the order to sow.

His functions as judge in equity commence when he assesses the penalty for a refusal to comply with the order. If the ryot agreed to sow this year, and took cash advance on that agreement, an order to sow must follow. The order may be a harsh one (as in the case put by the Legal Remembrancer of a 10 years' agreement on conditions obviously unprofitable to the ryot), but the penalty in such a case is at the magistrate's discretion.

8. The case of a 10 years' agreement is herein precisely similar to that of an agreement for this year only. The order to sow must issue on an agreement clenched by cash. It may be as harsh an order as in the other case; but the penalty for refusal depends on the equitable nature of the contract.

9. But the Legal Remembrancer, proceeding on the principles of civil law, and putting out of sight the criminal and exceptional nature of the present law, argues that in the case of a 10 years' agreement, unprofitable to the ryot, no order to sow should issue unless the planter can prove that he has given other advantages which supply the place of the customary renewed advance.

10. This

10. This argument, it seems to me, tends to assimilate the case of an agreement for a specific term with that of an agreement unlimited in time. It tends, by denying the literal interpretation of the law in the former case, where it reads in favour of one of the parties, to admit of a liberal interpretation of it in his favour in the latter, where it reads against him. It makes the entire question one of pure equity in both cases.

Yet I confess I cannot see how a specific contract to sow during a specific term, which includes this particular season, and which was clenched by cash when made, can be put out of the pale of the law, nor how a contract which does not specify this particular season can be brought within it. If the latter have been renewed by any means, specially with regard to this season, it becomes a new contract to sow this season, and it only remains for the magistrate, in compliance with the terms of the law, to call for proof that a cash advance was given, not upon some previous, but upon this recent agreement.

11. The Legal Remembrancer ends his letter by saying,—

“But if the agreement had reference only to last season, it would not, I apprehend, be held valid in the current season without an express renewal by the parties concerned.”

What is an express renewal? It appears to me that the terms of the law are inflexibly accurate. The receipt of cash advance is the only expression to which we criminal authorities are allowed to listen.

12. In adopting and adhering to this view, it is quite possible that some cases of injustice to the planter may occur, such as that of a ryot having altogether evaded his contract last season; he probably ought to sow this year; but while the words of the law continue as at present, I cannot, turn it as I may, consider myself responsible for such injustice.

From E. W. Molony, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Jessore, to the Superintendent of Legal Affairs, Fort William, dated Damoorhooda, 7 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to submit the enclosed memoranda of the construction placed upon the Indigo Bill, by the officers (as per margin),* who have severally signed them, and shall be much obliged by your favouring us with your opinion as to which is the correct view.

2. I have been requested to refer this question, as it is very desirable that the same construction may be placed on the law by all officers concerned in the administration thereof.

3. Be pleased to favour me with your opinion as early as possible, sending a copy of the same to the address of the Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea.

4. Please to address an answer to me, Damoorhooda, viâ Nischindipore.

MEMORANDUM.

1st. I hold that the terms of the law admit of a magistrate's taking up a case under the Indigo Bill, no matter in what year the cash advance was made, provided the agreement was for a specified and limited number of years, and included the present season.

2d. I hold that a ryot having received cash advance last year, without having fixed any term to the continuance of the contract, or expressly or impliedly agreed with reference to such advance to cultivate this year, cannot be ordered to sow this year, unless by the receipt of a second cash advance this season, he has confirmed and continued the contract.

(signed) W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

I agree with the above opinion.

(signed) G. Taylor,
Assistant Magistrate.

* Mr. E. W. Molony, Officiating Magistrate of Jessore; Mr. W. J. Herschel, Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea; Mr. C. B. Skinner, Joint Magistrate; Mr. M. G. Taylor, Joint Magistrate; Mr. A. T. Maclean, Joint Magistrate; Mr. C. G. D. Betts, Deputy Magistrate.

As I am of opinion that, to make me to receive a case under the law, cash must have been received this season, I disagree with the first of the above minutes.

(signed) A. T. Maclean.

I agree with Mr. Herschel in the view he has taken of the indigo law being applicable to unexpired agreements to cultivate indigo for a specified term of years, whenever the advance may have been made.

I am also of opinion that it will apply to cases in which the evidence shows the agreement was intended to extend to the present season, though no term is specified, where there may have originally been a cash advance not paid off, and where the ryots may have by any act admitted that the agreement is still in force, even though no fresh cash advance may have been made to him this season.

(signed) E. W. Molony.

I agree entirely with Mr. Molony's view.

(signed) C. B. Skinner.

I agree with Mr. Molony's constructions of the Bill.

(signed) A. G. D. Betts.

From F. Beaufort, Esq., Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, to the Officiating Magistrate of Jessore (No. 524, Fort William), dated 10 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, regarding the Bill to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts, which was read a third time in the Legislative Council on the 31st ultimo.

2. Under Sections 1 and 9 of the Bill, you require an agreement to cultivate indigo plant during the season now current, and a cash advance made upon that agreement. On these conditions you have jurisdiction. But if the terms of the agreement do not embrace the current season, or if no cash advance has been made on that agreement, you cannot interfere.

3. There is nothing in the Bill which requires that the agreement should specify a limited number of years; and therefore I think that Mr. Herschel is in error when he makes it essential that the agreement should be for a specified and limited number of years. But, doubtless, some consideration of the time involved is requisite. The law is professedly temporary; and a summary power has been given to you for a specified purpose. In the exercise of that power you are bound by Section 3 to regard the considerations of equity; and where the agreement does not involve fair reciprocal obligation, as judged by local custom, it should not be enforced, although the bare terms of the law are strictly applicable to it. Consequently, if the agreement stipulates for the cultivation of land for a long period of years, or in perpetuity, without a cash advance, which can equitably be presumed to have afforded advantage to the ryot during the current season, I am of opinion that it ought not to be enforced. As, for instance, I would not apply the law to the possible case of a ryot contracting to cultivate 10 beegahs with indigo for 10 years, on one advance of 20 rupees, which has not been renewed, unless the planter could show that the ryot had received corresponding benefits in some other way, which would supply the place of the customary renewed advance. In the case of agreements not renewed for the current season, I think that you should see whether the advances, either made in cash or brought forward in the account, have been marked off or not, and that no contract should be enforced in the fulfilment of which the ryot has discharged the obligations represented by the advances. And in this view, you will observe, it is not required that the agreement should specify a fixed number of years.

4. On the second point to which your letter refers, I observe that nothing is said in the law about an advance made in the current season, and consequently that Mr. Herschel's construction of it is, as it seems to me, incorrect; you cannot, I think, restrict the administration of the law to those cases in which the actual fact of payments in the current year is proved, to the exclusion of cases in which the contract regards the cultivation of the current season, and in which an advance has been made on that contract. In the enforcement of the law for this season, regard ought to be had specially to the custom which has held in the concern; and that will usually show whether the contract, on which an advance was made in a previous year, is applicable to the current season. It is easy to conceive cases in which the ryot could not have fairly asked for renewed advance this season; as, for instance, where he evaded the obligation of last year, and consented instead to hold the agreement good for the current season. But if the agreement had reference only to last season, it would not, I apprehend, be held valid in the current season without an express renewal by the parties concerned.

Copy forwarded to magistrate of Nuddea, for his information, at the request of the magistrate of Jessore.

NOTE by Commissioner.

1. THERE must be, in the first place, an agreement to cultivate plant during the season now current. The contract may be a written and producible one, in which case, if proved to be genuine, and to have been fairly entered into, the magistrate will have jurisdiction, on finding that a cash advance was made at the time of its execution, and that the ryot is still bound by its conditions to supply plant.

2. If the contract, when produced, does not show conclusively that its conditions are binding on the ryot for the current year, the planter must show that its conditions have become so binding by the acceptance, on the ryot's part, of a further advance this year.

3. If the contract be not a written and producible one, and the ryots deny that any such has ever been made for the season now current, then the planter must prove that the oral agreement has been actually made, or has been understood to be made by the ryot's acceptance of a cash payment for the current year.

A. Mr. Forlong sues on a seven year's term agreement, which he produces. His books show that there are three years yet to run, and that an advance was made to defendant at the time of execution. Magistrate may order specific performance. Illustrations.

B. In another case he files an agreement which contains no specific term, and leaves the question doubtful as to whether it was intended to bind the ryot beyond the year in which it was entered into, and in which the advance was made. Defendant admits that he received advance on it, and that he is in balance to the factory, but denies that it binds him for this year. The question raised here is beyond the jurisdiction of the special court.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Advocate General (No. 1809), dated 19 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you the accompanying communication, in original, from the Commissioner of Nuddea, on the subject of the Bill to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts, and to request that you will have the goodness to favour the Lieutenant Governor with a legal opinion thereon, such as may be circulated amongst the officers employed in carrying out the provisions of the Bill for their guidance.

No. 98 Ct. of 16th Inst., with three Enclosures.

2. The return of the original papers, with your reply, is requested.

From W. Ritchie, Esq., Advocate General, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta, 21 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1809, dated the 19th instant, and in reply to forward the accompanying opinion upon the points therein referred to.

I return the original enclosures.

OPINION.

IN order to give the magistrate jurisdiction, under Act No. XI. of 1860, there must be proved an agreement to cultivate indigo plant during the present season, and an advance in cash upon that agreement. But I am of opinion that it is immaterial for the purpose of giving jurisdiction, when the agreement was entered into; or whether it is one applicable to the present season only, or to several seasons; or whether it is proposed to establish it by a written instrument, expressly extending to the cultivation of the present season, or by a written instrument expressly extending to a past season only, coupled with proof of a renewal of such agreement, on the same or varied terms, for the present season, or by purely oral testimony. And so as to the advances: I think that for the purpose of giving jurisdiction, it is immaterial when the advance was made; or whether it was part of the original agreement that it should be made or not, provided the cash was paid upon the footing of, and with reference to, an agreement (written or verbal, express or to be implied from the acts of the parties, or the usual custom in the district, or all the circumstances of the case) that plant should be cultivated during the present season.

2. The advances referred to in the accompanying papers may apparently be ranged under three heads:—

1st. Advances made expressly for the present season.

As to these, no question can arise, as they clearly bring the case within the jurisdiction of the magistrate.

2d. Advances made during a previous season, but upon entering into an agreement to cultivate, extending to the present season, and made generally in respect of the entire agreement, or expressly in respect of certain seasons, including the present one.

Here also the magistrate will have jurisdiction, and his jurisdiction will not be taken away by the circumstance that the advances thus made generally upon the agreement have just been worked out by the ryot, so as to leave him nothing in hand applicable to the present season after paying himself in full for the last season.

3d. Advances made during a previous season, but after the agreement was entered into, and not made in respect of the agreement generally, or of the cultivation of the present season, but expressly on account of the cultivation of the season in which they were made.

Here, unless a fresh advance has been made for this season, there will be no jurisdiction, even though the advance for the prior seasons have not been worked out and a balance remains in the ryot's hand.

3. It is of course impossible to lay down any rule beforehand which shall be exactly applicable to the great variety of cases that may arise under the Act; but the principles above stated may, I think, be taken as the tests by which the magistrate should ascertain whether a case does or not fall within the Act; and the following illustrations may further serve to show how they may be applied:—

Case 1.—An agreement is entered into in 1859 to cultivate indigo for two seasons, viz. 1859 and 1860; a cash advance is paid at the time, generally on account of the entire agreement. Whether such cash advance has been worked off in the season 1859 or not, the magistrate has jurisdiction.

Case 2.—Upon a similar agreement, no cash is paid at the time, but a month afterwards the ryot asks for and receives an advance specifically for the season

1859, without any reference to any subsequent season. Whether such advance has been worked off or not, the magistrate has no jurisdiction unless some further advance has been made.

Case 3.—Upon a similar agreement, no cash has been paid at the time; but a month afterwards the ryot asks for and receives an advance, generally for the purposes of cultivating under the agreement, or specifically for the season of 1859, but with a promise, though a verbal one, that if any balance remains over the surplus shall be applied to the season 1860. Whether the advance of 1859 has been worked out or not, the magistrate will have jurisdiction.

Case 4.—A ryot takes advance in a former year to cultivate indigo without fixing any specific limit to the number of years for which the agreement is to hold. He afterwards expressly, though verbally, agrees to cultivate for the present season, but receives no further cash advance.

This is the second case put by Mr. Herschel in his letter of 13th instant.

Here the magistrate will primâ facie have no jurisdiction, even though the advance for the first year has not been worked out; for primâ facie an agreement to cultivate must be deemed to be for the current season only. But if the plaintiff can show that by the custom of the district, or other circumstances, an agreement to cultivate does really extend to a certain number of years, which would include the present one, the case must be determined according to the character of the advances, as in Cases 1 and 2.

Case 5.—In the case put by Mr. Beaufort of a ryot contracting to cultivate 10 biggahs with indigo for 10 years on one advance of 20 rupees, which had not been renewed, the liability of the ryot ought not to depend, as Mr. Beaufort suggests, upon the planter being able to show that the ryot had received corresponding benefits some other way, supposing there to be a legal consideration to support the agreement, as an advance, however small, will be, and supposing the terms not to be so one-sided as to lead to the inference of fraud or intimidation (in which case the complaint will be dismissed under Section 2), the case must turn upon the same question as the other cases, 1, 2, and 3; viz. whether there was an advance upon the agreement for the present season. If the advance was general, or was by an express agreement made applicable to the present season, the magistrate would have jurisdiction in the case; whereas, if the advance was made subsequently to the agreement, and was specially limited to the agreement to cultivate for the first year, or any year before the present one, he would not have such jurisdiction.

I quite concur in the remarks made in Mr. Herschel's letter of the 13th instant, paragraphs 6 to 10, upon this part of Mr. Beaufort's letter, paragraph 3.

Case 6.—An advance is proved to have been made in cash specially for the cultivation of a former season.

The planter makes no fresh advance for the present season, but makes a remission of an old debt, or an allowance of rents in accounts in lieu of a cash advance to the present season.

Assuming the past advance not to be applicable to the present season, the subsequent remission, allowance in accounts, or set off, will not constitute a cash advance so as to give jurisdiction under the Act.

4. With respect to Mr. Herschel's memorandum, I think that in his first paragraph * (1), the restriction as to the agreement being for a specified and limited number of years is too strict, and should be omitted; and that in paragraph 2, after the words "a ryot having received cash advance last year without having fixed any term to the continuance of the contract," the words "or expressly or impliedly agreed with reference to such advance to cultivate this year" † (2), should be inserted.

In

* (1) I hold that the terms of the law admit of a magistrate's taking up a case under the Indigo Bill, no matter in what year the cash advance was made, provided the agreement included the present season.

† (2) I hold that a ryot, having received cash advance last year without having fixed any term to the continuance of the contract [or expressly or impliedly agreed with reference to such advance to cultivate this year], cannot be ordered to sow this year, unless by the receipt of a second cash advance this season he has confirmed and continued the contract.

In Mr. Molony's memorandum, paragraph 2, I think that after the words * (3), "I am also of opinion that it will apply to cases in which," the words "the evidence shows the agreement was intended to extend to the present season, though no term is specified," should be inserted.

5. I quite agree with Mr. Beaufort in his remarks in paragraphs 2 and 4 of his letter, upon the second point touched in Mr. Herschel's and Mr. Molony's memorandums.

6. In the second illustration given in Mr. Grote's proposed circular,† I do not think that the question raised should be said to be beyond the jurisdiction of the Special Court. I think that in such a case the question, being doubtful, would be fully within the jurisdiction of the magistrate, and would be the question which the magistrate ought to try. If satisfied, on the whole evidence, that the ryot is right in saying that he never agreed to be bound beyond the year, the magistrate will of course dismiss the case; but if satisfied that the agreement, though verbal, did extend to the present year, the magistrate should decide the case according to the nature of the evidence, upon the same principles as Cases 1, 2, and 3.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 98 Ct., dated the 16th instant, the original enclosures of which are herewith returned, I am directed by the Lieutenant Governor to forward to you for distribution amongst the officers of your division empowered to carry out the provisions of the Act to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts, 25 copies of an opinion by the Advocate General on certain points connected with the working of that law.

— No. 21. —

From A. Forbes, Esq., Officiating Secretary to the Indigo Planters' Association, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 2, Old Post Office-street, March 1860.

Sir,

A REPORT has appeared in the "Englishman" of this morning that the Hon. Mr. Ashley Eden is about to be re-appointed magistrate of Baraset, and another report is in circulation that that gentleman is about to be posted to Moorshedabad.

2. The ryots of both these districts have manifested a very bad spirit with regard to indigo cultivation, which prevails largely there.

3. It

* (3) I am also of opinion that it will apply to cases in which [the evidence shows the agreement was intended to extend to the present season, though] no term is specified where there may have originally been a cash advance, not paid off, and where the ryots may have by any act admitted that the agreement is still in force, even though no fresh cash advance may have been made to him this season.

† (B) In another case the plaintiff files an agreement which contains no specific term, and leaves the question doubtful as to whether it was intended to bind the ryot beyond the year in which it was entered into, and in which the advance was made. Defendant admits that he received advance on it, and that he is in balance to the Factory, but denies that it binds him for this year. (The question raised here is beyond the jurisdiction of the Special Court).

3. It is believed that the Government of Bengal is doing its utmost to suppress the agitation in these districts, and I have the honour to observe that, in the opinion of the Central Committee of the Association, the appointment of Mr. Eden to any indigo district will be attended with the worst consequences, as that gentleman has identified himself in every way, both publicly and privately, with opposition to indigo cultivation.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Secretary to the Indigo Planters' Association (No. 1115), dated 23d March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 22d instant, bringing to notice two contradictory reports regarding the appointment of Mr. Eden.

In reply, I am desired to state for the information of the Association, that it so happens that before the receipt of your letter Mr. Eden had been appointed to Cuttack, and another gentleman to Moorshedabad. This makes it unnecessary to say more in reply to your communication than that the Lieutenant Governor is bound to affirm that to whatever office Mr. Eden might be appointed, the Lieutenant Governor does not entertain a doubt that Mr. Eden would act with perfect fairness between all men and all classes.

PETITION from the Inhabitants in the Districts of Nuddea and Jessore to the Honourable J. P. Grant, Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Ryots of sundry villages herein below-named, in the districts of Nuddea and Jessore—

Respectfully sheweth,

THAT your petitioners being sorely oppressed by the proceedings of Mr. George Meares and sundry other persons, carrying on the manufacture of indigo in the above-named districts, respectfully appeal to your Honor for protection.

2. That your petitioners, finding the cultivation of the indigo plant very unprofitable, in fact, ruinously unprofitable to them, have refused to enter into contracts to cultivate the plant, and therefore the manufacturers have in various ways proceeded to oppress them, with a view to force them to enter into such contracts.

3. That your petitioners having petitioned the joint magistrate of Zillah Jessore, Mr. Skinner, the latter functionary told them that they must sow indigo seed, and in order to coerce them into a compliance with his orders, ordered 49 of their fellow villagers into confinement for short periods on the pretence that they had been guilty of contempt of court.

4. That these proceedings of the joint magistrate of Jessore have thrown your petitioners into consternation, and they know not how to avail themselves of the benefit of your Honor's late proclamation when they find the district authorities so openly inclined to set its provisions at naught.

5. That the joint magistrate is a frequent visitor at the factories of Mr. George Meares, and issues many of his orders from there.

6. That Mr. George Meares has thus opportunities to operate upon the convictions of the magistrate in a manner prejudicial to the interests of justice and prejudicial to your petitioners.

7. That Mr. George Meares has, as your petitioners understand, advanced sundry charges against them in a letter or report addressed to your Honor.

These charges, your petitioners beg leave distinctly to state, are utterly groundless; your petitioners have not been guilty of any the slightest breach of the peace, their sole aim being to avoid being made to enter into contracts which are likely to prove heavy losses to them.

8. Wherefore, your petitioners pray that your Honor will be pleased to warn Mr. Skinner against acting otherwise than in the spirit of your Honor's proclamation, and generally in a fair and impartial spirit:

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

(No. 1289.)

EXTRACT from the Proceedings of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal in the Judicial Department, under date the 28th of March 1860.

READ a petition from Ushruff Mundul, Mochee Mundul, Obedul Mundul and others, ryots of certain villages in the districts of Nuddea and Jessore, complaining against the proceedings of Mr. George Meares and other persons engaged in the cultivation and manufacture of indigo.

The petitioners represent that having refused, on account of the unprofitableness of the business, to enter into contracts to cultivate indigo, they have been in various ways oppressed by Mr. Meares and other indigo planters, with a view to force them to enter into such contracts against their will; and that, having laid their grievances before the officiating joint magistrate of Jessore, Mr. C. B. Skinner, they have not only failed to obtain any redress from that officer, but that they have been told by him "that they must sow indigo," and that 49 of their fellow villagers have been imprisoned by him, for the ostensible offence of contempt of court, but really in order to coerce them into compliance with the orders passed by him in favour of the planters. They assert also that between the officiating joint magistrate and Mr. Meares a degree of intimacy exists which is extremely prejudicial to the interests of justice in any case in which Mr. Meares may be a party.

Ordered, that the petitioners be informed that if it is really true that any one has oppressed them with a view to force them to enter into contracts, they have only to complain to the magistrate, bringing forward evidence in support of their allegations, or to file actions against the wrong-doer in the moonsiff's court, or simultaneously to adopt both courses. But that if they commit any riot or breach of the peace, they will surely be punished.

As regards the injustice which the petitioners have imputed to the officiating joint magistrate in dealing with their case, they are informed that Mr. Skinner has been called upon to submit a report upon the subject for the Lieutenant-Governor's consideration.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1290), dated the 28th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you the accompanying copy of a petition presented by Ushruff Mundul and other ryots of certain villages in the district of Nuddea and Jessore, complaining of the oppression practised upon them by Mr. Meares and other indigo planters, and against the proceedings of Mr. C. B. Skinner, the officiating joint magistrate of Jessore,

2. The petitioners have been informed that if it is really true that any one has oppressed them with a view to force them to enter into contracts, they have only to complain to the magistrate, bringing forward evidence in support of their allegations, or to file actions against the wrong-doer in the moonsiff's court, or simultaneously to adopt both courses. And they have, at the same time, been warned that if they commit any riot or breach of the peace, they will surely be punished.

3. The Lieutenant Governor desires that you will direct the magistrate to take all possible pains to impress the same thing on these petitioners, and on all other ryots who may make general complaints of oppression in order to induce them to contract to grow indigo.

4. It is beyond all necessary to be extremely careful in the execution of the new law, and in all proceedings connected with indigo cultivation, not to confound ryots who have not contracted and taken cash advances for the current season with those who have; and when the question of fact is raised, to spare no pains, in the truest spirit of equity between both parties, to get at the real truth. You are desired studiously to impress this principle on all the magistrates subordinate to you.

5. With reference to the petitioners' complaints against the Officiating Joint Magistrate of Jessore, you will be so good as to call upon Mr. Skinner to submit, through you, an explanation of the matter alleged regarding him.

(No. 1291.)

Copy of paras. 2 to 4, forwarded to the Commissioner of Rajahshye, for his information.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 94 Ct.), dated Allipore, the 14th April 1860.

Sir,

On receiving your letter (No. 1290), dated 28th ultimo, with enclosure, No. 5, dated 29th ultimo, I issued the annexed orders to the magistrates of Nuddea, Jessore, and Barraset, and called for the explanation required from Mr. Skinner.

2. This explanation* I now beg to lay before his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, together with copy of Mr. Molony's letter, forwarding it. The case of the 49 men alluded to in the petition as having been imprisoned by Mr. Skinner is, as I suspected when I read the passage, that of rescue reported to Government on the 23d ultimo.

* In original.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Magistrates of Jessore, Nuddea, and Barraset (No. 5 Circular), dated Allipore, the 29th March 1860.

Sir,

THE following extract from Government Order (No. 1290), dated 28th instant, on a petition presented to the Lieutenant Governor by Achraf Mundul and others, ryots of certain villages in Nuddea and Jessore, are appended for your guidance. The purport of the petition was to complain generally of the oppressions practised on the petitioners by Mr. Meares and other planters, and of the proceedings of Mr. Skinner. Paras. 2, 3, and 4.

2. You are requested further to warn villagers that clamorous and disorderly gatherings under the pretext for petitioning will not be allowed. Everything which they may have to urge will be patiently listened to, but they will be likely to urge far more effectually by entrusting their petition to a few than by presenting it in a crowd.

3. Mr. Skinner is required by his Honor the Lieutenant Governor to furnish an explanation of his proceedings complained of in the Petition, which is herewith forwarded to you for communication to that gentleman.

To Jessore only-

From E. W. Moloney, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Jessore, to the Commissioner of Circuit Nuddea Division, Kishnaghur (No. 90), dated Camp, Manickdee, the 3d April 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter (No. 5), dated the 29th ultimo, forwarding a petition from certain ryots, and calling for an explanation of Mr. Skinner's conduct complained of, I have the honour to forward Mr. Skinner's explanation. The falsity of the allegations in the 7th paragraph, that they are not under contracts to sow indigo, is apparent; many of the villagers having since acknowledged their contracts and their willingness to sow, alleging as a reason of their previous denials the intimidation of villagers combined to suppress indigo cultivation, and claiming police protection from the above villagers to enable them to carry out their engagements. The course adopted by Mr. Skinner to suppress the riotous spirit that was gaining ground has been perfectly successful, and the people in this neighbourhood, and indeed all along the Jessore border, I think, understand the necessity of urging any complaints they may have in an orderly and regular manner.

From C. B. Skinner, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Jessore, to the Officiating Magistrate of Jessore (No. 69), dated Camp Manickdee, the 3d April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to furnish the following explanation, as called for in Government letter (No. 1290), dated the 28th ultimo, on petition of Asruff Moudul and others:—

1st. Petitioners' abodes are not specified; I cannot therefore state their individual grievances as set forth in clauses 1 and 2; nor are the names known to me.

Clause 3 is false. The 49 men referred to are those, the attempt to release whom has been reported officially. I did not pass sentence on any, but made over the case (viz. of intent to break the peace) to Mr. Molony, magistrate of Jessore for decision. I have not attempted in any way to intimidate any persons into sowing indigo; I have not acted contrary to the provisions of the notification referred to in paras. 4 and 8, which was a fac simile of my own address to the ryots, delivered previously to its receipt; all my proceedings have been duly reported to the Commissioner.

I have not issued a single order from any place, save my tent and Baloopole Thannah, since I came out to these parts. The imputations cast on me in clauses 5 and 6, are false, and without foundation.

Clause 7 does not concern me.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1820), dated the 19th April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter (No. 94), dated the 14th instant, submitting an explanation from Mr. C. B. Skinner, officiating joint magistrate of Jessore, in regard to the allegations contained in a petition from the inhabitants of certain villages in Jessore, that Mr. Skinner, when applied to, did not afford them redress from the oppressions of the indigo planters, and that he used coercive measures to force them to sow indigo.

In reply, I am desired to state that the Lieutenant Governor considers Mr. Skinner's explanation to be quite satisfactory.

— No. 23. —

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 14), dated Kishnaghur, the 31st March 1860.

Sir,

THE enclosed original petition from Mr. J. White, of Bansbariah, has drawn my attention to the several letters signed L. W. Hutchinson, in the accompanying issues of the "Bengal Hurkaru."

2. Mr. Hutchinson is moonsiff of Hanskhalle, and in that capacity has to decide on questions at issue between the planters and their ryots. There is not apparently anything in these letters which is objectionable or unreasonable, but it is unbecoming for the bench to enter into controversy in the public papers, and I recommended that Mr. Hutchinson be transferred to another chowkee.

3. Mr. White, it seems, complained some time ago to the judge that the moonsiff was advising the ryots, and interfering with the working of his factory, but he was not, on being called on for proof, able to adduce anything sufficiently specific. The letters to the papers since published, show at all events that the moonsiff has strong opinions on the indigo question.

From Mr. John White, of Bansbariah, to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of Nuddea &c., Kishnaghur, dated the 31st March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to bring to your notice with regret, the very reprehensible manner in which Mr. Hutchinson, the moonsiff of Hanskhally, is conducting himself towards my Hanskhally factory, by continually instigating and backing the ryots of Govindapore, (a village in the immediate neighbourhood of my Hanskhally factory) to rebel against the factory: this he has most successfully done, the ryots being in open insurrection, assaulting any of my factory servants who approach the village. I can only attribute this feeling of animosity to my having refused Mr. Hutchinson permission to live in my house at Hanskhally, on more than one occasion, after which he applied to my son, who was occupying the house there, and was also politely refused by him.

Mr. Hutchinson commenced the erection of a cutcherry in the midst of the Hanskhally Bazaar, when the Mahajans in a body protested and begged my son to try and have the site removed to near the thannah, and on my son's application to Mr. Skinner, the judge, an order was obtained to this effect. Ever since the circumstances above mentioned, Mr. Hutchinson has invariably shown the greatest animosity to my son, and towards the Hanskhally factory, by encouraging the ryots of Govindapore to oppose my factory servants in collecting my rents and in sowing indigo.

I had occasion to discharge the gomashtha of my Hanskhally factory for misconduct. Mr. Hutchinson took this man into his confidence, and in conjunction with him tampered with the ryots to induce them to oppose the factory.

Mr. Hutchinson is now living in this gomashtha's house, which is just outside the factory compound.

In further proof of Mr. Hutchinson's hostility to indigo planters in general, I have the honour to produce six numbers of the "Bengal Hurkaru" newspaper, in which he expresses his opinion openly as opposed to indigo planters, thus rendering himself unfit to judge impartially between them and the ryots. Under these circumstances, I trust you will see the justice of removing Mr. Hutchinson from the neighbourhood of Hanskhally.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1535), dated 5th April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 14, dated the 31st ultimo, with enclosures, bringing to notice a complaint of Mr. White, of Bansbarriah, against Mr. Hutchinson, the moonsiff of Hanskhalee, and recommending the transfer of the latter to some other station, on the ground that being a judicial officer it was unbecoming on his part to have entered into a controversy in the newspapers on the indigo question.

There is nothing objectionable, as you justly remark, in the published writings of Mr. Hutchinson, for which it is proposed to transfer him to some other moonsiffship; and at the present time it is necessary to be very careful in avoiding all measures which would tend unnecessarily to give any color of partizanship, on either side, to the proceedings of Government in relation to the indigo question.

Mr. John White, at whose instance you move the Government to transfer Mr. Hutchinson, is, the Lieutenant Governor believes, the owner of the factory which, under the management of Mr. White, junior, has been brought more than once lately unfavourably to the notice of Government, and of the district criminal court. Mr. John White commences his present application by charging Mr. Hutchinson with misconduct, and it seems that he had made the same charge before, but was able to bring no evidence in support of it. As he has no more evidence now, and as there seems no reason to suspect Mr. Hutchinson of any misconduct, whilst there is strong ground to be dissatisfied with the late management of the factory, the Lieutenant Governor cannot consent, on this complaint, to transfer Mr. Hutchinson.

But you may convey in an informal manner to Mr. Hutchinson the Lieutenant Governor's advice not to write any more in the newspapers on the indigo question whilst he remains in the office of moonsiff of Hanskhalee; as his doing so, in the present excited state of feeling on that subject, may give an opportunity to those who take a view of that question opposite to his, with more or less of plausibility, to impute to him prejudices likely to warp his judgment, in a certain class of cases that may come judicially before him.

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea, (No. 821), dated the 6th March 1860

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to call your attention to a letter in the "Englishman" newspaper of the 27th ultimo, signed "Walter Ken Waller, Surgeon E. B. Railway," bringing to notice certain violent proceedings in the Nuddea District, and to state that as the writer alleges certain occurrences to have taken place, his evidence should be taken, and such subsequent proceedings instituted as may be necessary in the case, unless the matters referred to by the writer have been previously taken up by the magistrate.

To the Editor of the "Englishman."

Sir,

Without entering into the questions at issue between the Nuddea indigo planters and their ryots, so diligently fomented by a portion of the Calcutta weekly press, I think it a duty, and that I may serve the public cause, by informing you of some recent occurrences, the evident consequence of the acts of those persons who see in every planter a demon, and in every ryot an angel.

I have been five months in this district, and have had ample opportunity of forming opinions as to the truth of such ideas, and need scarcely say I differ widely with the originators of them.

You are aware how the disinclination on the part of the ryots to sow indigo has spread throughout this district—a refusal disastrous probably in its effects, but to which per se small objection can be taken, if we allow others the same freedom of thought, and action

we

we claim for ourselves. But passive resistance to the fulfilment of contracts appears to have ceased, and the following instances will show the animus now commencing to pervade this part of the country.

The police are much to blame, as the following will show :—

On the morning of Sunday last, the 19th instant, the Darogah of — with several burkundauzes, and from 60 to 70 laltials and spearmen, from Jorumpore village, proceeded to the adjoining village and factory of Chandpore, with the ostensible intention of searching for armed men in the factory employ. None were found; but that the visit might not be profitless, two poor men engaged at the time in gathering date-juice were beaten severely, one of them being also wounded in the calf by a spear; a third man, chowkeedar of an adjacent village, was also assaulted, and the three were then induced by threats or bribes to prefer complaints against the servants of the Chandpore factory as having attacked and ill-treated them, although, as I have said, the assault was committed on them all by the Darogah's own party, and probably under his own eye. This Darogah is a notorious drunkard, as I could easily prove to you were not proceedings already commenced against him in another quarter.

Again, this morning, news has been received that the bungalow at Khajoorah factory (three miles from Chandpore), together with the chowkeedar's house, had been partially destroyed by an incendiary fire. The two buildings being at least a quarter of a mile apart, it is not likely that both should have ignited spontaneously or accidentally. Khajoorah bungalow is not inhabited except on occasions of business, and during the manufacturing season, and so no risk of loss of life was incurred; but if matters do not improve we may expect those factories which are inhabited to become the objects of attack, a prospect of anything but a pleasing character, and one which probably the ryot's soi disant friends and unsolicited counsellors had not anticipated.

If Government would give the planters fair play, instead of condemning them on ex parte statements, if they would but disclaim the diligently circulated rumour that they intend to discourage the growth of indigo, if they would replace the present tedious process for non-fulfilment of contract in a civil court by a cheap summary process in a magistrate's, if they would but assist in showing that the interests of planters and ryots are not antagonistic, we might look forward to a future less gloomy than that which I, for my part, fear is approaching, to both parties concerned.

I am, &c.

Kishnaghur District, 23 February 1860.

Walter Ken Waller,
Surgeon, Eastern Bengal Railway.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal; (No. 81 Ct.), dated Allipore, 22d March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, (No. 821), dated the 6th instant, drawing my attention to a letter in the "Englishman" newspaper of the 27th ultimo, signed Walter Ken Waller, I beg to submit herewith copy of a letter from the officiating magistrate of Nuddea, (No. 83), dated the 13th instant, bearing on the subject.

From W. J. Herschel, Esq., Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Nuddea Division; (No. 83), dated Kishnaghur, 13 March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your memorandum, (No. 90 Ct.), dated the 9th instant, I have the honour to state that all the allegations mentioned by Dr. Waller, in the "Englishman" newspaper, are under investigation.

The charge of drunkenness against the Darogah (alluded to also in Mr. Meares' letter to Government) has been disposed of. The Darogah has been acquitted of the charge, which appears to have originated in the natural roughness of his manner.

I may mention that the stories current of two factories having been burnt by the ryots in this district are half false and partly exaggerated.

The wounding case is under inquiry by Mr. Maclean, and the Khajoorah's arson case also. Immediately on the facts being ascertained, you shall be informed of them.

P. S. —Signed in camp, 16th March. To-morrow's weekly report will contain fuller particulars. The Khajoorah case is open to doubts. The fact is that the thatched verandah of a small out-factory at Khajoorah has been burnt down; the door-posts have also been destroyed by the flames, and a chair and some of the furniture injured. Mr. Maclean reports against its having been an act of incendiarism, but my own opinion inclines the other way. There is absolutely no direct evidence, and the factory people have taken no steps whatever in the matter.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal; (No. 62 Ct.), dated the 6th March 1860.

Sir,

In case his Honor the Lieutenant Governor may have been led by the statements lately made in the newspapers, to apprehend that serious disturbances may be expected in the Nuddea district, I beg to lay before him, in original, the first of a series of weekly reports which I have for the present called for from the magistrate.

2. At my suggestion, Mr. Herschel has gone to Goberdangah, and I intend in a day or two to proceed to the Gyeghattah Dak bungalow to have an interview with him. Meanwhile, I have instructed him to the purport of the enclosed letter, on the receipt of a very urgent appeal from Mr. Meares of the Lokenathpore concern. As the latter complained of the conduct of the Joyrampore ryots, who had petitioned Government, and described them as misleading and instigating other villagers who had already taken their advances, I thought it right to draw the magistrate's attention to his Honor's orders on the petition in question, received only yesterday, and more especially to that passage in it which should correct the erroneous impression said to prevail among the people that Government is opposed to the cultivation of indigo.

3. I do not myself apprehend that the ryots will generally be aggressive; but from all accounts there is a strong and nearly unanimous indisposition on their part to sow indigo, and this is not confined to those ryots who have declined to take advances. This is of course a subject of much alarm to the planters who have advanced, and attempts may be made to avoid impending ruin or heavy losses by sowing for themselves. In this case there may be some serious affrays. The first fall of rain will put an end to the present state of suspense.

4. The return of the original enclosure is requested when no longer required.

FIRST WEEKLY REPORT on the state of the Indigo Districts in Nuddea, from W. J. Herschel, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea, for the Week ending 3d March 1860.

1. THIS being the first report, I must revert to the date of my taking charge, on the 20th February. The principal signs of excitement were then in the Southern Thannahs, where the ryots and the Bengal Indigo Company were in dispute.

2. Previous to that date, Mr. Campbell, an assistant of Mr. Larmour's (the manager of the company), had gone on the 5th January to measure some fields, but was driven off by the ryots, his ameen and gomastah and khalasees being taken prisoners, and subsequently released the same day. No personal injury was done to anyone. In this case, Syam Chunder Pal Chowdhery, the zemindar, is charged with the instigation of the attack.

3. On the 17th of January, Mr. Hyde, an assistant in the same concern, going to test measurements, had two clods thrown at him by the ryots. He was not hurt.

4. On the 3d of February, Mr. Campbell again went to measure lands in another village in the same neighbourhood, and under the same zemindar, where he was assaulted, knocked off his horse, and severely beaten by hired lattials. In none of these cases did the ryots make any complaint.

5. On the 17th of February, Mr. Hyde, going again to measure in another village, was prevented by the ryots, and his ameen and khalasee were seized in his presence, and carried off to the Thannah, with a petition, saying that Mr. Hyde had come with lattials, who had been driven off by themselves with loss of the two prisoners.

6. On the 20th of February, the ryots of Nowhattah, in which Mr. Campbell had been first resisted, sent a lattial into the Thannah, as having been captured in an attempt (successfully resisted) to carry off the village cattle. The witnesses to this case broke down completely, but no counter complaint was lodged.

7. With

7. With these exceptions no breach of the peace has occurred in Goburdangah Thannah, but several petitions have been put in by the ryots protesting their aversion to cultivate indigo.

8. Saursha Thannah has all along been quiet.

9. So has Asaroo (Bagdah) Thannah.

10. The Santipoor sub-division is quiet, there being very few planters in it.

11. In Hanskally the feelings of both parties are very warm, and numerous petitions are presented, but no breach of the peace worth mentioning has occurred since the first serious affray at Gobindpoor (Mr. White's factory of bansberiah).

12. In Hadra I expect any moment to hear of an affray; but the only tangible complaint preferred to myself has been one of kidnapping, so clearly resting on false witnesses that I had no hesitation in dropping the search for the missing man and dismissing the case.

13. A complaint, however, was preferred in December last, to the effect that six men of the village of Sounpookheriah had been seized on the 26th of that month by a party of lattials dispatched from the Hadra factory. Search for them failed, and it was only by an accident that they were all released on the 23d February. Their depositions wear an appearance of truth, which the unanimous alibi pleaded by all the defendants supports. They relate that they were marched about to almost every factory in Mr. Hill's concern. They do not, however, charge anyone except the lattials originally employed to seize. They say they never saw anyone but their guards, and never saw daylight. The case is not absolutely free from doubt; it is however impossible but that, if true, it will be perfectly clear at last.

14. About the middle of January information was given that two men of Pathurghattah had been carried off on the market day. They were searched for without effect, but yesterday they appeared at the Thannah Hadra, saying they had been released in the night. This case is by no means proved yet; but as no less than five men have been missing from this village for some weeks, I report it, particularly as the six men mentioned in the previous case say they met these two in confinement. At the same time, with these two men a third (also of Pathurghatta) appeared at the Thannah, and stated that he had been imprisoned since the 24th Agrun (early in December), and had been released at the same time as the two just mentioned. No complaint had been lodged of this before, the plaintiff saying he had no friends to report it. This man also was seen by the Sounpookheriah men while in detention.

15. In the end of October, Jamirat, a man of Pathurghatta, complained that he and two others had been carried off by the Dewan of Hadra factory (Mr. Forlong's), and that, after a few days imprisonment in different factories, he escaped while being sent from one to another. His companions have not yet been found. They were both, however, seen at one of the factories where the Sounpookheriah men were confined.

16. In the Damoorhoodah Sub-division there had been no outbreak of excitement till the 20th, on which day a slight affray took place at Chandpore (Mr. Chardon's factory, in Mr. Meares' Lokenathpore concern), in which a ryot, Madaree Sheik was wounded by a Surkee in the calf of the leg (a bad wound, but not dangerous).

17. A petition has been put in by a Chowkeedar of Mr. Chardon's factory to say that an attempt has been made to burn it down; but as this was several days ago, and no complaint was made at the Thannah, and no attempt has been made to prove the case, I do not altogether trust the complaint. The Darogah has made no report of it. I expect a report from personal investigation of Mr. Maclean in a day or two.

18. Very numerous petitions have been presented by the ryots, and proportionately by the planters in that neighbourhood; the former of the usual kind, objecting to take advances, and stating their apprehensions of force being used; the latter accusing different parties of instigating the ryots.

19. The above statements contain every actual breach of the peace that has occurred worth reporting during the last few months. They do not represent the heat of the feeling that exists, and I must say I think it rather creditable to the police under my predecessors that no more serious riot has taken place. Kidnapping, however, is a crime which no police can prevent, and none but a detective police can punish, and in the latter we are certainly deficient.

20. As to the measures adopted, besides the ordinary penal remedies, I may report that Mr. Maclean (an officer on whom, from what I have seen, I have considerable reliance), has gone out to Damoorhoodah, where the best Darogah, Gresh Chunder Bose, of the Kutwally, has also been sent, and where the police has been reinforced from other Thannahs, and that I am about to leave to-morrow myself for Goburdangah for a short visit, where I will make the changes recommended by yourself.

21. These reports will be continued weekly while necessary.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division; (No. —), dated Fort William, the 17th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, (No. 62 Ct.), dated the 6th instant, submitting the magistrate of Nuddea's first weekly report upon the present disturbed state of affairs in that district, and in reply to state, that the Lieutenant Governor approves of the measures adopted by yourself and by the local officers, at your suggestion, with a view to allay the prevailing excitement.

2. His Honor feels assured that Mr. Herschel will spare no exertions to get at the truth, as to the numerous cases of complaint for false imprisonment alluded to in the 12th and three following paragraphs of his report.

3. The original enclosure of your letter is returned. The letter of instructions to Mr. Herschel, referred to in your second paragraph, did not accompany your communication under acknowledgment.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal; (No. 70 Ct.), dated the 12th March 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter of the 6th instant, (No. 62 Ct.), I have the honour to lay before his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, the original second Weekly Report on the state of the Indigo Districts in Zillah Nuddea, and to request the favour of your returning the same when no longer required.

I have been for two days with Mr. Herschel, who is now going to Damoorhoodah. His transfer of some of the darogahs has been judicious. As he has personally opened the Bongong Sub-division, I have approved of his retaining charge of it until relieved; and should Government see no objection to the measure, I propose that Mr. McNeil be temporarily appointed to it. It is of importance that a good officer stays here for the next few weeks.

SECOND WEEKLY REPORT on the state of the Indigo Districts in Nuddea, from W. J. Herschel, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea, for the Week ending 10th March 1860.

No breaches of the peace have occurred up to date in the south of the district, nor up to Friday evening in the north. Mr. Maclean reports from Damoorhoodah that the excitement is no less, though both parties are more cautious for his presence. He does not anticipate anything like a show of violence on the part of the ryots on their own motion; and, as the planters seem sensible of the danger of provoking it, I am in hopes that peace at all events will be preserved.

The ryots, however, in that district seem determined not to sow indigo in several villages, the old impression that Government wishes to stop planting being still prevalent.

I have been myself to the Bongong Sub-division to ascertain the temper of the ryots in the south of the zillah.

In Mr. Larmour's own estates (where he holds zemindaree rights) the ryots are prepared to sow as usual, but they are not to be considered as reliable in this respect. The open determination of their fellows on the estates of neighbouring Zemindars to whom Mr. Larmour has made advances, to refuse all further connexion with the factory, has had an effect on them which may still induce them to break their contracts. At present, however, cultivation is going on quietly. It is on the estates of native Zemindars that the ryots are showing the worst signs, particularly on that of Syam Chunder, Chowdhery. The assaults on Mr. Larmour's assistants (Messrs. Campbell and Hyde) reported last week as having occurred some time ago, were all committed by these ryots, and I am glad to say that on no other estate has any personal violence been offered to Europeans.

The whole of these cases have been taken up, and (with one exception, which will come on for decision on Tuesday next) have been disposed of during the week. Convictions have been obtained in all.

The most serious one, in which Mr. Campbell stated that he had been knocked off his horse, and beaten till he was insensible, has to a certain extent proved a mistake. Mr. Campbell had just been measuring some lands, which the ryots assert he had no right to do. The villagers gathered together; one or two men seized his horse's bridle; two men from the crowd struck him with their latties, one on the shoulder and the other more slightly on the back. The horse reared and fell, and Mr. Campbell must have been stunned by the fall. It is quite clear, from the absence of all other marks, that he was not struck after he fell. I am bound also to say, that the witnesses in this case had not been properly warned before being produced. Mr. Campbell's own statement of what occurred up to the moment of his fall was temperate and reliable, and one man has been convicted on it, and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. I regret much that no more of the defendants could be punished.

In none of the other cases was any very serious bodily harm done, and the sentences have been in proportion.

I mention this much, as the temper of the ryots here is supposed to be more violent than it really is. In all these cases their object seems to have been to show determination enough to prevent the planters from coming to the village again, but not to revenge supposed injuries. The difference appears to me material, and its record but just.

On the 7th I received at Bongong the reply of the Lieutenant Governor to the petition of the Lokenathpore ryots. I published here, and forwarded to Mr. Maclean for publication, the enclosed perwannah to the police, with extracts from the order.

The extracts appeared to be all that was of general importance in the order, and the perwannah will, I hope, be found to be in accordance with its spirit.

The order has already been beneficial. Some of the villagers, who had hitherto hesitated to act up to their agreements, have now expressed their willingness to do so, and one of the hostile Zemindars has sent conciliatory orders to his ryots; but on Syam Chunder's estates the ryots are as firm as before. They deny, indeed, that they have taken advances, but against this is the statement of Mr. Larmour's assistant, that he gave it to them with his own hand. This morning I learn that these ryots interpret the order as a prohibition to sow indigo. I am not sorry, therefore, that I have already told both parties that for further interpretation of the law they must look to the court alone.

I have seen enough already of the risks attending such proceedings as the public expression of opinion through the Mofussil Police on matters of private interest in dispute. Nothing, therefore, but the growing strength and consequences of the rumour which, arising from such a step, has gained ground among the ryots as to the hostility of Government to indigo planting would have induced me to counteract it by a second step, which must for a time embarrass my position with both parties still further than I found it to be on my arrival in the zillah by the first.

But the consequences had already become important. To the planters, indeed, they were vital, and they threatened to become serious to the public peace of the district on the first fall of rain, and that was already falling.

Under these circumstances the perwannah will, I hope, meet your approbation and that of the Government.

W. J. Herschel,

12 March 1860.

Officiating Magistrate.

P. S.—I have received, since writing the above, a note from Mr. Maclean, reporting a circumstance which, unless I can induce the planters to prove their disavowal of its origin, may, I much fear, complicate matters exceedingly in the Damoorhoodah Sub-division. A few nights ago, on the 7th and 8th, the village of Doodhpathley was fired, and 28 houses were burnt down. The circumstances leave little room for doubt that the act was one of incendiarism. From previous occurrences it is natural to attribute it to the agency of the Lokenathpore factory. This is the conclusion to which the ryots have at once come. Two men, of low standing indeed, attached to the factory, are named by the ryots. It is hardly credible that any Englishman can have given orders for such a deed, but it is not impossible that it may have been committed for the express purpose of inducing an explosion of feeling by third parties. I have written to Mr. Meares, suggesting either the offer of a high reward by the planters for the discovery of the offender, or, if possible, a subscription in favour of the sufferers. Unfortunately, the property destroyed is estimated at 5,000 rupees.

W. J. Herschel,

Officiating Magistrate.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division; (No. 1024), dated Fort William, the 19th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter (No. 70 Ct.), dated the 12th instant, enclosing in original Mr. Herschel's second weekly report on the state of the indigo districts in Zillah Nuddea, and in reply to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor approves of your proposal to appoint Mr. McNeil temporarily to the charge of Bongong Subdivision, which he has been directed to join with as little delay as possible.

2. The Lieutenant Governor desires to be furnished with copies of the orders passed on all the cases under trial, and which have been tried since Mr. Herschel took charge of the Subdivision, connected with disputes between the servants of indigo factories and ryots.

3. The original enclosure of your letter is herewith returned as requested, a copy being kept for record in this office.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 7); dated Kishnaghur, the 29th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH advertence to para. 2 of your letter (No. 1024) of the 19th instant, I have the honour to forward herewith, in original, the decisions of Mr. Herschel, officiating magistrate of Nuddea, in cases connected with disputes between the servants of indigo factories and ryots.

2. I request the favour of your returning the original enclosures when done with.

PROCEEDINGS.

George Hamilton Hyde, sworn before the officiating magistrate of Nuddea, 5th March 1860.—On the morning of the 17th of February I went to Foolsurra to measure certain indigo lands. I measured there for some time, and then went on to Panchpotha and commenced measuring there. Moteelal Roy came out, mounted on horseback, with some 80 men. They surrounded me. Four or five of them caught the horse by the bridle, and Moteelal coming up made a blow at me with his stick; it struck the horse on the back, and at the same time I gave the horse the spurs, and the others were shaken off, and I got off to Gyeghatta. As I went I was pelted by clods, one of which broke in my solah hat (hat produced, broken on the rim); I was hit in several places on the body, and my horse also, and I was obliged to ride hard for the factory. I have not dared to leave it since; I mean, not to visit the fields. I have been obliged to keep to the roads. The ameen and the kalashee were seized and taken to the pharee at Belta. I rode in to Kishnaghur next morning, to complain to the magistrate, and was instructed to put in my petition to the Darogah, as the case was being investigated by him.

Questioned by the Court.—Did any but the two men, your ameen and Khalashee, accompany you?—One more, the thikka khalashee. We were only four men altogether. I positively swear this.

Whose fields are those on which you went to measure?—The fields belonged to the ryots of Panchpotha; I don't know to which one in particular.

Then what did you go to do, not knowing whose field it was?—We make advances to the ryots of a particular village to sow indigo. The ameen and his khalashees go to the village after the advances are over, and, with the ryot, measure the land for which he has taken advance. I afterwards test the measurements, to see that the factory is fairly treated as well as the ryot. These lands had been advanced for and measured, with the ryot's consent, before I went. I took out the jarif chitta with me, which is a note-book compiled by the ameen, showing the name of the ryot and the extent of land which he has engaged to cultivate.

Had

Had you picked out any particular field for measurement in this case?—No; the assault was made before I had time to do it.

Could you recognize any one of the defendants?—I could recognize Moteelal Roy, but no others.

Do you charge any others?—No, I don't know them nor their names. The Darogah, in his inquiry, has found the riot proved against six or seven men, whose names I don't know, but I wish to prosecute them as well.

Bori Mohammed.—Defendant, present, asks no specific question.

Nasimooddeen.—The same.

Moharim.—Asks what mischief he has done to the Saheb, for which he is charged. It is explained him that he is charged as one of the riotous assembly which beat him and pelted him.

Kalachand Shekh Wit.—As above; recognises 3, Safarid Sirdar. 13, 12, 2, first seized the bridle; and 1, a servant of Syam Chunder Pal, came up on horseback, and taking a lattee from a lattial, &c.

Questioned by Defendant, Moharim.—Does not know whether Safarid, Jarif Sirdar, Izhar Mundul, and Jarif Mundul were in Kishnaghur or not that day; knows they were at the Saheb's horse's head that day.

Dabnath Bose.—As above; recognises 1, 3, 2, 12, 13, as seizing the bridle. Besides, as concerned in the row generally, 9, 10, 5, 7.

Sadhoo Khalashee.—1, 2, 12, 13, 3, seized the bridle. Besides these 11, 8, 2, 3, 13, 12.

6th March.

George Hyde, re-examined.—Recognises Moteelal, present, distinctly; and believes he recognises Izhar, but cannot be certain.

Debnath Basu.—Recognises 1, 2, 3, 12, 13. 1 struck at the Saheb with a stick, and the others seized his bridle.

Sadhoo, Khalashee.—Ditto, ditto.

Kalachand Shekh.—Ditto, ditto; has known them all for a long time.

26th March 1860.

Moteelal.—Defendant (6th March at Bongong), denies; says he has nothing to do with indigo. Why should he beat the Saheb? Calls witnesses to prove that "he did not beat."

Witnesses for Moteelal, Defendant.—In Phalgun on 5th or 6th; I went to buy rice at Moteelal's house; Soojjaddie Mundul came also. I bought the rice and went home. Moteelal fought with no one. It is half a mile from there to where the Saheb had the row.

Soojjaddie Mundul.—As above. Leaving Motee's house, I saw a row going on, and saw the Saheb with some ryots quarrelling. Saw the Saheb push Nasim; the ryots protested, and seized the servants of the Saheb.

DECISION.

Putting the two cases together, it is abundantly clear that Mr. Hyde went accompanied only by three measuring servants to measure certain lands, and was surrounded by a considerable body of ryots, who, led by Moteelal, Defendant, drove Mr. Hyde off with blows of sticks and clods, and seized two of the servants attending him, whom they carried off prisoners to the Thanna. The last witness's statement tends to show that some provocation was given for the assault by the plaintiff having pushed Nasim. But this statement is very different from that made by the witnesses for the counter-charge, and is evidently introduced only to throw in a doubt on the case. I consider that Mr. Hyde's statement is quite intact, and as the alibi is as usual worthless, and was not even urged at the time the defence was taken, I convict Motee of the crime charged; and considering that he was the first to strike a blow, which did not hit the plaintiff, that he had, according to his own statement, nothing to do with the dispute, and that it was in his power, and that of the mob, if they chose to order Mr. Hyde off, to have done so without resorting to violence, I sentence him to three months' imprisonment, and a fine of 50 rupees, in default of which he will be imprisoned for three months more; and for each period of imprisonment he will pay a fine of 10 rupees, or labour in default, till the fine be paid or the sentence expire.

W. J. Herschel,

26 March 1860.

Officiating Magistrate.

The remaining Defendants present, 'Izhar Mundal, Jariff Mundal, Jorif Sirdar, Safarid Sirdar, plead alibi at Kishnagurh on the day in question. But on referring to the petition, it appears to have been presented on the 18th, whereas the assault took place on the 17th February. The fact of the presentation of this petition makes me more inclined to believe the witnesses for the prosecution than before; and I convict the defendants of having joined in the riotous assault on the plaintiff.

As I find that the punishments inflicted at Bongong have had their due effect in preventing violence on a subsequent occasion, I will not punish these defendants so strictly. The seizure of the servants forms no part of the charge.

They are sentenced each to a fortnight's simple imprisonment.

W. J. Herschel,

Officiating Magistrate.

Nasimooddeen, the same; to take effect on the conclusion of his present term.

W. J. Herschel,

J. S. Campbell, a native of Scotland, being duly sworn by the Bible, saith, that—I am an assistant in the Bengal Indigo Company, living at Jypoor Factory. On the 5th January 1860, I went to test the measurement at Noyhattah. I had measured about 16 hands, when all the ryots came out from the village of Noyhattah with spears and lattees, numbering about some 200 men; and I saw a man on horseback, a red horse, giving orders to the laltials to take me and my gomastah, Rogoomoney Mookherjeya, prisoners. The name of this man I ascertained to be Nobin Biswas, gomastah of Syam Chunder Pal Chowdry, zemindar. They took the gomastah, ameen, Bheemchand Paulit, Mosahdy, khalasee, and Jibun Sheik, ticca khalasee, and were about to take me, only I succeeded to get away from them on horseback. They went in near cul to intercept me in the next village, but I succeeded to get there before. I saw my gomastah, ameen, and khalasees taken prisoners. About five hours afterwards the people came back to me, that they were kept in duresse vile in Nowboteah bazar, in whose house I cannot say, and after five hours let go. It was about nine o'clock in the morning when all this happened. I did not know any of the assistants' names, neither could I recognize any of them, but my officers who were taken prisoners know them, and could recognize them. I had no other witnesses on the spot except my gomastah and the other men who were with me, and who suffered. I think Syam Chunder Pal Chowdry had instigated the ryots to attack me and my servants, and thereby not allowing us to measure the lands. I understand that the above zemindar has been bound over to keep the peace towards the Bengal Indigo Company for a year, which year has not expired yet.

Taken before me this day, the 11th January 1860, at Chobeca.

J. S. Campbell.

Henry Maclean,
Deputy Magistrate.

7th March.

Sworn again.

I recognise the man present as the man whom I saw on horseback (Nobin Biswas is pointed out).

By Defendant.—I think you were dressed in white; you were ahead of the others. I never saw you before.

By the Court.—How then can you swear to him now?—I saw him under circumstances that made a strong impression, at a very short distance, about 40 yards off, and I am positive this is the man.

DECISION.

On looking over Mr. Campbell's evidence before the deputy magistrate, I find that he stated then that he could not recognize any of his assistants. He may have meant that he did not recognize them at the time, but could if he saw them again; but when the evidence against a prisoner rests, as in this case, solely on the statement of one man (I reject the witnesses as worthless in this as in the other case), it is essential that it should not be open to any misinterpretation or doubt. The point noted is certainly enough to throw a doubt over any recognition; and though I doubt not that Mr. Campbell trusts his own judgment now in recognizing the prisoner,* it is not fair to the latter to rest on that alone.

I acquit the prisoner.

Officiating Magistrate.

* Nobin Biswas.

The Information and Deposition of James Stuart Campbell, taken on Oath before me, Edward Drummond, Magistrate and Justice of the Peace in and for the District of Nuddea, on the 4th February 1860.

On the morning of the 3d, yesterday, I went to re-measure the indigo lands in Bhandarkhola village, which belongs to Sham Chunder Pal Chowdry. I re-measured all the lands; after doing so, I was proceeding by the road to the next village of Rossoolpore, when I was attacked by about 200 men armed with lattes and spears. They immediately surrounded me, and the lattials beat my horse on the head, which caused him to rear, and fall upon me; at the same time they struck me a severe blow with a latte on the right shoulder, and after I was down beat me severely on the small of the back. I was stunned by the severe beating and the fall of the horse, and lay there insensible; after I recovered my senses, the whole of them were out of sight. I imagine I must have lain there without my hat (topee) in the sun for an hour; I then got up and went to Kurrispore. My horse was scampering all over the country, and the ryots of Kurrispore caught him for me.

Do you know the names of any of those who attacked you?—Yes, Kadee Biswas, Tazoo Mundul, Napal Mundul and Jaheer Mundul. The leaders were Nobin Biswas, Dinonath Mitro, Bhubun Mohun Mitro.

Do you know exactly who struck you?—He was a lattial, I should know him perfectly if I saw him.

Why did they thus attack you?—At the instigation of Sham Chunder Pal Chowdry. He is the zemindar of that village, and wants the lands himself, but his ryots have taken their advances from us in the factory. These villages were perfectly quiet, took their advances and measured off their lands, until the issue of a perwannah by the deputy magistrate of Kalarooah, to say that the ryots need not sow indigo unless they liked. The ryots were led to believe that it was a Government order not to sow indigo, as it was issued by a Government servant.

Was any one with you when you were attacked?—I have written the names in the Bengalee petition of those who were with me, and saw the affair.

Do you know if there be any assemblage of lattials anywhere near the spot now?—I believe they are distributed to the number of about eight or 10, in each of the zemindar's villages.

In what thannah are these villages?—In thannah Goburdangah.

How far off is the thannah?—About 12 or 14 miles, but the Pharree of Bongong is about four or five miles off only, and the naib darogah was at the time within a mile or two of the attack.

4 February 1860. (signed) E. Drummond, Magistrate.

6 March 1860.

James Campbell, sworn.

Did you know the defendants whose names you have given by name before this, or had you ascertained their names since, when you gave your deposition?—I did not know their names before; I ascertained them from my servants.

Can you recognise any of the men here present?—I recognise Jahur Mundul (pointing him out) as the man who knocked me off the horse, i. e., who struck the horse. I do not recognise any of the others.

Had you seen Nobin Chunder that day?—No, I do not remember seeing him; my servants tell me they saw him.

By Mokhtear for 1, 2, 3.

When did you ascertain these names?—The next day.

How much had you measured in Bhandarkhola?—28 or 30 bunds.

From where you were beaten, in which direction do Bhandarkhola and Belta bear, from whence you say these lattials came?—I was going towards Rossoolpore, Bhandarkhola was on my left, about a stone's throw off, and Belta was in the same direction about one mile and a half off; I could not see Belta through Bhandarkhola.

Where were your servants at the time?—They were round about me at speaking distance.

Were they also surrounded?—Yes.

Could you distinguish between lattials and ryots?—The only way to tell a lattial is by his latti. A great many had lattes, and many had spears.

(signed) W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

I HAVE examined Mr. Campbell's body. He has the mark of a severe latty blow or blows on his shoulder, and a mark of slighter nature on the small of the back.

PROCEEDINGS.

James Campbell.—Deposes that he had been measuring the lands of Bhandarkhola village (belonging to Syam Chunder Pal) for indigo, the ryots being under engagement to him, and was going along the road to Rossoolpore, when he was surrounded by some 200 lattials, who knocked him off his horse (hit the horse so that he reared and fell over), beat him severely as he lay on the ground, and left him for senseless. Names defendants 1 to 7, 1, 2, and 3 being leaders.

For examination, see original.

Mosahib Shekh.—As above. Says, as we were going, Nobin 1, 2, and 3, came and said, "Beat the Saheb and drive him off, it is Syam Chunder's order;" accordingly they did so, and Hadee (4), struck the Saheb's horse, and Tazoo (5), struck the Saheb on the back, and Napal Mundul (6), struck him also, and he fell off the horse, then 7 struck the Saheb. We ran off and could not see who else beat him. They then left, and the Saheb lay there. Names some score of others.

Examined.—We were not surrounded with the Saheb, we were outside the crowd.

The Saheb asked us what we could tell, and we said what we had seen. I was asked separately.

The defendants 1, 2, 3, were in clean clothes, as now; they were among the lattials. I had not seen them before that day.

Kalu Shekh, Khalashee.—4, struck the horse, same as above; names a score of others.

Bheemchand Malik.—As above, positively swears that all three, 1, 2, and 3, called out to do it, as it was Syam Chunder's order.

Sibdoyal Syce.—As above.

Jaheer Mundul's defence to be taken, the others released.

Defendant Jaheer Mundul pleads alibi at Belta.

Poran, Burkundaze.—On the 22d of Magh, at nine o'clock, defendant was in his own house at Belta.

Izzutali, Burkundaze.—Ditto. I was going through Palla to Belta. At Belta I was passing Jaheer's house, where I saw Jaheer measuring out mustard seed to Sonai Mundul.

Haran, Chokeedar.—Ditto, ditto. I was going back from Palla to Belta, and saw the mustard measured out.

Sonai Chowkeedar.—Ditto, as to time; Dallee came to me calling out, Izzat and Poran call you. I said, Why? They said Mr. Larmour's people are gathered together, hence you are called. I went to the burkundazes, who took me towards the lattials and called out dohai. The lattials fled. I returned to Belta, and passing through Jaheer's house went to the naib darogah. Saw Jaheer measuring out mustard to Sonai. I went and reported to the darogah.

Sonai.—Day the same about, Jaheer was measuring mustard up to noon.

DECISION.

The evidence of the witnesses is evidently not to be relied on, when they charge Nobin Biswas and the two other zemindaree servants with giving the orders for the attack. Had there been any such leadership among the defendants; particularly had Nobin, a very short stout man, of high caste appearance, been present in the front rank of the assailants, clothed as described in clean white clothes, and calling out in the tone of authority alleged, it is quite impossible but that Mr. Campbell must have seen it and noticed it. Nobin, too, was known to Mr. Campbell by sight, he having seen him to recognise him on a previous previous occasion when he was assaulted. I cannot therefore look on the witnesses produced as other than reckless assertors of what they think best for the interests of the case, and I set their evidence aside altogether. That the assault took place, however, is beyond dispute. Mr. Campbell bore the marks of it when he appeared at Kishnaghur. It seems, however, from Mr. Drummond's description of the bruises, that Mr. Campbell must have lost his senses through the fall from the horse, and that the beating was not a repeated one. A lattee blow leaves on a white skin an unmistakable mark, and there was only one mark of a severe blow "or blows on the shoulder" (there could not well have been more than two blows on the same spot), and of one slighter one on the small of the back. These two blows coincide exactly with Mr. Campbell's description of the beating he got before he fell from his horse and lost his senses. That his body showed no other marks is, I think, conclusive evidence that he was not beaten after he was down.

This very materially affects the guilt of the defendants and makes it much less than Mr. Campbell evidently thought it to be.

I rely fully on Mr. Campbell's recognition of the defendant Jaheer; and the witnesses for the alibi have evidently no ground for one and all remembering the date on which they saw defendant measuring mustard, so that the alibi is worthless.

I convict defendant of having been the first to seize plaintiff's bridle in a riotous assault committed on him, and sentence him to six months' imprisonment and 100 rupees fine, in default of which he will be imprisoned for six months more. For each six months he will pay a fine of 25 rupees; for the first within seven days, for the second on the first day of the term, in default of which he will labour till the fine be paid, or the sentence expire.

PROCEEDINGS.

Plaintiff sworn.—Deposes that he went to measure certain lands in the village of Gogeshpore, when a body of some 50 ryots assembled from the neighbouring three villages of Gogeshpore, Mirzapore, and Damhattee. A ryot of the name of Madoo Mollah (1), gave orders to pelt him with clods, and defendants 2 and 3 did so, and hit his horse. He had to turn away to save himself.

Bekaoolla, Witness.—Is an indigo khalashee. On the 5th Magh went with the plaintiff and others to Mirzapore, where we measured the lands. Then, proceeding at nine o'clock to Gogeshpore, the party began to measure. Some 30 or 40 ryots of the neighbouring villages came round the Saheb, and at 1's order 2 and 3 pelted him; both clods hit the horse. The Saheb went off to Baragurreea. The others were prepared to pelt him too. Recognises the three prisoners.

By Madoo.—I saw you give the order.

By Azim and Bishoo.—Damhattee is about three quarters of a mile off; Gogeshpore about two stones' throw. I know all three of old; have seen them fully 25 times. No row before the pelting.

Hosseindee.—III.

Ramtaran Chatterjee.—As above, recognises all three.

Azimooddeen, Defendant.—Denies; ignores it altogether; says the plaintiff never went to his village; lives in Damhattee. I went to Gantee on the 1st Magh and returned on the 18th Magh.

By the Court.—I have no quarrel with Bekaoolla, nor with Ramtaram.

Madoo, Defendant.—Denies; says it is entirely a false case. Offers an alibi at Neemtola all the 5th Magh.

Beeshoo Mollah, Defendant.—Denies; doesn't know why he is charged; was with Madoo all the 5th.

Witnesses to alibi of Madoo and Beeshoo.

Ram Koomar Napit, Defendant.—Came and bought grass in Neemtola on the 5th of Magh. I shaved them; they staid and ate there, and went away in the evening.

Examined.—I was told on that day by (hesitates) Rahmut Mundul that it was the 5th, otherwise I would not have known it. I don't know what date it is now.

Kanhai Mundul.—On the 5th I and Haran Moola went to Neemtolla, to Rahmat Mundul's house; reached there in the evening and saw Madoo Mollah, who settled the value of the grass for us. Examined about particulars as to dates; only knows the 5th, because Rahmat said the sale is effected, to-day is the 5th. Does not know why he said to-day is the 5th.

Another Witness.—Equally vague. Admits that he only knows it was about that time.

DECISION.

The case is so clear that I need not recite any reasons for holding the defendants guilty of the crime charged, and in the degrees assigned. I convict Madoo and Beshoo, the former as instigator of a riotous assault on Mr. Hyde; and considering that, whether legally employed or not, the plaintiff was measuring lands in a perfectly peaceable manner, and that if the defendants had chosen they might have warned the plaintiff off without resorting to violence, I sentence them as follows:—

Madoo Mollah to three months' imprisonment, and a fine to be paid in seven days of 25 rupees, in default of which to labour till the fine be paid or the sentence expire.

Beeshoo Mollah to the same period of imprisonment, and the same condition on non-payment of a fine of 10 rupees.

6 March 1860. Officiating Magistrate.

The defence of Azimooddeen has been given to-day, and takes the same form of an alibi. Defendant says he went to buy cattle, but falling ill at a friend's house returned home without doing so. I do not see why he should not have bought his cattle after his recovery, if they were to be had in that neighbourhood.

I discredit the alibi, and sentence the prisoner to three months' imprisonment and a fine of 10 rupees, payable in seven days, in default of which he is to labour till the fine be paid or the sentence expire.

PROCEEDINGS.

9th February.—Darogah reports, that while inquiring into Mr. Campbell's case at the village of Palla, he was informed by the gomashtha of Mr. Larmour that there were men assembled at the house of Ishan Mookerjee; that he went and found them there, but could only seize two, the rest having bolted.

Two Witnesses prove the capture of the two prisoners, and the flight of others.

Paran Khan, burkundaze, accompanied the darogah to arrest the jamaat bust, as above.

Two other Burkundazes the same.

Nilmony, defendant, says he has been carrying a pack for Dinosambho Naib of the village of Palla; calls witnesses.

Hanif Shekh,—Denies; says he was ill and went to show himself to him, when he was seized.

DECISION.

THERE is nothing in the evidence to show that these men are lattials, or were assembled to commit a breach of the peace. Neither of them have the appearance of lattials, and I must therefore acquit them. The darogah will, however, take up a charge of vagrancy against them, and if they cannot show that they have an honest livelihood, he will send them up to give security.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 71 Ct.), dated 13 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour, as requested, to lay before his Honor the following report on the state of things in zillah Nuddea, which has been much exaggerated in the daily and other papers published during the last fortnight.

2. Since the beginning of February, the villagers in parts of Messrs. Hill's concern have been manifesting a determination to sow no more indigo. More recently this feeling has spread to the Lokenathpore and to several villages of the Mulnath concern, and in some cases it has led to noisy demonstrations, which have caused alarm, and given rise to the reports of outrages.

3. To be specific, I will trace a few of these reports to their probable origin. They relate, for the most part, to occurrences in the Damoorhoodah Subdivision, and my information regarding them is derived from Mr. Assistant Magistrate Maclean, who joined that station towards the end of February.

4. The story of the burning of the Lokenathpore Factory alluded to by one newspaper correspondent, reduces itself in Mr. Meares' letter to me to the partial burning of an out-factory at Kajooreah. This act was ascribed to incendiaries, and a complaint was made accordingly to the magistrate at Kishnaghur, but none was made to the local police, and the factory did not push this charge laid before the magistrate. There is nothing, says Mr. Maclean, to show that the fire was not accidental.

5. The charge of misconduct brought by the same factory against a police darogah was not substantiated to Mr. Maclean's satisfaction, but he has sent the case to the magistrate for final orders. The best darogah in the district has since been transferred to the Damoorhoodah thannah.

6. The demonstration against the Peerpore Factory was a fact. A riotous party from Chooadangah approached this factory, but dispersed of itself and quietly. This occurred before Mr. Maclean joined his subdivision, and was not reported to me till a day or two ago.

7. The impression, which Mr. Maclean says apparently caused this and other demonstrations, was an apprehension, perfectly groundless, on the villagers part, that the factory would attack them.

8. The attacks on Mr. Larmour's assistants, Messrs. Hyde and Campbell, were by villagers whose lands had been measured for indigo. In both cases they were bold and unwarrantable. One man only could be identified in Mr. Campbell's case, and he has been punished.

9. The magistrates, both of Nuddea and Jessore, declare to the general prevalence of an impression among the villagers that Government is opposed to the cultivation of indigo. In my letter of the 10th February, I reported on this subject, and laid before His Honor Mr. Larmour's letter, praying for the issue of a Government notification counteracting of such a misimpression. I stated the result of my demi-official references to Mr. Reid, who had been marching through the indigo country, and to Mr. Drummond, who had at first advocated a notification. I gave my voice against the issue of one, because the Kallarooah deputy magistrate's injudicious order, to which the false impression was ascribed, was already some five months old; and because, supposing this order to have been the real source of the mischief, it would be difficult after such a lapse of time to word another which should simply have the effect of counteracting it.

10. As, however, the excitement and mutual mistrust appeared to be spreading, I took advantage of the Government order on the Joyrampore villagers' petition directly it reached me, and ordered its publication to all parties. This order was calculated at least to undeceive those ryots who had taken advances of the impression said to have been produced on them by the deputy magistrate's order, that they were at liberty to repudiate their obligations; I have since had an interview with Mr. Herschel at Gyeghattah, and have reason to think that this publication will have a good effect.

11. But I regret to have to add that Mr. Herschel received a letter yesterday evening from Mr. Maclean, in which the occurrence of a disastrous fire in a village, near Lokenathpore, is reported. This is unfortunate, as it has at once been ascribed by the people to the factory underlings.

12. At the request of several planters in the Damoorhoodah subdivision police burkundazes have been stationed at their factories, and I have told Mr. Maclean to order down a small party of the police corps, if he thinks it necessary to strengthen the thannah police. I quite agree, however, with him and Mr. Herschel that no aggressive acts on the part of the villagers are at present contemplated; their object is to intimidate the planters from attempting to sow, and to resist such attempts if made. Such an attitude is, of course, sufficient to cause deep alarm and anxiety to those who have paid out large advances.

13. In a further letter just received from Mr. Herschel, I find it admitted that Mr. Meares had cause for complaint against the conduct of the Damoorhoodah police. This has, as I have shown above, since been rectified.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 983), dated Fort William, 17 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 71 Ct., dated the 13th instant, reporting upon the excitement at present prevailing in some parts of the Nuddea District, in connexion with the cultivation of indigo.

2. It is satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor to learn, from the actual facts as reported by you, that the state of affairs in that district has been much exaggerated in the representations made in the newspapers.

3. The measures reported in paragraph 12 of your letter are approved, Although the local officers and yourself agree in thinking that no aggressive acts on the part of the villagers are contemplated, and the Lieutenant Governor sees no reason to doubt the soundness of that opinion, yet if you consider it advisable, in order to be prepared for the possibility of things taking a worse turn, to have at hand, in any parts of the district, small bodies of a police battalion, his Honor will make such arrangements as are possible for strengthening the force of military police in your division.

4. You state that the object of the villagers "is to intimidate the planters from attempting to sow, and to resist such attempts if made," and very correctly remark, that "such an attitude is sufficient to cause deep alarm and anxiety to those who have paid out large advances." Intimidation by force, or show of force, and the gathering of large riotous assemblages for such a purpose, will of course be put a stop to by the police to the best of their power, and it is very desirable that wherever such intimidation is likely to be attempted the police should be in strength. But the Lieutenant Governor does not think it probable that either intimidation or violence will be resorted to where the villagers are properly advised by the magisterial officers and the darogahs of police of the criminality of such conduct, and of the severe punishment by which it will assuredly be followed.

5. Should persons willing to sow their lands with indigo be, on that account, anywhere menaced by others, from bad feeling towards a factory, or for any other reason, such persons should be specially protected, and the leading men of those who thus lawlessly threaten them should be apprehended and punished.

6. If in any parts there should be reason to suppose that villagers, who have contracted to cultivate indigo, are likely in a body to break their lawful engagements, it will be proper for the magistrate and every police officer, and indeed for every well-disposed and disinterested person, to spare no pains in showing such such villagers the impropriety and dishonesty of such conduct; and the criminal character of a conspiracy to defraud an indigo planter, or any other person, in this manner, and the ruinous consequences to themselves if prosecuted by the injured party, should be carefully pointed out to them. His Honor observes, that Mr. Herschel has already most properly urged, in the strongest manner, ryots who have taken advances not to fail in the fulfilment of their obligations, and he trusts that this line of conduct will have good effects.

7. Whatever may be the causes of the quarrel which has broken out between some indigo factories and the ryots, those ryots who may wish to disconnect themselves from the cultivation of indigo, though fully justified in declining to make new contracts, are bound to fulfil their existing engagements. In the meantime it is to be hoped that the matter may be settled amicably, by such concessions on one side or the other, or on both, as reason and fairness dictate, and as will result in the mutual advantage of both parties. No system of trade can be safe or stable where the bargains are not for the profit of both parties; and perhaps, in this view, both parties in this quarrel may be advised to their permanent advantage.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 78 Ct.), dated 19 March 1860.

Sir,

In reply to your letter, No. 983, dated 17th instant, I beg to state for the information of his Honor the Lieutenant Governor, that the communications which I receive from Mr. Herschel, represent the villagers about Joyrampore as being perfectly tractable and amenable to authority. I have, however, as a matter of precaution, directed Captain Raban to send a party of 50 men to the Damoorhoodah thannah.

2. I yesterday despatched 50 men under Lieutenant Howard, of Captain Raban's Corps, to Bongong, to be ready, should they be required, to advance to the Kaloopole thannah, in Jessore. I took this step on a letter received on Saturday afternoon from Mr. Skinner, but I have doubts whether the services of the party will be required. I am expecting to hear further from Mr. Molony, and Mr. Herschel's third weekly report will probably reach me to-morrow.

3. Copy of your present instructions has been sent to all the magistrates, who have already been desired to use their influence to get existing contracts carried out. In many cases they will, I have reason to think, be successful; in others, however, the ryots deny that they have become parties to any contract, and claim protection in the exercise of the option which the late Government Orders have conceded to them. These are the cases respecting which I am anxious, the practice having hitherto been for the planters themselves to sow all the lands which the factory claimed "as marked for" indigo. Their attempts to do this in the present temper of the ryots will be very likely to meet with opposition.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 1053), dated Fort William, 21 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 78 Ct., dated the 19th instant, and in reply to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor considers your report of the state of affairs in the southern portion of your division to be in some respects satisfactory.

2. Your instructions to Captain Raban, to send a party of 50 men from the station of Nuddea to the Damoorhoodah thannah, as a precautionary measure, were very proper. The Lieutenant Governor had an opportunity of conferring personally with Captain Raban yesterday, and arranged for his making up the detachment from Nuddea to a party of 80 men, under a European officer, and a good native officer; so as to make it possible, if any necessity should arise, to break the detachment into two parties.

3. The despatch of Sub-Lieutenant Howard with 50 more men of the 6th Battalion, from head quarters to Bongong, is entirely approved. A party will be supplied from the 4th Battalion, now in the Burdwan division, to replace the party detached from the station of Nuddea.

4. Two more detachments, one of which will be under a European officer, are available from Captain Raban's battalion; and as their movement into the interior of the Nuddea district, towards the Jessore and Moorshedabad borders, can do no harm, and may inspire confidence, Captain Raban has been informed that he may expect further and specific orders from you regarding them immediately.

5. These precautions are taken from no misgiving as to the correctness of the belief entertained by the district officers and yourself, that nothing is more improbable than the occurrence of any spontaneous act of aggression on the part of the ryots. But where such a quarrel as this has broken out, and where such general excitement prevails, the civil power, whose great object it must be to preserve the peace of the country under all circumstances, cannot be made too strong. And the concluding paragraph of your letter shows there is a possibility of a breach of the peace being provoked by others than ryots.

6. Should any managers of an indigo factory appear likely to commit any unlawful act, such as cannot but exasperate not only indigo ryots, but all the villagers of their neighbourhood, it will be well to endeavour, by quietly reasoning with them, to convince them not only of the penal consequences to themselves, and to those whom they may employ, should loss of life or other serious calamity occur in the course of any unlawful proceeding of theirs, but also of the certain injury to the commercial interests of their factories which such imprudent conduct will involve. These gentlemen, if they will take a calm view of their position, it is to be hoped, will see that where there is a dispute as to the fact of an agreement between two parties, neither party can become the judge in his own cause, or be allowed to take the law into his own hands. In the present temper of the villagers in some parts of Nuddea an attempt of this nature might cause incalculable mischief.

COPIES of MESSAGES forwarded by Electric Telegraph.

From the Secretary to Government of Bengal, Calcutta, to the Magistrate of Hooghly, dated 20 March 1860, 11 a.m.

How many of the Police Battalion has Lieutenant Baker at Hooghly, and how many men could he take to Kishnaghur, the ordinary guards being taken by hired burkundauzes?

From Magistrate of Hooghly to Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

ONE hundred men are available if the gaol guards are taken away; sixty without the gaol guards, whom the magistrate wishes to keep.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Sub-Lieutenant H. Baker, 4th Bengal Police Battalion, Hooghly (No. 1047), dated 21 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that you will proceed immediately with 60 men of the detachment under your command to Kishnaghur, where your services are urgently required.

(No. 1048.)

COPY forwarded to the Inspector of Police Battalions for information.

From C. S. Belli, Esq., Magistrate of Hooghly, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 154), dated Hooghly, 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report for the information of Government that a detachment of 60 men, with the usual complement of non-commissioned officers of the 4th Bengal Police Battalion, left this afternoon for Kishnaghur, in obedience to the orders conveyed to Sub-Lieutenant Baker, in your letter to that officer, No. 1047, of yesterday's date.

2. It is expected that the detachment will reach Kishnaghur on Saturday the 24th instant.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 21 March 1860.

Sir,

HEREWITH I beg to submit in original the Nuddea Magistrate's third Weekly Report, dated the 18th instant.

2. I regret much to observe the remarks on the conduct of the managers of the Loknathpore concern, the interests of which cannot but suffer severely from their persistence in a course so unreasonable and so unsuited to the present crisis.

3. The dispositions of the military police corps which have lately been made, will have a good effect in strengthening the magistrate's hands, and impressing on the ryot's minds the warning which Mr. Herschel mentions his having found it necessary to convey to them. All non-planting landholders, having rents to collect in the villages in which excitement prevails, are equally interested with the planter landholders in seeing the excitement cease.

4. I have heard from Mr. Skinner, who is encamped at Kaloopole thannah, one of the points to which I have sent up a detachment of military police, that the Joyrampore Putneedar has been instigating villagers well disposed to sow, to join others who have expressed their resolution not to do so. This kind of intimidation, as I informed Mr. Herschel some days ago, and as his Honor has since announced, is not to be tolerated. I at once telegraphed to Mr. Molony, who is by this time, I hope, in Mr. Skinner's camp, to take up and dispose of any tangible charge against the putneedar. The latter has since been arrested and sent into Kishnaghur, where I have ordered him to be detained till I arrive there on Sunday next.

THIRD WEEKLY REPORT on the state of the Indigo Districts in Nuddea, from the 10th to 17th March 1860.

I HAVE this week visited the Damoorhoodah subdivision. The general impression is, that the ryots are much more determined here not to sow. The agitation is much stronger and evidently better organised. The Mussulmans have the lead in the crowds, where their conduct is so much more passionate than are the acts of the ryots, that I suspect the real leadership must be in the hands of Hindoos.

2. Mr. Maclean reports that October plant is "suffering greatly by cattle trespass. The villagers have no specific complaints. The Khajoorah Factory burning has been examined by the darogah, who reports it an accidental fire (the extent of it has been already reported to you). Two nights after, a stable was burnt down. The charge of incendiarism was rashly made on the word of an ignorant chowkeedar, who has since directly contradicted himself.

Note sent to Mr. Maclean.

"The chowkeedars frequently hold indigo lands. This should be remedied. You should take up any reasonable information against chowkeedars, and if proved, punish them severely."

"The conduct of the police has been much blamed in the public journals during the last fortnight, but a distinction should be made between village chowkeedars and the thanna police. The co-operation of the former with the ryots is described as misconduct on the part of the latter. These are not proved to have taken part in any overt act; and on one recent occasion I have reason to believe that the firmness of a single burkundauze prevented a disturbance at Lokenathpore. A villager had been summoned to the factory to continue his daily work, which since the present difference he had discontinued. Having gone to the factory, he was severely thrashed by two men, one of whom has been sentenced to imprisonment for a month, the other being acquitted for want of proof. Another old man was [immediately afterwards?] literally dragged to the factory, there beaten, and finally released by the burkundauze, who prevented the villagers already assembled from resorting to violence, and volunteered to release the man from the factory. This case is under trial."

Mr. Platt's reports from Amghoopie that "the excitement has reached his subdivision. A strong demonstration was made by the ryots against this factory. They dispersed without actually committing any act of violence, probably because the planters were loading their guns; but," says Mr. Platts, "the intention of the ryots is not clearly established, and I would look on it as nothing but a strong demonstration. A servant of the actory was well thrashed."

3. The temper of the Europeans in the Loknathpore concern is unfortunately aggressive, offering, I am glad to say, a marked contrast to that of the majority of planters. Several of them have admitted the necessity of a reformation, and are now steering their course with prudence. Both Mr. Larmour and Mr. Foilong see that force is out of the question, and are endeavouring to maintain their position by showing consideration to the ryots. Mr. Meares, of Loknathpore, refuses any the slightest concession, and the ryots are proportionately exasperated. I do not myself hold them altogether free from suspicion of having set fire to the Khajoorah Verandah, which I have very little doubt was the act of an incendiary.

In regard to the Doodhpetley fire, I regret to say that Mr. Meares has shown no desire to remove the suspicion of the ryots against the factory, a suspicion resting on grounds much stronger than in the Khajoorah case against the ryots.

The ryots do not prosecute, but I have directed Mr. Maclean to offer a reward of 100 rupees for the discovery of the offender.

4. No further breach of the peace has occurred in any part of the district.

5. The conduct of the regular police appears now to be fair. I have had no more complaints against any police officer from either side. The police officers with whom I have myself spoken describe the villagers as perfectly amenable to authority. But I doubt whether an order to sow indigo would be obeyed now.

6. The Lieutenant Governor's Proclamation was read out at Chooadangah to-day. The ryots went away saying the order suited them, and they would not sow indigo.

7. In speaking to the ryots I have always found them shirk the question, "Have you taken advances?" Till lately, when pressed, they generally gave an absolute denial. Now they plead the injustice of the contract itself, saying they look on the money called advances by the factory as mere payment of their dues. Into this question I cannot of course enter. But neither can I help seeing and warning the ryots that in taking this line they are guided by passion as much as by reason. I see also that many zemindars and putnedars are borrowing money now to meet the quarter day; and complaints of the difficulty of collecting rents are beginning. Something appears to me necessary, I do not say from higher authority, but from the police on the spot, to check the passion of the moment, and prevent its reaching the large population who have nothing to do with indigo. I have not thought it safe to entrust this to any darogah. The native police have orders to act up to their duty in preserving the peace, but not to discuss the question with the ryots, referring them to Mr. Maclean or to myself, if the proclamation be not enough.

I shall watch the effect of the present excitement on the revenue closely, and let you have particulars after the 28th.

(signed) W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

18 March 1860.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division (No. 1081), dated Fort William, 22 March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter of yesterday's date, without number, submitting the Magistrate of Nuddea's third weekly report on the state of his district, I am directed to inform you, that instructions have been issued to Captain Miles, commanding the 4th Police Battalion, to proceed at once to Alipore with the whole of his battalion; and the Lieutenant Governor is of opinion that Captain Raban, with the whole of the remainder of his corps now at head quarters, should proceed immediately to such place in the district of Nuddea as you may think best, to be at hand in case of any actual disturbance unfortunately breaking out.

COPY of MESSAGE forwarded by Electric Telegraph.

From the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta, to Captain Miles, Midnapore, dated 22 March 11.30 A.M.

MARCH with all your available men to Oolabarriah, where, if possible, a steamer will meet you. If there is no steamer, cross and march on to Alipore. Leave no guard, except the treasure guard. The magistrate must supply burkundauzes for all other guards. Telegraph when you will be at Oolabarriah.

From Major Miles, Midnapore, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta, dated 23 March, 6.30 A.M.

YOUR message of 11.30 A.M. yesterday only received at 9 P.M. We start to-night with some 320 men, and will be at Oolabarriah on Monday morning the 26th.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department (No. 1108), dated Fort William, 22 March 1860.

Sir,

THE Lieutenant Governor directs me to report, for the information of the Honourable the President in Council, certain recent occurrences in some districts of Lower Bengal, indicating great excitement in connexion with the cultivation of indigo; and to explain the measures which have been taken for preventing a breach of the peace, and for restoring order if any outbreak should unfortunately occur.

2. It will be seen, from the accompanying copy of correspondence, that, immediately upon his return to the Presidency on the 10th instant, the attention of the Lieutenant Governor was directed to reports regarding misunderstandings existing between indigo planters and the ryots connected with indigo factories in some parts of the district of Nuddea, which were represented to be likely to lead to disagreeable consequences. The same subject was pressed upon the attention of the Lieutenant Governor, by a petition of the Indigo Planters' Association, whereof a copy is enclosed, which was presented to him by a deputation from that body, with whom he had an interview on the 13th instant. The Commissioner (Mr. Grote) very properly directed the magistrate of the district to watch the progress of these disputes, and to report, weekly, any occurrences arising out of them. Three of these weekly reports have now been received, and from them the character of the excitement on this subject will be apparent.

3. The petition of the Indigo Planters' Association prayed for two measures. The first of these was the issue of a notification by Government, impressing upon the ryots the duty of fulfilling their engagements. It was represented in this petition, as well as in a letter of Mr. Grote's of the 13th instant, that this existing state of feeling of the ryots had arisen partly out of a mistaken belief as to the views of the Government in regard to the cultivation of indigo. Accordingly, the Lieutenant Governor issued a notification, which will be found with my letter to the Commissioner of the 14th instant, No. 926, with a view to the removal of any such erroneous impression. The Commissioner and district officers have been strongly urged to spare no pains in impressing upon the villagers the duty of honestly fulfilling their agreements, and the ruinous consequences to themselves of a breach of agreement, if prosecuted for non-fulfilment; whilst also explaining that it is, and was always, optional with a ryot to agree to cultivate indigo or not, as best suited his own interest.

4. There was reason to suppose that these measures would have a good effect, inasmuch as orders in the same sense which had previously been passed by the Lieutenant Governor on the petition of certain ryots, when published by the Commissioner, were reported to have had to some extent a good effect. But the Lieutenant Governor thought it advisable, in case of things taking a more serious turn than the local officers seemed to anticipate, to have ready at hand, in the neighbourhood of those places in which the excitement is most prevalent, detachments of the police battalions of such strength as might be expected to put down any riot or violent outbreak which might occur, and, as far as possible, to protect any persons or property that might be menaced. With this object, four detachments, with three European officers, of the 6th Battalion of Bengal Military Police, were placed at the disposal of the Commissioner, to be posted in different parts of the district of Nuddea.

5. The second measure prayed for by the indigo planters' petition was, that special legislation should be had recourse to, for the purpose of making the breach of an agreement to cultivate indigo punishable summarily by a magistrate. On this subject, the Lieutenant Governor put himself into communication with Mr. Sconce, the Legislative Member of Council for Bengal; and that gentleman is now prepared to introduce a Bill, providing (as a temporary measure, pending a full and searching inquiry into the practice of indigo planting in Bengal, which it is proposed to make after the present season of cultivation is closed, and the present excited state of feeling has subsided), for the summary enforcement of existing engagements for the cultivation of indigo. Three additional officers, with magisterial powers, have been sent to the Nuddea district, in order to the working out of this law, if passed.

6. After the above arrangements had been made, the Lieutenant Governor received this morning two telegrams, of which a copy is herewith submitted, together with a copy of a report from the Commissioner of Rajshahye, No. 481, dated the 18th instant. From these it will be seen that the differences between the planters and ryots, which commenced in Nuddea, are now extending into the district of Moorshedabad; and there is reason to fear that they may have assumed there a more dangerous aspect. To prevent, as far as possible, any serious consequences, the Lieutenant Governor has taken the following precautions:—

7. To supply the place of the officer, now absent on leave, who is ordinarily stationed at Aurungabad, the subdivision in the Moorshedabad District, where the danger seems greatest, the Lieutenant Governor has appointed Mr. B. Wood (who is close at hand, and who is a very active officer attached to the Sonthal pergunnahs) to the charge of that subdivision. Mr. Robinson, the Deputy Commissioner of those pergunnahs, has been ordered to Moorshedabad to take charge of the magistracy and collectorate of that important district; and in the meanwhile, Mr. Beaufort, the officiating magistrate, who is about to leave on promotion, has been ordered to proceed himself to the disturbed parts of his district to the east of the river Bhaugiruttee, and to call on the officer commanding at Berhampore for any troops that may be necessary to keep order in that part of his district which lies east of the Bhaugiruttee. Any troops which may be required by Mr. Wood will be supplied from the 3d Battalion, of which nearly 500 men, fortunately available, have been ordered to proceed by rail to Synteeah, and thence to march to any point where they may be wanted. Captain Pughe, who is in command of this battalion, has been vested with the powers of a magistrate. A communication has been made to the railway officers, in order, if possible, to push on this force by rail forty miles beyond Synteeah, which which will place them within 14 miles of the centre of the tract reported to be disturbed. Though the railway is not open beyond Synteeah, the Lieutenant Governor, from what he saw on his return the other day, has a strong hope that this may be done. The whole of the remainder of the 6th Bengal Military Police, with Captain Raban, the commandant, has been ordered to proceed into the Nuddea district, and marches to-morrow. The 4th battalion has been called up from Midnapore to replace them here, and to be available, if necessary, to reinforce the troops already in the indigo districts. A steamer has been despatched to bring them up from Oolabarriah. And an officer with 100 men of the 2d Battalion of Bengal Military Police has been ordered from Rampore Bauleah to Maldah, in case of the excitement spreading to that district.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioners of Nuddea and Rajshahye (No. 1162-63), dated Fort William, 24 March 1860.

Sir,

THE Lieutenant Governor considers it very essential that the objects with which troops have been sent into some of the districts of your division should in no case be misunderstood; and that the officers commanding detachments sent in support of the civil power should receive plain instructions if required to act.

2. I am directed, therefore, to request that you will issue to the magisterial officers, at whose disposal any military force may be placed, such orders as may be necessary for their guidance generally, and specially with reference to local circumstances.

3. The general object in view is, of course, to repress any breach of the peace, and to disperse all assemblages likely to lead to a breach of the peace, apprehending the leading rioters. But it will also be specially incumbent on the magistrates of districts, where the present excitement relating to indigo prevails, to protect effectually person and property in any indigo factories that may be really in danger. The way to do this is to keep the country in the neighbourhood of such factories quiet; and this can be done by a small body of military police moveable in that neighbourhood, whilst it could not be done by any reasonable number of men disposed in petty stationary guards posted at the several factories. But if it should be advisable to place a small fixed guard to protect any particular factory, such a guard can always be provided from the district police. On the other hand, it will be incumbent on magistrates having troops at their disposal, to prevent resort to the unlawful use of force on the part of any imprudent planter which, in the present state of feeling, would probably lead to disastrous consequences.

4. The troops will, of course, obey the instructions of the magistrates and subdivisional officers, to support whose authority they are sent. If a breach of the peace occur under the eyes of a body of military police, in the absence of any magisterial officer, the commanding officer will act, in order to its instant suppression, according to the best of his own judgment.

5. A copy of this letter has been forwarded to the commandants of the police battalions, from which detachments have been sent into the disturbed districts.

(Nos. 1166 to 1168.)

Copy forwarded to Captains Raban, Pughe, and Miles, for information and guidance.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Home Department (No. 1114), dated 23 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that orders may be issued for establishing a communication by telegraph with Bongong, which can easily be effected by a junction with the Jessore line which passes very close to the head quarters of that subdivision.

2. It is of great importance that the Lieutenant Governor should, at this particular period, be in constant and speedy communication with this part of the country, in which the excitement regarding indigo cultivation is most prevalent

From W. Grey, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, to the Deputy Superintendent of Electric Telegraphs in India (No. 593), dated Council Chamber, 24 March 1860.

Sir,

Home Department
Electric Telegraph.

I AM directed to forward to you an extract (para. 1) of a letter from the Government of Bengal, and to request that you will give effect to the wishes of the Lieutenant Governor with as little delay as possible, the special service for which the new telegraph communication is required being of a very emergent nature.

(No. 647.)

COPY forwarded to the Government of Bengal, with reference to Mr. Secretary Young's letter, No. 1114, dated the 23d instant.

From J. D. MacNeile, Joint Magistrate of Bongong, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No. 3247), dated 30 March 1860.

THE telegraph station at this place is established ; the communication is open ; the subdivision is quiet.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 82 Ct.), dated Alipore, 23 March 1860.

Sir,

As it is of importance that each of the magistrates of Nuddea and Jessore should have a few mounted police at the present juncture, I have thought it expedient to direct the magistrate of 24-Pergunnahs to send to Kishnaghur and Kaloopole respectively, a party of three men from the suburban force. I have authorised him to supply their place with others.

2. I have also ordered an European constable to go to Kishnaghur for temporary employment in the magistrate's camp. This measure seems advisable in consequence of the magistrate having found business impeded by crowds.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1188), dated 24 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to inform you, in reply to your letter, No. 82, dated the 23d instant, that the Lieutenant Governor approves of your instructions to the magistrate of the 24-Pergunnahs to send a party of three of his suburban mounted police force to the magistrates of Nuddea and Jessore respectively, and a European constable for temporary employment in the former officer's camp.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department (No. 1148), dated 24 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to request that, with the permission of the Honourable the President in Council, the services of "the Lahore Horse" may be placed at the disposal of the Lieutenant Governor for employment in the districts in which excitement prevails in connexion with the cultivation of indigo. Sowars will, in the Lieutenant Governor's opinion, be of great use there.

From Major F. D. Atkinson, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to the Deputy Quartermaster General of the Army, (No. 1167), dated Fort William, 24 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to request that you will move the General Officer commanding the Presidency Division to comply with the requisition of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal for the services of the Lahore Light Horse, for employment in the districts in which excitement prevails connected with the cultivation of indigo.

2. The officer commanding the regiment should be directed to place himself in immediate communication with Mr. Young, Secretary to Government of Bengal.

(No. 1168.)

COPY of the foregoing forwarded to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal for information.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Captain Travers, Commandant Lahore Light Horse, Dum Dum (No. 1196), dated 26 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to request that you will proceed with all possible despatch to Kishnaghur, with all the effective mounted men of your corps, and that you will report yourself on arrival there to Mr. Grote, whom you will find at that station, and from whom you will receive detailed instructions for your guidance.

The general object for which the force under your command is sent to Kishnaghur as a centre, is to preserve the peace of the Nuddea and the neighbouring districts from being broken. You will, of course, act on the requisition of the magistrates of the several districts and of Mr. Grote, who is the Commissioner and Superintendent of Police of the division comprising those districts.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Magistrates of Baraset and Nuddea (Nos. 1200 and 1201), dated Fort William, 26 March 1860.

Sir,

ABOUT 100 of the Lahore Light Horse have been ordered to proceed on service into the Nuddea district, and will march from Dum Dum to Kishnaghur as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. I am to request that you will immediately cause the nullah crossings on the route to Kishnaghur, and on the other main lines along which it may become necessary to send parties of these horse, to be examined and put into good order.

(No. 1202.)

COPY forwarded to the Commissioner of Nuddea, for his information.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department (No. 1198), dated 25 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to request that, with the permission of the Honourable the President in Council, instructions may be issued for the immediate preparation of the necessary camp equipage and carriage, and that the requisite Commissariat arrangements may be made for 100 men and horses of the Lahore Light Horse, which the Lieutenant Governor is desirous to send to the station of Kishnaghur as speedily as possible. The service, I am to observe, is urgent, and immediate despatch a great object.

From Major F. D. Atkinson, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to the Deputy Quartermaster General of the Army, and to the Commissary General (Nos. 1212 and 1213), Fort William, 26 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to transmit to you the annexed copy of a letter from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 25th March 1860, soliciting the issue of instructions for the preparation of the necessary camp equipage and carriage, and for the requisite Commissariat arrangements for 100 men and horses of the Lahore Light Horse, which the Lieutenant Governor is desirous to send to the station at Kishnaghur, and to request that immediate arrangements may accordingly be made.

(No. 1214.)

COPY of the foregoing forwarded to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in reply to No. 1198 of the 25th instant, for information, and with an intimation that the order for the march of the troops is sufficient authority for the Commissariat Department to supply immediately the carriage, &c. required.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta (No. 1152), dated 24 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that you will be so good as to send six good European constables to Kishnaghur, and, if possible, four others to Moorshedabad, four to Jessore, and two to Baraset. The men should be directed to proceed to those stations with all possible dispatch, and to report themselves to the magistrate of the districts under whose orders they will act.

(No. 1153.)

Copy forwarded for the information of the Commissioner of Nuddea.

(No. 1154.)

Copy forwarded to Commissioner of Rajshahye,

From S. Wauchope, Esq., Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 190), dated Fort William, 26 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report that, in obedience to the instructions in your letter, No. 1152, of the 24th instant, I sent that night and next morning four police serjeants and 12 constables to Kishnaghur, Moorshedabad, Jessore, and Baraset. The two men who proceeded to Baraset have however been sent back with a letter from the deputy magistrate in charge, who states that he has no place in which they can be accommodated.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1184), dated 24 March 1850.

Sir,

I AM directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to vest the three officers transferred to Nuddea on the 21st instant with the powers of Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector in the districts of Jessore and Baraset, as well as in Nuddea, in order that you may station them wherever their services may be required.

Mr. W. V. C. Taylor,
Mr. W. L. Mackenzie,
Mr. C. G. D. Betts.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 83 Ct.), dated Allipore, 23 March 1860.

Sir,

YESTERDAY I received a letter from Mr. Skinner, Officiating Joint Magistrate of Jessore, in which he reports that after reading the late Government notification to a number of ryots who came to his tent at Kaloopole on the 18th instant, he proceeded to arrest certain parties whom he thought it necessary to bind over to keep the peace, and put them in charge of some burkundauzes. "Directly they began to move off," adds Mr. Skinner, "the rest of the villagers set up a shout and attempted to release them. They further abused me and my police, and the Kaloopole darogah was almost assaulted. The men, however, were taken off by the burkundauzes and sent to Jessore at once, as further proceedings at Kaloopole would have been impossible, there being no force nor means of detention."

2. The darogah and the whole police force present, including the village chowkeedars, behaved very well on this occasion.

3. The detachment under Lieutenant Howard should reach Kaloopole in the course of to-morrow, or day after to-morrow. Mr. Molony will have joined Mr. Skinner's camp the day before yesterday, and I have directed him to take vigorous measures to bring to punishment the leaders of the mob who resisted Mr. Skinner.

4. Lieutenant Duff's party should have reached Damoorhoodah yesterday. I have a demi-official from Mr. Maclean, dated yesterday, in which he informs me that no disrespect whatever has been shown to police authority in his subdivision. There had been some ferment in Mr. Herschel's tent at Chitoll when the notification was read, and as this was attributed to Mr. Forlong's presence, Mr. Herschel thought it necessary to ask him to retire. In doing this, it seems to me Mr. Herschel did not show his usual judgment, for any concession by the authorities to mob clamour at the present moment is of course to be deprecated.

P.S.—With reference to your letter, No. 1081, dated the 22d instant, I beg to state, for the information of Government, that I yesterday requested Captain Raban to march with all his remaining available force to Kishnaghur, from which centre I can detach him wherever he is most wanted.

2. He leaves to-day with 60 men, all that he can muster till Captain Miles' Corps comes to relieve his standing guards, when about 100 more men will follow.

3. I have this moment received the enclosed original letter, dated 21st instant, from the magistrate, which I beg may be returned. With reference to its 14th para., it might be well to warn the wing of a regiment at Barrackpore to be ready for service; but I believe that the military police parties now in the field will prove sufficient to check any tendency on the part of the villagers to become aggressive. If the proposed Bill pass to-morrow, the first feeling on the latter's part will doubtless be one of disappointment and indignation, and for this I am quite prepared.

4. The present military arrangements may be summarized as follows:—

Lieutenant Howard, with 50 men, at Kaloopole.

Jemadar Sobhan Khan, with 53 men, at Bongong.

Lieutenant Duff, with 80 men, at Damoorhoodah.

Lieutenant Robertson, with 50 men, at Meherpore.

Captain Raban with the remainder of his corps (about 150), and Lieutenant Baker, of 4th Battalion, with 100 (I believe, but the Government orders went direct to that officer), at Kishnaghur.

Major Miles' head quarters from Midnapore, to relieve Captain Raban at Alipore.

5. There are thus 230 men actually out, and a reserve at Kishnaghur of 250, wherefrom to draw fresh parties. More, in my opinion, is not wanted at present.

From W. J. Herschel, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Nuddea Division (No. 84), dated Nuddea, 21 March 1860.

Sir,

HAVING returned from Damoorhooda this morning, I have the honour to submit a special report on the present state of the district.

2. During the time I was there, I heard nothing from the south of the district to cause any doubts as to the continuance of peace. On the 19th I received a note from Mr. Larmour, saying that his assistant, Mr. Campbell, had been again driven away by the villagers, with a threat that his head would be broken if he came again. From the thannah, I hear that Mr. Campbell's ameen had reported that, on going to measure lands (I know they took no force with them), two villagers had come out and warned Mr. Campbell off. Mr. Campbell has made no complaint. While on the spot, I had told Mr. Larmour and the ryots that if the assistants went to measure, and they ordered them off, they must go. I consider that Mr. Campbell was testing the feelings of the ryots, and that the latter had learnt a proper lesson from the punishment lately inflicted, and had strictly obeyed me in simply warning Mr. Campbell off.

3. I have to-day received a report from the Goburdangah darogah, dated 20th, to the effect that he requires more police burkundauzes.*

4. The north is hotter. My demi-officials will have informed you that the proclamation has been eagerly received, and that the ryots take their stand upon it.

5. I have also mentioned that, on one occasion, in receiving petitions, a party who wished to put in a razeenama were swept away by the crowd, and that M. Maclean had to go among them to set them free. I have also mentioned that on the 19th, when closing cutcherry, and preparing to take petitions, a note from Mr. Skinner, brought by a peon from his camp, informed me that he had arrested some of a crowd who got uproarious in front of his tent, and that the arrest was not

* He reports that the proclamation has been received there with hesitation, and that he finds it difficult to maintain due respect by this authority. I have to-day written to him that, with the support of the police battalion now en route to Bongong, he will find that if he attends to my late order imposing absolute silence on the police as to the exposition of the proclamation, he will find the ryots attentive and obedient.

not easily effected. That, at the same time, one of the principal ryots of Joyrampore was brought up before Mr. Maclean under arrest, on a warrant from Jessore, which is complained of as illegal and unnecessarily severe. That on taking petitions the crowd got excited at seeing one, Gopee Dut, Mr. Forlong's gomashita, a man detested by the ryots, standing among my amlah, and that the noise becoming too great to be heard, and happening not to have any police with me that day, I had to disperse the assembly by first sending the planter's party away, and then by distributing copies of the proclamation. The crowd were a good deal excited also at some villagers who put in razeenamas. They were restrained by their own leaders, but broke up very slowly.

6. I have now to report that I remained till next evening (yesterday) to watch the result of this, having meanwhile sent orders to Kishnaghur for 50 men to march out of their lines, ready to start at three hours' notice, under Lieutenant J. Duff. Better arrangements were made for receiving petitions and distributing the proclamation, and though the crowd was an unusually large one, it behaved throughout (in the presence of two burkundazes and yesterday's chaprassees) with as much order and respect as in the Sudder station.

7. I learnt yesterday from Greeschunder, first grade darogah, that the arrest of the Joyrampoor putneedar had been effected with perfect ease in the day time. By an accident he had been sent back from camp to the darogah at Joyrampore to be forwarded to Jessore. His friends came and asked for his release on bail, which I refused, as beyond my power to grant, but after the occurrences at Kaloopole and my own camp that evening, I did not feel sure how far the Joyrampoor ryots might be tempted on his re-appearance. I therefore sent an order to the darogah to send him into Kishnaghur, pending a reference to Mr. Skinner for bail. This order has completely removed the irritation in Joyrampore.

8. I yesterday received a note from Mr. Hoyle, a railway employé. He complains of his being made to suffer for the fault of the indigo planters, his supplies being stopped by the villagers. I regret this, as I had noticed with pleasure that the railway authorities had been remarkably impartial in their conduct. Passing up the line the other day, I noticed especially the quiet and contented behaviour of the railway coolies.

9. During the last three days also several letters have been received from planters, stating that their servants have been prevented from going to the villages to collect rents, and, as I stated in my last, it is certain that many of them have had to borrow money for the Government demand.

10. The reports of villagers assembling are also more numerous than before, and the circumstances reported by the police are not absolutely free from an aggressive tendency.

11. I have not hitherto laid very much stress on these assemblies, nor on the unproved statements of planters. I have endeavoured to form my opinion solely on proved facts, and from them to judge the proper moment for the exhibition of military force. I now think the moment has arrived.

12. The ryots, though settled in their determination not to sow, have I think felt a check to a violence which was beginning to exhibit itself, and all that now remains to be done is, I think, to support the cause of order by a more than usually imposing force. I say more than usually, because I cannot conceal from myself that the passion of the day, though checked among the ryots, still exists; and that the planters, who have hitherto been deterred from the open use of force by the hopelessness of the attempt, have lately shown signs of despair.

13. I have deferred proposing this measure later perhaps than I would have done had it not been for the unfortunate fact that Government was believed to have an interest in the question other than it really has. To send out military immediately on the issue of the proclamation would, I am sure, have been misunderstood; I had hoped still to have put this application off for a few more days, but I do not think it safe.

14. In proportion as I have deferred it, so also must be the force now shown, and I would therefore recommend that not less than 500 of the military police be placed at my disposal immediately, and that preparations be made for throwing 500 more into the zillah on a further call, also that 100 cavalry be sent to me as early as possible. They will be of more use than 500 infantry; 75 men of the 6th Bengal Military Police leave to-night for Damoorhoodah, which they will reach to-morrow morning.

15. I enclose copy of a vernacular order just issued to the police.

16. I have indented for a large supply of copies of the proclamation.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner—of the Nuddea Division—(No. 1211), dated 26 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 83 Ct., dated the 23d instant, with its enclosure, reporting certain occurrences in Jessore and Nuddea connected with the existing excitement in those districts.

2. The Lieutenant Governor desires that you will cause to be conveyed to the Kaloopole darogah, and to his police, his satisfaction at their good conduct on the occasion of the arrest and attempted rescue of certain persons whom the magistrate, Mr. Skinner, had ordered to be sent into the station. If the darogah's official character is generally good, you are authorised to promise him early promotion in recognition of his good behaviour; and you will be so good as to bestow a suitable money reward to the police burkundauzes and the village chowkeedars whose good conduct you have reported.

3. Had the prisoners been rescued, and had Mr. Skinner been forced to retire, the consequences might have been very bad. This occurrence shows the necessity of giving every magisterial officer, acting alone in this time of excitement, a small body of military police, to be at hand to support his authority and to enforce the execution of his orders. You will be so good as to arrange accordingly.

4. With reference to the letter from Mr. Herschel, the officiating magistrate of Nuddea, to your address, No. 84, dated the 21st instant, I am to inform you that Sub-Lieutenant Baker, with a party of 60 men of the detachment of the 4th Police Battalion under his command at Hooghly, and all the available men of the 6th Battalion, have been already sent into the Nuddea district. Application has likewise been made for troops from Barrackpore for the immediate relief of Captain Raban's Guards, consisting of somewhat more than 100 men on duty in Calcutta, and as soon as these men are relieved they will be sent also to the same district. By this means Nuddea and its borders will have been supplied with about 500 men of the 6th, and 60 men of the 4th Police Battalion.

5. It appears to the Lieutenant Governor that Jessore is not sufficiently supplied with military police, but Major Miles and the head quarters of the 4th Battalion are expected at the Presidency from Midnapore this evening. On their arrival a detachment of them will be sent immediately to Mr. Molony, in Jessore.

6. The Lieutenant Governor has obtained from the Government of India the services of the Lahore Light Horse, about 100 strong, now at Dum-Dum, and this force will be sent immediately to the districts where the excitement prevails. There are no more horse in Bengal. Two troops of Adlam's Police Sowars have been called down from Behar, but they cannot be in Bengal for some days.

7. The original enclosure of your letter is herewith returned as requested.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commandant of the 4th Bengal Police Battalion (No. 1252), dated 27 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that you will immediately send for Lieutenant Smith, of your battalion, from Burdwan, and instruct him to proceed with 50 men to join Mr. Molony, the magistrate of Jessore, who is in the neighbourhood of Kaloopole. Lieutenant Smith should be directed to march via Bongong, where probably he will receive instructions from Mr. Molony. If not, he will proceed on towards Kaloopole and will hear from Mr. Molony on the road.

(No. 1253-4.)

Copy forwarded to the Inspector of Police Battalions for information.
Ditto, to the Commissioner of Nuddea, for ditto.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Magistrate of Jessore (No. 1259), dated 27 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward, for your information, a copy of a letter this day addressed to the Commandant of the 4th Bengal Police Battalion, from which you will observe that a detachment of that battalion has been ordered to join you as speedily as possible. You will be so good as to send instructions to meet the officer commanding this detachment at Bongong, if possible.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 1), dated Kishnagur, 26 March 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to submit herewith the magistrate of Nuddea's fourth weekly report, dated 26th instant, and an extract as follows, from a demi-official, dated yesterday, from Mr. Molony, who is now encamped at Soobodhee, in thannah Kaloopole :—

"I have just returned from a ride in and about what Skinner considered the worst villages when he came out. There was none of the excitement that he mentions, and the people all appeared to be engaged in their usual pursuits. They are evidently wavering and don't exactly know what they will do yet; they informed me that they had sent a deputation to Calcutta some three or four days ago, and that they were perfectly ready to obey the Government orders to sow, if it was given. I explained to them, that if they were under advances they must of course be expected to work them off, and that Government could not possibly approve of their present attempt to break existing engagements. They behaved in a very orderly and quiet manner, quite different from what they did when Skinner came. It seemed to me that they had committed themselves to a line of conduct under the false representation of the wishes of Government, and did not first know how to back out of it. They said they thought they must do as others, and alluded to the Burogram. (Jyram pore). They all had the same answer at first, when asked whether they were going to sow, 'Das jun jaha kore taha amora koribo,' which showed that they looked somewhere for an example."

2. I am quite satisfied with the arrangements which have been made. Captain Raban has been requested to fill up from head quarters the number of men who have been drafted from Lieutenant Duff's party to Haut Boleah, where there is some public money in the camp of the Superintendent of Nuddea Rivers.

3. The magistrate is right to watch the proceedings of the several parties named in his report. I have myself warned Baboo Sham Chunder Pal Chowderee. The appearance of the new law will, I expect, put an end to all further agitation.

4. The darogah has not yet reported the result of his inquiries into the complaint of Mr. Hoyle, the railway engineer. The demonstration which caused him to leave his camp was not in any way directed against him.

P.S.—May I request the return of the original enclosures of this and previous letters.

FOURTH WEEKLY REPORT on the State of the Indigo Districts in Nuddea, for the week ending 24th March 1860.

SINCE the date of my special report nothing whatever has occurred (so far as reported) in disturbance of the peace. I recapitulate the events of the week. From the south of the district, reports are now favourable. During the first part the darogah reported that he was not treated with the respect that he looked for, and that the proclamation was not attended to. Mr. Larmour's letters were to the same effect. The tone of these reports changed towards the latter part of the week, the ryots being reported quieter and conciliatory.

2. From the north the occurrences during the first part of the week were rather more serious than hitherto, and some symptoms of unvileness on the part of the ryots began to show themselves. On Monday I was obliged to break up cutcherry in consequence of the violent demeanour of the crowd towards Mr. Forlong's amlah. The crowd numbered considerably above a thousand, and being unattended, save by my cutcherry peons, I did not think it prudent to run a risk of a rescue, similar to that incurred by the joint magistrate of Jessore, with a darogah at his side.

3. The next day a still larger crowd assembled, but the presence of two thannah burkundazes and a better arrangement of proceedings maintained perfect order. The principal speakers, too, among the ryots absented themselves.

4. On receipt of Mr. Skinner's letter on the 19th, I had directed Lieutenant Duff to hold himself in readiness to march with 50 men to Damoorhoodah; on the 20th I received a letter there from Mr. Hoyle, a railway engineer, showing that he was also being drawn into the quarrel, his supplies having been stopped by the neighbouring village, and he himself having left the place. This determined me to order out the military police, and to apply for reinforcements, which I did on my arrival in the station on the 21st. Lieutenant Duff I found had the same day received orders from yourself to march out 80 men to Damoorhoodah, and he left with them that evening, camping near Damoorhoodah next day.

5. There are four or five men in the zillah whose conduct I have been watching from some time past. They are Syam Chunder Pal Choudhery, of Ranaghât, who having a quarrel with Mr. Larmour, has been using his power as zumeendar to prevent his ryots from sowing for Mr. Larmour. This example has acted unfavourably on the neighbourhood, and particularly in Habeebul Hosain, another zemindar. The latter has now withdrawn his opposition. On a report from Mr. Maclean stating that the leader of the Joyrampore ryots, Ramrutton Moulik, has been down to the house of Sregopal (meaning probably Syamchunder), I sent to have him, and, if Syamchunder was in the house, him also arrested. The darogah reports neither of them to have been there, but to hold Syamchunder in check. I have sent the deputy magistrate of Santipore to Ranaghât, with orders to arrest Syamchunder on the first signs of intrigue being carried on.

6. The next is Ramrutton Moulick, the man whose conduct is complained of by the Jessore authorities. Their grounds of complaint have not been communicated to me, and I can only say, therefore, that the warrant issued against him and two of his brothers is being executed, one of the three having been arrested. The influence of these men is considerable, and both Mr. Maclean and his police are watching them most carefully, but hitherto nothing tangible has turned up. I have requested Mr. Molony to let me know what evidence has been obtained. They are putneedars of Joyrampore, and the Lockenathpore concern holds under them as izaradars, and between the two there is a quarrel.

7. The third is Brindabun Sirkar, a man generally described as pugnacious. He has a quarrel with Mr. Clarke, of Khalbolea, whose ryots have so far remained indifferent spectators of the disputes going on elsewhere. No particular charge is preferred, except opposition to Mr. Clarke, and I have no reason to suppose that he has any other object than the preservation of his own interests. His conduct, however, is also being closely watched.

8. The fourth is Rammohun Moiter, of Meherpore, a released prisoner, whom Mr. Platts has already received orders to arrest on the first indication of intrigue. He is, I think, a more dangerous character than Brindabun Sirkar.

9. There

9. There is one other man, whose motions are being observed, Mohesh Chunder Chatterjee, a Sirkar of Ram Rutton, ryot of Jessore. This man speaks English, and is a man of considerable education and notoriety. He would be, I think, most dangerous of the five as a leader, but he is behaving cautiously, and Mr. Maclean is quite aware of the importance of watching him at Damoorhoodah.

10. On the whole, I think a warning attitude is all that is absolutely required in dealing with these men, and that severe measures are likely to add to the difficulties of giving fair play to the new law.

11. At the same time I am prepared on the first proof of continued activity on their side to place the offenders under arrest.

12. The villagers require rougher treatment, and I have prohibited their moving more than five together from one village to another.

13. I have now the following force posted as below:—

	Men.	Subadar.	Jemadars.	Havildars.	Naiks.
In the Station, Captain Raban - - -	77	- -	2	5	6
„ Lieutenant Baker - - -	62	1	2	4	4
At Damoorhoodah, Lieutenant Duff - -	80	- -	1	6	3
„ Meherpoor, Lieutenant Robertson - -	50	- -	1	3	3
„ Bongong, Subhadar Sobham Khan - -	50	- -	- -	3	3
TOTAL - - -	319	1	6	19	19

P.S.—I enclose Mr. Maclean's report (copy) giving some additional particulars.]

26 March 1860.

W. J. Herschell,
Officiating Magistrate.

WEEKLY REPORT on the State of the Indigo Districts, from 17th March to 24th, Subdivision of Damoorhoodah.

THANNAH HURDEE.

A DEMONSTRATION was made on the night of the 16th March by the villagers of Kalidossore, Kumulpore, and Gobinpore, a preliminary inquiry by the naib darogah imputed the proceeding on the part of the ryots to an impression that the factory of Paikpara, against which the demonstration was made, had seized their cows. I, however, directed the darogah to inquire personally into the case, and also the facts alluded to by Mr. Hoyle, of the Eastern Bengal Railway.

Mr. Tripp, of Bamondee, complained that his suty stack at Akubpore was destroyed by a fire, the work of incendiaries. The charge was made against the Kusakondee villagers, but, as I learn from the police reports, only suspicion, and no proof, is offered by the factory.

The northern part of this thannah is rather unsettled, and I have, therefore, requested Lieutenant Duff to detach a native officer and 30 men to Hat Bolia, a position from which any portion of the Bamondee and Doorgapore, or Joradoh concerns, can be speedily reached.

THANNAH DAMOORHOODAH.

This thannah has settled down. The petitions are now comparatively few, and I have heard of no assemblages of any sort. Lieutenant Duff and 60 men are stationed at Damoorhoodah.

THANNAH DOWLUTGUNGE.

A few villages in this thannah are connected with the league supposed to exist. Their behaviour, however, has not been in any way opposed to public tranquillity. I do not think that the state of these thannahs is on the whole less satisfactory than at the close of last week. No attempts have been made on either side to resort to force, and I am confident that the presence of the police battalion, together with the operation of the anticipated law, will restore these districts to their usual quiet.

During the past week the joint magistrate of Jessore sent a warrant for the arrest of three of the principal Joyrampore putnidars, Ram Rutton, Rammohun, and Greesh Mouliks. The two former have eluded capture, though on my visit to Joyrampore they both came freely to my tent. They are charged with intention to break the peace, but I am not aware, from any facts brought to my knowledge, that they have done more than foment the quarrel between the factory and the ryots. This was, I believe, at first done on private grounds, and without any idea that the movement would attain its present dimensions.

(signed) A. T. Maclean,
Assistant Magistrate.

24 March 1860.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1275), dated 27 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1, of yesterday's date, submitting reports from the magistrates of Nuddea and Jessore regarding the present state of those parts of the two districts in which the indigo excitement prevails, and the measures taken by those officers to settle the minds of the ryots and to prevent any disturbance. These reports are satisfactory.

With reference to what is remarked about the new law, the Lieutenant Governor trusts that its effects will be as good as it is anticipated that they will be. But it is quite possible that in some places the law may disappoint some cultivators, whose minds for a moment may become irritated and excited; and it is absolutely necessary that whenever there is the least chance of this, a party of horse or of the military police (and a very small party indeed is seen to be always enough for one place) must be near at hand. In a case of this nature, seeing the sort of people and the sort of feeling we have to deal with, it is an object not only to be prepared, but to show that we are in every quarter. There is now an adequate force in the excited districts, or on the way to them; and if this force is properly distributed, the preservation of order may be regarded as secured.

The Lieutenant Governor desires that you will carefully avoid the error of clubbing a comparatively large body of men, whether of horse or foot, at one place, such, for example, as Kishnaghur. For the sort of effect required at present a much larger number of men at Kishnaghur than suffices for the protection of the neighbourhood of that spot, would not be very much more useful than at Calcutta.

A party of the Lahore Horse which has been ordered to proceed to Kishnaghur must be detached, to be at the disposal of the magistrate of Jessore.

You are, of course, aware that the new law must be worked, not only or mainly at Sudder stations, but in the interior and in the neighbourhood of every place where recourse to it is at all likely to be had by planters, or where planters are at all likely to attempt unlawful violence in order to avoid the necessity of having recourse to it.

The original enclosures of your letter are herewith returned.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 85 Ct.), dated Allipore, 3 April 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to submit herewith the Nuddea magistrate's last weekly report on the state of his district. This brings up his narrative to the 31st, on which date I left Kishnaghur.

2. I directed Mr. Herschel to issue an order to the effect explained in his 4th para. I found that in several cases of maltreatment of factory servants, the latter were handed over to the police on a charge sometimes to the effect merely that they had been found trespassing in the village. The impression on the villagers' part that the factory people had no business in their villages was the consequence, in some measure, of the muddud purwanahs which the magistrates were in the habit of issuing on the ryots' petitions some months ago.

3. During

3. During the week that I have been at Kishnaghur I have seen several of the leading planters of the district. None of these gentlemen apprehend any aggressive act on the part of the villagers, or admit that there are grounds for such apprehensions. Who are the writers of the alarming and exaggerated reports which from time to time appear in the public papers I could not ascertain. Residents at the Kishnaghur station, I found, knew nothing of many of the occurrences therein communicated till the Calcutta papers came in.

4. Some of the Nundunpore ryots petitioned me to the purport of the petitions, so many of which have been before Government. The ryots, who were perfectly tractable and reasonable, denied stoutly that they were under advance, and asserted earnestly their wishes to abandon their connexion with the factory as an unprofitable one. The effect of the order just published, in accordance with your letter dated 27th ultimo, No. 1273, which directs the police to explain to the people the provisions of the new law, will probably be to make all these parties sow indigo for this year; but the very coercion which is now as a special measure being applied, will make their aversion to indigo cultivation stronger than ever.

5. The planters quite see this, and all those gentlemen that I have met are prepared for a reform of the present system.

6. I take this opportunity of submitting in original a letter from Mr. Collis, with its enclosure from Mr. Meares, which the former gentleman has requested me to lay before Government, with reference to the remarks made on Mr. Meares' conduct in the Nuddea magistrate's weekly report, dated 18th ultimo. I have not that report before me to refer to, but if Mr. Herschel omitted in it to mention that Mr. Meares had offered 200 rupees to the Doodhpettee villagers, it was either from inadvertence or because he considered the offer inadequate, which he did. He accepted, perhaps, too readily the statement of the villagers as to the amount of property destroyed by the fire.

7. Mr. Molony's demi-official daily reports have throughout the week been favourable. He has warrants out against one or two parties, who have, he thinks, committed themselves by collecting money from the villagers with a view to carrying on the agitation against indigo cultivation.

FIFTH WEEKLY REPORT on the State of the Indigo Districts in Zillah Nuddea, for the Week ending 31 March 1860.

THE district has been comparatively quiet throughout the week.

2. My subdivisional reports are not yet in; they will contain nothing beyond what I can now report, except details of a few slight encounters between the two parties, principally on the question of cattle trespass, or of attachment of crops, or other zemindaree matters.

3. The result in, I believe, every case has been that the planters' servants have been beaten or sent prisoners to the thannah, but in no case has any dangerous bodily harm been done. (In one, which occurred last week, a pyadah had his eyebrow cut open and four teeth knocked out.)

4. This result, however, has compelled me to issue an order to the police which shall, at all events, enable a planter as zemindar to send his servants into a village without the certainty of their heads being broken. I have no fear that the order will be abused. The ryots have clearly exceeded their rights in ejecting the agents of their landlords, and the latter have a clear claim to the support of the police.

5. Mr. Platts, at Kurreempore, mentions in a semi-weekly letter that Mr. Sibbald had reported one riotous assembly, and the accounts from Mr. Tripp's villages are taking the same form as has been the case in almost every concern hitherto. But these are the only two places in which the feeling is reported hotter than before. This, I believe, is only because it began there later. In all other directions it is cooling down. In the south, indeed, everything is reported as quiet as usual, and the ryots are said to be prepared to sow; but from Mr. MacNeil I hear that petitions are being put in by the ryots. The prospect of a settlement there, though not certain, is decidedly hopeful.

6. The villages in Mr. Tripp's line engage at present the most attention, and a party under Lieutenant Robertson of 30 men has been marched from Mehurpore to Bamoondee in consequence, and a similar party from Dahmoorhoodah under a jemadar to Hât-Boleah. The reports of the last two days are more favourable.

7. The planters have, to some extent, been engaging lattials lately; but I am confident that the object of this has been merely self-protection, and that in the presence of the military a number of men will be dismissed.

8. Some of the leading men among the ryots have been in to the station at my call, and have engaged to quiet their followers. Ramrutton has not yet been caught, though twice traced apparently to and from Calcutta. The Joyrampore villagers say they will pay up the penalty rather than sow. This they may perhaps do, as Mr. Meares tells me their cash advances at present are very small; but I doubt whether the example will be followed on a large scale.

9. Mr. Platts has obtained direct proof of instigation against one man whom he has arrested in consequence. I shall report on this case when completed.

10. The new law will commence working on the first petition. Mr. Mackenzie has joined at Hadrah. Mr. Taylor will be at Dahmoorhoodah on Wednesday. Mr. Betts has gone to Jessore.

11. The following is the present disposition of the forces in camp in this zillah:—

W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

From S. E. Collis, Esq., to A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of Nuddea, dated Calcutta, 31 March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to the assertion made by Mr. Herschel to you of the state of the district from the 17th to the 24th of March, which was read out on Saturday last at the meeting of the Legislative Council, and which is as follows:—"In regard to the Doodhpettee fire I regret to say that Mr. Meares has shown no desire to remove the suspicion of the ryots against the factory, a suspicion resting on grounds much stronger than in the Kadjoorah case against the ryots," I have the honour to forward an extract of a letter from Mr. Meares to me. I have also just received a letter from Mr. Tweedie, the manager of the Lokenauthpore division of the concern, in which he states as follows:—"At this season the ryots are in the habit day and night of burning the chaff and refuse of their cold-weather crop, and they are most careless as to the spot chosen for doing so, usually just where it happens to be; the consequence is that fires are frequent, and were the factory people to be responsible for them all, they would be in constant hot water." As to Mr. Meares giving no assistance in the matter, he distinctly told Mr. Herschel he would give 1,000 rupees to find out the culprit, and would give the ryots 200 rupees to assist them in building up their houses. Mr. Tweedie goes on to state, "as to the number of houses burnt, only six ryots' houses were burnt, and every little outhouse and cow-shed must have been counted to make up the exaggerated number 28." Mr. Tweedie further states the sum of 5,000 rupees put down as the loss supposed to have been sustained by the Doodhpettee ryots is a gross exaggeration.

As the assertion of the magistrate has been published, and is likely, if uncontradicted, to do Mr. Meares a serious injury, it is due to him to have his statement of the case heard. I have, therefore, to request you will forward a copy of this letter and enclosure to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

EXTRACT from Mr. Meares' Letter, dated Lokenathpore, 27 March 1860.

I NOT only offered 1,000 rupees to find out who had burnt the houses or who had instigated the burning of them, but I offered the ryots 200 rupees to rebuild the houses. This I did to Mr. Herschel in Mr. Tweedie's presence. I understand there were not more than 20 houses burnt, if that, and I feel sure none of our people had anything to say to the burning, and when I made the offer of 200 rupees I thought it was very liberal, seeing how badly the ryots were behaving. Fires occur every week during the month of March, and if the factory servants are to be made responsible for them all, they will have enough to bear. I have inquired into the case, and, as I said before, I do not believe that any of our people had anything to say to the case.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from D. J. MacNeil, Esq., to the Lieutenant Governor, Calcutta (Bongong, 8 April 1860).

RIOT just reported at Narainpore in Bhagda, 24 miles off. Arrested persons rescued from the police. I start immediately with military police for the place.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 90 Ct.), dated Allipore, 10 April 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to lay before his Honor the Lieutenant Governor the Nuddea magistrate's sixth weekly report, dated the 9th instant.

2. I fear Mr. Maclean's health is again beginning to fail; the heat in tents just now must be trying. I hope arrangements may soon be made for constructing the subdivisional buildings at Damoorhoodah as well as at Bongong.

3. A daily return will be made to me by each officer of adjudications under the new Bill, and next week I shall probably be able to show how this is working. As I have stated in a previous letter, I do not think that there will be many awards, and the planters are right not to press for them, if they see a likelihood of their lands being sown without coercion.

4. The Jessore magistrate's reports are favourable. He also anticipates very few cases under the new Bill.

5. I have no particulars yet from Mr. MacNeil of the riot in Thannah Bagdah, which he yesterday reported by telegraph.

SIXTH WEEKLY REPORT of the State of the Indigo Districts in Zillah Nuddea, for the Week ending 7 April 1860.

UNDER the new law several cases of destruction of indigo have been taken up, and punishment has followed.

The ryots in the south of the district have declared themselves ready to sow, and it is only in the north that they hold out. This is partly owing to the fact that Mr. Maclean has found it impossible to make head against the amount of work thrown on him. I was obliged to return to Damoorhoodah accordingly on Wednesday. I took Mr. Taylor up with me, and on examining Mr. Maclean's file of cases found that, in fact, the machinery of justice had become clogged. I assumed charge of the office for three days, during which I struck off all cases the decision of which was not imperative, and distributed the remainder among Mr. Taylor, stationed at Hât-Boleah, Mr. Maclean at the subdivision, and Mr. Betts, whom I detained for this purpose. The number of collectory cases instituted by the planters has also added enormously to the work on hand. Mr. Maclean is in no way to blame.

The ryots generally are awaiting the first decisions under the law. The planters are averse to bring cases, saying they would rather not press the ryots if they will sow without recourse to law. However, a very large number have now been started at Damoorhoodah, and I expect decisions on them before the end of the week.

On my return from Damoorhoodah on Saturday, I went to one of the villages in the Khal-boleah Concern, where the ryots refused to sow. On explaining the law to them they submitted, it being clear that they had taken their advances: "If that is the order of Government," they said, "of course we must sow." This is the general feeling, and the first decisions under the Act will produce sowings all over the district. I have been urging the planters, therefore, to bring their cases on at once, that the result may be as speedily made known as possible.

The last news in from Mr. Tripp's neighbourhood is that he expects the ryots

While at Damoorhoodah, I had in the Joyrampore ryots. They simply denied that they were under advances for the present year; some of them, they admitted, had taken advances, but the greater part they said had not done so, and, unless ordered to sow, they declined to do it. Their behaviour was perfectly respectful. I took the opportunity while at Damoorhoodah of inquiring into the grounds on which Ramrutton Mouluk was officially reported to have assumed the title of Neel Bansa Binasuk, &c. It is certain the title has never been seen in writing, and how it arose orally I am quite unable to ascertain.

From D. J. MacNeil, Esq., Joint Magistrate of Bongong, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 12), dated Narainpoor, 12 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report for the information of Government that, having received a report on the evening of the 8th instant from the darogah of Bagdha, that he had been attacked by a mob in this place, and that four persons whom he had arrested had been rescued from him, I came down at once to the spot with 30 of the military police. I reached this place at sunset on the 9th, and upon information received from the darogah and others, I arrested the same night in their houses 18 out of 23 offenders, whose names were known. One other person has since been apprehended, and I have convicted the whole 19, and sentenced them to six months' imprisonment and to fine. I have also dismissed seven of the village police, who were present and refused to lend the darogah any assistance.

2. The facts of the case appear to have been as follow:—A petition was presented to the darogah of Bagdha, at Jadabpore, on the 7th instant, by one of the Elasmari factory people, to say that, without the assistance of a burkundaz to keep the peace in Narainpoor, they dared not go into that village to get the indigo sown, and that as rain had fallen, they wished to do so at once. The darogah sent a burkundaz to the spot, and ordered the naib darogah of Mohishpore also to go there and see that no disturbance took place.

3. Another petition was presented to the darogah a few hours afterwards by another of the factory servants, stating that they had actually gone to Narainpoor to sow indigo, and had been driven out by the villagers, and asking leave to go there in person. He did so, and on arriving at Narainpoor on the morning of the 8th instant, he found the naib darogah in the act of reading out to some 25 of the ryots the proclamation, issued by my predecessor three weeks ago under the magistrate's orders. The darogah then read out to the people the purwana and istehar recently issued, which explain the provisions of the new Act. They laughed at him, and said they would obey no such orders.

4. The darogah then inquired from the Elasmari factory gomastah, who was present, who were the principal men among the ryots before him. The gomastah pointed out four persons, mentioning their names. The darogah ordered two burkundazes who were with him and the chowkeedars present to arrest them; the chowkeedars chowkeedars refused, but the burkundazes obeyed his directions and seized the four men pointed out. They had not taken them, however, above 100 yards, when the ryots of the neighbouring villages who had been collecting round, and had apparently been lying in wait out of sight, suddenly appeared to the number of 200 or more, with latties in their hands, laid hold of the darogah's prisoners and dragged them away from the burkundazes, and threatened and abused the darogah himself and his naib. The darogah, seeing how numerous his assailants were, did not attempt to recover the men who had been rescued from him, but retired, and reported the matter to me.

5. The case is therefore one of simple resistance to the police, and would not be of any great importance were it not for its connexion with the ill-feeling prevailing among the ryots towards the indigo planters. That ill-feeling had to a great extent passed away in this part of the district, if indeed there ever has been much of it; but it has suddenly revived, and seems very widely spread. It will be impossible to tell, until another fall of rain occurs, what effect the punishment of these offenders may have upon the neighbourhood; but the last fall has been followed by no sowing throughout the greater part of the lands of the Ketgoora factory. I am assured that only from 200 to 300 beegahs have been sown out of 12,000, though a large portion of them had previously been ploughed up for the purpose.

6. I have every hope that the removal of these individuals whom I have just convicted, and among whom are some of the principal promoters of the opposition to the factory people, will have a very good effect. But the suddenness and extent of this movement among ryots, who only a fortnight ago professed their readiness and willingness to perform their contracts, seems to set all anticipations as to their future behaviour at defiance. Emissaries from other more disaffected parts must be at work among them.

7. Just now all is quiet, and I therefore return to Bongong.

COPY forwarded for the information of the Government of India in the Home Department.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 100 Ct.), dated Allipore, 18 April 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to submit herewith, in original, the Nuddea magistrate's seventh weekly report on the state of that part of his district in which the indigo disputes prevail.

2. I presume that Mr. Herschel refers to Sections I., II., and III. of the law as the contract sections, and to V. and VI. as the penal sections. The planters are acting unwisely for their ultimate interests, if, as here reported, they are trying "to invest the law with greater terror than it really has." No doubt the promulgation of this stringent law and the presence of troops must give them for the moment the advantage of appearing to have the whole weight of Government on their side; but if the ryots, acting on good counsel and appreciating the exceptional character of the late measure, accept this as an order to sow for this year, and reserve the question of their relations with the factories for deliberate decision hereafter, they will occupy a far better position for obtaining their object than the planters, artificially supported as they are, now hold.

3. I cannot help fearing that misrepresentations of the real purport of the law must have had some influence on such ryots as are reported to have taken advances and made contracts since its promulgation.

4. The cases instituted in the Damoorhoodah subdivision have not yet been reported; in one case only, under Section VI., disposed of by Mr. Herschel, has the decision been before me. In Jessore no cases under the new law have yet been instituted.

5. I do not like to see the mention here made of Mr. Betts' having sentenced a mookhtar to six months' imprisonment and fine under Section V. The effect of such a sentence will naturally be to deprive the ryots of legal advice in the management of their cases, which will give the new law a still harsher character than it must now wear. I have sent for the record, and shall report on Mr. Betts' proceedings hereafter, and I shall require a report from the magistrate on the heavy penalties inflicted by Mr. Mackenzie in the cases decided by him under Section VI.

6. I have seen Mr. MacNeil's Report on the Narainpore ryots, and so, I am aware, has his Honor the Lieutenant Governor. The application to the darogah does not appear to me to have been sufficient to justify him in acting on it as he did; but I reserve my opinion on this point till I see the record, and learn the instructions which he gave to the burkundauze when sending him to the village. The factory people should have brought a suit if they had reason to apprehend that the Narainpore ryots would not sow. The darogah's subsequent proceeding in going personally to the spot on a second similar application, and in arresting four persons pointed out by the factory gomastah, as the principal men, in a crowd which had laughed at him, appears to have been arbitrary and injudicious enough to have provoked a more serious riot than that which followed.

SEVENTH WEEKLY REPORT on the State of the Indigo Districts in Zillah Nuddeah, ending 14 April 1860.

THE operation of the new law has began to show itself in the conduct of the people. It has undoubtedly acted as an irritant. The planters, to judge by the complaints put in, are straining every nerve to invest the law with greater terror than it really has, and the sentences passed under it are being held as threats over the ryots, who in several places have agreed to sow, yielding in some to the true bidding of the law, in others to simple fear. I have not yet had a single case preferred to me under the contract section, though I have had several preferred under the penal sections. As a sign of the same tendency to coerce, instead of to sue, the ryot, even under the present most summary law, I should mention that the zemindaree powers of the planters, to eject ryots or to measure their lands, are being largely worked, but a steady disinclination appears to exist to bring the real point at issue into court at once. The only exception that I know of yet is in Mr. Forlong's case, who has instituted several suits at Damoorhoodah. Mr. Maclean (whose file is now reduced to manageable limits) received a great number of cases on Saturday, the 7th, and he has brought a number of them to a decision already, and so have Messrs. Taylor and Betts.

2. Mr. Maclean reports:—"No breach of the peace has taken place in this part of the district, nor have any assemblages on the part of the villagers, or other proceedings likely to disturb the public tranquillity, taken place.

"In the Hardee Thannah, Mr. Taylor has been disposing of the cases brought by Mr. Hills, of Katchicatta, under the Bill to enforce indigo contracts, and the ryots have generally agreed to sow in obedience to orders. Here Mr. Betts and myself have had a good number of cases instituted by the Neechindipoor and Peerpoor factories. For two or three days the ryots steadily refused, and some were committed to the civil gaol in default of payment of the pecuniary award. Yesterday, however, most of those committed by myself agreed to execute their contracts as ordered, and were therefore released, being at the same time warned that any delay would entail serious consequences on them.

"The cases will be duly reported, in obedience to the instructions this day received. I will only remark at present that the ryots have steadily denied the receipt of advances, in the face of the factory accounts, signed by the European assistant, and of the evidence on oath of the dewan who paid the money. No other defence has been put forward beyond this simple denial.

"Trespass and destruction of indigo cases are very few in number. Intimidation and attempts to dissuade have been brought forward, and in one case a mooktear was sentenced by Mr. Betts to imprisonment for six months and fine.

"No cases have yet been tried from the Khalboleah or Lokenathpoor factories."

3. I have

3. I have called for the last case mentioned, as also for one in which Mr. Mackenzie, at Hadrah, has sentenced a number of ryots to imprisonment for six months for cattle destruction of indigo. The penalty in the latter instance appears severe for a first case.

4. The only disturbance occurring since my last Report has been at Narainpoor, in the Bongong subdivision. That it took place at all was owing to the disbelief of the ryots in the authenticity of the orders read out to them. The Report has already been submitted to Government direct by Mr. MacNeil, and I enclose a copy of it herewith. The prompt punishment dealt out will, I think, restore discipline.

5. On the whole, the week has been a critical one, with several sowing showers of rain. In the Mulnath concern, the villages which at first showed greatest opposition have sown as usual. In the north, also, several villages have sown, but the general progress is slow, and the difficulty of facilitating it, without injustice to those ryots whom the law does not affect, is what makes it so.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1838), dated 19 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 100 Ct., dated the 18th instant, enclosing Mr. Herschel's seventh weekly report on the state of the indigo districts in zillah Nuddea. In this special reference is made to the working of the new law, which, Mr. Herschel observes, has been much misrepresented by the planters to the ryots, the sentences passed under it being held out as threats over the latter, with a view to coerce them to take advances. You seem to think that there is good ground for this belief.

The Lieutenant Governor is confident that if, as represented by Mr. Herschel, the planters are straining the law "to invest it with greater terror than it really has," you will see that the magistrates effectively prevent such abuse.

The circumstance you report, that some ryots have entered into agreements and taken advances since the promulgation of the law, is remarkable. It proves at least this, that all the ryots who used to cultivate indigo were not, as a matter of course, under agreement to cultivate this year; and therefore great care is requisite in requiring proof of the agreement whenever the fact is disputed, otherwise grievous injustice may be done.

Mr. Herschel states that in the cases which have been tried, the evidence for the factories was their own books, as to the payment of advances, and the oath of one of their own native servants; whilst no other defence has been put forward than a simple but steady denial of the receipt of advances by the ryot. The Lieutenant Governor makes no doubt that the cases were decided in conformity with substantial justice, and presumes that in this, as in all other civil actions now, the defendant is allowed to give his own evidence on oath, as well as the plaintiff and his native servants. But the manner in which the trials are spoken of makes this a little doubtful. If the case be not so, then justice is not done. When the defendant's oath contradicts that of the plaintiff's native servant, the obvious duty of the judge is to seek out by all means independent evidence, to show which story is the more credible. This duty, it is to be hoped, is never neglected.

The factory books show that advances have been charged to the owner of the factory; but it is not stated that they contain the receipts of the payees; and it is not stated what the evidence of the European assistant who signs them shows regarding the system of payment and entry.

These omissions in Mr. Herschel's report of the general character of these trials, the infliction by Mr. Mackenzie of the extreme penalty for the first case ever tried under the new law for destruction of indigo, and the unexplained sentence of a legal agent of some ryot apparently to imprisonment for six months, show the necessity for the earliest possible revision by you of these proceedings, in order to make it quite sure now, and to be able to make it manifest hereafter, that the principles of equity and moderation are observed by each officer entrusted with the extraordinary powers granted by the new law.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 109 Ct.), dated Allipore, 25 April 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to submit, for the information of Government, the Nuddea magistrate's eighth weekly report, with its enclosure.

2. The cases alluded to as having been brought by Messrs. Hill's concern have been disposed of by Mr. Tayler, and have not yet come before me. I hear, however, that in some cases he has been awarding double penalty, which seems to be beyond the law.

3. I submit for inspection two cases decided by Mr. Herschel, and one decided by Mr. Mackenzie. These records will show his Honor that, at all events, the greatest pains have been taken by both officers to arrive at the truth. I hope all Mr. Tayler's decisions may bear the same evidence. Mr. Betts' certainly do not. The mookhtar, I learn, with great satisfaction, has been released on my report on the case.

4. It will be seen that 279 men have been imprisoned, and nearly two-thirds of them for breach of contract, while the magistrate expects that at least 200 more will be imprisoned for the same offence. I can hardly believe that any man really under contract, or what the magistrate declared to be such, would prefer going to gaol to sowing indigo, and such being the case, I am far from satisfied with the result.

5. Mr. Maclean reports that the Nischindepore and Peerpore suits have succeeded in bringing about a settlement between Mr. Forlong's factories and the cultivators. The Lokenathpore concern is only just beginning to bring suits. Allusion is made in his report to the compromise of some cases of "instigation," and I have sent for the records of these.

6. The magistrate had had to correct a practice which Mr. Maclean had sanctioned in the Damoorhoodah subdivision of stopping the ryots from sowing paddy on what were claimed as indigo lands.

7. Mr. Platt's explanation of the circumstances under which he believes the Cathowly ryots to have lately given contracts is not satisfactory. His cases of "instigation" are being examined by the magistrate.

EIGHTH WEEKLY REPORT of the State of the Indigo Districts in Zillah Nuddea, ending 21 April 1860.

THE district has had its fret and is submitting. Sowings are going on to a very considerable extent.

2d. The contract clauses have been largely worked by Messrs. Hill's concern, and though I regret to say that the number of recusant ryots sent to prison is very large, yet this was to be expected. The law is against precedent to the ryot's mind, and the illiterate populace cannot be taught the change in so brief a space of time without numerous examples.

3d. Resort to the law in this way has become more general since last week, but there are still many planters who hold out, trusting to the examples which are being made to save them the necessity of imprisoning their own ryots. In my last report I attributed this reluctance of the planters to sue the ryot to a desire rather to coerce him. Without retracting that opinion, which I think applied at the time, I do not wish to attribute to the same motive the reluctance of all planters who still keep aloof. The law is being very rapidly impressed on the ryots themselves, and that I believe to be all that is necessary to ensure its object. Many of the planters, therefore, who have not hitherto come into court are acting wisely in abstaining from doing so now.

4th. I have had some difficulty to encounter during the week in controlling the general tendency to hurry matters to a conclusion.

5th. The question is very near its solution, and the temptation to settle it at once is very great. I am waiting anxiously for the reports of the next week, which will tell me whether I have thrown too much weight in the opposite scale.

6th. I enclose copies of the orders to which I refer.

7th. The irritation to which I allude at first has shown itself in a number of assaults and tumultuous gatherings in the Bagdah Thannah, and a tendency in the same direction which which, but for the military police, would have broken out in Damoorhoodah too. As it is, no actual breach has occurred, and Mr. Maclean's report (enclosed) is decidedly cheering.

8th. I enclose also Mr. Platts' report, which I am unable to condense much. It supports, I think, the opinion offered in my last, that the planters were trying the effect of their legal powers in other directions, rather than appeal to the law.

At least 200 men are expected for breach of contract.

Mr. A. T. Maclean's Eighth Weekly Report of the State of the Indigo Districts. Sub-division Damoorhoodah, from 15th to 21st April 1860.

DAMOORHOODAH.

DURING the past week there has been a great improvement in the Nischindapore and Peerpoor villages. In fact, I believe they have universally agreed to sow, taken their seed, and commenced to cultivate. In Joyrampoor the head men had admitted the engagements of the village generally, and promised to effect a settlement within a very few days. I hear they are striving to bring it about, but that their ryots are determined against it. The sowing of paddy has been, I fear, carried to a considerable extent, and the consequence will be, a large number of breach of contract cases. Hitherto none have been brought forward from Lokenathpore; those from Nischindapore and Peerpoor have brought about an universal settlement.

DOULUTGUNGE.

The Khalbolea concern has prosecuted a few ryots for breach of contract, and the advance being proved, the defendants went to jail in default of payment of damages awarded. The village of Shamnuggur, in which alone any active opposition to the factory was going on, is reported by the mooktear to have come to terms with them, and they now expect all to go on smoothly. Two cases pending against Asalut Biswas and others for instigation, &c., have been compromised.

In Hardee the ryots seem less disposed to come round than here, and Mr. Tayler has a great deal of work, I hear.

The darogah reports that the Jhaoodiah ryots were rather insubordinate towards him recently, refusing to admit him to their village; but no actual resistance was offered. I have called for a full report on the case, which originated in some disputes with the factory, some of whose cattle, &c., were carried off. I trust the case will not prove serious.

TO THE DAROGAHS.

The sowings of indigo and rice having commenced, I observe that several police officers are exceeding their authority in attempting to secure quiet by inducing the ryots to sow.

2. I have to call the attention of all police officers to my orders of 21st March, in which the police were absolutely prohibited from using their influence one way or the other. They were directed merely to read the law or other orders out, but not to attempt to explain it. If the ryots do not understand, they must be told to come in to the nearest magistrate.

3. The duties of the police are now much simpler than before. The law is now pretty well understood, and the late orders to read it out in villages where it may be necessary are accordingly stopped, excepting as to the section about destroying indigo. The destruction of indigo is to be prohibited to the utmost. The darogahs will now confine themselves to their usual duty of keeping the peace only.

4. The new law does not give the police any more power than heretofore to either order a ryot to sow indigo or to prohibit him from sowing rice. It merely allows the magistrate after judicial inquiry to order a ryot who has taken advances to sow indigo, and allows the ryot, if he prefers to pay the damages, to sow rice. If he does not pay the damages he will go to prison.

5. This order is not to be published. It is intended for the guidance of yourself and your subordinates, and is to be kept to yourself.

W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

19 April 1860.

TO THE DAROGAHS.

THE enclosed notification is to be simply read out wherever my order prohibiting the interference of the police in the matter may have encouraged the ryots to sow rice to their own and the planter's loss.

23 April 1860.

W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

NOTIFICATION.

I HEAR that several ryots, without thinking of the result, are sowing rice on indigo lands. This is sheer folly and wrong doing of theirs.

The ryots well know, and those who don't may learn it now, that under the new law any crop sown on lands which ought to have been sown in indigo, will be attached by Government to pay the planter's damages.

If after this warning they sow rice on those lands, I have but one word to say: they will lose their crop, and when the commission hakims come, how are they to believe the words of the ryots when they see them show such budzatee?

Let the ryots bear this in mind.

W. J. Herschel,
Officiating Magistrate.

From F. Platts, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Kurreempore, to the Magistrate of Nuddea (No. 76), dated Camp Meherpore, 2 April 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your Memorandum, No. 252, dated 19th April 1860, and the copy accompanying it, of the Commissioner of Nuddea's letter, No. 128, of the 16th April 1860, I have the honour to submit the following information:—

2. Mr. Smith, of Cathowly, came to my cutcherry one morning during the week ending Friday, the 13th April, and mentioned that the ryots of several of his villages had signed kobooleuts to sow indigo, and as others were coming in daily for the same purpose, he was in hopes that he would not have occasion to resort for the fulfilment of his contracts to the Contract Law in force. He stated also, by way of explanation, that he had agreed to reduce by one-half the quantity of land hitherto sown by his ryots with indigo.

3. The fact that many ryots have come to terms with (not only Mr. Smith) planters, has been communicated to me also by the Meherpore darogah; and as no suits for breach of contract have been instituted by Messrs. Tripp, Tessendie, Sibbald, or any other planter, with the exception of the manager of the Ruttonpore concern, it is clear either that matters have been settled, or there is a prospect of arriving at an amicable settlement without resort to litigation.

4. I have no reason to suppose that unlawful measures have been adopted by the gentlemen I have named, to coerce the ryots, for no complaints on that score have been made. It is true that one man presented a petition declaring that he had been forcibly compelled to sign a kobooleut; but he soon after, and without producing his evidence, filed a razeenamah. The ryots of many villages have during the present week brought "notices" to the darogah of this place for explanation, and they proved to be notices of ejectment under section XXI of the Arrears of Rent Law. The men were informed that if their rent was not in arrears, and if they were not liable under the terms of the law of ejectment, their remedy lay with the Collector of the district. I have, however, mentioned this circumstance merely as a probable explanation of the ryots agreeing to cultivate indigo. There is another formidable power (formidable to the ryots) in the hands of the planter, by which he can make the ryot conform to his will. I allude to the system of receiving payment of rent in kind. The planters thus accumulate the greater portion of the grain of the district in their golabarees, and the ryot's chief supply is obtained from these stores. If the planter refuses to sell or supply, the result is obvious.

5. The Commissioner considered it highly improbable that contracts should be renewed now, since "so many alleged contracts are being repudiated." With reference to this opinion I would beg to venture the following facts: 40 cases have been instituted in this court, and 11 men have already appeared as defendants; of these 11, seven acknowledge that the contract to sow exists, and of the seven, four unreservedly admit having received an advance in cash; while the other four say that the advance though made, was never received by them, as it was immediately carried to their credit on account of rent, which they acknowledge to have been due. There remains then the minority of four, who repudiate the contracts and allege that their lands were sown by force.

6. No cases under the new law between the Cathowly proprietor and his ryots have as yet been decided by me. Two or three charges of instigation of ryots, and wanton destruction of indigo crops, are pending and under investigation. I am unable to supply a report of the cases of instigation of ryots decided by me, as the records of all such cases have been forwarded, according to instructions, to your office.

PROCEEDINGS.

Plaintiff, sworn.—I am teshildar of Tengura and others. The ryots of Simla Pauch-potah petitioned to the court against sowing indigo. They wanted me to join them. I refused. They threatened me not to come in to the village again. Now the defendants 1 to . . . give out that they will kill me, and not let me enter the village, and will burn my house. I dare not go into my own house in the village, and I fear any day to hear of my house being burnt.

On being questioned who has said or done this, he states that four days ago defendants 1, 2, and 3 told me this in Simla, at the house of Safi Sheik, near my own house.

Examined.—I am under engagement to sow indigo. The threats now used to me are to deter me from sowing it. I have not dared to enter the village for a month past.

Question. Then how about your being at Safi's house four days ago?—Answer. I did go one night, after hearing this threat. I now live at Bhatchala. My family stay in my house at Simla. I had not been home for a long time. I went only to see my family, not on my master's business.

Why did you stop at Safi's house?—They (his house and mine) are eight yards apart. I saw a number of Mussulam and Gwalabs sitting there. They said, "Salam alaikum," ("Sit here awhile.") I sat down and we talked awhile. They said, "We are going to prosecute our complaint; you must go with us." I refused. They said, "We'll make you." I then went home. I have not removed my family in consequence. I have six and a half beegabs under indigo cultivation, but not sown. As I was sitting there, Puncha and Ishwar came; seeing the majlis, they came after I did from Chunder Roy's golabarree, about one russee off. I left the village early in the morning. I have not had any occasion to go to the village since. I left it a month ago. I generally live at Bhatchala, and go home after an interval of a week or two, or a month or two.

It seems, then, that you went this time much as usual, and without opposition. I do not see that you were under any apprehension when you went home this time?—There has been nothing to do in the village lately. The rents are all collected.

Witness.—Puncharam Ghose.—I and Ishwar, and Ramchunder Roy went to Narainpore in the afternoon. We were returning from Chunder Roy's house. When near Safi's house, we saw defendants 1, 2, and 3 telling plaintiff, "You have agreed to sow indigo for the saheb; if so, we will bezzut you and burn your house, and kill you and your family. If you join us, no one shall be allowed to touch you." Plaintiff objected, and called out, "Do you hear?" Then all the rest of the defendants began to give him abuse and threats. Afterwards plaintiff, by humouring them, got away.

Evades or cannot say what the particular conversation was. Quite impossible to bring him to details.

Went close up to the paura in which they were all sitting. Sat down below it; got a hookah and a smoke there. They had a hubble-bubble passing round. Don't know whether Nobo Biswas was smoking.

Ishwar Sirdar.—Ditto. Says plaintiff called on them to bear witness to the fact that they had threatened to burn his house.

Plaintiff recalled.—Did you call on witnesses to bear witness when the threat of fire was used?—I called them as witnesses to the general conduct of the defendants; I did not do it in consequence of any particular threat used by any particular man. I said, "You be witnesses," and therefore got up and went away. Alum Biswas first used the words, "We'll burn your house." I knew the witnesses before.

Puncharam, re-examined.—I was told then by the plaintiff, "These fellows won't be witnesses; I shall call you." He told us this as he left the place. Alum first said, "We'll burn your house." I was not threatened when plaintiff said, "These fellows won't bear witness; you must."

By defendant's mooktear, who has just come in.—I am a tagadgir of the saheb's.

Ishwar.—After a deal of examination, and being brought to the point by almost leading questions, says, Alum said, "We'll burn your house." I am a nil tagadgir of the saheb's.

I do not believe the charge, and would dismiss it at once; but I prefer taking the defence of the party before deciding whether to put the plaintiff on his defence for preferring a false complaint.

Alum Sheik, defendant.—Denies; declares that Nobo Biswas did not go into the village that day.

Gopal.—The same.

Diyanut.—The same.

DECISION.

I distrust the charge altogether. I find no reason to doubt that plaintiff did go into the village that day. His deposition wears an appearance of truth in this respect; but the only question before me is, what was said at the meeting between himself and the ryots. To prove this he brings two witnesses, who, concealing their service under the plaintiff, put themselves forward as chance ryots of another village accidentally passing the place. They are exposed now as regular paid servants of the plaintiff.

This, and the very unsatisfactory result of the cross-examination, leave me no room to doubt that they were not really present at the meeting. Had they been present, they would have avowed their service, and given it as the reason for their presence.

That two hired witnesses should have been brought is enough to make the plaintiff liable for a false complaint; but I really believe there was a meeting of the two parties, and, before putting him on his defence, I expected to get proof of what really was said at it. The defendants, however, absolutely deny the presence of the plaintiff in the village that day; and, as I cannot believe their assertions on the point, I cannot consider it proved that the plaintiff's deposition is false.

It is certainly not proved true, however, and the defendants are acquitted.

I earnestly hope no more attempts will be made to support these charges by false witnesses. I am aware of the difficulty of procuring witnesses in the present state of affairs; but nothing can justify the deliberate falsification of evidence. Had the story of the defendants appeared to me a reasonable one, I would not have hesitated to act upon it.

PROCEEDINGS.

Plaintiff, sworn.—I am a servant of the Tezaratee of the Hanskhally concern. Defendant in 1859, on the 11th February, took four rupees cash, after settling accounts which showed him to owe 9½ annas. He agreed to sow 2½ biggahs year by year from 1859 to 1863-64, for five years. He gave a written koboolyat. Now they won't sow.

Files the koboolyat.

Plaintiff examined.—The koboolyat was signed in my presence.

By Defendant's Mooktear.—The gomastha, Somnath Gangoolee, gave the money at the time. Mr. Hampton was then there in his room. The money was given to the dufturkhana of the press-house.

I am now tezaratee gomastha to the factory. I have no connexion with the indigo department of the factory. I live in village Bhadjanala, I know that the agreement specifies five years, and that it fixes 10 rupees a beegah as penalty for not cultivating. I do not remember any of the other stipulations. Joynarain Biswas signed the paper as having been drafted by him. Hirmath Sheik the same. The other witnesses were Keemoo Sheikh, who touched the pen; there was a Brahmin, a mohurrir of Mr. Hampton's time there, who wrote the names for the witnesses who could not write; I don't know his name. There were present also Bansi Sheikh, Baboo Sheikh, and Nazir Sheikh, that mohurrir, a Brahmin, filled in the blanks in the printed koboolyat as well as the names. I cannot say whether my name was given in by my employers as a servant in the issonnavessee of that time.

By the Court.—I was tezaratee servant at that time in the same position that I am now. The tezaratee papers were then kept at Hanskhally.

By the Mooktear.—I am employed mostly at the Golabaree, where I have to attend the actual business. I keep papers of my own wherever I am, and send up reports, &c., to the factory.

I have given evidence in one case under Act X. of 1859.

By Defendant.—The saheb got the paper from Calcutta. I know because I asked at the time. I am not called on to see these papers often. I cannot say I have ever seen more of them.

The whole of Dokhinpara was in that day to settle accounts. I am not a witness to all these koboolyats, I am merely prosecutor. I have no mooktearnama. I am on behalf of my master. I went that day only to the factory, I was not stopping there then, I went there in the morning and returned in the afternoon.

By the Court.—I had nothing whatever there to do with what was going on. I happened to see what was done. I am now prosecutor as representative of the factory.

The writing began at four dundo, i. e., I went there then and staid till the afternoon. The witnesses swear to the koboolyat.

Witness Joynarain examined.—Is a servant of plaintiff's master, Was at Oomedwar there when the koboolyat was written. I have now been engaged as mohurrir for two or three months in Lakigachcha factory. After thinking, "I receive three rupees a month;" I have written in the zemindaree books of that factory.

I staid in the factory as oomedwar, was there writing at 1½ pohur din. Great numbers were signed, I only signed on six papers. I know nothing about any others, I don't know the the name of the mohurrir who wrote the koboolyat. He was a Brahmin oomedwar who came up from Calcutta. I do not know all the ryots of Dokhinpara, I knew these six because they came that day. I have not seen them since. I can recognise them all six now. The koboolyat was given to the dewan. With myself, there were seven witnesses. I cannot say without looking at the koboolyat for how much each koboolyat was. Bolai and Bikal signed by mark; the others wrote themselves.

Cannot say when the jamonsthamce was.

Nazir Seikh, Witness.—I went with a letter to Hanskhally. I saw the ryots signing koboolyats. I am tagadgir of Chitrosail Factory. I saw Bolai sign and was made a witness in the case. Somenath Brahmin was then dewan, Mr. Hampton was in charge of the factory. Names the witness. The koboolyat was written by a Brahmin of Mr. Hampton's oomedwaree, I don't know his name.

Hirmat.—I went with wood on hire to Hanskhally. Saw the koboolyat being settled. I saw Bolai give a koboolyat (names all the conditions).

DECISION.

I cannot support this case.

These witnesses are, I regret to say, utterly untrustworthy. They are, without exception, men who have no natural connexion with the preparation of the koboolyat. This document I observe is an excellently printed one on stamped paper, with the year on which the agreement was to be made, printed on it. It is not probable that an agreement so well got up would have been concluded without better witnesses to it than a rice agent, who has nothing whatever to do with indigo; an oomedwar, who, after a year of attendance has obtained now a mohurrir's appointment on three rupees a month; a tagadgir of another factory, who happened to have come to the spot with a letter; again, men who happened to be bringing wood to the factory, and a mohurrir who was seeking employment from the assistant in charge of the factory at the time, who also wrote in the blank spaces in the form, but whose name no one knows, nor where he now is. Judging by the manner of the witnesses and their appearances, I come to the same conclusion, viz., that the witnesses are false witnesses, and that the koboolyat was never given.

No factory accounts are given in; the whole case depends absolutely on the reliability of the evidence offered to the simple signature of the koboolyat, and that breaks down completely.

I dismiss the case.

Offence committed at 3 p.m., on the 24th Cheyth, or 5th April 1860. Complaint preferred 6th April, or 25th Cheyth.	Same as charged Section VI. of the New Bill for enforcing the fulfilment for indigo contracts.	Six months' imprisonment each, with labour commutable to fines of fifty rupees each, to be paid within one week.

Decision, and grounds thereof, under Act XXXIII. of 1854.

This complaint has been instituted under the provisions of Section VI. of the new Bill to enforce the fulfilment of indigo contracts.

Complainant, sworn on the 6th instant, deposes that as he was on his way to the Rariarah Haut at about 3 p. m. on the day previous, he saw the undermentioned villagers of Beerpore (who have taken advances to sow indigo and have actually sown indigo), ploughing up a field of indigo with seven ploughs; the field was Kalla Moolook Chand Sheikh's, and the men ploughing were the said Kalla Moolook Chand Sheikh, Teencowrie Ghorami, Nocollee Sheikh, Jugroo Sheikh, Kabil Sheik, Mehar Alli Sheik, Kamal Mundul, Nondo Das, and Deeno Ghose, the latter was merely standing with a latee in his hand. Complainant forbade them to break up the indigo, they were about (or attempted) to beat him. They broke up about two beegahs of plant.

Immediately on taking complainant's deposition I directed the issue of summons on the defendants, and immediately proceeded in person to the spot.

I found on examination of the field, which had been ploughed up, shoots of young grown indigo plant, and from the slender size of the shoots, I have no doubt whatever the plant was of October sowing, and not old stumps of last year with new leaves, as alleged by Moolook Chand and others in his behalf. Some old stumps of last year, with new leaves on them, were plucked up by the ryots from an adjoining potit field, and handed to me, but on comparing these stumps with the young plant growing on the ploughed field, which I had myself plucked up, and which had been taken up for me, it was clear to me beyond doubt, that young growing plant had been ploughed up, and equally clear that the indigo growing on the potit field was of last year's sowing (i. e. old stumps with new leaves).

A north-wester coming on, prevented me making a more minute examination, but I am perfectly satisfied that young growing indigo plant was ploughed up.

On the following day (the 7th instant), complainant was subjected to a severe cross-examination in the presence of the seven defendants present. On being confronted with defendants he at once identified them. Complainant swears Moolook Chand took an advance from the factory, also sixteen seers of indigo seed, agreeing to sow four beegahs of land, and that the indigo in question which has been ploughed up, was sown by Moolook Chand himself in the end of Assin or beginning of the month of Kartick last.

Witness No. 1, Modoo Raj, burkundaz, examined on the 7th in the presence of the accused? deposes in chief to the same effect as complainant in his examination in chief. He also proves the taking of the advance and of the seed by Moolook Chand, and the sowing of the seed by Moolook Chand.

Witness No. 2, Chamroo Boonwa, deposes to the like effect in chief. He also saw Moolook Chand taking indigo seed from the factory.

Witness No. 3, Girdhur Boonwa, deposes to the same effect in chief. He saw indigo plant growing on the field, but did not see Moolook Chand take an advance or seed.

Complainant files Moolook Chand's written agreement to sow four beegahs of indigo. It appears from this document, which is on a two annas stamp paper, that Moolook Chand took an advance in cash of two rupees; that the former balance against him was Rs. 10. 1. 3., and that he became also liable for the two annas, the value of the stamp, in all Rs. 12. 3. 3. The agreement bears date the 25th September, or 10th Assin last, and by a clause in the agreement Moolook Chand agrees to sow indigo for five years.

The defendant Moolook Chand denies that any indigo was sown in the field in question this year. He alleges he cultivated sugar-cane in the field formerly; that he cut and took the sugar-cane in the month of Falgoon of last year, that in the end of the month of Bysack, or in the beginning of the month of Jeyth, the factory people chittaowed indigo seed by force in the land; that the indigo crop, however, was not a good one; that some large plant was cut and taken, and the small plant was allowed to remain; that he ploughed the land in Kartick, sowed and raised a crop of rye and sursoo; that he again ploughed the land about twenty days before in order to sow dhan. He denies having ploughed up and destroyed any plant of this year, that two or three of the old plants may have remained standing in the field; that what indigo he has sown this year he has carefully prepared, and so on. He denies having taken an advance or any seed. His lands were sown by force by the factory people. He states he preferred a general complaint with others against the oppressions of the planter both at Kishnaghur and at Calcutta, but did not prefer any specific complaint. He denies having executed any agreement.

Hasroo Mundul, the first witness examined in support of Moolook Chand's defence, proves that sugar-cane was formerly cultivated on the land, and that he heard the factory people had forcibly sown indigo in the month of Bysack last, but that he does not know whether indigo or what crop was cultivated on the land, this year.

Baboo Mundul deposes to the like effect in chief.

Noyan Seikh ditto more in detail. He also deposes that in Assin last, Moolook Chand ploughed the land and sowed sursoo. Cannot say whether there was any indigo on the ground, when the sursoo was sown. Cannot say whether Moolook Chand sowed indigo this year. Did not see him take an advance. He calls Moolook Chand "Nana" (grandfather) and so on.

Dhonei Seikh to like effect with some variance. The indigo on the land only the old stalks. Calls Moolook Chand "Mamma" (uncle).

Jhoroo Mundul, deposes much to the same effect.

He does not know whether any indigo was sown this year or not and so on.

Hakeem Mundul to like effect calls Moolook Chand "Mammoo" (uncle).

Soojhan Rai saw that the field had been ploughed this Cheyth. Saw sursoo in the field in Agraun, cannot say whether indigo was sown in the land in Assin or Kartick last. And so on.

The defendant Nondo Das pleads denial and alibi. He was at Shabatee, half a cos from Beerpore, at the time of the alleged outrage. He says the factory has been quarrelling with his village folks for the past six months, and that the factory people sowed six or seven beegahs of his land by force in the month of Kartick last.

The witness Hantkoora Mundul, Bolai Das and Jadoo Das support the alibi.

The defendant Nocollee Sheikh pleads denial.

He grazes cattle and is not a ploughman. He will not cultivate indigo; hence the complaint against him. His brother Meghai Mundul, who is one in food with him, has a khada and a half of land; the sahib wants his land for indigo.

The witness Lalmohun Seikh supports the defence; he also swears he met defendant on the Chatoree mat at the time of alleged offence, and eat rice with defendant.

His other witness Pathari Sheikh does not know whether he broke up the indigo or not, but proves he grazes cattle and does not follow the plough.

8. The defendant Teencowrie Mundul pleads denial. He inquires why he should break up indigo in another man's field, when he has not done so to the indigo grown forcibly on his own lands, that he has four khadas of land, seven or eight beegahs of which have been forcibly sown in indigo; that there is now indigo plant on the whole seven or eight beegahs, and that he does not plough with his own hands.

His servant, the witness Jooran Sheikh, proves that he does not put his own hand to the plough, that his two brothers and two servants plough, and so on.

His other servant, Nocollee Sheikh, deposes to the like effect. He does not know whether Teencowrie broke up the indigo or not.

The defendant Kabil Mundul pleads denial. Knows nothing. He does not sow indigo, hence the complaint. He has three khadas of land, seven or eight kooras of which were sown by force in indigo in the month of Assin last. He is a Koyal.

His witnesses Nazir Sheikh, and Anundo Sheikh, prove he is the village Koyal, and that he is not a cultivator though he has land.

The defendant Joyroo Sheikh pleads denial; cannot say why he has been complained against. His "baree" is about 40 russees from Moclook Sheikh's. Has one and a half khada of land and one plough, about ten cottahs of which have been forcibly sown down in indigo.

His witness, Badal Sheikh, does not know whether defendant broke up the sahib's indigo. The defendant is a brother-in-law of the witness, &c.

His other witness, Moodee Sheikh, says Joyroo is a peaceful man. They plough together, &c.

The defendant Meher Ali pleads denial and alibi. He has been complained against because he would not allow indigo to be sown by force. He is a servant of the widow of Hurrochunder Bose.

This witness Harran Sheikh proves he was ploughing in his company, but cannot remember the day of the month, or of the week. Cannot say whether defendant broke up the indigo or not. And so on.

His other witness Khoshal Sheikh is a fellow-servant of defendant's. He deposes to the like effect, but remembers the day of the week, it was last Thursday. Cannot say whether defendant broke up indigo or not. And so on.

Upon careful consideration of the whole of the evidence recorded in this case and after local observation, I see no sufficient reason to doubt the bona fides of the complaint, with respect to one and all of the defendants. The villagers of Beerpore are all combined to sow no more indigo, and I see no reason to doubt make common cause against the factory.

I convict and sentence as detailed in columns 7 and 8, and hope the punishment awarded will teach the villagers of Beerpore a wholesome lesson, and act as a deterrent to others. Should it prove ineffectual, and another complaint of the same kind be proved against the villagers to my satisfaction, I will not hesitate to award the maximum amount of punishment allowed by the law.

Camp Burra Andooleea,
10 April 1860.

L. Mackenzie,
Deputy Magistrate.

The deputy magistrate appears to have gone most carefully into the case, and to have given every consideration to the evidence offered. The conclusion as to the guilt of the prisoners is undoubtedly correct, but the punishment appears too severe for the first case tried under a new law. It must be borne in mind that though the ryots were no doubt anxious to get rid of their obligation to the factory, yet till this new law was passed they were not criminally liable for the acts they have committed. It is not fair to say that because before the law was altered they, believing that they were allowed to do so, did destroy indigo, therefore their guilt is greater if they do so now, that such an act is declared a crime. A sentence of one month would have been sufficient to prevent a repetition of the offence in that village.

N.B.—In these cases it is to be observed that the law makes no mention of any contract. "Growing indigo" is to be protected. It does not matter in the least whose it is or why it was sown. The planter's assertion that he has an interest in it is sufficient to entitle him to prosecute, and now that the act is declared a crime malice may be inferred from the act itself.

— No. 25. —

From the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated 7 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor has seen in the public prints, and also received private intimation of a very serious outrage, which is reported to have occurred at Alipore, near Aurungabad, in the district of Moorshedabad, on the 24th February. The circumstances connected with this case, as it has been represented, are, that certain ryots connected with the Ankoora and Kalapanee Factories, in consequence of the grievous oppression and extortion of the gomashtha of one of these factories, attacked and pursued him into the factory, when they either beat him to death or left him very dangerously wounded.

It has also been reported that, in consequence of the excited state of the people, the assistant of the manager of these factories had to make his escape from the factory, in company with the members of his family, on foot.

As the above case appears to be one of a very serious and aggravated nature, involving the peace and security of an important subdivision of the Moorshedabad district, you will be so good as to report immediately what particulars have reached you regarding it, and what measures have been or are now being adopted in consequence. Should the circumstances of the case, as above detailed, be found to be generally correct, the Lieutenant Governor requests you to explain why you omitted to bring so serious a matter to his notice, in accordance with the tenor of the instructions issued on the abolition of the quarterly statements, that all important cases should be separately and immediately reported to Government.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. C.), dated Rajshahye, 11 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt (this morning) of your letter (No. A.), dated the 7th instant, and in reply to state that no intimation of the serious outrage therein mentioned has reached this office. I have called upon the magistrate of Moorshedabad for an immediate report on the subject, and on receipt of his reply the result shall be communicated to you.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 489), dated Rajshahye, 19 March 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter (No. C.), of the 11th instant, I have the honour to forward a copy of one from the magistrate of Moorshedabad, reporting the particulars of the recent disturbances in the neighbourhood of the Ankoora and Kalapanee Factories in that district.

2. It will be seen that nothing more serious has occurred than the beating of the factory gomashtha, whose oppressive conduct is said to have been the sole cause of the disturbance, and that the matter has since been amicably settled.

3. Adverting, however, to the excitement prevailing among the ryots in that part of the district, I have deemed it advisable, as a precautionary measure, to send over a detachment of the military police, to be at hand in case of their services being required.

From W. Morris Beaufort, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 25), dated Berhampore, 15
March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter (No. B.), of the 11th instant, I have the honour to inform you, that on the 24th ultimo a report was received from the darogah of Shumsheergunge, Shumsheergunge, that the chowkeedar of Mumreypore had given information that the manager of the factory at Ankoorah had surrounded the village for the purpose of plundering it, and that the villagers had collected at Nutoonhat to the number of 3,000 to resist the attack. Two days afterwards (on the 26th) a further report was received from the darogah, who had in the meanwhile gone to the spot himself. He stated that he, together with the darogah of Sooty, arrived at Mohadebnugger, the scene of the disturbance, at night, and in the morning deputed the mohurrir to look for traces of the plunder referred to in his report of the previous day, and to prevent the ryots of Mumreypore from committing any riot, and he himself proceeded to Shaukparah and its adjacent villages, where he found that the villagers had been collected in numbers at different places by beat of drum. He went to these several parties, explained to them the folly of what they were about to do, and the consequences likely to result from it; he cautioned them to desist from all breach of the peace, and at least to suspend all operations till the arrival of the hakim on the spot, when full justice would be done to their grievances, to which they acceded, though they refused to disperse. When reporting the above circumstances, the darogah received intimation from Ameerudeen, burkundaz of the Hazarparah Phawree, that Morad Biswas had come to the house of Shahas Mundle, of Mohadebnuggur, to concert plans for an attack upon the Kalapanee Factory, and the murder of the manager. Notice was immediately sent of the matter to Mr. Rice, with a request that he would at once quit the place, and the darogah succeeded in preventing the rioters, already advanced as far as Kalapanee and Protapgunge, from committing any disturbance on that day.

That the planters on the other hand were assembling armed men to attack the ryots, and that he could not investigate the case of Taffazzal Hossen, gomashita, as the witnesses named in the plaintiff's deposition had all fled.

2. This information the officiating joint magistrate communicated to me in the interior of the district demi-officially, proposing to send the deputy magistrate, Baboo Sreesh Chunder Vidyarutna, to the spot. In reply I sanctioned the deputation of the deputy magistrate, and suggested that a very strong body of police should also be sent.

3. The deputy magistrate and the police reached the scene of action on the 29th idem, and found that the facts had been much exaggerated. The factory gomashita had indeed been beaten, but not so as in any way to endanger his life, and the people had dispersed. Mr. Rice, too, the assistant at Kalapanee Factory, had left it with his family on the advice of the police, as a precautionary measure, and had gone to another factory named Noorpoor. The disturbance appeared, as the deputy magistrate reports, to have been caused solely by the oppressive conduct of the factory gomashita, who was beaten; and though the rioters did go to Mr. Rice's factory, they went away again peaceably when they were told that he was not there.

4. As both the zemindaree and the factories belong to the same person, Mr. David Andrews, both parties very soon came to the determination that it would be best to make up their quarrel, and therefore when the officiating joint magistrate applied to me for my advice as to whether he should allow them to compromise the matter, I recommended him to comply with their wishes to avoid re-exciting or making permanent the bad feeling which had been raised, and because if they were determined to hush up the matter we should find no evidence upon which to prosecute.

5. With reference to no report of the affair having been sent to you, I have the honour to enclose a copy of the officiating joint magistrate's explanation of his having neglected to send to you information of the disturbance, and in extenuation of my own share in the neglect in not having myself seen that a proper report was submitted, I venture to state that I was in the interior of the district at the time when I received Mr. Alexander's report, which was merely the demi-official communication which I have before alluded to in para. 2.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1271), dated 27 March 1860.

Sir,

No. C. dated 11th instant.
No. 489, dated the 19th instant, with enclosures.

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, noted on the margin, regarding the disturbance in the Aurungabad subdivision, alluded to in Mr. Officiating Secretary Lushington's letter, No. A, dated the 7th instant, and in reply, to state, that from what he heard of this case at Alipore, in that subdivision, the Lieutenant Governor cannot bring himself to believe that the report now before him, which makes light of the case, is founded upon full and correct information of the facts.

2. I am to remark that from first to last the case appears to have been most weakly and improperly treated by the magistrate, and the Lieutenant Governor is of opinion that the virtual ignoring of this disturbance, which occurred last month, may have led to the further serious outbreaks which have taken place within the last few days.

3. The officiating joint magistrate, Mr. Alexander, who appears to have been entrusted with the police charge, seems to the Lieutenant Governor to be deserving of very severe censure for not having immediately reported the occurrence, and for not having proceeded on the instant to the spot. Very great blame also attaches to Mr. Beaufort, who, as the magistrate of the district, is in fact the officer to be held primarily responsible. You are requested to intimate to these officers the very unfavourable opinion which the Lieutenant Governor has formed of their conduct in this case.

4. The Lieutenant Governor now desires that a full inquiry may be made into the affair, and you are requested to place the investigation in the hands of Mr. Wood, who has been placed in temporary charge of the Aurungabad subdivision, and to whom orders on the subject have this day been issued direct.

5. It must be ascertained what numbers were engaged in the affair; what temper they showed; whether it is true that the factory gomastah was left for dead; what exactly were the injuries which he received; what were the particular acts of oppression which, as is now at last reported, induced the villagers to make this attack upon him, and how long such oppression had been practised; what the owner or manager of the factory had done to check, encourage, or instigate such oppression; and in whose interest and for whose profit such acts were committed.

6. The stories current and credited, of oppression in the quarter in question, are such, that if those connected with the factory are not culpable, inquiry is due to them; and if they are, it is due to the public that criminal proceedings should be instituted against the guilty parties.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Browne Wood, Esq., Assistant Commissioner, Sonthal Pergunnahs, in temporary charge of the Subdivision of Aurungabad, Moorshedabad (No. 1272), dated 27 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you a copy of the correspondence noted on the margin, relative to a disturbance which occurred on the 24th ultimo in the neighbourhood of certain indigo factories in the Aurungabad sub-division, and to request that you will institute a full and searching investigation into the circumstances of the case, submitting a report of your proceedings for the Lieutenant Governor's consideration. As to the time suitable for commencing the inquiry, the Lieutenant Governor desires that you will exercise your discretion with reference to the state of feeling on the spot.

To Commissioner Rajshahye, No. A, dated 7th instant.
From ditto, No. C, dated 11th instant.
From ditto, No. 489, dated 19th inst.
To ditto, No. , with enclosure of this day's date.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 573), dated Rajshahye, 9 April 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 1271, dated the 27th ultimo, I have the honour to forward for the Lieutenant Governor's consideration, a copy of the explanation explanation furnished by Mr. Beaufort regarding his conduct in the case therein alluded to. I think it is to be regretted that Mr. Alexander did not proceed to the scene of the disturbance in person, instead of sending the native deputy magistrate, who seems to have been rather hasty in admitting a compromise, without taking any material guarantees from the parties for the preservation of the peace.

3. The papers of the case have been made over to Mr. Wood, with extracts paras. 4 to 6 of your letter under acknowledgment, and on completion of his inquiries a full report shall be submitted. In the mean time, I purpose proceeding up the river to Aurungabad for a few days to see how matters are going on there; according to the last accounts received from Mr. Furrell, the ryots were leaving their villages.

From W. Morris Beaufort, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 278), dated Berhampore, 4 April 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 10 Ct., of the 31st ultimo, I have the honour to inform you that all the papers regarding the attack upon Ankoorah Factory were forwarded by me many days ago to Mr. Assistant Farrell by whom they were of course made over to Mr. Wood when he received charge of the Aurungabad Subdivision.

2. I regret exceedingly to observe the severe censure which his Honor the Lieutenant Governor has passed upon my conduct, and as I am conscious of having acted throughout entirely for the best, I trust that I may be permitted to submit through you the following explanation of the proceedings which have drawn down upon me his Honor's displeasure.

3. When I received from Mr. Alexander, on the 27th of February, the first report of this outrage, I was away from the station on duty in the interior of the district. The only officers in the district were Mr. Alexander, Mr. Kean, and the deputy magistrate, Baboo Sreeshchunder Vidyaratna. The first was engaged in preparing for committal to the Supreme Court that heavy case of attack upon Mr. Vivian, attended with the murder of a chowkedar, in which eight privates in Her Majesty's 73d Foot were the prisoners. Had he not been so tied to the station I should undoubtedly have requested him to proceed at once to Ankoorah in person.

4. Mr. Kean was in charge of the current duties of the collectorate, and it was therefore impossible to send him.

5. Thus my only alternative was to request Mr. Alexander to depute the deputy magistrate with a very strong body of police.

6. On the return of Baboo Sreeshchunder Vidyaratna from the interior, he came to me in office and reported that the gomastah's injuries had been very much exaggerated; that everything had been composed again, and that as Mr. David Andrews was not only the proprietor of the factory but also the owner of the land, all parties had made up their minds to compromise the disturbance, and it was under this impression alone, that when Mr. Alexander wrote to request my advice as to whether he should admit the compromise or not, I recommended him to do so in order to avoid re-exciting any bad feeling which had existed between the parties, and because it is impossible to obtain evidence in the face of a determination to hush up any matter. I was in hopes, I may add, that the beating which the gomastah had received from the ryots, and which I have no doubt that he richly deserved, would deter him and his fellows from similar acts of oppression. It was not until I went to Soote myself on the 24th of last month, that is, exactly one month after the occurrence, and had an interview with Mr. Macleod, Mr. David Andrews, head manager of the Aurungabad concern, that I became aware that I had been entirely misled as to the feelings of both parties. I then found out that the compromise had been forced by the deputy magistrate; that Mr. Macleod was no party to it; and that it had been admitted without anything more than a verbal promise on the part of the ryots that there should be no more disturbances, and that they would continue to cultivate their lands as before. I regret exceedingly that I was thus misled, and that acting upon this misinformation, I advised Mr. Alexander, the joint magistrate, to confirm the compromise; my having done so was, I assure you, owing to no want of vigour in intention, but simply to my having been led to believe that the quarrel was entirely at an end.

I trust that his Honor the Lieutenant Governor will consider this explanation satisfactory, and exonerate me from all blame in the matter.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1766), dated 14 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 573, dated the 9th instant, and in reply to state that from Mr. Beaufort's letter of explanation therewith submitted, it appears to the Lieutenant Governor that both he and Mr. Alexander have been deceived in the matter of the Aurungabad disturbances; but he remains under the impression that if the magistrate had known as much as he ought to have known of what was going on in his district, and if he had had his police properly in hand, he could not have been so deceived.

2. Nothing is said of any proceedings in regard to the conduct of the deputy magistrate, Baboo Sreesh Chunder Vidyarutna, in this affair. This must not be passed over. I am to request, therefore, that his conduct may be inquired into and reported upon, as well as that of the police, in the course of Mr. Wood's investigation.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 481), dated 18 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to forward, for the information of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, a copy of a report which I have just received from Moorshedabad, regarding a combination among the ryots of certain villages in the Shumsheergunge thannah, for the purpose of opposing any attempts to force them to sow indigo, together with a copy of the instructions which I have sent to the magistrate in consequence.

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 23), dated 14 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to state for your information that I have this day received intimation from the Shumsheergunge darogah, that the ryots of Kassimnuggur, Meertollah, Panchgachea, and 10 or 15 other villages, within the jurisdiction of the said thannah, have colluded together and assembled in numbers with the intention of opposing all attempts made to cause them to sow indigo. Mr. Lyon, superintendent of the Baniagram Factory (six miles from the Kalapanee Factory), is likewise said to have assembled as many of his subordinates as possible for the purpose, no doubt, of forcing the ryots to sow indigo.

2. Should he attempt to do so, in the present excited state of the villagers, a serious disturbance will inevitably take place between both parties.

3. Under these circumstances I have thought it expedient to write to him to warn him against any oppressive measures, which would infallibly tend not to quiet but to render much worse the present state of affairs.

4. I have further ordered the Mirzapore and Khamrah darogahs to proceed immediately to the spot, with as many burkundauzes as are available at their respective thannahs.

5. A similar order has likewise been sent to the mohurrir of Hazarpoora Pharree (distance one mile from the place of the disturbance), and he has likewise been called upon to state why he has up to this time given no intimation of this affair.

6. In conclusion, I would mention that I have every hope that this matter may be settled amicably, as Messrs. Macleod, Gordon, and Ridge, managers of Mr.

David

David Andrews' concern, are now stated to be at the Ancoora Factory for the express purpose of coming to a favourable understanding with the ryots of the adjacent villages, who were reported before this to have assembled in a similar manner, for a similar purpose, as in the present instance.

7. A further report will be submitted hereafter.

From W. M. Beaufort, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad (No. 24), dated 15 March 1860.

FORWARDED to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, for his information.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, to the Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad (No. 480), dated 18 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your office memorandum of the 15th instant, No. 24, forwarding copy of a letter to your address from the officiating joint magistrate of your district, under date the 14th idem, No. 23, reporting that certain villagers within the jurisdiction of thannah Shumsheergunge, have combined together and assembled for the purpose of opposing all attempts made to cause them to sow indigo, and that Mr. Lyon, the superintendent of the Baniagram Factory, is said to have assembled as many of his subordinates as possible, with the intention, it is supposed, of forcing the ryots to sow.

2. The measures taken by Mr. Alexander to prevent a serious disturbance taking place are approved of, but I should have preferred his proceeding in person to the spot, which you will be pleased to direct him to do, should the matter not have been settled amicably ere this reaches you: you will, of course, impress upon Mr. Alexander the necessity of his observing the strictest impartiality in his proceedings, which should be directed solely to maintaining the peace of the district; with which view, the ryots should be required to disperse and return peaceably to their homes, while any attempt on the part of Mr. Lyon, to force them to sow indigo, should be at once repressed.

3. You are requested to keep me duly informed of what is done in this matter.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1135), dated 23 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter No. 481, dated the 18th instant, with its enclosures, reporting a combination among the ryots of certain villages in the Shumsheergunge thannah, in Moorshedabad, for the purpose of opposing any attempts which might be made on the part of Mr. Lyon, the superintendent of the Baniagram Factory.

2. In reply, I am desired to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor approves of the instructions issued by you to the officiating magistrate, Mr. Beaufort, for the preservation of the peace. It is much to be hoped that both parties will come to an amicable settlement. The magistrate must, in any case, keep the peace, and prevent all riotous or menacing assemblages.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Assistant Commissioner of Rajmahal, to the Secretary to Government of Bengal (No. 3008), dated 21 March 1860.

MR. DOYLE of Nimtollah, bringing to my notice that ryots of Moorshedabad Division were sending inflammatory letters to ryots of this division, calling upon all not to cultivate indigo, threatening them with destruction of their houses and property if they did, also subscribing oaths to both Hindoos and Mussulmans, I proceeded to Nimtollah, succeeded in tracing and apprehending one of the chief conspirators, who, seeing proofs strong against him, admitted, yesterday, in his defence, that he had written one of the intercepted letters, and implicated others concerned in above conspiracy. I sent him off on my elephant to Rajmahal this morning; a large body of armed Moorshedabad ryots forcibly rescued the prisoner near Radhanuggur, in this division, and threatened to destroy Mr. Doyle's factory in consequence of the intimation he had given me; I have, therefore, despatched a small party of sepoys for that gentleman's protection. The whole country from Aurungabad to the boundary of this division are of one mind, and will not even allow those inclined to cultivate to do so. Ryots meet by beat of tom-tom, in very great numbers, both by day and night, as I have myself witnessed last night, and night before, and this morning. Mr. Lyon is threatened at Bunyagaon, the factory surrounded by highly excited ryots, and a fracas momentarily expected. Cuddumsar Factory, near Bunyagaon, said to have been looted. Gomastah, of Doobreebunna Factory, said to have been severely beaten, and Furteepore Factory, across the river, in Jellas Mullah, said to have been plundered of all factory papers. No magisterial authorities between Berhampore and my division, distance 70 miles; ryots, therefore, have it all their own way. Planters and their servants are confined to their houses, and, if energetic measures are not at once taken, the conspiracy will extend upwards towards Maldah district and this division; ryots put up by zemindars and their subordinates.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Assistant Commissioner, Sonthal Pergunnahs, Rajmahal, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No. 3015), dated 21 March 1860.

JUST received intimation from Mr. Lyon, that he has been attacked by hosts of men, and still more are assembling. He entreats assistance; Bunyagaon is in the Moorshedabad Division, not mine. May I go with my remaining Goorkha sepoys, 20 in number?

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Secretary to Government of Bengal, Calcutta, to the Telegraph Office, Rajmahal (No. 1158), dated 22 March 1860, 10-45 A. M.

PLEASE forward by express the following very urgent message to Mr. W. L. Robinson, the Deputy Commissioner of the Sonthal Pergunnahs, wherever he may be.—Message: Go with all possible expedition to Moorshedabad, where you have been appointed to officiate as Magistrate and Collector; make over charge of your present office to Mr. Yule, by letter.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from A. R. Thompson, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta, to B. Wood, Esq., Assistant Commissioner, Rajmahal (No. 1131), dated 22 March 1860, 12-20 P. M.

You are vested with powers of a magistrate in the district of Moorshedabad. Take charge at once of the Aurungabad subdivision. Take as many military police as you can get. Troops will be sent to you up the line of railway as fast as possible. Always put the date and hour of your telegrams.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from Calcutta, 22d March, noon, from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Rampore Haut, to Mr. Perry or Mr. Hampton.

“PLEASE forward the following very urgent message by the express to Mr. W. M. Beaufort, the magistrate of Moorshedabad. Message: Proceed yourself at once to the disturbed part of your district east of the Bhagarutty, and call on the officer commanding at Berhampore for such troops as are necessary for the purpose of preventing any breach of the peace or restoring order. Mr. B. Wood has been put in charge of Aurungabad subdivision. Troops for that subdivision will be provided from Soorie. You and Mr. Alexander must yourselves look after the portion of the district on the east of the Bhagarutty.”

From A. R. Thompson, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1086), dated Fort William, 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that, immediately on the receipt of this letter, you will proceed to Berhampore, and report your arrival there to this office.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated Berhampore, 27 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report my arrival at this station, in conformity with the instructions communicated to me in the Junior Secretary's letter, which I received on Saturday last.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Traffic Manager, East India Railway, Howrah, dated 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to request that you will be good enough to cause accommodation to be provided for taking about 250 men and two horses of the 3d Bengal Police Battalion from Raneegunge to Synteah, as soon as Lieutenant Adams, at Raneegunge, gives notice of the detachment being ready to start. A special train will be required.

From the Traffic Manager of the East India Railway Company, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 136), dated Howrah Station, 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE to acknowledge your letter of the 22d instant. In reply, I beg to say I cannot make an arrangement for a special train on the vague notice given by you. The railway from Raneegunge to Synteah is two distinct lines; both a single and a special could not be run with safety without proper instructions from this office. If you can let me know when the police really require to be sent, there are two trains, one by day and the other by night, by which I can arrange it, and every exertion shall be used to meet your requirements.

From A. R. Thompson, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Major F. D. Atkinson, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India Military Department (No. 1066), dated 22 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to request that with the permission of the honourable the President in Council, orders may at once issue for sending this evening two companies and an officer from the Alipore Regiment along the line of railway to Pulsa, a station on the line between Synthea and Rajmahal. The officer in command of the two companies may be directed to await the instructions of Mr. Browne Wood, the magistrate at that station.

From Major F. D. Atkinson, Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department, to the Deputy Quartermaster General of the Army (No. 1048), Council Chamber, Fort William, dated 22 March 1860.

Sir,

IN transmitting to you the accompanying copy of a letter from the Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, No. 1066, dated 22d March 1860, requesting the despatch this evening of two companies and an officer from the Alipore Regiment along the line of railway to Pulsa, I am directed to state that if the party cannot be furnished from that regiment, it must be sent from Barrackpore.

(No. 1049.)

COPY of the foregoing forwarded to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, with reference to his Office letter No. 1066, dated 22d instant.

From A. R. Thompson, Esq., Junior Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Secretary to the Government of India, Military Department (No. 1133), dated 23 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your docket No. 1049, of yesterday's date, relative to the despatch of two companies and an officer of the Alipore Regiment to Pulsa. As you have already been informed by my demi-official communication of yesterday's date, that the Lieutenant Governor did not on further consideration require this force, I have only to repeat that it will not be necessary to act upon my first letter.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Assistant Commissioner, Rajmahal, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No. 2172), dated 22 March 1860. 8-20 P.M.

I LEAVE immediately for Bunyagaon. Furrell reached that place last night; he has apprehended and sent to this for safe custody one of the chief conspirators. Mr. Lyon was attacked yesterday by a very large concourse of people; he and his servants wounded seven of the assailants; two have since died, two more expected to die. I will remain with Furrell till further orders. Are the proceedings to be in English or the vernacular? Bukkarabad Factory papers destroyed night before last.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from Calcutta, 23 March, 1-40 P.M., from Secretary to Government of Bengal, to Rajmahal, to Mr. B. Wood.

THE Proceedings should be in the language usual in the subdivision. For the present, and until further orders, you will remain in charge of the subdivision of Aurungabad. Mr. Furrell will also have work enough. Report daily till all is quiet. Captain Pughe, of the 3d Police Battalion, with 400 or 500 of his men, were to start for Synthea or further, if possible, by rail yesterday, and will communicate with you. Keep him informed of your movements, and where you would wish him to proceed to.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Assistant Commissioner, Camp Bunyagaon, via Rajmahal, to Secretary to Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No. 2522), dated 24 March, 2-3 P.M.

Two of the ringleaders have been apprehended. Matters appear to be somewhat quietening down. Some ryots have returned to their indigo cultivation and others following. The magistrate of Maldah has arrived at Bhogwanpore Factory, and inquiring into the Bukkred Factory plunder. Affairs appear to be more quiet across the river. Beaufort has arrived at Soonee (Sooty?); hope to meet him to-morrow. He has 100 of 73d Regiment. Captain Pughe has 250 men coming our way. Mr. Furrell has sent him a message to say 100 men would be sufficient to guard this part of the country. We will post them at Dhoolian as the most central locality. I think 100 men will now be sufficient, as 100 of the 73d will be near at hand. It will be difficult to feed a large number of troops down here.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated the 24th March, to the Magistrate of

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Inspector of Military Police Battalions in Bengal (No. 1183), dated the 24th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to inform you that orders have been issued to the magistrates at the several stations, which have been supplied with guards from the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 6th Bengal Police Battalions, to have all those guards immediately replaced by Burkundauzes, reporting the same to you.

2. You are requested to order the guards in the several districts noted in the margin to join their head quarters. Those in Nuddea will be at the disposal of the magistrate for general service.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from C. J. Hampton, Esq., Rampore Haut, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No. 144), dated the 24th March 1860.

THE following just received from Mr. Beaufort, in reply to your telegram to him:—"I am off at once with 100 of the 73d Goorkhas to Aurungabad. I sent off 40 men of the Police Battalion, whom the Commissioner had sent over here at my request. Mr. Furrell took charge of the sub-division on the 21st, and has already gone to the spot. The only news I have at present is a reported attack on the Baniagram factory, which was defended, and on the Backarabad factory, in the Maldah district."

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to W. M. Beaufort, Esq., Magistrate of Moorshedabad, Aurungabad (No. 1208), Fort William, dated the 26th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your telegram, without date, received viâ Rampore Haut, I am directed to observe that, in the message sent to you on the 22d instant, you were informed that troops for the sub-division of Aurungabad would be provided from Soorie. It was, therefore, unnecessary to take other troops there. You were instructed also to attend to the part of your district to the east of the Bhaugerutty, and you were informed that Mr. B. Wood would have charge of the sub-division of Aurungabad. If, however, there is no appearance of disturbance in the eastern part of your district, you were right, the Lieutenant Governor observes, to go to Aurungabad, but otherwise it will probably be right for you to return to the east of the Bhaugerutty, leaving Mr. B. Wood for the present in charge of the sub-division, with Mr. Furrell to assist him.

2. If, as is probable, there are more men now in the Aurungabad sub-division than are required, some of them should be sent over to the Maldah side, to be at the disposal of the magistrate of that district, in dealing with the disturbances which are reported to have broken out there.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Mr. W. Hampton, Rampore Haut (No. 231), dated 25th March 1860.

PLEASE forward the following message to Mr. Beaufort, wherever he may be:—

“If you have more men in Aurungabad than are wanted, send some over to the Maldah side to be at the disposal of magistrate; send back the detachment of 73d Goorkhas, if they are not required.

“Mr. Wood’s message of the 24th has been received. He will remain in charge of the sub-division for the present.”

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Assistant Commissioner of Rajmahal to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 2700), dated Camp Bunyagaon, viâ Rajmahal, the 25th March 1860, 10 P. M.

SUNDAY: only news to-day is from Mr. Hedger, of Turtepoor, Maldah Division. His factory papers have not been plundered. He writes 24th instant. There is an uneasy feeling in lot Ranee Hattee, which runs along side of one for eight or nine miles; and I am told the Myut duffadar has written to the head mundel in lot Enaitolla Chokey, that unless his people join the league they will not be allowed to eat or smoke or intermarry with Heennyut’s people. A lot of ryots bedakhilled Mr. Foggo’s peons two days since. Ranee Hattee ryots have combined to sow indigo for McArthur’s new factory of Simultola. If they break out now, and again they must, I don’t see what is to save this concern. A hundred sepoys from Rampore Beaulia, which is about 35 miles from Ranee Hattee and Simultola, would tend to quiet the country much. Mr. Spankie is inquiring into Bukkrabad factory plunder case, and is 25 miles distant from Ranee Hattee.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from Captain Pughe, Pulsa, to Major Plowden, Private Secretary to Lieutenant Governor, Calcutta (No. 157); Packour, 25th March 1860.

ARRIVED here this morning. The Junghipore magistrate reports everything quiet on both sides the river. I shall send him a detachment, chiefly for the purpose of showing themselves. I remain here with the main body until I receive orders from Calcutta. I have halted the men who were on the way up to join me. More by post.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from Alipore, 26 March, 1. 40 P.M., from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Puckour, via Pulsa, to Captain Pughe.

YOU must leave at least one European, and one good native officer, and 100 men in the Junghypore sub-division, to be at the disposal of Mr. Wood. If troops are required in Maldah, you must send a detachment there or go yourself, as circumstances may require.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Magistrate of Moorshedabad (No. 1204), dated Fort William, the 26th March 1860.

Sir,

ALTHOUGH it is known to the Lieutenant Governor that serious disturbances broke out in the Aurungabad division of your district on the 21st instant, and accounts of these disturbances are published in the Calcutta newspapers of last evening, no intimation of what has happened has been received from you up to the present time.

2. The Lieutenant Governor cannot but regard this silence on your part as highly reprehensible, as it shows either that you had no knowledge of these serious occurrences within your own jurisdiction, or knowing them, failed to report them at once to Government, as it was your duty to have done. I am directed to express the dissatisfaction of the Lieutenant Governor with your conduct on this matter, and to warn you against similar negligence in future.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 1206), dated Fort William, the 26th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you a copy of letters this day addressed to the magistrates of Moorshedabad and Maldah respectively, and I am to request that you will instruct all the magistrates under you to report direct and immediately, however concisely, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, every case of serious disturbance that occurs in their districts.

From the Joint Magistrate of Berhampore, per E. I. Railway Telegraph, to A. R. Young, Esq., to the Secretary, Government of Bengal, Calcutta, (No. 146), dated 25th March 1860.

Sir,

MR. LYON'S factory at Baniagram attacked between 6 and 7 A.M. of 21st, by large body of ryots.

Two ryots killed, others wounded. "Pioneer" arrived off the place at the time; sent assistance.

Ryots then dispersed.

Murod Biswas, instigator of this, seized, and now on way to Berhampore. Impioneer at 11 A.M. of 22d.

All reported quiet at Baniagram, Dhullian, and surrounding villages. Full particulars are coming by letter.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Joint Magistrate of Berhampore (No. 1258), dated the 27th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your telegraph message reporting that Mr. Lyon's factory at Baniagram had been attacked, and two ryots killed and others wounded, I am directed to point out to you that you have not dated the message. Neither was it, nor your demi-official letter on the same subject, received till after the Lieutenant Governor had seen an account of the affair in the newspapers.

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William, (No. 247), dated Berhampore, the 29th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 1258, of the 27th instant, I have the honour to state in reply that the telegraphic message I sent was despatched on the 25th instant from Synthea; my demi-official letter was written on the 24th, the date being accidentally omitted by me. Notice of the attack on Mr. Lyon's factory at Baniagram was received from Mr. Furrell, assistant magistrate, at Jungipoor, on the 23d instant.

From W. M. Beaufort, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 242), dated Berhampore, the 29th March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 1204, of the 26th instant, conveying to me his Honour the Lieutenant Governor's displeasure at my negligence in not having reported at once the occurrence of so serious an outbreak as the attack on the indigo factory at Baniagram, I have the honour to state that as I was on the point of stepping into my palkee at 4 P.M. on Friday the 23d instant to proceed to the scene of disturbance, in obedience to your order, received by telegraph that morning, the officiating joint magistrate, Mr. Alexander, sent to me Mr. Furrell's demi-official letter, reporting the outrage, which had just arrived. I at once, on the back of Mr. Alexander's note, wrote to him in pencil requesting him to send to you Mr. Furrell's letter in original, and also by telegraph an abstract of its contents.

2. I have now the honour to enclose a copy of a letter which I addressed to Mr. Alexander, and of his reply, explaining why my instructions were not carried out, and you were left so long in ignorance of the particulars of the riot. And the accompanying electric telegraph department receipt will show you when the message which Mr. Alexander eventually sent to Synthea was received there.

3. I hope that his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, from whose censure I am very anxious to clear myself, will consider this explanation satisfactory, and will absolve me from all blame in the matter.

From W. M. Beaufort, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad (No. 238), dated Berhampore, the 28th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to the accompanying letter from the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, may I request the favour of your explaining why Mr. Furrell's report, which I sent to you for transmission to Government on the 23d instant, when I was on the point of getting into my palkee to proceed to the disturbed district, was not forwarded at once to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal for the Lieutenant Governor's information?

2. May

2. May I request that you will reply to this letter at once, as I am exceedingly anxious to clear myself, as soon as I can, from the imputation of "highly reprehensible negligence"?

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to W. M. Beaufort, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad (No. 239), dated Berhampore, the 28th March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 238, of this date, I beg to state that having read Mr. Furrell's letter on the 23d instant, I sent it on to you, explaining my reasons for so doing; it was returned from you, but the chaprassee who brought it never told me that a letter written by you, conveying certain instructions to me, was inside the said envelope. I therefore thought that you had given all necessary orders concerning the report made by Mr. Furrell of the disturbance at Baniagram. The next morning, the 24th, by the merest chance, Mr. Pigou, the judge, called at my house and asked me if I had heard anything further concerning the rumours of disturbances in the north of the district. I handed him Mr. Furrell's letter, and then for the first time discovered inside the envelope your instructions to me concerning Mr. Furrell's letter, written on my note to you of the previous day. I immediately despatched a telegram by a chaprassee of mine to Synthea to Mr. A. Young, together with Mr. Furrell's letter, and two others subsequently received from him, reporting all quiet at Baniagram. The said telegraphic message, from the enclosed receipt, it will be seen was despatched on the 25th instant. I regret extremely that this delay should have occurred in transmitting Mr. Furrell's letter to Calcutta, but I beg to assure you that until I placed the said letter in the hands of Mr. Pigou on the morning of the 24th, I was totally unaware that you had given me any orders to carry out in the said letter. I trust this explanation may exonerate me from any supposed wilful negligence in carrying out your orders.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Officiating Magistrate of Moorshedabad (No. 1447), dated the 2d April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 242, of the 29th ultimo, reporting the circumstances under which you hope to be exonerated from the blame imputed to you in orders dated the 26th ultimo, for not having brought to notice the serious disturbances which occurred in connexion with certain indigo factories in your district, and to inform you in reply, that the Lieutenant Governor considers your explanation to be entirely satisfactory.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 1 Ct.), dated Berhampore, the 28th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, that I have just had a conference with Mr. Beaufort, who has returned from the scene of the late disturbances, and has informed me that he left everything perfectly quiet, and likely to remain so, as long as the sub-divisional authorities are out, and there is a force at hand to do their bidding.

2. As Mr. Beaufort has kept the Government regularly informed of his proceedings, it is unnecessary for me to recapitulate them. It may suffice to remark that both he and Mr. Furrell have acted with promptness and energy, and done all that lay in their power to put down the disturbances and prevent the infection spreading further, as was at one time feared.

3. I am glad to learn from Mr. Beaufort that Mr. Spankie had proceeded to the disturbed part of his district, and was taking proper measures for the preservation of the peace in that quarter; no further apprehension need therefore be entertained, as far as the Moorshedabad and Maldah districts are concerned, while the detachments of the police battalion are kept there.

4. Some of the leaders in the attack on Mr. Lyon's factory at Bunyagaon have been apprehended, and active measures being taken for the capture of the remainder, four of whom have, I am informed, gone to Rampore Bauleah, with the ostensible purpose of presenting a petition to my circuit.

5. As Mr. Beaufort's presence is required here as Collector, on account of the quarterly sales, I have authorised him to depute the officiating joint magistrate, Mr. Alexander, to watch this side of the Bhagiruttee, though this precaution seems scarcely necessary.

6. As there seems to be no necessity for my remaining here beyond the present week, I purpose returning to Bauleah on Saturday evening, to admit of my presiding at the examination of the assistants on Monday, the 2d proximo. I shall, besides, be in a more central position as regards the four indigo districts* there than I should be by remaining at this station, where communication with three of them would be delayed.

7. Mr. Muspratt is doing well in Pubna, and I trust the arrangements made before I left Bauleah for preventing further disturbances in Rajshahye will have the desired effect.

8. A full report of the attack on Mr. Lyon's factory, in which four of the assailants appear to have lost their lives, shall be submitted on completion of the inquiry.

P. S.—I annex copies of two reports from the officiating joint magistrate of Moorshedabad, dated the 24th and 25th instant.

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 27), dated Berhampore, the 24th March 1860.

Sir,

In continuation of my letter, No. 23, of the 14th instant, I have the honour to report, for your information, that on the 22d instant Mr. Furrell, the assistant magistrate of Jungipore, reported from Bunyagaon that on the previous day, between 6 and 7 a.m., a large party of ryots, armed with spears and tulwars, &c., had attacked the factory belonging to Mr. Lyon, with the intention of plundering it and murdering the proprietor.

2. Mr. Lyon had only with him at the time some few burkundazes, and as matters were very serious indeed, he fired upon the mob. One ryot was killed on the spot, six wounded, one of whom has subsequently died. At the same time, the "Pioneer" very providentially arrived opposite the factory, and on intimation being given to those on board, a party came to the rescue of the inmates of the factory, and the ryots on this ultimately dispersed. Mr. Furrell reports it as a notorious fact, and further corroborated by the confession of one of the wounded men, that one Morad Biswas had been for three days previously inciting the ryots of the surrounding villages to commit these open and unlawful acts of violence. The said individual has been since apprehended, and is now on his way to Berhampore on board the "Pioneer." Of his arrival I will duly inform you. It appears this attack was totally unprovoked, and Mr. Lyon seems to have acted purely on the defensive; in fact, had it not been for the timely arrival of the "Pioneer," there is no doubt that the ryots would have murdered those of the factory people who fell into their hands.

3. Mr. Furrell further mentions that a large party of ryots are said to have attacked the Buckrabad factory, in the Maldah district, and to have entirely plundered and otherwise destroyed it, and that the said band, it was rumoured, intended recrossing the river to attack Urmooree in the same way. Subsequently, letters received from Mr. Furrell to-day show that matters have since quieted down at Bunyagaon Dhullian and the surrounding neighbourhood. I have forwarded Mr. Furrell's letters, in original, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, at the request of Mr. Beaufort, who started yesterday for Aurungabad. Should any further information respecting these affairs arrive, I will immediately acquaint you with the same.

4. A party of the police battalion, consisting of 40 men, went yesterday morning to the scene of these disturbances, and I issued orders to several darogahs to to send as many burkundazes as could be spared to Bunyagaon. A detachment, moreover, of the 73d Native Infantry, under command of a European officer, proceeded yesterday to the spot, in accordance with a telegraphed order received yesterday from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajsahye Division (No. 28), dated Berhampore, the 25th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you, that, from a letter received to-day from Mr. Furrell, dated the 23d instant, 1 p.m., it seems that since the arrest of Morad Biswas, mentioned in my letter, No. 27, of yesterday's date, matters have entirely quieted on this side the Ganges; no assemblies of ryots are now to be found.

2. A small force of military police stationed in the immediate neighbourhood, Mr. Furrell says, will prove quite sufficient for the maintenance of the peace.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1365), dated the 30th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1 Ct., dated the 28th instant, and, in reply, to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor approves of your proposal to leave Berhampore for Rampore Beaulah in time to be present at the examination of assistants on the 2d proximo.

2. The Lieutenant Governor anxiously awaits the report promised in the 8th para. of your letter regarding the serious affair of the attack upon Mr. Lyon's factory. It is satisfactory to him to find that several of the ringleaders in such an attack as appears to have been made on Mr. Lyon are already in custody, and he has no doubt that every exertion is being made to apprehend the remainder. Such an outrage as is reported to have been committed on this occasion must be most severely and promptly punished, whatever caused it. The Lieutenant Governor desires that you will place the investigation of this case, and of all others now pending, or which may arise in the Aurungabad sub-division, in the hands of Mr. B. Wood, who is now in charge of the sub-division.

3. But it is necessary also to ascertain the reasons which actuate so large a number of the usually peaceable inhabitants of Bengal to make such a violent and murderous attack as is represented to have been made upon this particular factory.

4. In such cases, until the affair is thoroughly investigated, there must always be a suspicion that violence so extraordinary was resorted to, either as a means of defence against some threatened injury of an intolerable nature, or in revenge for some such injury, which, in the belief of the persons concerned, could not be prevented, or punished, or remedied by the law, as practically administered.

5. It is, therefore, specially incumbent on the magisterial officers of a district in which such an outrage has occurred to probe the affair to the bottom, and this must be done not only for the vindication of character, where the outrage has been unprovoked, and for the prosecution of all leading offenders against the law, on the one side as well as on the other, where it has been provoked, but also for the purpose of ascertaining how far the legal system in force, or its administration by the local officers, may be fairly held responsible for the breach of the peace that has occurred. The Lieutenant Governor desires that the attention of the district officers may be specially directed to these remarks.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Assistant Commissioner, Camp Bunyagaon, 9 p.m., via Rajmahal, 4.30 p.m., to the Secretary to Government of Bengal (No. 2390), dated 27th March 1859.

CAPTAIN PUGHE arrived at Dhoolian, six miles south of this, to-day. Mr. Furrell has gone down there to arrange for rissut, shelter, &c. Adjutant Cologan arrived here yesterday with 80 men, and will stay here for the present.

Mr. Spankie has asked for troops from Rampore Bauleah. Captain Pughe will probably send some men from Dhoolian. Matter appears quiet. Four has gone down to Rampore Bauleah to petition Commissioner. Intimation of same has been sent both to Commissioner and magistrate, and to apprehend them. Hear from Beaufort that Commissioner had arrived at Berhampore. Inquiry into late outrage progressing, and will proceed to Dowliah in a couple of days.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 8 Ct.), dated Rajshahye, the 30th March 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter, No. 1 Ct., dated the 28th instant, I have the honour to subjoin the following extract of a communication which I have just received from Mr. Furrell, dated Camp Dhullian, 6 p.m., of the 28th instant, for the Lieutenant Governor's information.

2. "All is perfectly quiet throughout the sub-division, and I hear no further disturbances on the Maldah side of the river. I joined Captain Pughe at this place yesterday, Mr. Wood continuing the investigation at Bunyagaon. A detachment of 25 men of the 3d Bengal police battalion was sent across to Buckrabad yesterday afternoon, at the request of Mr. Spankie, and at the same time, 20 men were despatched to Urmaree to protect the factory at that place. About 40 of the military police have been left with Mr. Wood, at Bunyagaon, and we have 150 here."

3. Mr. Furrell adds that the number of troops in the sub-division is, in his opinion, amply sufficient for the preservation of the peace; indeed, he anticipates no further disturbance, and believes that "should those ringleaders who went to Rampore Bauleah be opportunely arrested, the ryots will begin cultivating as usual."

4. The arrest of Lalchand Shah and Ruttun Mundul (two of the ringleaders in the attack on Mr. Lyon's factory, who came to my Court to present a petition), has already been communicated to you demi-officially, and will, it is hoped, have the effect anticipated by Mr. Furrell.

5. Captain Pughe, from whom I have also heard, corroborates Mr. Furrell's report as to the quiet prevailing in the neighbourhood of Dhullian, which appears to have been the centre of the disaffection.

6. I have requested Mr. Beaufort to send back the detachment of 60 men which were supplied from the 2d police battalion at Bauleah, at his requisition, as their services may be required in the Rajshahye or Pubnah districts, and they can be replaced here by a detachment from Captain Pughe's corps, if necessary.

Sir,

I SENT off a party to Maldah last night. I am here with the magistrate, Mr. Furrell, in the centre of the disaffected district; everything is quiet. Parties are posted at every point where there is the slightest chance of a disturbance.

The number of men at my disposal is ample; from all we can hear all is quiet on the other side of the Ganges.

Sir,

FLOWDEN mentioned that a telegram has been sent to me about Maldah; I have not received it. The party mentioned in mine of this morning was sent at the request of the magistrate, and was a small one. In case more men are requested, I will despatch another party to-night, but we have heard nothing here of any disturbances, although we are on the opposite bank of the river.

From Captain Pughe, per East India Railway Telegraph, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No. 177), Camp Dhullian, dated 29th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE this morning heard from my detachment on the other side of the Ganges.

All quiet in Maldah; the same here; but there appears to be an uneasiness among the ryots, and many have sent away their families. I have strong parties moving about the district in four different directions. It has a very good effect, and I do not anticipate any disturbance.

Sir,

LALLCHUND SAO and Ruttun Mundul, two of the chief conspirators, apprehended at Berhampore. All quiet here and across the Ganges.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from Captain Pughe, Bunyagaon, via Rajmahal, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 3334), dated 30th March 1860, 8. 15. p. m.

I HAVE directed the detachment of the Behar Light Horse to move down here from Rajmahal, should they not have received orders to the contrary. They will be very useful; Mr. Wood agrees with me in thinking so.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Captain J. R. Pughe, Commanding 3d Bengal Police Battalion (No. 1392), dated 31st March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of yesterday's date, intimating that you have directed the two troops of the Behar Light Horse at Rajmahal to move down to Bunyagaon, and in reply to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor approves of the arrangement. It will probably be expedient to divide the two troops hereafter.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from Captain Pughe, Dullian via Rajmahal, to Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta, dated 3d April 1860.

Sir,

CAMP Dhullian, the 2d April.—Cavalry arrived this morning; 150 sabres. I shall keep 40 here, send 18 to Maldah, 40 to Beaulah, and remainder to Moorshedabad. All quiet.

From Lieutenant G. J. Reeves, Commanding 2d Bengal Police Battalion to Major T. Rattray, Inspector Military Police Battalions, Lower Provinces, (No. 209), dated Rampore Beaulah, 3d April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report for your information that the detachment of 100 men under Lieutenant O'Connor, reached Maldah on the 30th ultimo, and that on the 1st instant, at the request of the magistrate, the former officer despatched a detachment of 25 men under a jemadar to Buckrabad.

2. I have also to inform you that a detachment as per margin, under command of Sub-Lieutenant Issurree Sing, marched from this this morning for Pubnah, making a total number of 150 men exclusive of non-commissioned officers sent to that place. The sub-lieutenant will assume charge of the whole.

From Major T. Rattray, Inspector of Military Police Battalions in Bengal, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 223), dated Barrackpore, 7th April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, that a squadron of the Behar Horse, under the command of Lieutenant P. Davis, reached Rajmahal on the 31st ultimo, having got over 210 miles in six nights, being at the rate of 35 miles per night. Such marching does considerable credit both to Lieutenant Davis and the irregular cavalry.

4. Captain Pughe reports that he has quite sufficient men with him for whatever work he may have to do, and as he recommends that the detachments at Bancoorah, Deoghur, and Goddah stand fast for the present, I would beg to second his recommendation, more especially as cholera and small-pox have broken out in his camp.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Inspector of Police Battalions (No. 1641), dated 10th April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 223, dated the 7th instant, reporting the rapid march from Patna to Rajmahal of a squadron of the Behar Horse under Lieutenant Davis, and in reply, to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor considers the zeal and activity displayed by Lieutenant Davis and his men to be very satisfactory.

2. The distribution of these men by Captain Pughe, and that officer's suggestion that the detachment of his battalion at Bancoorah, Deoghur, and Goddah, should not at present be moved from those places, are approved.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from B. Wood, Esq., to Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Calcutta (No.), dated 9th April 1860, 12. 21. p.m.

I HAVE apprehended most of the head men concerned in the attack on Mr. Lyon's factory on the 31st ultimo, and the case will be ready for hearing in a few days. If the case be sent to the sessions at Berhampore, there will be much delay and every obstacle thrown in the way of conviction by mooktars and paid agents of zemindars. The police also are much mixed up; in this case prompt punishment is very necessary, and would effectually secure the peace of the district. Mr. Yule's camp is at Rajmahal. I would venture to suggest he be empowered to decide this case at once on parties being present on the spot. Berhampore is 50 miles distant. Please reply through the Pulsa Office, which is nearest this.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to G. U. Yule, Esq., Commissioner of Bhaugulpore, Rajmahal (No. 1617), dated 9th April 1860.

Sir,

THE case of certain rioters concerned in the attack on Mr. Lyon's indigo factory, situated within the Aurungabad Sub-division, being ready for hearing, and it being expedient to try the parties on the spot, instead of sending them on for that purpose to Berhampore, I am directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor, understanding that you are at present encamped at Rajmahal, has been pleased to vest you with the powers of a Session Judge in Moorshedabad, to enable you to try the case in question.

Mr. B. Wood, Deputy Magistrate in charge of a sub-division of Aurungabad, who is a justice of the peace, has been instructed to administer to you the usual oaths of office.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to B. Wood, Esq., Deputy Magistrate in charge of the Sub-Division of Aurungabad (No. 1619), dated 9th April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed by the Lieutenant Governor to forward for your information the accompanying copy of a letter this day addressed to Mr. G. U. Yule, Commissioner of Bhaugulpore, and to request that you will administer the oaths of office to that gentleman, and forward them duly subscribed and attested to the Register of the Sudder Court.

TELEGRAPH MESSAGE from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to Electric Telegraph Office, Pulsa, dated 9th April 1860, 8 p.m.

MR. YULE has been vested with the powers of a sessions judge in Moorshedabad for the purpose of trying the case of the attack on Mr. Lyon's factory. Send a report as soon as you commit the rioters, and then devote yourself to the case of the complaints against the factory.

PETITION from Juggobundhoo Dutto, of Amdole, in the District of Moorshedabad, to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal; dated Berhampore, 24th March 1860.

The humble Petition of Juggobundhoo Dutto, of Amdole, in Thannah Pulsa, within the Sub-Division of Aurungabad, in the District of Moorshedabad.

Most respectfully sheweth,

THAT your petitioner is the proprietor of a mehal called Turruff Amdole, which has for few years been let in lease to Mr. C. B. Maseyk, owner of the indigo factory of Kodum Syer. Being desirous to let the above-mentioned mehal in putnee on advantageous terms, a proclamation was given by your petitioner, inviting parties willing to take it to offer their terms. Two parties, viz., the proprietor of the aforesaid factory and one Baboo Nubbo Coomar Sing, of Mohesipore, expressed their desire to take the mehal in putnee, but the jumma offered by the latter being higher than that proposed by the former, a settlement was made with the said baboo, and a conveyance in his name was drawn out on the 21st Maugh last. On the 23d idem, when the people on the part of the putnee holder went to that mehal to take possession of it, lateewals, surkeewallahs, and other armed men of Mr. Maseyk, numbering about 400, headed by the naib and other people of the factory, walked up to your petitioner's house and surrounded it at about nine o'clock, a.m. Your petitioner, taking fright, closed up all the avenues to his house, hurried up stairs, and there, together with his family and children, shut up in a room. Then the people outside began to cut open the doors, to enter within, and though the people of the neighbourhood and the policemen of the adjacent fandee were attracted to the spot by the noise and shouts, none had pluck to confront such a large body of armed men and to come to the rescue of the beleaguered party. Not succeeding, however, so soon to cut open the doors, the people of the factory dashed down a part of the cutcha wall surrounding the house by the force of elephants, and made good their entry into the premises.

Then commenced a scene too revolting to humanity, and one which your petitioner cannot recal in his mind without a chilly sensation of horror. Zenanah mehal was entered into, women and children dragged forth, their bodies stripped off of all ornaments, their noses and ears torn and lacerated in the operation. All the trunks, chests, recesses of the house were ransacked; the floors of all the rooms excavated in search of hidden treasure, and property, consisting of gold, silver (both in specie and bullion), jewels, utensils, wearing apparel, in fine, everything the house contained, to the value of (1,00,000) one lac of rupees, was plundered; which, together with your petitioner and another inmate of the house, by name Hurro Mohun Audikaree, seized and bound by ropes, were carried to the factory of Mr. Maseyk. There, for 10 days, your petitioner and the said Audikaree were confined, by the order of the Sahib, in separate places, under a guard of about 10 burkundaues, during the day in the jungle, and in godowns by night; the food that was served to them was doled out so sparingly, and after such long intervals, that the suffering they underwent both mentally and physically exceeds all description.

Just after the occurrence, your petitioner's brother, Pranbundhur Dutto, and his son, Beejoygovind Dutto, lodged a complaint in the assistant magistrate's court at Aurungabad, and though the inquiry instituted was one of a lax character, sufficient traces of the plunder were found, and Allad Sing, and others in the employ of Mr. Maseyk, were called upon to answer to the charge brought against them. Matters coming at this stage, your petitioner was taken in the presence of Mr. Charles Maseyk and his brother, James Maseyk, and given to understand that if he were to file a rajeenamah, and stay the progress of the suit, all would go right with him, his property to be restored and life saved, otherwise the loss of both would be the inevitable consequence. Thus threatened, and encouraged with the hope of getting back his property and liberty, he was constrained to yield to the proposal, and was accordingly taken to the magistrate's court under the strict surveillance, where he filed his rajeenamah on the 14th Falgoun. Sooner it was done than he was seized and carried back on board a boat, and placed in confinement as before.

Your petitioner's brother being informed of this, proceeded to the darogah of Thanna Manoola Bazar, and sought the aid of him, who whereupon deputed his moonshee and burkundaues and got your petitioner released.

Your petitioner having regained his liberty, proceeded to Berhampore, and instituted fresh complaint in the magistrate's court, detailing the circumstances and praying for the recovery of his property. Three or four days after the institution of the complaint, the magistrate took down the deposition of your petitioner, and has since only called for witnesses. Your petitioner having been surprised at the apathetic way in which such a serious case was being dealt with, solicited by fresh petition that functionary to take speedy and energetic measures towards the investigation of the case and the search of the factory for the discovery of the property, but to no purpose. Your petitioner then applied to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, who, having called for and received a kyfeut from the magistrate to the effect that a case is pending trial, has taken no further steps. The case stands at a dead still. If prompt and energetic measures were taken, everything, as represented by your petitioner, would have come to light and his property found.

Your petitioner is now a ruined man; he has lost all he had in the world, and his absence from home at this season entails on him a loss of 50,000 rupees, for he cannot dare stir out of Berhampore for fear of falling in the hands of the factory people, who are in ambuscade to seize him and put him to death.

After submitting this brief delineation of his case before your Honor, your petitioner earnestly solicits that your Honor will be graciously pleased to appoint one of his secretaries to investigate his case; and the expenses that will be incurred on that account will be paid by your petitioner.

If your petitioner has ventured a little too far in making such request, his piteous case will speak volumes in his behalf, if duly considered.

And your petitioner, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1288), dated 28th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you the accompanying copy of a petition from one Juggobundoo Dutto, of Amdole, in Thannah Pulsa, within the sub-division of Aurungabad, bringing to notice a serious case of assault and plunder alleged to have been committed in his house by the factory servants of Mr. C. B. Maseyk, an indigo planter, and complaining of the lax and apathetic way in which his case has been dealt with by the magistrate of Moorshedabad.

The Lieutenant Governor desires me to request that you will call upon the magistrate for an immediate report on this case, and his explanation in regard to the complaint made against his proceedings.

If the petition is in the main founded on facts, I am desired to request that you will order a searching and thorough inquiry to be made in the sub-division. You are aware that the Lieutenant Governor is by no means as yet satisfied with the magistrate's action, or rather inaction, in the serious affair which happened in Aurungabad last month.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 12 Ct.), dated the 31st March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your letter, No. 1288, dated the 28th instant, forwarding copy of a petition from Juggobundoo Dutt, of Amdole, in Thanna Pulsa, I have the honour to annex, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, a copy of the explanation furnished on the 12th instant, by the officiating joint magistrate of Moorshedabad, before whom the case is pending, and who has already been directed to submit a full report on completion of the proceedings.

2. The copy of Juggobundoo Dutt's petition will be immediately sent to Mr. Alexander for any further explanation he may desire to offer regarding the statements therein contained.

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 53), dated Berhampore, the 12th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to the order conveyed on the back of the enclosed petition, I have the honour to submit an explanation, so far as I am able, of the state of the case mentioned therein.

2. I am of course not able to state what part Mr. Furrell took personally in the matter, an explanation as to the charges brought against him in the said petition coming no doubt more properly from himself; but I can, on a reference to the records of the case, mention what steps appear to have been taken in the said matter.

3. On the 4th of February, Saturday, notice was given by the darogah of Thanna Pulsa of the illegal plundering, as referred to by the petitioner, Pranbundo Dutt. The darogah himself started immediately to investigate the case; and on the 7th of February Mr. Furrell went himself to the spot, took the evidence of Bejyogobindo Dutt, nephew to the petitioner, and was engaged on the 7th, 8th, and 9th in inquiring and recording the evidence of several witnesses in regard to the said affair.

4. On the 10th he returned to Jungipore, and on the 11th the reply of one defendant in this case was taken; on the same day the petitioner himself appeared in court, when his deposition was taken down; and on the 18th and 27th the evidence of other witnesses was recorded.

5. On the 18th of February Bejyogobind filed a petition of compromise in this matter, as did on the 25th Juggobundo Dutt; notwithstanding which, the latter again, on the 1st of March, presented a petition, requesting that his case might be fully inquired into, he having been illegally detained for nearly a month, and having only been released the day previous (i. e., February 29th); upon this I took the deposition of the said person, in which he mentioned at length length the circumstances of the said plundering of his house, and cited the names of certain parties he wished summoned as his witnesses. This latter has been done. As the case therefore is in an incomplete state as regards the evidence for the prosecution, I am unable to offer an opinion as to the truth or falsity of the charge, but one suspicious point exists in the matter; viz., Juggobundo Dutt, who appeared in court on February the 25th, and filed a petition of compromise, appeared again on the 1st March, stating he was in confinement until the 29th of February.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Magistrate of Maldah (No. 1205), dated Fort William, the 26th March 1860.

Sir,

It has been known to private persons in Calcutta for two or more days past, that serious disturbances in connexion with certain indigo factories in your district have occurred; but up to the present time no intimation of what has happened has been received from you.

2. The Lieutenant Governor cannot but regard this silence on your part as highly reprehensible, as it shows either that you had no knowledge of these serious occurrences within your own jurisdiction, or knowing them, failed to report them at once to Government, as it was your duty to have done. I am directed to express the dissatisfaction of the Lieutenant Governor with your conduct on this matter, and to warn you against similar negligence in future.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Rajshahye, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 501), Rajshahye, the 24th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, that, in consequences of reports that have reached me of the probability of disturbances among the indigo ryots in certain parts of the Maldah District, I have deemed it advisable to increase the strength of the detachment of the Military Police Battalion proceeding to take the duties at that station to 70 men. Similar detachments have already been sent to Berhampore and Pubna, on the requisition of the magistrates of those districts, but I have not heard of any further disturbances there, and I am in hopes that the circulation of the copies of the Bengalee notification first received from Government, will have the effect of allaying the present excitement.

2. I shall proceed, without delay, to Berhampore, in pursuance of the instructions contained in the Junior Secretary's letter, No. 1086, of the 22d instant.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1251), dated 27th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 501, dated the 24th instant, reporting that, on receipt of intelligence of the probability of disturbances among the indigo ryots in certain parts of the district of Maldah, you have increased the strength of the detachment of military police proceeding to Maldah to 70 men, and that similar detachments have been sent to Berhampore and Pubna.

2. The Lieutenant Governor approves of your proceedings, and desires me to state that, should further reinforcements of the military police be wanted, you should apply at once to Captain Pughe, the commandant of the 3d Battalion, who is in the Junghypore Sub-Division, or in that neighbourhood..

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 518), dated the 26th March 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter, No. 501, of the 24th instant, I have the honour to report that a full company of the 2d Police Battalion, under the command of Lieutenant O'Connor, have left for Maldah, and I have sent instructions to the magistrate to proceed with them to the scene of the disturbances.

2. I have not had any report from Mr. Spankie regarding the attack on the Buckrabad factory, mentioned in the "Hurkaru" newspaper of the 24th instant, Indeed, were it not for private information received from an unofficial source, I should be ignorant of any actual disturbances having occurred in the Maldah District, Mr. Spankie having, unfortunately, chosen this particular time to leave the station on settlement duty. I could have wished that an officer of greater promptitude and energy had been in charge of the district at such a crisis.

3. Mr. Beaufort has, I understand, proceeded to Aurungabad, under instructions sent to him by telegraph, and I hope to learn further particulars of the disturbances in that quarter, on my arrival at Berhampore to-morrow morning.

4. My Maldah correspondent informs me that letters had been intercepted, calling upon the ryots of Mr. Gray's factories to rise, but no intimation of this has been sent to me by the magistrate.

P.S.—Since writing the above, I have received a report from the magistrate of Rajshahye, of a disturbance in the neighbourhood of Nattore, of which the following are the particulars:—

A Mr. White, of the Deegha factory, while out on horseback, was attacked by some 200 of his ryots; he himself escaped, but his horse was wounded by a blow from a latee, and one of his servants was severely handled, having his head cut open, and much swollen and disfigured in consequence. Mr. Metcalfe, the assistant in charge of the Nattore sub-division (who proceeded to the spot next morning), has succeeded in apprehending about 10 of the parties engaged in this outrage, who are ryots of Jogendernairn Rae, one of the Pootea zemindars, who has just attained his majority, an event which terminates the lease of his estates held by the Messrs. Watson, under the court or wards, and is likely to lead to further disputes.

Under these circumstances, and adverting to the prevalent excitement among the indigo ryots, I have sanctioned Mr. Lushington's proposal, immediately to dispatch a party of 50 men of the police battalion to the scene of the above disturbance, and to depute Mr. Taylor, the officiating joint magistrate, with a similiary party to Pootea, to remain there until the question of the renewal or otherwise of the lease of the Messrs. Watson is settled. I would also beg leave strongly to urge the expediency of an officer with full powers being at once appointed to the charge of the Nattore sub-division, in the place of Mr. Chapman, resigned.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1368), dated the 30th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 518, dated the 26th instant, and in reply to state, that if the 2d Police Battalion cannot supply men enough for all the districts of your division, north of the Ganges, where there is, or may be excitement, the Lieutenant Governor desires that you will call upon Captain Pughe for a sufficient party for Maldah, as he has plenty of men to spare. Thus the Maldah and Moorshedabad districts may be provided for from Captain Pughe's battalion, and the Ghoorka regiment.

2. The orders issued by you to Mr. Lushington, the magistrate of Rajshahye, with reference to the recent outbreak in the Nattore sub-division, are approved.

3. With

3. With reference to the remarks contained in the second para. of the post-script to your letter, regarding the expiry of the lease held by Messrs. Watson & Co., of the estate of the Pootea Zemindar Jogendernarain Rae, I am to observe, that whilst the peace must be kept, you will of course bear in mind the necessity for all public officers scrupulously to abstain from using influence, or interfering in any way in what seems to be wholly a private affair of business.

(No. 1369.)

Copy of para. 1 forwarded to Captain J. R. Pughe, Commandant, 3d Bengal Police Battalion, for his information.

(No. 1370.)

Copy of para. 1 forwarded to the Inspector of Police Battalions in Bengal.

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to J. S. Spankie, Esq., Magistrate and Collector of Maldah (No. 1372), dated the 30th March 1860.

Sir

I AM directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to appoint you to officiate, until further orders, as Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Rajshahye.

2. I am desired to state, that your present transfer is in consequence of a report from the Commissioner, from which the following is an extract:—

“I have not had any report from Mr. Spankie regarding the attack in the Buckrabad factory, mentioned in the “Hurkaru” newspaper of the 24th instant. Indeed, where it not for private information, received from an unofficial source, I should be ignorant of any actual disturbance having occurred in the Maldah district, Mr. Spankie having unfortunately chosen this particular time to leave the station on settlement duty. I could have wished that an officer of greater promptitude and energy had been in charge of the district at such a crisis.”

From Lord H. U. Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to S. H. C. Tayler, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Rajshahye (No. 1371), dated the 30th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to inform you, that the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to appoint you to officiate, until further orders, as Magistrate and Collector of Maldah.

2. You are requested to leave Rajshahye at once, and to take charge of your new office as soon as possible.

From J. S. Spankie, Esq., Magistrate of Maldah, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 69), dated Maldah, 30th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1205, dated 26th instant.

I am not aware what reports might have been current in Calcutta regarding the ryots of this district, but immediately on my hearing of the attack on the factory factory of Buckrabad, I wrote to the Commissioner for troops, and to you for a copy of the Lieutenant Governor's Notification. I also issued a proclamation to the ryots of this district, in which I informed them of my having sent for a regiment. I then started for Buckrabad, and I should have answered your letter earlier had I been in receipt of it, but I have just returned from the mofussil, and find it here awaiting my arrival.

Buckrabad factory was attacked by about 250 or 300 men, who entered the sherista where the accounts are kept, collected them together, and burnt the greatest portion. The rest they through down a well, which is situated within the compound of the house. They then attacked the residence of Mr. Rich, who was absent at that time, carried off several valuable guns and a sword, destroyed his wearing apparel, and made a bonfire of his gun cases and some other property. I took the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses, and also arrested some of the principal defendants, in all 17 men, after which I returned to the station.

There can be no doubt whatever that the ryots on this side of the Ganges were instigated to this act of violence by ryots of the Moorshedabad district. Buckrabad factory belongs to Mr. David Andrew, in whose factories Kalapanee and Ankoora, the first disturbance in this part of Bengal commenced. The reason of the riot is to me obvious enough. The ryots had been ill-treated for some time by the factory servants, and were consequently forced into this rebellion.

I may add, that the attack on Buckrabad was unexpected; in fact, the absence of Mr. Rich from his own factory at such a crisis proves the above assertion.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1448), dated the 2d April 1860.

Sir,

• No. 69, dated
the 30th ultimo.

I AM directed to forward to you the accompanying copy of a letter* from Mr. Spankie, the Magistrate of Malda, reporting the particulars of an attack made by the ryots of his district on the Buckrabad factory.

2. The Lieutenant Governor considers it very extraordinary that he should receive on the 2d April the first account from the magistrates of this very serious case, which occurred on the 20th of March. As the usual means of communication were available, the absence of the magistrate from his Sudder station does not fully explain this delay.

The magistrate will of course spare no pains to bring to justice all the leaders in this outrage.

He reports, that the ryots had been forced into this crime (which he with great impropriety of expression terms "rebellion") by the ill-treatment they have suffered for some time past from the factory servants; but he says nothing of any steps taken for the punishment of those who have so ill-treated the ryots, or for the protection of the ryots from a continuance of such ill-treatment from the same servants in future.

This is not a creditable omission. The magistrate must forthwith proceed to the spot, and inquire thoroughly into that side of the case, and if the factory servants can be proved to be guilty of anything which makes them liable to criminal prosecution, they should be immediately prosecuted with the utmost rigour of the law.

Similarly, if the masters of those servants can be proved guilty of the like conduct, they should be prosecuted in like manner.

Whilst it is absolutely necessary to punish promptly and severely such an outbreak as this, it is no less incumbent on the magistrate, in the cause of justice and order, to exert himself in order to the punishment or prosecution, if possible, of those guilty of offences which drive poor people to such violent and criminal outrage.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to H. Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate and Collector of Pubna (No. 1191), dated the 24th March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to inform you that the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to appoint you to officiate as Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Backergunge.

2. On being relieved of your office by Mr. A. J. R. Bainbridge, you will proceed at once to join your appointment at Backergunge.

(No. 1192).

Copy forwarded to the Commissioner of Dacca for information.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to A. J. R. Bainbridge, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate and Deputy Collector of Backergunge (No. 1189), dated the 24th March 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to my letter, No. 502, of the 20th instant, to the address of the Commissioner of Dacca, giving you leave of absence for three weeks, I am directed to state that the Lieutenant Governor regrets that the exigencies of the service render it necessary for him to withhold that indulgence for the present.

2. You have been appointed to officiate as magistrate and collector of Pubna, and I am to request that you will join that appointment with all possible expedition.

(No. 1190.)

Copy forwarded to the Commissioner of Dacca for information, in continuation of letter, No. 502, of the 20th instant.

From Henry Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate and Collector of Pubna, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated Pubna, the 28th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter, No. 1191, dated the 24th instant, informing me that I have been appointed to officiate as joint magistrate and deputy collector of Backergunge, and as this appointment is an inferior one to that I now hold, I have the honour to solicit his Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal that I may be informed why I have been removed from my present appointment.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to H. Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate and Collector of Pubna (No. 1451), dated the 2d April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 28th ultimo, requesting to be informed of the grounds of your removal from the acting appointment held by you in the Pubna district, and, in reply, to state that you have been appointed to act elsewhere, because another officer has been appointed to act in Pubna, whom the Lieutenant Governor considers better qualified for the management of that district under existing circumstances than you are.

You must not regard this change at all in the light of a punishment. It is caused by the necessity of having specially selected men in the excited districts at the present moment.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, No. 546, dated Rajshahye, the 2d April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, that on my return to Rampore Bauleah yesterday morning, I found that no further disturbance had occurred during my absence.

2. I beg to annex for his Honor's perusal, copy of a letter from the officiating magistrate of Pubna, No. 144, dated the 27th ultimo, reporting the state of feeling which he found to prevail among the ryots of Chateean, a factory of Mr. Hills, and of some villages in the Meerpoor concern; and, with reference to the concluding paragraph, to state that I have requested the officer commanding the 2d police battalion to increase the strength of the detachment in the Pubna district to 150 men.

From Henry Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye, No. 144, dated Pubna, the 27th March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report that a petition having been presented by Azim and others during my absence from the Sudder station on collectorate duties, I started for the spot as soon as my tents had arrived.

2. I found that the dispute was between three of the ryots of Chateean and Mr. A. Hills, of Miton Factory. The factory lies in the Nuddea district; I found (March 26th) the feelings of the people there and in the neighbouring villages were against the planters and indigo cultivation. They objected to the "Planters' beegah" which is measured from time immemorial by a bath of 22 inches. They complained that they were made to cultivate more land in indigo than they were allowed to cultivate with dhan. The ryots of Chateean stated that the magistrate of Nuddea had come to Dhurrumpore, some 10 or 12 miles from Chateean, and had said no more indigo was to be grown.

3. They also showed me two papers from the Nuddea magistrate, but which appear more like copies of orders passed on petitions, and though it is stated in them that ryots having taken advances are bound to work them out, yet these so called purwanahs were produced to show that it was the order of Government indigo should not be grown. After I had explained to the ryots that it was not for the Government to order the zemindars that one crop should be grown, and not another, and that if they had entered into agreements they were bound to act up to them, and also warned them against following the evil example of the ryots in the Nuddea district, the people said that they would not grow indigo, and one man said, that if I, or the Government even, said they were to grow indigo, that they were all determined to be of one mind and oppose the Government. I immediately arrested this man for contempt of court, and as his words met with words of approval from others, I have put the man on his defence for uttering threatening words likely to cause a serious breach of the peace.

4. I warned all the ryots, that if they were under engagements to sow indigo, they were bound to do so; and that if they prevented the planters' people going near the lands, or acted hostilely towards them when they went near the village, I should take serious notice of their conduct, and that if, on the other hand, the planters, defendants, attempted to oppress them, they were to come and complain to me.

5. On the 25th I had asked Mr. Ferrier, of the Meerpoor concern, regarding the feelings of his ryots. His reply was, that they were all quite quiet, and he was not aware of their having any complaints to make. On my way to Chateean I passed two or three villages belonging to Meerpoor, and immediately on seeing me all the ryots came forward, making loud complaints regarding the oppression of the planter and his people. These ryots also believed that Government had ordered no more indigo to be sown, and were thunderstruck when I told them that Government had given them no such orders, and that they were bound to act up to their engagements with the planters. (It is very plain that some evil-disposed persons have been going about spreading the report that Government order no more indigo to be sown.) When talking to the ryots, and asking how much land they held, and how much of it was sown in indigo, one man said he held 16 beegahs, and 12 were sown in indigo. On questioning this man later in the day, in the presence of the planter, he said he had 25 beegahs, and out of it five were sown in indigo. By the planter's books it appeared he held 32 beegahs, not 25.

6. The morning grievances of the ryots were much altered when speaking before the planter, who had his papers ready to show the quantity of land held by each ryot. Another ryot, an old man, who had begged me to shoot him in the morning, as he could not live any longer on account of the oppression of the planter, on being cross-questioned by the planter and myself, allowed that he had formerly sown three beegahs annually with indigo, and, on petitioning Mr. Ferrier, his indigo cultivation had been reduced to two beegahs; and that he now held the jote of another man, by which he was bound to grow five beegahs in indigo, but he had never gone to Mr. Ferrier to ask him to reduce the five beegahs to four or three; another grievance was, that Mr. Ferrier made the ryots hedge off the indigo lands where it bordered on pasture lands; this had been done, the man said, for the last three years.

7. There are four villages, belonging to Baboo Ramrutton Roy, in which indigo is grown. About 60 of the ryots came with the Baboo's man, to complain of the oppression of the planter. Many complained that they held no land, and the ameen of the factory was in the habit of trying to make them take advances, and placing peadahs over them, to oppress them. They had never gone to the factory to complain. Another man's complaint was, that he had been ordered by the ameen to sow 10 cottahs more than his engagement. He had never complained to the sahib of the ameen's conduct.

8. I was encamped close to these four villages in January last, and not a single word of complaint was made to me against the planter, or his people.

9. I have returned to Pubnah for the quarterly kist day, and shall leave tomorrow night for the Mofussil, to try and keep the district quiet. If the commanding officer of the police battalion could send me 50 more sepoy, I think it would be very advisable to let me have them; not that I think the ryots will rise at present, but that, hearing of the disturbances in Nuddea, they may rise also.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1568), dated the 9th April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 546, dated the 2d instant, and, in reply, to state that the Lieutenant Governor approves of your instructions to the commandant of the 2d Bengal police battalion, to increase the strength of the detachment in the Pubna district to 150 men. You are already aware that more men are available in your division from Captain Pughe's battalion, if required.

2. With reference to the officiating magistrate of Pubnah's letter, No. 144, of which a copy is annexed to yours now under acknowledgment, I am directed to observe, that it will be proper for you to direct Mr. Muspratt, when ryots complain of being "compelled" to cultivate more land with indigo than they are "allowed" to cultivate with rice, to explain to them carefully that no one has lawful power to compel them to cultivate indigo, or anything else, unless of their own free will they agree to do so; but that, if they have agreed to do so this year, and have received any cash advance in consideration of such agreement, unless they fulfil those agreements they will be liable to pay heavy damages, or to be imprisoned. They must, therefore, fulfil their agreements.

3. The Lieutenant Governor regrets the arrest made by Mr. Muspratt, as reported by him in para. 3 of his letter. Mr. Muspratt was holding no court at the time, and the arrest for "contempt of court" was therefore unwarranted and absurd. It is not the way, in reasoning with people, when you wish to induce them to explain the real state of their minds, to put them in gaol, when they can't be convinced. Mr. Muspratt's conduct to a man, who had actually done nothing wrong, was arbitrary and irritating, and the man should be immediately released from custody.

4. The story told by Mr. Muspratt, in para. 6 of his letter, of a ryot petitioning to be allowed by the indigo planter to cultivate a smaller proportion of his land with indigo than formerly, is not so narrated as to give the impression that either the ryot, the planter, or the magistrate was aware that ryots are, in the theory of the law, free agents.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit for the Division of Rajshahye, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 560), dated Rajshahye, the 6th April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to annex, for the information of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, a copy of Mr. Muspratt's last Weekly Report, showing the state of matters in the Pubna district.

2. Everything continues quiet in Moorshedabad, Rajshahye, and (as far as I am informed) Malda; but until Mr. Tayler takes charge of the latter district (which he is now on his way to do), I cannot expect to receive regular reports of the magistrate's proceedings, as my letter of yesterday will have informed you.

3. A party of 36 sowars, from Captain Adlam's regiment, arrived here yesterday; but I have received no instructions respecting them.

FIRST WEEKLY REPORT of the State of the Indigo Districts in Zillah Pubna, for the Week ending 31 March 1860.

PAIKPARA Concern, in Pergunnah Chatean, pertaining to Meetan factory, is situated in the Pubna district; all the other villages pertaining to the concern lie in the Nuddea district. Three of the villagers of Chatean petitioned that the factory people had collected a band of men, and were going to sow indigo on their land by force. The police went to the spot, and reported that there was no band of men collected. I visited this village on the 26th; I found the ryots were determined not to sow indigo. I explained to them the folly of pursuing such a course, and that they would thereby render themselves amenable to law, and that there would shortly be a law to punish them severely, if they had taken advances and refused to sow. One man I arrested for contempt of court and uttering threatening language against the Government, likely to lead to a serious breach of the peace. Since then, Mr. Parker, the manager of the factory, and the ryots have come to me. The ryots have begged Mr. Parker to let bygones be bygones, and have promised to sow after the first shower of rain.

The villagers, when returning home, were heard by the Meerpore people to say, that they would sow, and would not join the disaffected ryots in Nuddea.

Meerpore Concern.—All quiet; the ryots say, they will sow after the first rain. The ryots at first came, and complained against the planter, and said that Government had ordered indigo not to be grown. I explained to them that Government had given no such order. The ryots of four villages in the zemindaree of Baboo Ramrutten Roy complained that they were made to grow more indigo than they engaged for. I am having the indigo lands of one village measured to see if there is any truth in their complaint.

Mr. Tripp reported that the ryots of Parsetley and Ghazeepore factories, belonging to the Bamundee Concern, are likely to rise. I visited two villages belonging to the former factory. The ryots made no complaints, and said they would sow after the first shower of rain.

First Grade Darogah, Derasut Oolla, visited the Gazeepore villages, and reports that, in accordance with my orders, he explained to the ryots that they were bound to act up to the engagements, and that he found the ryots peaceably disposed, and not likely to join the disaffected in Nuddea.

All

All the other concerns in the district are, I believe, perfectly quiet.

The first shower of rain will show whether the ryots will act up to their engagements or not; but, at the same time, I have reason to think that all the ryots are watching what is going on in the Nuddea and Jessore districts, and that should the present lawless assemblages in the former district be put down in any one concern soon, that the whole of this district will remain undisturbed. The measures I have adopted have been to bring planters and ryots together; to let the ryots state their demands, and give utterance to any complaints they had to make against the planters and their factory servants. I have found this plan answer well. The ryots in the Meerpore Concern (except Amla factory; the villages of which lie in Nuddea) have gone to the manager, Mr. Ferrier, and have amicably settled matters, and promise to act up to their agreements.

But all that I have done, and may do, to keep the district quiet will, I fear, be labour lost, if some decisive measures are not speedily taken to put down the gatherings of the ryots in the Nuddea district.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1580), dated the 9th April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 560, dated the 6th instant, and, with reference to the concluding para. thereof, to state that the party of 36 sowars from Adlam's Horse, detached to Rampore Bauleah, are intended to be sent by you to any place where their presence may seem likely to be useful.

From F. A. Lushington, Esq., Magistrate of Rajshahye, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division (No. 153), dated Rajshahye, the 30th March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 517, of the 26th instant, I have the honour to inform you, that since the receipt of that letter, I have received no intelligence of any further disturbances connected with the cultivation of indigo in this district. On the contrary, I am assured from various quarters, that the indigo sowings have been completed peacefully; and that there is no anticipation of further riots; 50 of the 2d Police Battalion are, however, at Nattore, under the orders of Mr. Metcalfe, the assistant in charge, and 50 more start for Pootea this evening, under those of the Joint Magistrate. Mr. Taylor and I have every hope that this demonstration will tend entirely to extinguish any latent inclination that may have existed to follow the example of the ryots in the neighbouring districts.

2. The notifications forwarded from Government have been proclaimed in all villages where discontent was suspected, and measures have been adopted for the immediate apprehension of certain ringleaders in the attack of Mr. Lyon's factory, should they make their appearance in this district.

(No. 562.)

COPY forwarded to Government in continuation of this Office Letter, No. 518, of the 26th ultimo.

(No. 1616.)

COPY forwarded for the information of the Government of India in the Home Department, in continuation of this Office Letter, No. 1386, dated the 31st ultimo.

From F. Lushington, Esq., Magistrate of Rajshahye, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division (No. 168), dated Rajshahye, the 10th April 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my report submitted last week, I have the satisfaction of informing you that those portions of this district where there is indigo cultivation, have remained perfectly quiet, and no symptoms of riotous disturbances have manifested themselves; and I understand from the planters themselves that they anticipate no difficulty in their sowings, which will be completed in all this month; until such, however, is the case, I still think it expedient that the troops now on duty in the indigo cultivating thannahs, should still be retained there.

2. With reference to the arrival of a portion of the Patna Irregular Horse, as we have an ample supply of troops in the police battalion for every purpose for which their services may be required, I would respectfully suggest that you should authorise me to order them to return to their head quarters.

From F. Lushington, Esq., Magistrate of Rajshahye, to the Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division (No. 169), dated Rajshahye the 10th April 1860.

Sir,

WITH reference to your intimation that owing to the perfect tranquillity of this district, the services of the party of sowars that came here from Berhampore are not likely to be put into requisition, I beg to inform you that I have this day given Syud Tuckeer, ressoldar in command, directions to proceed to Berhampore, and report himself to the adjutant of his regiment, at present quartered at the latter station.

(No. 594.)

COPIES forwarded to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, with an intimation that Mr. Lushington has been directed to send the party of sowars over to Berhampore, where the adjutant of their regiment is at present quartered.

From H. W. Alexander, Esq., Officiating Joint Magistrate of Moorshedabad, to the Commissioner of the Rajshahye Division (No. 303), dated Berhampore, the 10th April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I returned from the district on the 8th instant; I went to Lallgollah on the night of the 1st instant, in accordance with the verbal order of Mr. Beaufort; I remained there two days, and then went on to Bhogwangola, where I stayed three days, and from there proceeded to Ackrigunge, from which place I returned to the Sudder station at the request of Mr. Robinson. During the whole time I was out, everything was perfectly quiet; in fact no complaint was made either by planters or ryots as to the sowing of indigo, and from what inquiries I made at the time, there is evidently not the slightest apprehension of any such disturbance taking place as occurred last month within the subdivision of Aurungabad.

(No. 599.)

COMMUNICATED to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

(No. 1785.)

COPY forwarded for the information of the Government of India, in the Home Department.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 6004), dated on the River, 16 April 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter, No. 546, dated the 2d instant, I have the honour to report, for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, that finding on my arrival at Aurungabad on Saturday last, that Mr. Furrell and Captain Pughe were at Dhoolian (about 10 miles higher up the river), I proceeded to the latter place, where I met those officers, and found that all was perfectly quiet in the neighbourhood.

Mr. Furrell informed me that some of Mr. Lyon's ryots at Bunyagaon had commenced sowing their indigo lands, but that none of those in the Aurungabad concern had shown any disposition to do so; indeed, so far from such being the case, a large body of them had come into Mr. Furrell's camp a few days previously, and deposited their ploughs, of which I observed a heap in front of the tents. Notwithstanding this, however, no cases had been instituted under the new Act, for breach of contract, which Mr. Furrell attributed to the fact of no cash advances having been made in that concern, in which the planter is also the zemindar. The ryots seem fully to understand the provisions of the Bill, and say that all who have taken advances will sow, and the rest will do as they like.

3. I did not see Mr. Wood, who had gone into Rajmahal, but from what Mr. Furrell told me, he appears to be getting on well with the investigation of the Bunyagaon case, in which about 35 of the principal rioters have been apprehended. Mr. Wood's inquiries into this case, and the one at the Ankoora factory, will no doubt elicit the true causes of the disaffection among the ryots in this quarter, who have been long known as a turbulent set of people. It seems to be universally admitted that the oppressive conduct of the gomashtha' of the Ankoora factory, Meer Tufuzzool Hoosein, was the immediate exciting cause of the late disturbances, which would not have reached the height they did had prompt and effectual measures had been taken for their suppression by the magisterial authorities at Moorshedabad.

4. The existing tranquillity is no doubt attributable chiefly to the presence of the military police, as well as to the absence of any cause of excitement, but until the principals in the attack on the Bunyagaon factory are punished, and the alleged grievances of the ryots are inquired into, and redressed as far as circumstances will admit, I do not expect that the quietude will be permanent; on this account, I would not advise the withdrawal of the military police for some time to come, though I think the strength of the force might, without risk, be reduced.

From A. W. Bainbridge, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 11 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report that Mr. Deputy Magistrate Lingham's report of the case at Neschindepore has just come in. The riot appears to have been most serious, and he appears to have carried forbearance much too far. Two of the police battalion were severely wounded, their bodies not recovered, and two other persons wounded. Mr. Lingham also has been maltreated. The dak is just leaving, I will send his report as soon as it is copied. The whole of the detachment here, 47 rank and file, will start to-night in fishing boats, and ought to arrive in a day and a half.

I shall precede them, as before reported, and shall probably write to Furreedpore for a wing of the Kamroop Regiment.

From G. L. Harris, Esq., Assistant Magistrate in Charge, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 190), dated Pubna, 12 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to enclose, as instructed by Mr. A. J. R. Bainbridge, a copy of the letter received yesterday from Mr. E. T. Lingham, deputy magistrate of Comercolly.

I have also to observe, that Mr. A. J. R. Bainbridge, upon its receipt, despatched an express to Furreedpore for 200 men of the Kamroop Regiment to be sent at once to the scene of the affray.

From E. F. Lingham, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Comercolly, to H. Muspratt, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, dated Neschindapore, 10 April 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to lay the following report of a serious affray, which has this day occurred, before you.

In obedience to your instruction, contained in letter, dated 7th April, I proceeded at midnight of the 7th instant, with 24 of the military police, which you directed should accompany me.

Owing to adverse winds, we did not reach Neschindapore until the evening of the 9th.

On the morning of the 10th, I crossed the men (30 in number), and taking their baggage with us, with the intention of proceeding, after the investigation of the Jungul cases, to Beluabaria, at which place also the ryots seemed to be collecting, I directed them to march to Jungul, about four miles distant. In order to avoid any appearance of force, I left the police on their march, and took with me my nazir and four burkundauzes to take evidence in the cases. On arriving within a mile of the village, Mr. Durand rode up to me to say the nazir had entreated him to intimate that he and his burkundauzes had been set upon; at the same time directing my attention to a small army of lateeals, which was assembled about half a mile without the village, on a rising ground. I immediately rode to the assembled men with the intention of conferring with them; but as they made off I requested Mr. Durand to assist me in covering my burkundauzes (we were both on horseback), and if possible to apprehend with me a few of the rioters for evidence sake. I found the huts full of armed men, and they were endeavouring to carry off my police burkundauzes.

2. Thinking that a little show of force would intimidate the rioters, I rode off to bring up the military police, who were, with their baggage, more than two miles in the rear. I divided them, and sent a party of 10, with a naik, to the right, another to the left, to keep outside the village and prevent the escape of any armed men, giving them strict injunction not to use unnecessary force. I took with me eight men, and went up to my burkundauzes, and without violence, to seize a few ringleaders of the riot.

3. I then found a large body of above 1,200 men armed with spears, swords, bamboos, and shields, drawn up in a threatening attitude. They began to attack my men, and I, observing they were really determined to set upon them, with the utmost anxiety not to shed blood, directed the men to fall back. But they were excited, as the weapons of war and all were flying about us in all directions; I heard a shot fired. Mr. Durand was far from the village, as I had requested him not to accompany me. I sent for him, and entreated him to prevent any firing firing whilst I got the men together, for, although they were attacking the military police, I was most anxious not to use force. The men, losing all obedience, began to return the spears and clods with fire. In this state it was impossible to control them; hence I ordered an instant retreat, using, as I cannot too frequently impress upon you, all my power to prevent bloodshed. Seeing us falling back, the enemy (for I can call them by no other name) made a furious onset, flanking us, and throwing their spears, bamboos, clods, bones, and everything at the men within their reach; we were injured, they had completely flanked us, and were drunk with excitement. Still I begged of the men not to return their attack. I endeavoured to present a front, and then fall back, but the men were broken; they kept up an irregular fire, and would not form. I endeavoured to parley with the opposite side, but they returned my entreaty with a shower of weapons. It was beyond human power to stop the firing, which was however ineffectual, and I was in front the whole time turning their muskets in the air, or taking the caps off the nipples just as they presented, or standing before their muskets as they were about to fire, at the same time holding up my hand to the enemy as a sign of peace. We were assailed with a perfect shower of spears, bones, &c. The men were upon me, the seapoys fairly retreated. I defended myself with a slight riding cane, and then dismounted to show the men I was determined to remain with them. On they came in hundreds, pelting and striking on all sides. I was knocked down, two sepoys also fell, and then the men fairly bolted; alas! they fairly bolted. My efforts to rally them and bring off the wounded men were unavailing; I tried to go up to one myself, but was surrounded and ill-treated; I then thought to follow up my retreating men, but was overpowered, and fell to the ground. One man, more excited than the rest, lifted his tulwar to make a blow at my head whilst I was down, but providentially (as I am told) a sepoy came up with his drawn sword and helped me.

Jungul affray,

4. After this I have no recollection of what happened. I am informed, that the sepoys seeing me fall, rallied and fired; but be all this as it may, I am happy to state, that I did not notice one man on the opposite side fall. But I am grieved to add, that the two poor sepoys were speared and rifled, and that two other men, including a village chowkeedar, are severely wounded.

5. Let me entreat of you, sir, to bear in mind my unremitting efforts throughout this affray, to prevent the shedding of blood. I find, however, that Ramrutton and others had assembled men at Jungul as soon as he heard you had written for me to go to the spot.

6. It is my belief that the powerful zemindars are taking advantage of the existing indigo disturbances, to vent their spleen on those with whom they have previously disputed either at law or otherwise.

7. Seven prisoners are with me.

8. I would feel obliged by your coming down to this quarter to investigate this affray. I am just off to Narna, of the Nowbatta concern, where I intend to remain with the men. I have directed some civil police to come from Khoksa and Pangsa Thannas, and would merely mention to you, sir, that dependence is not to be placed on these military irregulars. We must either be content to permit the assemblage of large bodies of zemindars' lateels on the face of the country, or be supplied with European troops to defend our persons and authority.

From A. W. Bainbridge, Esq., Officiating Magistrate of Pubna, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated 13 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I arrived here with 417 sepoys, in fast sailing boats, on the evening of the 12th.

I found the villages in which the riot occurred deserted, and the police in possession.

There is no present probability of further disturbance.

The ryots in the neighbouring concerns of Messrs, Savi and Kenny are quiet.

One of the wounded sepoys, and the body of a villager, said to have died from a musket shot received in the riot, were recovered yesterday.

The sepoy is not dangerously hurt, and the wounded peada will recover.

No trace of the other sepoy is forthcoming ; there is little doubt he is dead, and his corps made away with.

I have offered 200 rupees reward for certain information of his fate.

The case is in a fair way to be proved clearly against the principals, some chowdari of Baleakundee and a gomashta of Ramrutton Roy, of Narail, but they are not yet in custody ; no steps were taken or evidence recorded before my arrival.

The riot at present appears to have been premeditated, and entirely unprovoked. I am inclined to attribute it partly to old hostility on the part of the principals, and partly to the present dissatisfaction regarding indigo.

Mr. Lingham thinks Ramrutton's amlah have special ill-feeling towards himself for past official conduct. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Lingham's life was saved by the Sikh havildar.

I think the results of his expedition rather owing to his mistaken reluctance to allow the sepoys to use their weapons than to cowardice on their part.

Before leaving Pubna I sent a pressing requisition to Captain Drew for 200 men of the Kamroop Regiment to be marched forthwith to Baleakundee, about six miles from this ; I expect them to-morrow, and propose keeping 100 of them here until after the sowings. The only other places where affairs look threatening are Belnaberry, where Mr. Imbert reports that the ryots are breaking his indigo and maltreating his servants, and Ghazipore, in the Meerpore concern.

I have sent Mr. Lingham with 50 men and the Sub-Lieutenant to Belnaberry ; this large force was necessary, as the poor fellow has lost all confidence and would not go without, which it was essential he should do, as rain fell this evening.

I have written to Mr. Harris to go to Ghazipore with 15 men, who are in Pubna, and remain there until after the sowings ; both will send for the ryots and explain the object of Government and the provisions of the Act, which I have had clearly drawn up.

If things are settled at Belnaberry, Mr. Lingham will return and remain in charge of the Kamroops here until after the sowings.

I propose remaining until the chief rioters are in custody.

I have sent for Ramrutton's head servant in these parts, and when he comes shall take measures which will speedily secure the attendance of his gomashta ; the others I must arrest, as I can carry force, if necessary, when I have ascertained where they are.

The other 100 of the Kamroops who will not be wanted will return to Furreedpore.

From Major T. Rattray, Inspector of Military Police Battalions in Bengal, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 244), dated Barrackpore, 17 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to forward for the information of the Lieutenant Governor, copy of letter No. 115, dated 15th instant, from Lieutenant Reeves, commanding 2d Battalion Bengal Police, together with copy of translation of report from Havildar Seeboo Khan, commanding a detachment in the Pubnah district, from which it appears that the detachment had been compelled to retire before a mob of half-armed villagers.

2. From the 2d para. of Lieutenant Reeves' letter, it appears that the detachment did not number more than 20 men, but even this number, small as it was, ought never to have retired. I can scarcely believe that any magistrate would have ordered the men to run away rather than stand on the defence, however such is deliberately stated by the halvidar, but I must refrain from making any further remarks on the subject until I hear something more definite. As I conclude, the magistrate has reported the matter to the Government, I have the honour to request that I be furnished with a copy of it.

From

From Lieutenant G. J. Reeves, Commanding 2d Bengal Police Battalion, to Major T. Rattray, Inspector Military Police Battalions, Lower Provinces (No. 115), dated Rampore Beaulah, 15 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to forward herewith translation of a letter from Havildar Seebo Khan, commanding detachment in the Pubna district, to Sub-Lieutenant Issuree Sing, and sent on to me in original, detailing an affair in which the havildar and his party were apparently worsted by a body of rioters on the 10th instant.

2. This is but an ex parte statement, but should the magistrate have really given the order not to stand on the defence, but ran away, such alone is quite sufficient to have caused the disgraceful termination; again, the latter proceeds in charge of a small party of about 20 men, and instead of keeping them together at the commencement, breaks up his already disproportionate force into small parties; they are immediately surrounded, and have to rejoin each other in the midst of a tumultuous mob; thus confusion must have reigned from the very beginning.

3. It is difficult to understand how after capturing seven of the rioters, and being able to keep possession of them, the party should still have been obliged to retire.

TRANSLATION of an Extract of a Letter from Havildar Sheebho Khan, Commanding Detachment 2d Bengal Police Battalion, in the Pubna District, to Sub-Lieutenant Issuree Sing.

EXTRACT.—AT 3 p. m. the next day we marched again, and arrived in the evening at Neesanpore Factory, where we remained all night. In the morning, agreeably to the orders of the magistrate accompanying us, we got ready, and marched to a village, called "Peeraree." When we arrived there, the magistrate divided us into three parties, sending one to the east of the village, another to the west, and marching in the village himself with the remainder. We were almost immediately surrounded by about 2,000 men, armed with spears, bows, and arrows, and latees; they came on, and wounded the magistrate's horse with a spear; that officer fell off, and the party having rejoined, by order of the havildar, commenced firing; on this the magistrate said, "If you fire, I will have you punished;" what could we then do?

In this way the rioters came down upon us; the Sahib then said, "Don't fire, but run away;" we did so, and during this time Sepoys Sentuhul of the 8th Company, and Peer Mahomed, of the 7th Company, were wounded, and fell, and were seized by the villagers; it is not known if they are killed or not. When we got outside the village, the magistrate ordered us to surround the place again.

It is stated that the rioters were men from 52 villages; one man was conspicuous amongst them, from which direction there was some firing; he and others surrounded the Sahib, and the havildar seeing this, ordered the men to fire; on this the rioters ran away, and we captured seven of them; we then, with the Sahib, returned to the factory.

The Sahib gave us no warning of being thus employed, and we were taken quite unawares.

The above occurrence took place on Tuesday the 10th.

Reported for the information of the Commanding Officer by Seebhoo Khan, havildar 2d Bengal Police Battalion.

This translation is given as it is in the urzee, in which the havildar writes of himself in the third person.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 611), dated Rajshahye, 18 April 1860.

Sir,

ON my return here yesterday, I found Mr. Bainbridge's letter, enclosing a copy of Mr. Lingham's report of the late disturbance at Jungul, in the Pubna district, a copy of which has been forwarded to Government by my uncovenanted assistant.

2. I immediately sent instructions to Lieutenant Reeves, commanding the 2d Police Battalion, to send off the 100 men he had in readiness, and they left by water for Pubna this morning.

3. Under the discretion vested in me by the 2d para. of your letter, No. 1251 of the 27th ultimo, I have sent off an express to Captain Pughe, requesting him to send over 200 men from Jungilpore, to take the duties at this station, so as to admit of Lieutenant Reeves proceeding to Pubna with the remainder of his corps, which will give from 400 to 500 men for that district.

4. I beg to annex, for the Lieutenant Governor's information, copy of a further report from Mr. Lingham, which I must say shows the affair at Jungul to have been most sadly mismanaged. The folly of separating a small detachment of 30 men into three bodies, in the face of a mob of 1,200 rioters, is only equalled by that of restraining the men from acting on the offensive after they had been attacked. Had Mr. Lingham formed his men into a compact body, and called upon the rioters to disperse on pain of being fired upon, the latter would, in all probability, have been intimidated; it was only when they saw the sepoys scattered and disorganized, that they took courage to attack them. The men were, no doubt to blame for firing without orders, but under the circumstances, I think that there was great excuse for them.

5. Mr. Bainbridge appears to have acted with due promptitude and energy in proceeding to the spot himself, with all the available men of the police battalion. There must, however, be some mistake in the number stated in his letter, as there were only 150 of the 3d Police Battalion in the Pubna district at the time.

6. I would beg to suggest the expediency of Lieutenant Reeves being vested with the powers of a magistrate in the Pubna district, as has been done in the case of Captain Pughe, in Moorshedabad.

From E. F. Lingham, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Coomercolly, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated off Nischindpore, 10 April 1860.

Sir,

Jungul affray.

It is my painful duty to report the following serious affray, attended with murder and wounding, which occurred this day at the village of Jungul.

2. Jungul is a low village which has for some time been in a disturbed state, there has been zemindaree disputes and indigo disputes with the Nischindepore concern, and the latter was forced to petition the Pubna Court for some sort of protection and investigation.

Entrance to Jungul.

3. At the direction of the magistrate, my superior, I started on the 7th instant, with a small guard of military police, and on the morning of the 10th (this day) I went with my nazir and four peons for the purpose of investigating the alleged outrages at Jungul, leaving the guard more than two miles in my rear, in order to avoid any exhibition of force which might induce the people to misinterpret the object of Government in supplying such guards.

4. Near the entrance of the village, I found a large body of armed men drawn up, and endeavouring to seize my nazir and burkundaues. I rode up to cover my peons and endeavour to apprehend a few of the rioters for evidence sake. I did seize in all six men, and leaving them with the nazir outside the village, at the same time requesting Mr. Durand to remain with them, I myself rode quite into the village to explain the object of my visit, holding up my hand as a sign of peace. They received my advances with a shower of clods and bamboos. On this I returned and took with me Mr. Durand and the nazir to aid in preventing the rioters joining another body which was collected on a rising ground. They began attacking the peadas and us; I thought if we endeavoured to run they would immediately pour out and overwhelm us, for they seemed determined to listen to no counsel.

5. I then

5. I then rode down to bring up the guard to intimidate the opposite side, bring off my people, and if possible to seize without much violence some of the leading rioters.

6. I have given a full account of the events to the magistrate of Pubna; suffice it to say, sir, that the sepoys proved unmanageable. The lateals, who numbered far above 1,200, sent their weapons at us from all directions, one of the peadas had been severely wounded; I had requested Mr. Durand to leave me; I walked my horse up towards the men, but received the same salutation as before, the sepoys then began returning their attack with fire. I sent for Mr. Durand and begged him "for God's sake" to help in preventing the men firing; the men were not regularly disciplined; seeing this, and that the enemy were resolved to attack us, I ordered a retreat, being extremely anxious to prevent the shedding of blood. Observing we were falling back they came on with a yell, literally showering their weapons at us, spears, bamboos, bones, clods, harpoons, and everything within reach. I once more tried to pacify them, but was surrounded and obliged to rejoin my retreating men. I dismounted, and was in front of my men the whole time doing all in my power (even taking the caps off the nipples as they presented) to prevent firing. The men were broken; one fell and was instantly despatched; another and I endeavoured to rally the men and bring off the wounded with a rush, but they would not show a front. I myself then fell, overwhelmed with heavy blows, and just as one more excited than the rest was making a cut at my neck with his tulwar (whilst I was down), one or two soldiers rescued me; still did I entreat them not to fire.

7. We managed to retreat and save the baggage, but I am grieved to say that two sepoys fell into the hands of the enemy, and a peada and village chowkeedar were wounded. Happy am I to add that not a single man on the other side was seen to fall. I brought off seven prisoners, but lost my horse and other things. The men it appears were engaged to oppose me; they were the budmashes of seven villages, and had been ready for several days.

8. Permit me to add that dependence is not to be placed upon these military irregulars; the men with me were lost to control; they fairly ran away when one had fallen. We must either allow the assemblage of armed men over the face of the country, or be supplied with Europeans (who will reserve their fire until the word of command is given, and fall back in order), that our persons and authority may be protected.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Pubna (No. 1847), dated 21 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 18th instant, reporting the occurrence of a serious disturbance at Jungul, in Thanuah Pungsa, on the 10th idem, when a detachment of the 2d Police Battalion in charge of Mr. Deputy Magistrate Lingham was opposed, and ultimately repulsed with the loss of two of their number by a body of riotous villagers and armed lateals. A copy of Mr. Lingham's report of the occurrence has also been received from the assistant in charge of the Pubna magistrate's office.

2. The Lieutenant Governor very much regrets the occurrence of this disturbance; the more so that the unfortunate result of it was, by his own showing, wholly attributable to the deplorably bad management of the deputy magistrate, Mr. Lingham.

3. It is gratifying to learn by the latest accounts that one of the police sepoys left upon the ground, and believed to have been killed, is alive and doing well. But there is no room to hope that the life of the other, as well as the credit of the party, has not been sacrificed by Mr. Lingham's senseless conduct.

4. If "a small army of lateals amounting to 1,200 men armed with spears, swords, bamboos, and shields," who showed that they were determined to attack Mr. Lingham's party," and who actually began to attack them whilst the weapons of war were flying about in all directions did not constitute a case for military action by a small party of 24 military police, it is inconceivable with what object Mr. Lingham could have taken the party with him. In not dispersing the armed rioters by the fire of the detachment after all milder measures had been found ineffectual, and after the rioters had actually attacked the police, the deputy magistrate failed in his duty to Government; and in ordering his party to retreat before the assailants, he ran the greatest risk of sacrificing the lives of all his men, and of giving rise to an extensive disturbance. It is providential that the result was not more distressing than it has been.

5. Whilst the Lieutenant Governor imputes nothing to Mr. Lingham in respect of his conduct on this occasion, beyond such extreme incompetence as an officer of police as must for ever prevent his being again employed in such a capacity, he feels it necessary to express his strong displeasure at the remarks on the behaviour of the military police, thus unworthily handled as they have been, which, notwithstanding his exposure of his own mismanagement, Mr. Lingham, has not hesitated to make.

6. It appears that notwithstanding the feelings which the men cannot but have experienced under such guidance, Mr. Lingham's life was gallantly saved by the havildar of the party, after the retreat he had ordered had commenced; and the seven prisoners taken were retained by the men, and marched off with them. The small detachment of 24 men had been divided into three parties, which were apparently at one time widely separated; and the men were prevented by Mr. Lingham from defending themselves in any rational manner. The imputations cast upon them by Mr. Lingham in the last paragraph of his report are entirely worthless; and this opinion will be conveyed to Major Rattray in transmitting a copy of your letter under reply, and of Mr. Lingham's report, to that officer.

7. Mr. Lingham is now deprived permanently of all police powers, and he will in future only be employed in the trial of petty criminal and revenue cases. He may be directed to proceed at once to the Sudder Station of Jehanabad, to which he was appointed on the 27th ultimo.

(No. 1849.)

COPY forwarded to the Commissioner of Patna for information and guidance.

(No. 1848.)

COPY of this letter and of the one to which it is a reply, forwarded for the information of the inspector of police battalions, with reference to his letter No. 244, dated the 17th instant.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 613), dated Rajshahye, 19 April 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter, No. 611 of yesterday's date, I have the honour to forward for the Lieutenant Governor's information, copies of two reports received this morning from Mr. Bainbridge, the intelligence conveyed in which is satisfactory.

2. The rioters appear to have suffered rather severely from the fire of the military police, one having been killed and eight wounded. This is probably what saved the party from total destruction, which might have been the consequence of retreating before an armed infuriated mob, and at the same time preventing the military from using their arms in self-defence.

3. It

3. It is satisfactory to find that the gomashtha of Baboo Ramrutton Roy, who appears to have been one of the principals, is in custody, together with a number of minor rioters. I have informed Mr. Bainbridge that I shall be prepared to sanction any rewards that he may consider advisable to offer for any of the parties engaged in this outrage.

4. As the disaffection seems to be spreading among the ryots in the southern parts of the Pubna district, I would beg leave to suggest the expediency of two extra deputy magistrates with full powers (Europeans if possible) being attached to that district as a temporary arrangement for carrying out the provisions of the new Act. Mr. Harris will be put in charge of the Commercolly sub-division; one of the extra deputies might be stationed in the south-east part of the district, while the other might be sent to Dhurrumpore, or any other place the magistrate may fix upon.

5. I would not propose to make any alteration in the arrangements for sending down Lieutenant Reeves with the rest of his men, on account of the present tranquility, as I think the magistrate should have a considerable force at his command until the present excitement is over. I have every confidence in Mr. Bainbridge, who has shown great energy and activity since he took charge of the district.

From L. A. Bainbridge, Esq., Officiating Magistrate to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated 14 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I reached this on the evening of the 12th, with 47 sepoys, in fast fishing boats.

I found the villages in which the riot occurred deserted, and the police in possession.

There is no present probability of further disturbance. The ryots in the neighbourhood are quiet.

One of the sepoys, and the body of a villager said to have been shot in the riot, were recovered on the 12th. The sepoy is not dangerously hurt, and the wounded peada will also recover.

No trace can be obtained of the other sepoy; there is little doubt he was killed and his corpse made away with.

I have offered 200 rupees for certain information; six villagers wounded with musket shots have been brought in to-day.

The principals, the Balleakandy chowdries and a gomashtha of Ramrutton Roy of Narail are not yet in custody, no steps having been taken or evidence recorded before my arrival.

The riot appears at present to have been premeditated and entirely unprovoked. I am inclined to attribute it partly to the present disaffection with regard to indigo, but more to old hostility on the part of the principles, and the lawless character of the villagers, who appear to be the trained lateicals of this and the neighbouring district.

Mr. Lingham thinks Ramrutton's servants have special animosity against him for past official conduct.

There is every reason to believe that the Seikh havildar saved Mr. Lingham's life; I shall report him particularly.

I am inclined to think this unfortunate occurrence was rather the result of Mr. Lingham's reluctance to allow the sepoys to use their weapons, than cowardice on their part; he showed great personal courage himself.

Before leaving Pubna I wrote for 200 men from Furreedpore to be marched up via Balliakandy, about six miles from here.

I expect them to arrive to-day or to-morrow, and shall keep 100 of them near this spot until after the sowings, as I think the demonstration necessary.

Matters are threatening at Belnabary, Mr. Imbert's concern, who writes that the ryots are destroying his indigo and beating his servants; also at Ghazipore in the Meerpore concern. I am anxious about the effect of this case in both places, and therefore sent Mr. Lingham with 50 men and the sub-lieutenant to the former; he will send for the ryots and have the notification of the Lieutenant Governor and the provisions of the law read and clearly explained, specially pointing out the folly and guilt and consequences of taking the law into their own hands pending His Honor's inquiries into the system.

If matters are soon settled there, he will return here and remain in charge of the Kamroops.

I have written to Mr. Harris to go to Ghazipore and do the like; he will take with him 15 sepoy, and there are 15 there already with the darogah.

I was obliged to send a large number with Mr. Lingham, because he has quite lost all confidence and refused to go without; he has been severely maltreated and allowance must be made.

I shall not leave this, unless compelled, until the principals are in custody.

I have sent for Ramrutton Roy's head servant, and when he comes will take measures which I trust will secure the presence of his gomashtha and ryots.

The case is in a fair way to be proved against the chowdries also. I hope to arrest them as soon as the police discover their whereabouts. I shall use force if necessary.

I have sent copies of the new Act and the Government notification to all the thannahs with directions how to explain and where to publish them, only where misapprehension and confusion prevail; the police will report each publication. I have 13 sepoy with me.

The other 100 of the Kamroops, if sent, will return to Furreedpore, as I do not think they will be required.

It strikes me the police of this district are unusually bad and neglected.

The punsa darogah whom I found engaged with the case is a ryot of Ramrutton's.

I ordered two others down here before I left; neither have arrived, and one turns out to be imbecile.

I have repeatedly sent for the kushtea darogah, also not yet arrived.

The punda darogah, koksha naib darogah, and fouzdaree nazir, are engaged in arresting the defendants.

There are two first-rate darogahs in Burrisaul, appointed by me; would it be objectionable to apply for their transfer.

Mr. Lingham's serishtadar, the only omlah up to his work at present with me, also turns out to be a ryot of Ramrutton Baboo's.

From A. L. Bainbridge, Esq., Officiating Magistrate, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye, dated 15 April 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report that the gomashtha of Ramrutton Roy is in custody, with a number of minor rioters.

Two other wounded men have been found; Mr. Harris has forwarded a letter for Mr. Stephenson of Dobracole, of the 12th, to the effect that his ryots are wavering. I have written to Mr. Harris to ride out at once, summon them together, and have the law and intention of Government explained in his presence. Before my letter could arrive he had sent the deputy magistrate to Meerpore, so that he is still in the station himself.

P.S.—I have written to Mr. Lingham to say he must remain for a day or two.

Captain Drew and men from Furreedpore were reported close at hand yesterday morning. I shall ride over to him this morning at Baleeacondie.

From F. Gouldsbury, Esq., Commissioner of Circuit, Rajshahye Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal (No. 624), dated Rajshahye, 20 April 1860.

Sir,

IN continuation of my letter No. 613, of yesterday's date, I have the honour to report for the Lieutenant Governor's information that a party of 80 of the Behar

Behar Irregular Cavalry, under an European officer, have arrived here from Berhampore, and will proceed this evening to Pubna.

2. Mr. Bainbridge reports all quiet in the neighbourhood of Nischindepore, but seems apprehensive of disturbances at Meerpore, where, he states, the ryots were going about in gangs.

The detachment of the Kamroop battalion had returned to Furreedpore.

(No. 1912).

Copy forwarded for the information of the Government of India in the Home Department.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Rajshahye (No. 1936), dated 25 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letters, Nos. 611 and 613, dated the 18th and 19th instant, enclosing copies of two reports from Mr. Bainbridge of the late disturbance at Jungul in the Pubna district, and of the state in which he found the villages on his arrival there.

It is stated that there is no present probability of further disturbance, and that the ryots in the neighbourhood are quiet. Mr. Bainbridge also reports that the gomashtha of Baboo Ramrutton Roy, who appears to have been one of the principals in the riot, is in custody, together with a number of minor rioters.

Great credit is due to Mr. Bainbridge for the prompt and effective action taken by him against the rioters. You will be so good as to convey to that gentleman the expression of the Lieutenant Governor's appreciation of his exertions.

Your recommendation for posting two extra deputy magistrates in Pubna, as a temporary arrangement for carrying out the provisions of the new Act, is approved, and as soon as possible two competent officers will be sent on this special duty.

The Lieutenant Governor desires me to request that you will recall the sowars lately placed at your disposal, and whom you very hastily and injudiciously, and not quite properly, sent back, without previous sanction; you will order the men to proceed immediately to Pubna to act under the orders of Mr. Bainbridge.

Lieutenant Reeves has been vested, as recommended by you, with magisterial powers, which he will exercise within the Pubna district.

— No. 26. —

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 36 Ct.), dated Alipore, 10 February 1860.

Sir,

I BEG to lay before Government the enclosed original correspondence between Mr. Larmour and this office, and at the same time to explain my reasons for doing so.

2. Mr. H. Mackenzie, of Jingergatchah addressed me on the 14th October last, complaining of the mischief which had been done in his indigo villages by Baboo Hemchunder Kur's perwanah to the police, which is the subject of Mr. Larmour's letter. In reply, I referred him in the first place to the magistrate of Baraset, but as there were among the enclosures of Mr. Mackenzie's letter certain papers which led me to doubt the propriety of the deputy magistrate's proceedings, I at the same time called on Mr. Ward to send me a copy of

From Mr. Larmour, dated 28th January 1860.
From Commissioner, No. 20 Ct., dated 2d February 1860.
From Mr. Larmour, dated 4th February 1860.

the instructions which Mr. Eden had issued to the Baboo, and other information.

3. Mr. Ward did not comply with this call till the 5th ultimo, and his report did not reach the office till after I had rejoined it on the 19th idem.

4. Meanwhile the magistrate of Nuddea had reported (20th December) the prevalence of a rumour in the south-east part of his district, that Government was opposed to the cultivation of indigo, and submitted for Mr. Reid's sanction a proposal to issue an order which should have the effect of counteracting it; Mr. Reid replied, admitting that some such step might be necessary, but requesting that it should not be taken till after he had visited the locality, which he expected to do in a few days. I submit this correspondence, in original, for his Honor the Lieutenant Governor's perusal.

From Magistrate,
No. 315, dated
20th December
1859.
From Commissioner, No. 2 Ct.,
dated 3d January
1860.

5. On relinquishing charge of this office, Mr. Reid put on record the following note, which left the case for my disposal.

"There is a letter in this bundle from the magistrate of Nuddea (No. 315 of 20th December), which requires further orders, but I postponed passing any until I had visited the part of the country referred to, and had received a reply to the Baraset magistrate's letter about Mr. Mackenzie's complaint. The latter has not yet been received, although twice takeeded for. The opposition to the sowing of indigo in the southern part of the Mulnath concern, in the villages of Foolsurra, appears to have partly originated from a quarrel between the factory and one of the Ranaghat zemindars; but it is also, I think, partly owing to the dissemination of the orders passed by the deputy magistrate of Kallarooah to his darogahs. The opposition in the Baraset distinct appears to be attributable to the latter cause only. I think the issue by the deputy magistrate of the orders referred to was injudicious, and that some steps should be taken to remedy the evil which has occurred; but, in the issue of any counter-orders on the subject, great care must be taken that they do not go too far in the opposite direction. I think some such order as that suggested by Mr. Drummond might be issued."

6. I immediately wrote demi-officially, both to Mr. Reid and Mr. Drummond, and on receipt of their replies, which I have recorded, and after careful consideration of Mr. Ward's report, I noted as follows on the 30th ultimo:—

"It appears to me after reading Mr. Reid's and Mr. Drummond's demi-official notes on this subject, that it is best to let it drop. I agree with the former that the deputy magistrate of Baraset acted very injudiciously, and I do not think Mr. Eden should have handed over the Government order, as he did, to an officer but imperfectly acquainted with English."

"The deputy magistrate, I observe, says that his publication of the order in the thannahs was within Mr. Eden's cognizance."

7th. Mr. Larmour's first letter came before me on the following day, and so did a communication from the joint magistrate of Jessore, from which I extract in the margin.*

8th. It has been affirmed then, from three different quarters, that a misimpression existed of the real purport of the Government orders, dated 21st July 1859, No. 4516, and that this has caused an uneasy feeling in a part of the indigo districts. Under these circumstances, I consider it to be my duty to inform the Lieutenant Governor of all that has passed on the subject, but I still hold to the opinion of my note of the 30th ultimo. I do not, in fact, see in what way an order could be worded that would be merely a corrective of the mischief done by the deputy magistrate's injudicious perwannah.

9. I have not yet received any report from the magistrate on the outrage on Mr. Campbell referred to in Mr. Larmour's last letter.

* "A report has got about that the Lieutenant Governor during his visit to Nuddea District gave out that Indigo Planting was oppressive and ryots were to be told that they were not in any manner bound to sow Indigo unless they pleased, even though they had taken advances or entered into contracts. Indigo Planters state that ryots are putting the most liberal construction on this, and are becoming perfectly unmanageable, and they fear that this feeling will spread and consummate the ruin of their factories. That some such notion has got abroad is apparent from various petitions, &c, filed of late; but the outbreak apprehended has not shown itself very generally as yet."

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for Bengal India Company, to the Commissioner of Nuddea, dated Mulnagh, 28 January 1860.

Sir,

I REGRET to be again compelled to appeal to you for protection against the acts of an officer of Government.

In the month of September last, the deputy magistrate of Kallarooah issued the accompanying perwannah on his police throughout the subdivision; it was made known by beat of drum at all the principal bazars on market day; and the only real object of such a perwannah was to instigate the ryots not to sow indigo or fulfil their contracts with the factories.

The ryots of this concern, however, did not immediately listen "to the voice of the tempter;" they came as usual to the factories, made their accounts, and received their advances from the hands of my assistants, Messrs. Campbell and Hyde.

Everything went on smoothly until the deputy magistrate came out on his Mofussil tour. During his stay at Goberdangah, it was reported to me that he had made known his hostile feeling towards the planters, and that the ryots would likely take advantage of such feeling, they did not do so. The deputy magistrate passed on to Gyeguttah; he was there for some days; no ryots made any complaint; but on his arrival at Chunbarreah, the ryots of Baboo Symchunder Pal Chowdry from Doorgapore and Gyeguttah factories put in petitions to say that I wished to force them to sow indigo, an order is immediately passed on these petitions taking it for granted that I do and will oppress the ryots; and the police are ordered out to protect and virtually to encourage the ryots in not sowing indigo, although they have received their advances, and up to the time of the deputy's arrival at Chunbarreah had never made a complaint of any kind. Had the ryots of Gyeguttah any cause of complaint they would surely have made it when the magistrate was encamped close to their villages. Had the deputy known my character or the state of his subdivision (and I cannot believe him ignorant of either), he must have known in his heart the petitions made by the ryots were utterly false, and that no lattials are ever employed by me to coerce ryots; still every encouragement is given to the ryots to act dishonestly, and burkundazes from Goburdangah thannah are placed in the villages to prevent either my servants or assistants from going near them, and of late, when they have done so, they have been pelted by clods, and saved from further maltreatment by the speed of their horses.

It is only two years since Syamchunder Pal Chowdry's people nearly murdered my assistant Mr. Cockshort, and every encouragement is now being given to him to attack my assistants at Gyeguttah and Doorgapore.

I can only repeat that it pains me to again come before you; my difficulties have never been with my ryots, but with officers of Government, who have instigated the ryots to rebel and avoid their engagements, and a better proof of this could not be than when Molavi Abdool Luteef shut up my factory of Peepragatchee; that since his removal, (now six years since), I have not had any difference with the ryots, nor has ever any complaint been made against me or my servants.

It is quite impossible for me to get respectable Europeans to serve me or to carry on business at all in the Mofussil, unless I receive fair play from the hands of the Government. If the officers of Government are permitted to go round the districts, as has been the case of late, instigating people to act dishonestly and ruin the planter, and to maltreat Europeans, there is no course open but to retire from the Mofussil.

The sowing season is now coming on, and unless Government will be pleased to issue a notice to counteract the effects of the accompanying perwannah, and that it is not the wish or intention of Government to interfere in any way with the trade of the Mofussil, or allow its officers to gratify their feelings against the European by a repetition of these sinister attacks, our difficulties must increase.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of Nuddea Division, to R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for the Bengal Indigo Company, (No. 20 Ct.), dated Allipore, 2 February 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter dated the 28th ultimo, in which you express a desire that Government should issue a notice to counteract the effects of a perwannah issued in September last by deputy magistrate Hemchunder Kur, I beg to remind you that my locum tenens, Mr. Reid was encamped for three days at Bongong, without receiving any intimation from you of the necessity of such a course. He seems to have considered the opposition offered by the people to indigo sowings in the south part of the Mulnath concern, to have been due in a great measure to your quarrel with the Pal Chowdrees.

2. If it is still your wish that I should hand your letter up to the Lieutenant Governor, you should, I think, enable me to explain at the same time why, when Mr. Reid had so good an opportunity of satisfying himself whether mischief had or had not been done by the deputy magistrate's perwannah, you omitted to move him on the subject.

From R. T. Larmour, Esq., General Mofussil Manager for the Bengal Indigo Company, to the Commissioner of Nuddea, dated 4 February 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated 2nd instant, and in reply beg to state that I called on Mr. Reid, at Jessore, and he informed me he had sent for a copy of the perwannah issued by the deputy magistrate, Baboo Hemchunder Kur, and had ordered the deputy to meet with him at Bongong; Mr. Reid acknowledges the impropriety of the deputy's proceedings, and said he would do all in his power to rectify the mischief; my assistant Mr. Campbell called on Mr. Reid at Bongong (I was absent, being obliged to visit the Pathatasur concern in Moorshedabad), and he also represented the construction that had been placed by zemindars and ryots on the perwannah in question, which was to the effect that it was the wish and desire of the Government to put a stop to indigo planting throughout the district.

That the issuing of the perwannah and the deputy magistrate's tone has caused my present difficulties, there cannot possibly be a doubt. The ryots made their accounts, took their advances, and measured off their lands, marked and numbered as is customary, but during the past month the ryots of Baboo Syamchunder Pal Chowdry in particular have shown a bad feeling, and I regret to inform you that my assistant, Mr. Campbell, was yesterday surrounded by lattials near the village of Russulpur in Thannah Goberdangah; both he and his horse were knocked down, and he lay on the field insensible for an hour, and has been very severely beaten. He has gone to Kishnaghur to petition the magistrate, and who, I am in hopes, will afford us protection and redress. I have done all in my power to see every justice done my riots; I never have a difficulty with them unless at the instigation of Government officers. I have induced young men of the highest respectability to join the Bengal Indigo Company as assistants; but how can I expect them to remain, or to carry on business at all, if they are thus to be maltreated when riding quietly over their cultivation. We have no means of protecting ourselves, and living isolated as we do; unless we have protection, we must leave the Mofussil.

I must earnestly beg you will lay my petition before the Lieutenant Governor. I have never resorted to force, and never will, in getting ryots to act fairly towards me. I pay liberally and well, and the money is paid into the ryots' own hands by my assistants and myself, and all I pray for is that the people should not be instigated (as has been the case) to quarrel with me, and that such notorious characters as Syamchunder Pal Chowdry should not receive any encouragement to bully my servants and maltreat my assistants.

When it is borne in mind that Mulnath concern extends over one-third of Kishnaghur district, and that from year's end to year's end there is never a complaint plaint made against me or my servants, I think it will bear out all I have represented to you as to my fair dealing towards every one, and that I do all it is possible for a man to do in seeing justice done the ryots of the concern. I honestly confess I cannot contend against the Government officers, and I firmly believe the Lieutenant Governor will not sanction the acts of the deputy magistrate, Baboo Hem Chunder Kur.

From E. Drummond, Esq., Magistrate of Nuddea, to the Commissioner of Circuit Nuddea Division (No. 315), dated Nuddea, 20 December 1859.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to inform you that there is a report current about the south-eastern part of this district to the effect that Government is opposed to the cultivation of indigo, and that an order to that purpose will shortly be issued.

2. This report I believe to have been spread in particular instances, by designing persons to do their immediate neighbours harm, but I have no doubt that it owes its origin to the occurrences in Baraset, and that it is rapidly spreading and will do much damage in this district, if not checked at once.

3. Both to the planters, as the ryots have already without any good cause or other assignable reason began leaguering together against one or two factories to refuse to cultivate indigo.

4. And to the ryots, as they are, so to speak, cutting their own throats, and neglecting all cultivation, and wasting their money and time in litigation, instead of remaining quietly at home and cultivating their lands.

5. I believe it therefore to be very desirable, for the good of both the ryots and the planters, at once to put a stop to this false impression, and therefore beg to annex an English proceeding with translation into the vernacular, which I have prepared, and on which I propose, with your sanction, to issue orders to all darogahs within whose jurisdiction it may seem necessary so to do.

6. I would beg respectfully to remind you that these groundless rumours spread very fast, and therefore request the favour of your favouring me with a reply as soon as you conveniently can. The season for making the indigo advances is rapidly passing also, and therefore every day gained is important.

I only propose issuing these orders on the darogahs of three or four of my south-eastern thannahs at present, and should therefore not have troubled you in the matter, had not the subject generally been one of some importance, and one requiring also delicacy of treatment.

WHEREAS it has come to my notice that there is a report among the ryots of some villages in this district that the Government disapproves of, and is about to issue an order prohibiting the cultivation of indigo; and whereas I have strong grounds to suspect that evil disposed persons are spreading this report, to the injury of both planters and ryots; it has therefore appeared proper to me to order the darogahs in whose name this perwannah is to be issued, to proclaim within their jurisdiction notice to the following effect:—

That the Government has not issued, nor is it going to issue, any orders prohibiting the cultivation of indigo. This is a matter that sorely concerns the planters and ryots, and in which Government in no way concerns itself.

At the same time the darogahs will use all vigilance to detect and apprehend any designing persons found spreading all such foolish and malicious reports, which injure both the good name of the Government and the welfare of its subjects, and will send them into me without delay to be punished as they may deserve.

From the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division to the Magistrate of Nuddea (No. 2 Ct.), dated 3 January 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 315, dated the 20th ultimo, and to inform you in reply that although I am inclined to concur with you that it may be necessary to issue a notice of the description of that forwarded by you, with the view of counteracting the report which you state to be current in the south-eastern parts of your district, regarding the cultivation of indigo, I would not wish any further steps to be taken towards issuing it until I have myself had an opportunity of visiting the locality referred to, which I hope to be able to do a few days hence, when I will communicate further with you on the subject.

2. At the same time, I beg to point out that the issue of that portion of your proposed proclamation which is included in the third clause thereof would in my opinion be not only illegal but also injudicious.

3. It would, it appears to me, give the officers of the police an authority which they do not possess under the law, viz., that of arresting and sending in parties who might be found by them to be offending in the manner alluded to, viz., "spreading foolish and malicious reports injurious to the good name of Government and the welfare of its subjects," and an undue advantage might, not impossibly, be taken to make the clause alluded to a handle for the oppression of innocent parties.

From Lord H. Ulick-Browne, Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 847), dated 8 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 36 Circuit, dated the 10th ultimo, submitting some correspondence with Mr. Larmour, relative to the excitement at present prevailing in the Kishnaghur district, which is said to have been occasioned by a perwannah to the police issued by Baboo Hemchunder Kur, Deputy Magistrate in Charge of the Kalarooah Sub-division, and in reply to request that you will be so good as to submit, for the Lieutenant Governor's information, a copy of the perwannah in question, as soon as possible.

From A. Grote, Esq., Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, to the Under Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Fort William (No. 66 Ct.), dated Allipore, 9 March 1860.

Sir,

IN reply to your letter, No. 847, dated 18th instant, I beg to send you a copy of the perwannah in question, with a translation.

2. I believe that his Honor the Lieutenant Governor's order on the Joyrampore petition, which as I informed you in my letter dated 6th instant, No. 62 Ct., I had directed the magistrate of Nuddea to promulgate, will have an excellent effect in explaining to all parties what the views of Government really are. I have just received a satisfactory assurance to this purport from Mr. Herschel, whose camp I join to-morrow.

3. I take this opportunity of laying before Government a Bengalee letter with translation, which is said to have been intercepted by Mr. Forlong, who handed it on to Mr. Drummond.

It may or may not be authentic; the moderation of its tone inclines me to believe it to be so. At all events, agitation from some quarter is at work to promote petitioning on the part of the ryots, while, on the other hand, the English press is being worked to represent these petitioners as ready for agrarian outrages to which as yet they have shown no disposition.

4. I trust

4. I trust his Honor the Lieutenant Governor may now have leisure to take up the subject of my letter No. 141 C., dated 7th November last. In the concluding para. of that letter, I hinted at the possibility of the police misinterpreting the previous orders of July, though at that time I had only Mr. Mackenzie's assertion that they had done so in the case of the darogah of thannah Sarsah. Had Mr. Ward reported in reply to my call, before I left this office for the Board of Revenue, I should probably have recommended to Government an authoritative cancellation and withdrawal of his notification, which could not then have caused the mischief now ascribed to it.

DAROGAH, THANNA KALLAROOAH.

WITH reference to a letter, dated 17th August last, from the magistrate of Baraset, forwarding an extract from a communication from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the address of the Commissioner of the Nuddea division, No. 4516, under date the 21st July 1859, being to the effect that in cases of dispute about the cultivation of indigo, ryots shall retain possession of their respective lands, and grow whatever crops they may wish thereon, and that it is incumbent on the police to see that in so doing they are not molested by indigo planters or other parties; further, that planters shall not forcibly sow indigo on the ryots' lands on the plea of the latter having entered into agreements with them, but that where such agreements have been entered into by ryots, it is competent to indigo planters to sue them in the Civil Courts, the Criminal Courts having no jurisdiction in such cases, as the ryots, whether admitting or denying their engagements, may advance many valid pleas for not cultivating indigo,—you are required for the future to proceed in conformity with the above.—20th August 1859.

TRANSLATION of Bengalee Letter.

WE have learnt from our mooktear that the Government intend to depute some Commissioners into the Mofussil in order to hold local inquiry, and to report whether the complaints of the ryots against the oppression on the part of indigo planters, as contained in the several petitions presented to Government, and as published in the newspapers, are correct. The planters also having been cognisant of this deputation, threaten the ryots with wrong, meaning that the Commissioners will come into the Mofussil for the purpose of making the ryots cultivate indigo. The object of this misinterpretation is to deter the ryots from speaking against them, so that the Commissioners will not be able to hear any complaints from the ryots, and the consequence will be that the complaints already preferred will be falsified, and Government will place no more confidence in any future petitions.

2. The unjust orders of the former magistrate in cases concerning indigo have already made an impression on the minds of the ryots, that all the authorities are in favour of the planters, and the wrong interpretation put upon the intended deputation by the latter, will, in the above state of mind, be received by the ryots as probable. You will therefore explain to all the ryots, that although the orders of the magistrate might have been unjust they need not be afraid of the threats of the planters, that they may come forward in thousands to represent their calamities to the Commissioners; that this is the last resource they can resort to; that if they remain silent the Commissioners will report that there is no disturbance in the Mofussil; that it will turn out to their favour if they all at a time present petitions of their complaints, and that those who will make no petitions will not be exempted from cultivating indigo, nay, they will be in the hands of the planters for eternity, and will have to bear the burden of those exempted from the cultivation as a result of their remonstrances. You will also spread such other threats as will induce the ryots to combine and make petitions, for the planters will gather their own people and make them say before the Commissioners that they are not subject to any oppression whatever, and thus there will be no end to the distress of the ryots. You will further take measures to circulate in Patherghatta also the above suggestions.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Bengalee Translator to Government (No. 931), dated 15 March 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to forward to you herewith a copy of a Bengalee perwannah, and to request that you will, as soon as possible, furnish the Lieutenant Governor with an exact and accurate translation thereof.

Two versions in English of this document have been submitted to Government, of which copies are also herewith transmitted. These, you will observe, differ materially in the rendering of some passages. It is the desire of the Lieutenant Governor to ascertain the precise meaning of those passages in particular.

From the Government Bengalee Translator, to A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, dated Serampore, 16 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 931, dated the 15th March 1860, enclosing copy of Bengalee perwannah, of which I have the honour to forward, according to your request, an accurate translation. The two versions of it accompanying your letter are also herewith returned.

TRANSLATION.

To the darogah of thannah Kalarooah. Take notice.—A letter from the magistrate of Baraset, dated the 17th August 1859, having been received, accompanied by an extract from an English letter from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the address of the Commissioner of the Nuddea division, dated 21st July 1859, No. 4516, to the following purport, that in cases of disputes relating to indigo ryots shall retain possession of their own lands, and shall sow in them what crops they please, and the police will be careful that no indigo planter, nor any one else, be able to interfere in the matter, and indigo planters shall not be able forcibly to cause indigo to be sown on the lands of those ryots on the ground that the ryots consented to the sowing, &c., of indigo. If ryots have so consented, the indigo planter may bring an action against them in the Civil Court. The Criminal Court has no concern in these matters, because, notwithstanding such contracts, or such consent withheld or given, ryots may urge unanswerable excuses against the sowing of indigo. A copy of perwannah is therefore issued, and you are requested in future to act accordingly.—Dated 20th August 1859.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Honourable A. Eden, Joint Magistrate of Baraset (No. 1193), dated 24 March 1860.

Sir,

Letter from Commissioner of Ruddea, No. 36, Ct., dated the 10th February last, with its Enclosures.

I AM directed to forward to you a copy of the correspondence noted on the margin, relative to the excitement at present prevailing in parts of the Nuddea division in connexion with the cultivation of indigo, which is said to have had its origin partly in an indiscreet perwannah issued to the police, and made known by beat of drum in all the principal bazars of his subdivision in August last by your subordinate, Baboo Hem Chunder Kur, deputy magistrate of Kalarooah; and I am to request that you will be so good as to submit, for the Lieutenant Governor's information, an explanation of the circumstances of the case as soon as possible.

2. The points upon which the Lieutenant Governor desires to be particularly informed are—first, as to how, that is, in what form, the Government order of the 21st of July 1859, No. 4516, was forwarded to the deputy magistrate; and, secondly, as to what portion of it was so forwarded.

3. Your special attention is directed to the second paragraph of the office note recorded by the Commissioner of Nuddea on the 30th of January last, quoted in paragraph 6 of his letter, No. 36 Ct., dated the 10th ultimo, in which it is stated that the publication of the order in question in the thannahs was within your cognizance.

4. The Lieutenant Governor observes that it would seem to have been unnecessary, and therefore improper, on your part, to make your subordinates acquainted with a discussion on a question of practice between the Government, the Commissioner, and yourself, or with the results thereof, otherwise than in the shape of a bare order sufficient to guide their action into conformity with the decision arrived at.

5. Three separate translations of the deputy magistrate's perwannah are forwarded with this letter. One of these was submitted by the Indigo Planters' Association, another was received from the Commissioner, and the third was obtained from the Bengalee Translator to Government, in consequence of the difference between the other two. The last translation, which of course is the one to be regarded officially, places the wording of the perwannah in the least objectionable form; but it still leaves the last sentence open to strong objection, as being capable of the interpretation that generally, or indeed always, ryots have unobjectionable excuses for not growing indigo although they may have contracted to do so. It may thus be turned into an apparent invitation to ryots universally to break their contracts.

to

In so important and delicate an affair it would seem to have been especially incumbent upon you to have given directions to the deputy magistrate so carefully worded that he could not have fallen into this gross error.

7. But the Lieutenant Governor will await your explanation before pronouncing an opinion on the case.

From the Honourable A. Eden to the Secretary to the Government of Bengal; dated Fort William, 28 March 1860.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, No. 1193, dated 24th March, forwarding a copy of correspondence relative to the excitement at present prevailing in parts of the Nuddea division in connexion with the cultivation of indigo, which is said to be partly owing to a perwannah issued to the police by Baboo Hem Chunder Kur, Deputy Magistrate of Kalarooah, and calling upon me for an explanation of the circumstances of the case as soon as possible.

2. I much regret that this opportunity of furnishing an explanation was not afforded me earlier, so that I might have obtained from Baraset and Kalarooah such papers as I require. I will however endeavour to give all the information I can from such papers as I have by me, and from communications that I have had on this subject with Mr. Ward, my successor, and Baboo Hem Chunder Kur.

3. It will be remembered that, early last year, the ryots of the Bengal Indigo Company applied to me for protection from the threatened forcible dispossession of their lands by Mr. Larmour. The factories of the Bengal Indigo Company in connexion with which these disputes arose, being situated in the sub-divisions of Kalarooah and Tarragooney I forwarded the petition in original to Baboo Oboy Churn Bose, then in charge of both sub-divisions, and directed him to issue orders for the protection of the complainants, provided that the lands proved to be undoubtedly the ryots' own. Mr. Larmour complained to the Commissioner, who directed that my order should be cancelled, and that the protection of the police should be withdrawn from all ryots, who were alleged by the planter to be under advances to him for the cultivation of indigo. As the case was before the Deputy Magistrate of Tarragooney, I at once followed the usual course of forwarding to him Mr. Grote's letter, and directed him to carry out the Commissioner's orders. Having done this, I remonstrated with Mr. Grote against the view he had taken, and some correspondence passed between us on the subject with reference to a difficulty in which the deputy magistrate was placed as regarded another planter, in consequence of these orders.

4. The correspondence was forwarded by the Commissioner to Government, and the decision of Government was communicated in your letter, No. 4516, dated 21st July 1859. On the receipt of that letter, I, in the usual course of routine, forwarded a copy by endorsement to the deputy magistrate, before whom the cases in question were, and my order to whom had given cause for the reference to Government. The letter of the Commissioner had been forwarded to the deputy magistrate, and it was absolutely necessary that he should be informed that the mode of practice laid down by the Commissioner was to be discontinued. It is always the custom to forward such letters to the officers concerned, and I certainly do not see how the views of Government could have been conveyed to that officer in a more unobjectionable manner than in the precise words of Government. The difference of opinion between the Commissioner and myself as to the course which the law prescribed for magistrates in indigo disputes was well known to the deputy magistrate, and he had himself taken part in the correspondence connected therewith, and it appears to me that it was both necessary and desirable that he should know the grounds and reasoning upon which the Government arrived at the conclusions detailed in that letter. I cannot think that a simple order emanating from myself, to the effect that the Commissioner's orders were to be considered cancelled, would have been respectful to that officer, and such a course would certainly have been unusual.

5. The deputy magistrate took no action whatever on the Government orders, simply recording them, as it was intended he should do, for his future guidance in indigo cases.

6. Shortly after this, when Baboo Hem Chunder Kur was transferred from Kaligunge to Kalarooah, he came into Baraset and wished me to get the order for his transfer recalled. Baboo Hem Chunder evinced great reluctance to join his appointment at Kalarooah in consequence of the difficult position in which he would be placed as regarded the indigo planters. He urged that the power and influence of the Bengal Indigo Company is such, that no native official of independent spirit is willing to be brought into contact with them, and he referred to the case of Moulvie Abdool Luteef, who was removed from the sub-division for issuing orders precisely similar to those which I had issued, and which led to the discussion with Mr. Grote. I assured him that if he administered justice in a straightforward and conscientious manner between man and man, he would have no cause to fear any influence that might be brought to bear against him, and I declined to apply for his retention at Kalligunge. He then said that as the greater portion of Mr. Larmour's cultivation was in his sub-division, he thought it only right that he should have a copy of the Government orders regarding those disputes that he might be guided by them in any cases that occurred. His request appeared to me to be reasonable, natural, and proper, and I was clearly of opinion that he was entitled to have a copy of the Government ruling on an important practical question of this kind, connected with his sub-division, and which would in all probability be constantly referred to in cases pending before him. I saw no necessity however for letting him see the extent to which Mr. Grote and myself differed on this subject, as he had lately arrived in the district, and had taken no part in the previous discussion; I therefore merely sent him that portion of the Government letter which related to the general question of police interference in indigo disputes. I have nothing before me which enables me to speak authoritatively, but to the best of my belief the portion of the letter sent to him was from the 12th para. to the end of the letter, and this extract was forwarded with my letter annexed hereto.

7. Your letter next directs my attention to the 2d para. of the office note recorded by Mr. Grote, and quoted in the 6th para. of his letter, No. 36, dated 10th February. I cannot but express my regret that Mr. Grote, who was in constant communication with me in Calcutta, should, without speaking to me on the subject, have seen fit to record that the deputy magistrate stated "that the publication of the order in the thannahs was within Mr. Eden's cognizance." I most positively assure his Honor that I had no cognizance whatever of the publication of the order; the first I heard of it was in casual conversation with Mr. Grote, some months after its publication, and the first I saw of it was in the public newspapers. I think that it will be found that its publication did not take place when I was in charge of the Baraset magistracy, and could not therefore have been within my cognizance. From what I have since heard from Mr. Ward and Baboo Hem Chunder, I apprehend that Mr. Grote entirely misunderstood the deputy magistrate; it will, I believe, be found on inquiry, that what the deputy magistrate said was, that the "publication of the perwannah was known to the magistrate of Baraset, but that he did not know whether that officer had approved his proceedings," the magistrate of Baraset here alluded to being Mr. Ward and not myself. From what Mr. Ward said to me I was under the impression that he had fully explained this to Mr. Grote and to Mr. Reid. The deputy magistrate's intimation of the publication of this perwannah to the magistrate of Baraset will doubtless be found among the Baraset records; the orders passed thereon and the date of its receipt, will show clearly whether or no I was at that time at Baraset. In the meantime it would appear from Mr. Larmour's own letter of the 28th January that the publication of the perwannah occurred in September last, about one month after I had left the district.

8. Had

8. Had I remained in the district, I should not have approved of any orders to the notice on the subject of the Government letter, for such orders were then unnecessary, the indigo cultivation for that season being over. I should have known from past experience that the publication of any such order would, in all probability, have been made use of by the planters as a convenient excuse to which to attribute the natural unwillingness of their ryots to sow whenever occasion might require. In the month of August, moreover, it was not likely that the police would be called upon to act on an emergency, and without obtaining the special orders of the magistrate in each case; and I issued no orders myself to the police in the thannahs under my immediate charge in connexion with the Government letter, neither did the deputy magistrate of Taragooney. It never occurred to me that it was possible that the deputy magistrate of Kalarooah should issue any general orders to the police, for sub-divisional officers are prohibited from issuing such orders without obtaining the previous sanction of higher authority, and whenever any general orders have been thought necessary, I have always issued them myself to all the thannahs. Finally, it was a case in which general orders were useless, as forcible entry is one of that class of cases which the police cannot investigate without orders of the magistrate, and I can only attribute their issue to the fact that Baboo Hem Chunder had been principally employed in the Dacoity Department, and had but little experience as an executive officer.

9. Having shown that I had no cognizance of the publication of the perwannah alluded to, I may perhaps be permitted to say a few words in connexion with that document. I have no wish whatever to screen myself behind my subordinate, and am desirous of bearing any portion of the responsibility of its issue which can justly and fairly be attributed to me. It is certain that the deputy magistrate would not have issued the perwannah if he had not received a copy of the Government letter upon which it is founded; the responsibility of furnishing him with that copy is clearly mine, my reasons for having done so I have alluded to above, and it is difficult for me to say more without appearing to desire to throw blame upon those whose acts it is not for me to call in question. I may however briefly say that the influence exercised by the Bengal Indigo Company has long been such, that the subordinate officers of Government in that neighbourhood have been afraid to do their duty, and the police have in some cases been the instrument made use of by the planters for oppressing the people. Since the removal of Moulvie Abdool Luteef no native official has dared to act independently, and few ryots have dared to complain. It is not becoming that I should speak in further detail on the subject, but I would request that his Honor may be pleased to call for the papers connected with the Moulvie's case, and with the decision of the judge of the 24 pergunnahs on the appeal made in connexion with the magistrate's proceedings in that case; his Honor will then be enabled to understand why, amongst other reasons, I thought it necessary to strengthen the hands of the deputy magistrate by affording him the benefit of a perusal of the views of Government as to the protection which it is the duty of the police to afford to cultivators, more especially as these views were elicited in a case connected with the cultivators of that particular sub-division. I have before pointed out to superior authority the very difficult position in which magisterial officers are placed for want of an authoritative ruling on the subjects, and I have shown that in this matter, the executive and judicial functions of a district officer frequently clash, and that in disputes regarding indigo it is exceedingly difficult to combine expediency with justice; the Government order of July last was that for which I had so often asked for myself and subordinates.

10. It has always been the practice in districts in which I have been, and I have the authority of several very experienced officers for stating that the practice generally prevails, of forwarding to the lower courts and sub-divisional offices all orders whether of Government or the Sudder Court, laying down a particular course of action in a particular class of cases; and this has been more especially the practice where such orders have reference to cases occurring within the jurisdiction of such subordinate officers. I may remark that Mr. Grote is mistaken in saying that the subordination of these orders was in this case injudicious on the ground that the deputy magistrate has an imperfect knowledge of English, for I believe that there are few natives of this country who possess so accurate a knowledge of our language as the officer in question.

11. It never occurred to me that there was anything in the Government letter, which was likely to cause mischief or to be misunderstood; it appeared to me to be a full, clear, and conclusive exposition of the law as it stands, and I have for the last three years based orders upon the principles therein upheld.

12. In the 8th para. of that letter you remark this is a most important practical question, and the Lieutenant Governor thinks it is strange that it has not been authoritatively determined before now, as cases of this sort are of daily occurrence. Fully concurring in this view, I was of opinion that I was acting with propriety in communicating this most important ruling to those who above all required it, and who looked to me for instruction and advice; it even appears to me that I should have incurred great responsibility had I kept the Government order secret.

13. In your letter now under reply, the last para. of the deputy magistrate's perwannah is pointed out as being open to the objection that it is capable of the interpretation, that generally, or indeed always, ryots have unobjectionable excuses for not growing indigo, although they may have contracted to do so. The wording of the Government letter is this: "The ryots may confess the engagement, and still have many irresistible pleas to avoid the consequence the planter insists upon." The wording of the deputy magistrate's perwannah is: "The Criminal Court has no concern in these matters, because notwithstanding such contracts or such consent withheld or given, ryots may urge unanswerable excuses against the sowing of indigo." The wording of my letter was: "Such promises can only be produced against the ryots in the Civil Court, and the magisterial authorities have nothing to do with them, for there must be two parties to a promise; and it is possible that the ryot, even whose promises or contracts are admitted, may still have many irresistible pleas to avoid the consequence the planter insists upon; the consequence alluded to being the forcible dispossession of the ryot by the planter. The question was whether, if the planter asserted that the ryot had agreed to sow indigo, such ryot had a right, supposing him to admit the existence of a contract, to demand the assistance of the magistrate when threatened with being ousted from his land. My meaning in saying that even when he admitted his contract, he might still urge irresistible pleas why he should not be summarily dealt with, and such pleas as the Civil Court alone would be qualified in adjudicating on, may be more fully understood from the following extract of a letter which I had the honour to address to the Commissioner of Nuddea in June 1858: "Another reason suggests itself to me why the Criminal Court should neither adjudicate summarily in questions of contracts to sow indigo, nor compel their enforcement. Even supposing such contracts to be voluntary engagements, their non-fulfilment would not necessarily imply fraud. The ryot might have taken the advance with the distinct intention of sowing the amount of indigo engaged for; but if, by the oppression of his zemindars, or loss of his cattle, or other misfortune, he is unable to carry out his intention without the slightest mala fides, it would be very unfair that he should be treated as a criminal, and it would become a mere question of adjudication as to what amount of advance and what interest he should return. This, I apprehend, could only be decided as a civil suit, and such objections would in all probability be raised in every case of non-fulfilment of contracts, the magistrate's office would be converted into a civil court to adjust a question of damages."

14. My object in quoting that portion of the Government letter was to draw the deputy magistrate's attention to what appeared to me to be the real and main objection to the refusal to afford protection to ryots on the allegation of a promise. It never suggested itself to me for one moment that the deputy magistrate would take any action on the letter except so far as it might guide his own judgment in cases then before him, or which might arise. I have no doubt that the meaning of the deputy magistrate was precisely the same as my own; indeed, it is not possible that he can have made any mistake, for the Government letter gave an example of the kind of plea alluded to. It cannot be said that I have ever given any order likely to make the ryots believe that they would receive any sanction from me in evading their existing engagements, for I have frequently advised them, when they have complained to me, that whatever the hardship involved, it was their duty to fulfil their engagements, and to make what objections they had to make to the cultivation after so doing, as the entering into such engagements was quite optional, and that they were entitled to protection for any coercion used to make them so engage. At the same time, I have never allowed the planters to enforce their contracts in any manner not authorized by law; neither have I allowed my court and the courts of my subordinates to usurp the functions of the Civil Court, and to receive and adjudicate on plaints and pleas connected with the fulfilment of contracts.

15. I may perhaps be allowed to make some remarks as to the extent to which the deputy magistrate's perwannah can be said to have influenced the ryots in refusing to cultivate indigo. This perwannah was, Mr. Larmour says, issued in September, a period of the year at which, in that part of the country, the indigo business is altogether at a standstill, as far as the ryots are concerned; the engagements for the ensuing year being made in November and December. If, then, the impression caused by the deputy magistrate's perwannah was that Government was opposed to the cultivation of indigo, the ryots would have had the courage in November to refuse to go to the factory, and to complain, in the event of their having advances forced upon them; but it does not appear from Mr. Larmour's letter that they did anything; they were altogether unaffected by the perwannah; they came, he says, "as usual to the factory, and adjusted their accounts;" "everything," he continues, "went on smoothly" until many months subsequent to its publication, and in fact until certain petitions were presented to the deputy magistrate when on his cold weather tour; and even these petitions are not attributed to the influence of the perwannah, but are alleged by Mr. Larmour to have been made at the instigation of Baboo Syam Chunder Pal Chowdry, a person with whom the Bengal Indigo Company have for many years been at feud. Mr. Larmour's complaint indeed is simply this, that the deputy magistrate, instead of accepting Mr. Larmour's character and the state of the sub-division as prima facie evidence of the falseness of the charges, and rejecting the petitions accordingly, directed the police to protect the ryots if necessary. This proceeding appears to Mr. Larmour to have been equivalent to taking it for granted that he intended to oppress his ryots, and he construes it into an encouragement to them not to sow indigo; but I submit that if, as he says, he had no intention to coerce his ryots or to use lateeals, the deputy magistrate's order to protect the ryots from such lateeals could not possibly affect him.

16. It would further appear that these ryots have opposed Mr. Larmour on previous occasions, two years before the perwannah was written, and before Baboo Hemchunder came to the district, for he says in his letter of the 28th January that "it is only two years since Syamchunder Pal Chowdry's people nearly murdered my assistant, Mr. Cockshott." I would submit with reference to the above that there is no more reason to attribute the acts of Syam Chunder's people on the present occasion to the deputy magistrate's perwannah than there was on the previous occasion. Mr. Larmour has for many years been at constant feud with the zemindars and cultivators all around him; and has invariably attributed the natural opposition of the people to his proceedings, to the acts of Government officers. One year he attributed the reluctance of his ryots to sow to the proceedings of Moulvie Abdool Luteef; another year to an order given by myself in connexion with the measurement of some land; the year following it was attributed to a roobocaree drawn up in the Hobrah case; and now this year it is said to be owing to the orders of Baboo Hemchunder Kur on the petition of certain ryots. So far from its being correct that "from year's end to year's end there is never a complaint made against him or his servants," I can speak from personal knowledge that there are few factories against which so many complaints are made. That no complaints may be made in Nuddea is possible, and may be accounted for by the fact which he mentions, that the Bengal Indigo Company's concern extends over one-third of the district; with such power, complaint at a distant station would be impossible.

17. It may be that the deputy magistrate's perwannah was injudicious, but I do not think that it can be said to have invited the ryots to break their engagements, seeing that at the time of year at which it was published there were no engagements entered into. I think it is clear from Mr. Larmour's own statements that it did not have this effect; and that he never supposed it would have any such effect; his factories are in the immediate neighbourhood of Kalarooah, his ryots would be the first to be influenced, yet they showed no signs of being so influenced; they behaved as usual, and Mr. Larmour, so far from acting as if he thought that they had received encouragement to act dishonestly, gave them advances some five months after the publication of the perwannah, which he surely would not have done had he believed the perwannah to have the effect which he now attributes to it.

18. Mr. Mackenzie, another indigo manufacturer, complained, I understand, that the effect of the perwannah was that the ryots declined his advances. This, I submit, is scarcely consistent with the supposition that the perwannah induced them to believe that they might take advances, and leave their engagements unfulfilled with impunity. In continuation of this subject, I would point out that Mr. Forlong, another manufacturer of the Nuddea district, attributed the independent tone adopted by the ryots to the Government orders in the case against Mr. White; and again, the magistrate of Jessore, in the extract of his letter which you have forwarded to me, says that the rumour in the Jessore district was with reference to some expressions which were supposed to have been made use of by the Lieutenant Governor at Nuddeā. The only remaining evidence which tends to connect the deputy magistrate's perwannah with the unwillingness of the ryots to sow, is to be found in the reports of Mr. Reid and Mr. Drummond. Mr. Drummond says that a rumour existed at the end of December last, that an order was "shortly to be issued" to the effect that Government was opposed to the cultivation of indigo; he does not say that any rumour existed that such an order had been issued; this rumour, Mr. Drummond had no doubt, owed its origin to the "occurrences" in Baraset, though what these occurrences were is not specified. Mr. Reid thought that the disinclination of the Baraset ryots to sow was partly owing to the deputy Magistrate's perwannah. It should, however, be recollected that both these gentlemen were quite new to the district; they believed this disinclination to be sudden, and were of course ignorant that Mr. Larmour had precisely the same difficulty in making his ryots sow every year. They probably did not know that at the beginning of 1858 many of Mr. Larmour's ryots positively refused to sow, and that by the Commissioner's orders I was compelled to go out and persuade them to do so. They could not moreover have been aware that the combination of the Baraset ryots had commenced in the time of my predecessor, Mr. Mangles, and that complaints to Government were made against him for protecting the ryots in the same manner as they have been made against me.

19. Having endeavoured to show that the deputy magistrate's perwannah has not been the cause of the ryots' refusal to trade in indigo, I trust I shall be excused for now stating what I conscientiously believe to be the real cause of the opposition of the ryots to the manufacturers, and the rumour that Government was opposed to indigo cultivation. This crisis has been long threatening, and my only surprise is that it has been warded off so long. Mr. Grote will, I have no doubt, do me the justice to admit that frequently within the last three years I have communicated to him my apprehensions, that if steps were not taken to alleviate the condition of the indigo cultivators some such manifestation of feeling would result. As long ago as June 1858, I officially wrote: "The question appears to render itself into this; which is of the most importance, that a certain quantity of a particular blue dye should be annually exported, or that a great and daily increasing cause of discontent and misery to the whole agricultural population of Bengal should be removed? That this discontent is increasing, and is the constant topic of conversation amongst all classes of natives, cannot be denied by those who have an opportunity of judging of the real feelings of the natives; I believe that this feeling has been very much enhanced by an idea that the Government is determined to uphold the planter against the ryot, and I think that there is cause to view with considerable alarm the enactment of any measure which will encourage the belief that the planter will be invested with more summary power." In the same letter, I strongly recommended that a Committee should be appointed to inquire into the system of indigo cultivation. I cannot but think that if my continual representations, supported as I believe them to have been by the opinions of several other district magistrates, had received attention at the time, the result would have been a general inquiry which would have had the effect of putting the indigo trade on a more healthy footing, and have obviated the extreme measures which the ryots have now resorted to.

20. Year by year the value of land, especially in the suburban district, has risen; the profit of cereals, seeds, and tobacco crops has also increased; the wages of labour have been doubled, and of course the necessities of life have increased in price proportionately. The indigo manufacturer, however, has ignored all these signs of the times; his only argument has been that for 30 years the price of indigo has been five bundles for the rupee, and that any demand of the ryots for a more liberal payment has been an insolent infringement of his vested rights, and this insolence he has believed to be engendered by an uncalled for solicitude on the part of the Government for the welfare of the lower classes. The more it became for the interest of the ryot to sow crops other than indigo, the greater the force which the planter was compelled to use to keep up the indigo cultivation. So long as there was but one magistrate in each district, the power of coercion possessed by a manufacturer, who was also a zemindar, was unlimited; within the last few years, however, sub-divisions have been scattered over the face of the country, and every ryot has had a magisterial officer within one day's journey from his home, the much abused power of the zemindar to enforce the attendance of his ryots at his cutcherry, under the pretext of adjusting his accounts, has at the same time been withdrawn by law; and the ryots have discovered that they are not the mere slaves of the zemindar and indigo factor; and the result has been inevitable, and a mere question of time.

21. At the latter end of 1858, two gentlemen connected with the indigo trade called upon me to ask me to induce the ryots of certain pergunnahs to take advances from them for the cultivation of indigo. I declined, and pointed out to them that an appeal to the self-interest of the cultivators was the only course open to them. That same day they complained of me to Mr. Halliday, the Lieutenant Governor, for encouraging the cultivators to combine against the factories. The result, as his Honor is aware, was an interview at which certain persons representing the indigo interest and myself were brought face to face. Mr. Halliday recorded that I had been asked to do that which I could not be reasonably expected to do; a compromise was suggested, and I was directed to use my influence with the ryots to induce them to go to the factory to adjust their old accounts. I was to instruct them fully what their rights were as regarded the cultivation of indigo, and I was to depute one of my ministerial officers to accompany the ryots to the factory to see that no attempt was made to force them into signing new contracts, the owner of the factories signing an agreement that no such force should be used. I demurred to this, being well aware that the effect of authoritatively explaining their rights to the ryots would be that they would at once decline all further connexion with the cultivation of indigo, and that the factories would gradually be closed, and that I should then be blamed as the first explanation would have emanated from me. Mr. Halliday overruled my objections, stating that as this course had been agreed to by the representatives of the parties interested, I could not be blamed if the result of the course agreed to resulted in a manner unfavourable to themselves. I sent for the ryots, and explained to them their freedom to enter into such engagements or not, as they saw fit; and the result was that the factories in Baraset were at once closed, as I had anticipated. My explanation to the ryots I had taken the precaution to put in writing, and this was complained of to Government, and my proceedings were approved in your letter No. 3066, dated 13th May 1859.

22. The Baraset factories are situated on the road from Nuddea and Jessore to Calcutta; ryots from those districts could see the Baraset cultivators in the undisturbed enjoyment of their own lands, and communications doubtless passed between them, which led to formal applications from various sources for copies of the orders in the Hobrah case. I took the precaution before giving these copies of obtaining the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division. These are the orders which have in my opinion given rise to the rumour that Government was opposed to the cultivation of indigo. These orders declared that the entering into contracts for indigo cultivation was optional, and the whole indigo system being one of force, it is not difficult to understand how a prohibition against force could be interpreted into an intention to discourage the cultivation of indigo. As ryots were not to be compelled to sow indigo, and as they know well that no ryots sowed unless under compulsion, their natural deduction was that Government was opposed, not to the cultivation of indigo as a voluntary crop, but to the cultivation of indigo under its present system. I sincerely believe that this is the cause of the rumour and the manner in which my name has been mixed up in it.

23. I have thought it only right to all those concerned thus to communicate to Government the manner in which I believe the present complication to have arisen, and I now submit this explanation of my conduct and views to the consideration of Government, with the full assurance, that whatever results the public may see fit to attribute to my acts, the Government will be satisfied that I have acted consistently and justly throughout, and that I have been influenced solely by the most conscientious desire to fulfil my duty as a magistrate to the people of the district under my charge. I would respectfully urge that my impartiality is borne out by the fact that no decision or judgment which I have ever given in indigo disputes has been reversed in appeal, which would assuredly have been the case had my proceedings been actuated by that bias which has been so frequently and unfairly attributed to me. If in my endeavours to afford to the ryots of Baraset that protection from violence which it was their legal right to demand, I have in any way injuriously affected the interests of those engaged in the manufacture of indigo, such result must be attributed to the fact that the system under which that manufacture is at present conducted is opposed to the principles of fair dealing and justice, and not, I would submit, to any unwarrantable prejudice which I have imbibed in favour of one class of Her Majesty's subjects as against another.

From the Honourable A. Eden, Magistrate of Baraset, to Baboo Hemchunder Kur, Deputy Magistrate, Kalarooah Subdivision.

Sir,

As the cultivation of indigo is carried on to a considerable extent in your subdivision, I beg to forward for your information and guidance extracts from a letter, No. 4616, dated 21st July 1859, from the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to the Commissioner of the Nuddea division.

You will perceive that the course laid down for the police in indigo disputes, is to protect the ryot in the possession of his lands, on which he is at liberty to sow any crop he likes, without any interference on the part of the planter or any one else. The planter is not at liberty, under the pretext of the ryots having promised to sow indigo for him, to enter forcibly upon the land of the ryot. Such promises can only be produced against the ryot in the civil court, and the magisterial authorities have nothing to do with them, for there must be two parties to a promise; and it is possible that the ryots, whose promises or contracts are admitted, may still have many irresistible pleas to avoid the consequence the planter insists upon.

CHARGE.

By riotous assemblage and use of violence, destroying a crop of indigo raised on land previously engaged for by the plaintiff's master, and sowing thereon a crop of paddy.

The

The records of the petitioners' appeal and the original case in the criminal court having been read and heard in the presence of moonshees Kristomohun Gose and Shuddha Shi Biswas, pleaders on the part of the petitioners, and Boidonath Bose, mooktear, for the second party, the following facts became apparent to the court :

That the joint magistrate had, by his order of the 20th May 1854, sentenced the defendants Gour and Mudhoo to six months' imprisonment each, with labour commutable to a fine of 30 rupees each, finding them to have been the principal movers of the affray in question, and the rest of the defendants to four months' imprisonment each, and each to pay a fine of 15 rupees within a week in lieu of labour, or in default to labour, and ordered that at the time of release, on the expiry of the term of sentence, recognizances under Act V. of 1848 be taken for one year from the defendants Gour and Mudhoo, in the sum of 200 rupees each, and 50 rupees each from the other defendants.

That against this order of the joint magistrate the petitioners had preferred this appeal, and that at the time of hearing the case, the mooktear on the part of the second party having been asked as to whom the lands mentioned in the case by his client belonged, that party admitted them in his answer to belong to the ryots, defendants. It then appeared to the sessions judge, that the joint magistrate's order sentencing the prisoners does not show what specific charge or count was established against each of them, his proceeding simply showing that the defendants having received an advance from the managers or owners of the indigo factory, had destroyed the indigo crop of the plaintiff's master by causing a riotous assemblage and by resorting to violence; but this charge did not appear to the sessions judge to have been brought home to the defendants by the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution; as witnesses Buktar Khalashi, Addut Khalashi, Burkut Oollah Khalashi and Chamoo Gagil, stated on oath that the defendants had threatened to attack the plaintiff's master, and had surrounded him on all sides while on the spot; but Mr. Larmour declared that the ryots, defendants, fled away when he repaired to the place; hence the testimony of the aforementioned four witnesses, who were also found to have been employed in the factory, was considered to be unworthy of confidence. Secondly, it further appeared from the deposition of the plaintiff's mooktear and the records of the case, that the land on which the alleged damage was caused, belonged to the ryots, defendants, and though it appeared from the depositions of Messrs. Larmour and Goodelp and the abovenamed four witnesses that the ryots of that village had taken advances from the indigo factory, still none of the witnesses could say which of the defendants had taken the advance, and willingly cultivated indigo for the saheb, and subsequently destroyed the crop, while from the testimony of the aforesaid Buktar and three others, it appeared that being servants to the factory, they had themselves gone to cultivate the remaining portion of the lands, hence from their depositions it could be inferred that the land on which indigo was sown had been cultivated by the factory servants, and that nothing had been adduced to show that the ryots, defendants, had willingly received an advance and cultivated indigo on the land.

It was further remarked, as the opinion of the sessions judge, that a contract entered into by a person for sowing a particular crop on his land, can under no law take the land from his control or possession, and that default to carry out the terms of a contract can only make the defaulter liable to be sued in the civil court. Under the above circumstances, the joint magistrate's order of the 20th May 1854 was set aside, and the defendants were ordered to be released, and the amount of the fine imposed upon them in lieu of labour, if realised, was directed to be refunded to them, and that a copy of this proceeding was to be sent with the original records of the case to the joint magistrate for carrying the above order into effect.

The following were the grounds of Appeal urged by the Defendants against the Decision of the Joint Magistrate.

1. THAT the action had been instituted by Mr. Larmour, through his servant Putoo Khalasi, to compel the defendants to enter into an engagement with him for the cultivation of indigo, but his allegations not having been in any way established, the deputy magistrate before whom the case was originally instituted, considered it unnecessary to summon the defendants; but Mr. Larmour having petitioned the Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, complaining against the indifference exhibited by the deputy magistrate to try the case, that authority requested the joint magistrate to take up the case himself when the latter officer repaired to Kalarooah, and getting the case transferred to his file from that of the deputy magistrate, proceeded to the spot to hold a local inquiry, which he completed without taking the depositions of any person residing in the neighbourhood, but relying upon the evidence given by four khalasees, servants of the factory, living at a distance, and considering a different piece of shali land shown by a khalasee, upon which were found four or five indigo plants, to be identical with that belonging to the defendants, and laying some stress upon popular report, he considered the plaintiff's statements to have been satisfactorily established, and upon that conviction passed a severe sentence upon the defendants, imprisoning them to long terms, and imposing upon them other severe penalties. Defendants then deny having received any advance for the cultivation of indigo, for had they done so, their kubooleut could have been filed. They further stated that the witnesses, residents of the neighbouring villages, examined by them in support of their defence, corroborated their pleas of non-receipt of advance, their non-cultivation of indigo for the saheb, and their doing nothing subsequently to damage the crop. Hence they contended that the joint magistrate was wrong in passing the above sentence upon them.

2. Defendants then point out that the plaintiff, in his petition of the 11th Bysack, complained of the defendants Gour Dhur and Mudhosoodun Ghose having in collusion with the other defendants destroyed the indigo plants; but in his deposition on the 11th and 12th idem, he made a different statement, that is, he charged the defendants Gour and Mudhoo of having ordered the other defendants to commit the above damage, while sitting on the road running to the north of Jaidee Gazi's house; but there being no road on the north of Jaidee Gazi's house, and the plaintiff's allegations in his petition and examination being opposed to each other, the action preferred by him should have been considered unfounded. It further appeared, the defendants state, from the plaintiff's deposition, that on the 11th and 12th Bysack, he himself came to sow the remaining quantity of indigo, but witness Buktar stated that he had come to the place of occurrence to cultivate indigo, accompanied by Burkut, Purodi, and Adur, and that the defendants on receipt of an order from Gour Dhur and others threatened to attack the saheb, and that Gour Dhur was not present there, but was passing to and fro with Muddosooden near the house of Thurapdi and Jerapudi, and witness Adat stated that Gour and Muddhoo were the parties who gave the order, while witness Burkut Khalasee declared that in company with Buktar he had gone to sow indigo, and on the 11th Bysack saw Gour and Muddhoo give the order, while standing on the south of Shurapdis' house, and on the 12th, while standing near the house of Hermut. Defendants then state that none of the witnesses could mention the area and boundaries of the land in question; and that they stated that they never knew the defendants, but having lived at the place for eight or ten days, they could identify them. Under the above circumstances, defendants point out that the deposition of the plaintiff and that of his witnesses being opposed to each other, the unfounded nature of the plaintiff's complaint had become apparent; hence, the order passed upon the defendants was unjust.

3. The allegation of the plaintiff, charging the defendants Gour and Mudhoo of having sown upon their land a crop of paddy in removal of one of indigo, which had been at first cultivated, would, the defendants contend, appear to be opposed to probability; for had the defendants really received an advance and cultivated indigo on their land, they could not have been so much devoid of common sense as to destroy it to the prejudice of their own interests; and the defendants Gour and Mudoosoodun state, that not having any connexion with the defendants, their collusion with them could never prevail upon the latter to commit an act entailing such a loss upon them.

4. The joint magistrate was wrong in considering the plaintiffs' allegations to have been established from the result of the local investigation conducted by Judubindoo Biswas, as from the depositions taken by this officer of Dhununjoy Mokerjea, the factory gomashta, and Rungoo Mollah, ameen, it appeared that the ryots had destroyed the indigo in collusion with one Kallee Kisore Roy of Bag Achra, but that there was no proof in support of this allegation; further, in the petition presented by the plaintiff before the deputy magistrate, the fact of there being a collusion with the above Roy was mentioned; and in the petition presented by Mr. Larmour himself no mention was made of the names of the defendants Gour and Muddhoo; hence they contend they could not have been considered guilty of any offence from any subsequent statements made by the plaintiff and his witnesses in contradiction to each other, much less punished as the principal offenders. They, therefore, point out that on a reference being made by the sessions court to the above-mentioned petitions and depositions, the illegality of the joint magistrate's order will become apparent.

5. Two plots of rice land, different from that in dispute, on which, however, were found five or six indigo plants, were shown to the joint magistrate in the defendant's absence, as the land from which the indigo crop was alleged to have been removed, and the joint magistrate, without examining the residents of the spot, from whom the real facts could have been learnt, relied upon the statements of the plaintiff and the Ameen Bukoo, who was an enemy to the defendants; and considering the land belonging to other persons, upon which, however, some indigo seeds had unconsciously been sown with a paddy crop, to be identical with the land in dispute, the joint magistrate passed the above order upon the defendants, the illegality of which would become apparent on the above circumstances being taken into consideration with the records of the case.

The defendants therefore pray that the joint magistrate's order may be set aside, and themselves absolved from all liability.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Honourable Ashley Eden (No. 1559), dated 7 April 1860.

Sir,

I AM directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated the 28th ultimo, submitting the explanation called for in my letter No. 1193, dated the 24th idem; and in reply to communicate to you the following observations of the Lieutenant Governor on the subject.

2. It appears that on receiving through the Commissioner of Nuddea the Government orders of the 21st of July last, passed upon the general question of police interference in cases of disputes connected with the cultivation of indigo, which had been under discussion between yourself and the Commissioner, and which had been referred for the decision of Government, you forwarded a copy of those orders to Baboo Obhoy Churn Bhowe, the subdivisional officer of Tarra-gooney, and for the moment of Kalarooah also, the two subdivisions in which the cases had occurred, which gave immediate occasion to the reference to Government. Baboo Obhoy Churn Bose took no action on these orders, simply recording them, as it was intended he should do, for his future guidance in indigo cases; and it has not been alleged that any ill consequences arose from your communication to Baboo Obhoy Churn Bose.

3. It is freely admitted that you did no more than your duty, in explaining fully to your subordinate police officer the principle by which he was in future to be guided, according to the decision of Government in cases such as those to which the decision of Government applied, and with respect to which, previously, the practice had been various, uncertain, and often contrary to law.

4. But, as a point of form, it cannot be admitted that, in sending down to a subordinate officer the argued decision of Government upon a general question, which had been closely discussed between yourself and your own immediate official superior, you did what was regular or usual in such cases, or necessary for the attainment of the object in view. The sub-divisional officer had had no part in the discussion between the Commissioner of the division and yourself, at least so far as it had been referred for the decision of Government, and he therefore had no more concern with the arguments than any other sub-divisional officer in Bengal.

5. It appears further, that on Baboo Hem Chunder Kur being appointed to the Kalarooah Subdivision, he also applied for a copy of the decision of Government for his guidance; and that though you saw no necessity for letting the sub-divisional officer see how far the Commissioner and yourself had differed, you supplied him with an extract of that decision, being "that portion of the Government letter which related to the general question of police interference in indigo disputes."

6. This was not the regular manner of proceeding. The orders of Government in question were not written with a view to their being treated in the manner of a rule published for the general guidance of all officers in charge of the police.

7. The regular and safer course would have been to have prepared very carefully a vernacular paper, containing practical directions in accordance with the orders on the particular reference that had been made to Government, and to have sent it to the native deputy magistrate, who then could not have made any mistake in conveying his own orders to the thannadars, as occasion demanded, which is all that it concerned him to do.

8. In regard to the publication of the purwannah issued by Baboo Hem Chunder Kur, your answer is conclusive. You had given over charge of the district of Baraset to your successor before the perwannah in question was issued, and it is clear that you had no concern whatever in its publication, and that you are in no way responsible for it, whether in respect to its wording or in any other respect. This is the only material part of the charges that have been made against you, and the Lieutenant Governor has much pleasure in finding it to be wholly without foundation.

9. In the minor matter of the point of form above noticed, the Lieutenant Governor imputes no blame to you; and, on the whole, he is thoroughly satisfied with your explanation.

From A. R. Young, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, to the Commissioner of Nuddea (No. 1560), dated 7 April 1860.

Sir,

With reference to your letters of the 10th February and 9th ultimo, Nos. 36 Ct. and 66 Ct. respectively, I am directed to forward for your information a copy of the explanation furnished by Mr. Eden in the matter of the perwannah to which that correspondence relates, and of the observations of the Lieutenant Governor thereon.

It remains to be considered whether the deputy magistrate, Baboo Hem Chunder Kur, is to blame for the publication of that perwannah in the manner described by Mr. Larmour, if such publication actually took place.

I am directed, therefore, to request that you will call upon Baboo Hem Chunder Kur, Deputy Magistrate of Kalarooah, to submit to Government, through you, a full explanation of the circumstances connected with the publication of the perwannah, which was issued by him in August 1859 to the police of his subdivision. You will be so good as to direct his especial attention to the faultiness of the wording, as is apparent from the version of the perwannah obtained from the Government Bengalee Translator, a copy of which is herewith forwarded.

REPORT of the INDIGO COMMISSION appointed under ACT XI. of 1860, with the MINUTES of EVIDENCE taken before them ; and APPENDIX.

R E P O R T.

To A. Money, Esq., c. B., Officiating Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

Sir,

WE, the Commissioners appointed under the provisions of section 12, Act XI. of 1860, by Mr. Young's several letters addressed to each of us on the 10th May last, to inquire into and report on the system and practice of indigo planting, and the relations between the indigo planters and the ryots and holders of land in Bengal, have the honour to submit our report on the above subject, for the consideration of his Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

2. The Commission held its first two private sittings on the 14th and 16th of May respectively ; when the main course of action to be taken, and a list of the witnesses to be summoned, were duly considered ; at those sittings it was resolved, amongst other things, that an inquiry should be made into the system by which the poppy is grown under the Government monopoly, and letters were addressed accordingly to the agents at Ghazee pore and Patna. The first public sitting was held on the 18th of May, and the last on the 4th of August.

3. The sittings for the reception of evidence were held with open doors. Free access was allowed to Europeans and Natives of all classes ; and the evidence has been duly published almost as soon as taken, in the columns of the daily press. Though not guaranteeing the authenticity of the publication, we can state that after the first few days, the evidence has been very fully and correctly reported ; so that, with the exception of a few mistakes in names, places, figures, and phrases, the substance of the depositions as taken has been made available to the public, and to those mainly interested, during the course of the inquiry.

4. the number of witnesses examined has been 134 ; of this number, 15 are officials and servants of Government, covenanted and uncovenanted ; 21 are, or have been, planters ; 8 are missionaries ; 13 are native zemindars or talookdars, some of very considerable influence and position ; and the remaining 77 are ryots, tenant proprietors, or occupants of land. Every witness was examined on oath. The evidence will be found printed in three parts, as one single press was unequal to the work. But the series of the numbers of questions and answers is unbroken, and it is to them mainly, and not to pages, that reference is made in support of our opinions.

5. With the exception of a fortnight, when the Commission were absent in the district of Nuddea, of which the Sudder station is Kishnaghur, the whole of the sittings have been held in Calcutta. It seemed to us most important that the public should be cognizant of each successive step in the inquiry, and the metropolis was thus the place where the attendance of officials, planters, and natives of rank, could be best secured with the least inconvenience to themselves, and with the greatest publicity. But it is not to be imagined that the humbler class of natives interested in the inquiry were unable to come down to Calcutta. They came, literally, in scores and hundreds from the districts of Jessore, Kishnaghur, Baraset and Pubna; and, as it would have been impossible to take the depositions of even one-half of the number, a selection was made by ourselves, with due regard to variety of caste, and residence in particular factories or concerns; that is to say, Hindoos and Mahomedans, and even Christian ryots were examined; men were taken so as to represent different villages of the concerns; and in making the selection due regard was paid to the apparent intelligence and independence of the parties. Whatever may be thought of some obvious exaggerations, or of some cases to which counter-statements have been made, we are quite convinced that the witnesses selected were not tutored, in the ordinary sense of the term, to tell one story by any third persons; and that what they spoke was either the truth, or prompted by their own desire to make as much of their grievances as was possible by colouring and additions.

6. We visited the district of Nuddea to meet the wishes of certain planters, who could not be absent for any length of time from their factories, without great prejudice to their own interests during the excitement, as well as in order to procure the attendance of native zemindars; and we had regard to the obvious importance of not closing our Report until we had proceeded to the district, where the dislike to sow had been most openly manifested. In this view, we were absent from Calcutta, from the 6th to the 19th of July inclusive.

7. We had been warned, before our departure, that our visit might be the means of increasing the discontent of the ryots, and the difficulties of the planters, and that the objects of our inquiry might be both misrepresented and misunderstood.

8. His Honour will have been glad to learn that such predictions proved unfounded.

9. We considerably increased the value and bulk of our evidence by the visit, though we did not discover any new series of facts, not previously before us in some shape or other. The gaol of Kishnaghur was visited by us, and we saw and conversed with about 60 prisoners confined there under Act XI. of this year, mostly for breaches of contract; of these we selected eight men, and took their depositions, with a view of ascertaining the reasons which had led them to submit to imprisonment in preference to sowing indigo. This evidence will be found in its place; and, in most cases, is full of interest.

A. 3043. 3208.

10. The Commission, in a body, made no divergence from the station of Kishnaghur, in order to inspect any factories in the interior; though three of the members paid short visits, severally, to the factories of Bansberria, Nischindipore, and Khalbolia. From the verbal report of our colleagues, we are satisfied that no better evidence was to be gathered from a visit to the factories than was available at the station of Kishnaghur. And, in some respects, our deputation in a body, with our official establishment, to any one factory, would have been objectionable. It might have prejudiced some of the planters, where the coolies or labourers were already beginning to demand higher rates of wages; and it would have been highly inconvenient to the zemindars and ryots, who could have found no accommodation in the vicinity of such factories, and who would have been wearied by endeavours to follow us from place to place; while, as there was no building in which we could possibly have been housed but the factory itself, our visit, made under such circumstances, might have been liable to misconstruction in the eyes of the agricultural population. This, however unreasonable, it was expedient to avoid.

11. But the books of some factories, showing the yearly accounts with each ryot, regularly balanced, were placed before us; and our sittings had the advantage of being conducted in an open court-house, accessible to all parties, and daily crowded to excess.

12. We

12. We think it necessary to describe particularly the mode in which the evidence of those natives, who did not give their depositions in English, was taken and recorded throughout the inquiry. The questions were put in Bengali, by either the President, Mr. Sale, or Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee, and the answers, given in the same language, were immediately translated into English, and taken down by the Recorder of evidence. This translation was generally given by the President; but no answer was taken down, unless the above three members were agreed that the witness had correctly understood the purport of the question, and unless they were quite agreed also as to the purport of the answer; and in no instance was the least difficulty experienced by the other two members of the Commission, in thus causing to be put any question to any agriculturist, or obtaining any information which they might specially desire.

13. A body of evidence has thus been accumulated, bearing on every point connected with indigo cultivation, as practised in different parts of this side of India; on the attitude of the planters to zemindars and ryots, and on the feelings of natives, high and low, as regards indigo; on the profitableness of the cultivation to the ryots or the reverse; on the cultivation of the poppy, and on agricultural pursuits generally; on the conduct of the police and the executive authorities; on the tenures of land and the facilities for its acquisition; on the working of laws, which we shall specify hereafter; and on the general condition, advancement, and social prosperity of the country.

14. It was not to be expected that the testimony sought for should agree in every point, though on important subjects there is perhaps less diversity than might have been expected; and there is scarcely a deposition from which some useful facts or inferences may not be derived. Where so many gentlemen have either come forward to assist the Commission, or have attended at their request from some distance, and at some inconvenience, it might seem invidious to particularise individual names; but without pledging ourselves to the endorsement of every opinion or statement put forward by those whose names we are about to mention, we wish to draw the particular attention of his Honour to the following depositions as those to which we have listened with the deepest interest, and which convey the greatest amount of information; namely, to the evidence of Messrs. W. G. Rose, R. P. Sage, and A. S. Sawers, as to the mode in which a considerable extent of cultivation is carried on by the planter on lands of his own; to that of the experienced gentlemen, Messrs. R. T. Larmour, J. Forlong, G. Clarke, and H. Sibbald, regarding extensive cultivation through ryots; to the evidence of Mr. W. Moran, of Calcutta, as to the value of indigo factories, and the practice of the sale and transfer of such property, and as to the system prevalent in Tirhoot; to that of Mr. H. L. Dampier, late magistrate and collector of the above district, on the latter point; to that of Mr. J. O'Brien Saunders, about the cultivation as carried on in the North-Western Provinces and in Allahabad; to the testimony of the Honourable Ashley Eden, regarding indigo cultivation in Baraset, and the origin of the late dislike and refusal of the ryots to sow during the past season; to that of the Rev. Mr. Schurr, missionary of the Church Missionary Society, relative to certain instances of illegality, which came under his own eye in the interior of the country, and which were detailed with the strictest candour and impartiality; to the minute, full, and interesting evidence of the Rev. Mr. Long, regarding the rise, progress and influence of the native Bengali press, and the topics which it generally discusses; to the exposition, by Mr. R. Morell, of Morellgunge, in the district of Backergunge, of what can be done by an European gentleman, working on his own capital and superintending, personally, the investment thereof, in the way of clearing jungle, establishing markets and villages, and securing the respect and attachment of the ryots; to the evidence of Mr. James Reily, Commissioner of the Sunderbunds, on the important subjects of rent, revenue, and tenant rights, and on the cultivation of indigo in Jessore about 15 years ago; to the full information afforded by Mr. C. Hollings, sub-deputy opium agent at Gya, on the system of poppy cultivation, under the Government monopoly of opium, by advances, a system which presents some features absolutely identical with those of the cultivation of indigo; to the evidence of Mr. W. J. Herschel, magistrate of Nuddea, as to the state of the district of Nuddea; and to that of Mr. A. J. Maclean and

Mr. D. McNeile, joint magistrates of sub-divisions in the same district; to the explanations given by the following zemindars, as to the peculiarities of the cultivation of indigo, the alleged dislike of the ryots, and the reasons which induce landholders to lease or part with their estates to Europeans; viz. Munshi Latafat Hasein, Baboos Sri Gopaul Pal Chowdari of Ranaghat, Shambunath Mookerjee of Birnuggur, Sri Huri Rai, all having estates in Nuddea; Baboo Prosono Kumar Tagore, zemindar, and a vakil of great learning and repute, who is at present assistant clerk to the Legislative Council; Haronath Roy, of Narail, in Jessore, and Joy Kissen Mookerjee, of Uturparra, in Hooghly; and finally, to the evidence of the tenant proprietors, ryots, jotedars and dependent ryots, named in the margin,* detailing either their reasons for disliking indigo, or their individual grievances; evidence which we have selected either on account of the extreme intelligence and ready apprehension of the witnesses; or because it is free from the obvious exaggerations which disfigure the narratives of other witnesses, and it is either wholly true, or it is based on a solid foundation of truth.

15. Before entering into any exposition of the various systems under which indigo is cultivated, we think it necessary to note the different statements, which, from time to time, have been made for or against planters and planting. The subject has now been under discussion before the public, Indian and English, in the columns of the press or in those of periodicals, for some years. Many parties have engaged in the controversy; much bitterness, we fear, has been thereby engendered; but from the very earnestness and breadth of the discussion, we have been enabled to gather the main facts and arguments that have been commonly urged against or for the Bengal system, and we here enumerate them in order as follows.

16. First, as regards the disparagement of the system. It is asserted that the contract for the growth and production of the plant, so far from being voluntary, is forced upon the ryot, who is compelled by more or less of pressure to accept advances; that these advances are rarely given, or are not given in full after the first year or two; that the ryot is compelled to plough, sow, and weed his land, and to cut and cart the plant, at times when he would prefer being engaged in the cultivation of other crops of superior profit; that the land selected and marked off by the servants of the factory is often the best kind of land, most carefully cultivated by the ryot and most needed by him for his own convenience, or that land actually ready for other crops, or even sown with such crops, is forcibly ploughed up and re-sown with indigo; that the mere cultivation is thus rendered to him irksome, repulsive, and harassing in the highest degree; that, owing to the precariousness of the crop, and the inadequacy of the payment, the ryot invariably falls into balances, and that persons once agreeing to sow, bequeath the obligation to their descendants, in the third and fourth generation, and that these descendants are either never able, or if able, are not allowed to free themselves and families from the debt which their fathers have contracted with the factory; that the system which is thus founded on compulsion and maintained by force, is still further rendered odious by the extortion and oppression of the factory servants, who divert from its lawful end a portion even of the small and inadequate payments made to the cultivators; and that the lower orders of servants practise many other ways of oppressing the ryots, or of extorting money from them, such as cutting their bamboos, taking away their thatching grass and the produce of their gardens, seizing their ploughs, and carrying away their cattle under pretence of damage done to the growing plant; that, in order to prevent ryots from disputing the will of the planter, more serious outrages are often committed, and that instances can be shown where planters or their servants have burnt and knocked down homesteads, plundered bazars, kidnapped and carried off respectable inhabitants and confined them for weeks and months in dark places, transporting them from factory to factory to elude the pursuit of the police; that even darker outrages on women have been openly perpetrated; and that, in consequence, the feeling of the ryot is one of bitter but sullen hatred to the European. That with regard to the native landholders, the attitude and encroachments of the planter towards these persons have have led to frequent disputes, to violent affrays, to agrarian outrages, and to the consequent demoralisation of the people; that constant complaints and protracted litigation have followed on these occurrences; that the planter, commencing to contract with ryots resident on estates of which the proprietary right is not held by the factory, has exerted a pressure on those ryots, who then seek the protection of their zemindar, or he has sought an occasion of provoking a quarrel with the landholder, in order, it is repeatedly asserted, to extort from the latter the grant of an estate on lease, or in putni; that the real and avowed object of extorting these concessions is, that the planter may acquire the rights, influence, and position of a zemindar, without which he never would be able to compel the production of so much indigo for a single day; that these rights are rarely alienated, either temporarily or permanently, by the zemindar, of his own free will, but that the alienation would not take place if the police were not inefficient, the laws weak, and the executive authorities and the covenanted magistrates in particular, disposed to side with the European, as against the native interest; that it is owing to the above causes, and not to voluntary acts of the native landholders, that the planters have managed to absorb so much of the zemindar's rights and properties; that no improvement is perceptible in the condition of ryots of villages where indigo is cultivated, as compared with that of ryots who do not cultivate indigo, but rather that the former are depressed and impoverished by the compulsory and profitless cultivation; that the system has been borne with so long, because the ryot of Bengal is of a passive and enduring nature, and that the dislike evinced during the past season is merely the expression of feelings pent up for the last 20 or 30 years; that this growing dislike has been noticed by local authorities, intelligent natives, and independent Europeans, and has been occasionally pointed out in official and unofficial correspondence; that if the zemindars were free agents in the grant of leases, and ryots were free agents in the acceptance of engagements, a great and immediate reduction would take place in the area and extent of indigo cultivation from the first date when such rights could be openly enjoyed and acted on by either party; and finally, that the whole system, as above described, is vicious in theory, injurious in practice, and radically unsound.

17. On the other hand, the case for the planter, as before the public, to the best of our knowledge, has been set forth as follows:—The rule of the planter, as proprietor of lands, is a milder and more temperate rule than that of the native. It was not so much the wish of the planter to secure landed rights in permanency or for a time, as to secure the growth of a fair portion of indigo plant. Could he be certain that the free contracts entered into by the ryots resident on the estates of others would be faithfully adhered to, there would be no need for him to seek the rights and influence of a zemindar. But his cultivation is so liable to interruption and interference, at the ill-will, caprice, or dictation of the native zemindar, and the ryots are so often led away by evil advice and instigation, that no resource is left to the planter but to acquire rights which may enable him successfully to prevent or resist the intrusion of others. The zemindar, aware of this necessity, artfully and culpably fomented disputes between the planter and ryot, in order that the latter may fly to his landlord for advice and assistance, and that the former may be compelled, by the necessities of his situation, to pay exorbitant prices for putnis, or to take on lease, at a high bonus and a rental liable to enhancement at the expiration of the term of years, land so assessed that no efforts or skill in management will enable him to collect an equivalent from the ryots. In this way, the planter is put to unnecessary expense, has less money at command, and cannot afford to benefit the ryot as much as he would desire. But for all this, the marketable value of land, owing to the above purchases and operations, has immensely risen. The difficulties of planters have further been increased by the jealousy and suspicion with which the executive authorities, especially those of the covenanted service, have regarded the increasing wealth and influence of the independent European. His very presence being felt as a check to the continuance of abuses, it has been disliked; as a natural consequence, his endeavours have been thwarted; no allowance has been made for his position, and there has been a constant desire, on the part of Government and its officers, to weaken his influence, to invade his rights, and to drive him from the country. In spite of this, the benefits of the European's presence, as planter and landholder, have been everywhere acknowledged. He protects the ryots from the exactions of the police, from the rapacity of the money-lender, and from the payment of extra cesses demanded by the zemindar. The laying out of roads, the establishment of schools and dispensaries, attest his practical benevolence. Though it be urged by the opponents of the system that the payment for the plant grown by the ryot be not directly remunerative to him, yet this inadequate return is owing, in some cases, to the sheer indolence and obstinacy of the cultivator, who will not exert himself to plough and weed at proper times; in others, to a succession of bad seasons acting on a crop confessedly so precarious as indigo; and in others, to a sudden and unprecedented rise in the wages of labour, and the price of all other produce; which rise has unfortunately not hitherto been met by a corresponding rise in the price paid for the plant. Yet with all this, the planter has been in the habit of allowing his ryots to hold their land at the low original rates of rent, while rents in neighbouring zemindaries have been even doubled; and he has also assisted them in many ways; advancing them loans without interest when their cattle die, or when their houses are either burnt or blown down. He is daily accessible to natives of all classes, either when riding through his villages or when holding a court: where unbought, summary and substantial justice is regularly distributed. By the well-directed energy of the planter, large tracts have been cleared of jungle; population has increased, and the increase has been followed by social progress, visible in the larger houses, the better clothes, and the more numerous cattle of the inhabitants. The presence of the planter has been generally synonymous with order, progress, and contentment. His failings, it is earnestly contended, have been those of the situation in which he is placed. The police are corrupt, the law courts are remote, and the procedure is complicated and slow; the zemindars are usurping and oppressive; the ryot, for all the kindness shown to him, is idle and faithless. This idleness necessitates the close and constant supervision of the fields destined for indigo, at each season of the successive agricultural operations, by the inferior servants of the factory; and this faithlessness would compel the planter to sue the ryot for attempted breach of contract, were it not that no summary proceeding is open to him, and that to refer him to a civil suit, with its delay and circuitousness, would be a mere mockery. Instances of violent affrays and agrarian lawlessness, however numerous in past times, have substantially decreased in frequency, and in many districts no such outrages are now known at all. Complaints of planters, either by zemindars or ryots, have entirely disappeared from particular courts; and whatever may have been the offences committed by individuals, the planters as a body stand out to the public as just and independent men who circulate a large amount of capital; who put down crime and diffuse civilisation; and whose presence in the interior, in the eyes of an enlightened Government, should be at once a guarantee against rebellion, an element of strength, and a source of prosperity.

18. We propose to show in a future portion of our Report, what degree of credit, in our opinion, is due to the widely different views held of this important question.

19. At this point we shall place before his Honour a concise account of the various systems under which, from the evidence before us, indigo is cultivated on this side of India.

20. The indigo cultivation may be classified under two great heads, the nijabad and the ryotti. The former or "own cultivation" may be likened in some respects to a home farm, managed by the proprietor of an estate in England. It is carried on on lands of which the factory or concern has acquired the tenant right, or the right of actual occupancy, by an establishment of ploughs, bullocks and servants, maintained at the planter's expense. Occasionally ploughs and bullocks are hired for the purpose, when the establishment kept up at the factory may not be sufficient. Here, too, we must state that in nij cultivation there is a marked distinction between "high lands" and chur or low lands, which we shall more clearly illustrate hereafter.

21. The ryotti cultivation, on the other hand, as the very name implies, is carried on by ryots on their own lands, under contract and by advances made by the planter, as will be hereafter explained. And the ryotti, again, is further divided into cultivation of two kinds, one carried on in villages or estates, of which the planter has acquired, temporarily or permanently, the rights of the zemindar or talookdar, and the other in villages belonging to other parties. These two kinds are familiarly known under the names of ilaka and be-ilaka.

22. The amount of nij cultivation varies in the different factories and concerns, from a few beegahs to several thousands. In some cases, as will be found from an abstract of replies to a circular on the subject, there are 2,000 beegahs of nij to 10,000 or 12,000 of ryotti cultivation. In other factories the amount of nij is two-thirds or even three-fourths of the whole. And in a few rare instances, the whole area of the planters cultivation is of this kind, and the system of cultivating by ryots and advances is, in such factories, not adopted at all.

23. In every instance of nij farms, however, it is indispensable that the planter should have acquired the actual occupancy of the soil on which he may sow his indigo. This can be done in several ways. He may take a temporary or a permanent lease of waste or unoccupied lands from the zemindar, or he may acquire the temporary or the permanent right in a zemindary, and then use the zemindar's khass or "own" lands, for this kind of cultivation; or he may rent, or purchase outright the jote or actual rights of the tenant from the tenant himself, as opportunities may occur. Often there is a trifling extent of land attached to the factory buildings, the occupancy and right in which was obtained very many years back, when the factory was first set up, and the nij is carried on within this space, or on the bank of rivers not liable to inundation; or on the homesteads of ryots who have demised without heirs, or have abandoned their villages from some cause or other; or on the sides of tanks, which, being raised by the accumulation of the earth thrown up in digging the tank, are eminently fitted for this end. But the largest and best fields for these operations of the planter are chur lands, or lands formed by alluvial accretion, liable to inundation in the rainy season, and either regular islands in the centre of the river, or long low reaches fronting its banks. Sometimes tracts of this land may be found to extend, even in Nuddea, to a mile and more in length; and on the great rivers in Northern and Eastern Bengal it is well known that the churs are, literally, of enormous size.

24. Where a good establishment of bullocks, ploughs, and boona, i. e., jungle or hill coolies brought from the districts of Bancoorah, Beerbhoom, or the South-west Frontier Agency is maintained, there is no difficulty in finishing this kind of cultivation. The indigo sown on churs is generally sown in October. The land in many instances hardly requires preparation, but when the inundation subsides, the seed is scattered by the hand on the moist, soft surface, and takes root, grows, and ripens with little or no additional care. The above is termed chitani or sprinkling. Where an establishment is not kept up, and ploughs are required for October sowings, they are hired from the ryots, at so many the rupee, according to the current rate in the district; and the necessity for hiring these ploughs forms almost the only source of quarrel, when the planter's cultivation is nij. But even this source of disputes arises very seldom when the sowings take place in October, at which period the ryot has gathered in his early rice, and can spare ploughs from the cultivation of the produce known as cold-weather crops. Disputes may occur in the case of high lands, that is, lands not liable to inundation from rivers, on which indigo is sown in spring; because if the season be a late one the ryot may require his own ploughs to prepare his rice lands; and any undue compulsion exercised in the requirement of labour, is sure to lead to complaints.

25. But with this single exception the nij cultivation proceeds with perfect smoothness. There are no disputes about the land, except such as might occur with regard to boundaries, or particular pieces in this country, quite independent of indigo. There can be no complaints of compulsory contracts, advance forced on ryots, minute and harassing supervision during the agricultural operations, and the like. The lands, the ploughs, and the bullocks belonging to the planter, or the latter being hired by him at fair rates, and paid for in cash, the nij cultivation, even where largest in extent, can proceed as quietly as does the cultivation of a kitchen garden belonging to any Government official in any station in India. In nij cultivation, too, the whole risk and all the charges fall on the planter.

26. This being the case, as will be clearly seen from the evidence, pages 14
 - 72—I. b and and following, and pages 26 and 27, 35 and 36, and page 81 and following, it was natural for us to consider whether we could recommend planters having large ryotti cultivation, to abandon or convert it into nij-abad, and thus close the very source of all quarrels. But this plan, apparently so attractive, seems to us not feasible, for the following reasons.

27. In highly populous districts, such as those of Baraset, Nuddea, and Jessore, which have mostly engaged our attention, the requisite extent of waste or unoccupied lands is, literally, not to be had. The available chur lands are already taken up; and it is only such lands that are found of sufficient extent in one connected piece, and that can be cultivated by the planter with his own extensive establishment, without his incurring a loss, or with the hired ploughs in October, without giving rise to complaints. Nij cultivation on high lands, adjacent to villages, might, no doubt, be increased to some extent. A vigilant and energetic planter, by watching opportunities, might purchase tenant rights, or rent land here and there, and so gradually increase his own cultivation. But this would be a work of some time and expense; and even if the occupancy of the soil could be secured, to the extent of several thousand beegahs, another practical difficulty would occur. Supposing a planter to have obtained high lands, to the extent of 10,000 or 12,000 beegahs, they would be in detached unconnected pieces, and such lands could not probably be sown in October; when it is not of such urgent necessity to complete the sowings within a short and given period. Such lands would be sown with advantage only in spring, and would be entirely dependent on the first suitable fall of rain. The produce and dye of plant sown in October is, we may remark, never equal to that sown in spring. The advantage of sowing in the former month is that the plant can be reaped in June, or even in May, before any inundation or heavy rains, which it is well known injure or destroy the plant. And though the produce of October plant be second rate, it is a safe but small return. Now, what is familiarly known as "a sowing shower" rarely occurs in spring before the end of March or the beginning or middle of April, and when the ground is in a fit state for the reception of seed, it is very desirable that the whole of the sowings should be completed in the next three or four days. A planter could scarcely move about his own establishment, however liberals of servants and ploughs, with sufficient rapidity from place to place, so as to attain this object over 10,000 or 12,000 beegahs. But, if the ryots will turn out, each with his own plough, on his own land, those sowings are easily got through within the specified time. Indeed, a larger extent of ryotti cultivation can be finished in this way in a very days. The Mulnath concern might be able to sow, in this way, more than 25,000 beegahs by two or three showers. It is curious to contrast Bengal Proper in this respect with other parts of India. In Tirhoot, the moisture is retained in the soil throughout the cold weather until the arrival of spring, and it is usual to sow in March, though no rain has fallen. Indeed a shower of rain at sowing time, may be destruction to a Tirhoot planter. The ground cakes, and the young plant is killed. In the North-West Provinces, irrigation renders the planter independent of rain; and the spring sowings can be spread over even a longer period of time.

28. A cultivation of 10,000 or 12,000 beegahs would represent, we are credibly informed, a capital of upwards of two lacs of rupees, and an expenditure annually of more than 50,000 to 60,000 rupees.

29. Again, unless the planter should have a turn for agriculture, and should choose to sow other crops on his high lands, after the indigo had been cut, such as oats, barley, mustard, and linseed, the expense of nij cultivation, including rent, would fall on the indigo alone. If a ryot can cultivate the same crops, the expense is naturally shared by such crops with the indigo.

30. In this view we are afraid that, however desirable, a new scale of nij cultivation to the extent of that enjoyed by Mr. A. Sawers, at Culna in Burdwan, or Mr. W. G. Rose, at Ramnuggur in Moorshedabad, is not now to be looked for. A nij farm might, no doubt, be set up on a large scale, in some of the eastern districts, where much jungle or waste land is available, but in this case, though lands were to be had, labour would be scarce, and an equal difficulty, though of a different kind, would probably be experienced.

31. Arriving at these conclusions, we turn to consider the nature and peculiar features features of ryotti cultivation ; this being the system prevalent in most concerns, or that under which the greater portion of indigo is grown for manufacture, and which system, we may say, is now called to the bar of public opinion, to stand its trial. In Bengal proper the ryots, as before observed, are of two classes, those resident on estates held by the concern, and those who are not. The contracts, which all the ryots enter into, are either for one year, or vary from three to five or ten years. The advances made in October and November, are invariably at the rate of two rupees a beegah, and for this sum, the ryot usually agrees to give land suited for indigo, which lands would be marked off by the servants of the factory, to prepare them, to sow the indigo, weed it, and deliver the plant at the factory. The plant, when grown and delivered, is measured, and credit is given to the ryot at a rate which now ranges from four to six or eight bundles for the rupee. The bundles are measured by a six-foot chain passed round the centre of the plant. An acknowledgment is given to the ryot at the time of measurement, or some few days afterwards, and at the close of the manufacturing season, in August or September, the accounts are drawn out, and in October the ryot attends at the factory for the adjustment of the same. To his debit are set down the advances made to him at two rupees a beegah, the value of the stamp on which the contract is engrossed, usually two annas, the seed from four to five seers, which is usually charged for at four annas a beegah, though it costs more than this sum to the planter ; the expense of carting the plant, and, after the first year's engagement, the amount of any previous debt remaining uncleared. To his credit is placed the value of the bundles delivered by him ; and a balance is thus struck. If he has fazil or excess to receive, he has it paid down ; if otherwise, the debt remains against him, and he receives advances for the next season's operations, not at the full amount of the lands for which he has engaged, but with a deduction proportionate to his debt ; for instance, if he has agreed to cultivate five beegahs, for which the advances would be 10 rupees, but he is in debt to the amount of four rupees to the factory, he receives not 10 rupees, but 10 rupees minus four rupees = six rupees. In some instances, if the debt is very large, he receives no fresh advances, though he may receive a separate loan to aid him in his difficulties, or the debt may be reduced, or cleared off, by the voluntary act of the planter. The same process is repeated year after year in the case both of ryots resident on the estates of others, and of ryots of estates attached to the factory. With some local distinctions, and with certain other defects or exaggerations, forming sources of complaint, which we shall notice fully hereafter, and with, of course, a great deal depending on the temper, experience, and management of the planter himself, the above are the main features of ryotti cultivation in Lower Bengal, and, as a general statement, we believe it to be accurate and unquestionable. We may state here that the average return of a beegah is about 10 to 12 bundles, and that a thousand bundles of plant give, on an average, about five maunds of dye.

32. There is another system called that of shouk dadun or "free advances," adverted to by some witnesses, under which the ryot is not charged for either seed or cutting and carting. He only has to cultivate and sow, and he is paid at from four to six bundles per rupee. Under the above system he receives advances, but there is also a third system under which he takes no advances, but gets seed for which he pays, not at a fixed rate of four annas a beegah, but at the market rate. Both these systems prevail to a very limited extent.

A. 145.

33. Some witnesses have also testified to the purchase of plant from ryots who were not under contract to the factory, and who sold the plant, which they had grown as their own speculation, at the market rate, usually of four bundles the rupee, like any other article. The only district in Bengal where this plan is carried on to any extent, is Rungpore ; and there the amount of bundles so purchased has been counted in lacs. The obvious danger in this is, that ryots who may have received advances under contract from one factory, may be tempted to sell the plant, as in open market, to another.

34. The system in Tirhoot, and we believe in the districts of Behar adjoining Tirhoot, is, in some respects, very different from that pursued in Bengal. The ryot takes advances, at the rate of three rupees a beegah, of which two rupees are given in the autumn, and one more at sowing time. The beegah in Tirhoot is nearly equal to an acre, or three Bengal standard beegahs. The selection of lands, as well as the supervision of the cultivation by the servants of the factory, proceed much as they do in districts nearer Calcutta.* But the advances do not form the nucleus of a debt, if the ryot only cultivates, and they are not carried on, if unliquidated, from year to year, against the ryot. A price is set on the crop. If there is a total failure after sowing, the ryot gets one rupee over and above his first advances, for his time and labour and the occupation of his land; and three rupees six annas, besides the above advances, if there is a crop. The land is, however, occupied with indigo for the whole twelvemonth. In some factories the crops are still further classified, but this does not alter the main feature; viz. that in no instance, even though not a single stalk of indigo should sprout after cultivation, can the ryot become heavily indebted. On the other hand there is the danger lest the ryot, having received his advances, should be tempted not to cultivate his lands at all. But this, we believe, is prevented with ordinary care on the part of the planter. Under no circumstances, as we understand it, can the ryot in Tirhoot ever receive more than six rupees six annas per beegah for his single crop of the year, however fine it may be. But we are informed that the rates of remuneration have been raised this very season in Tirhoot.

35. The system in Allahabad and in the North-Western Provinces is fully described by Mr. Saunders. In Allyghur, Muttra and Furruckabad, as doubtless in other districts, indigo manufactured, but in a very crude state, used to be brought to the factory, and there sold by natives, who carried on a large indigenous cultivation, which had an existence previous to our possession of the country. Advances were also made to contractors, zemindars and cultivators, who grew the plant with less supervision on the part of the planter than is usual in Bengal. In fact, in the case of contractors, men of substance, the planter never inquired where or how the plant was grown. No oppression was committed by zemindars, and the system worked well. We are not sure, however, that the poorer class of cultivators derived much profit from these transactions, and in Allahabad the occupancy of the land for two years was a very decided objection (A 1890-1930). In Allahabad there was the same system of contract, but there was occasionally some few disputes, and a little more difficulty.

36. The above are the simple and undeniable characteristics of indigo cultivation, extracted from the exposition and narrative of unimpeachable witnesses.

37. At this stage of our Report we deem it desirable to request his Honor's attention to sundry papers of our Appendix, which, though not all tendered on oath, are to be relied on, and are elucidatory of the great points at issue. They have been provided both by officials and non-officials; some of them are copies of judicial or official records; and all seem to us of great value, in aid of the mass of our oral evidence.

1st. An abstract of the replies from the planters of many districts in Bengal and Behar, to a circular addressed to them, asking for statistics and other information regarding their cultivation of indigo. These show the amount and the kind of cultivation in each concern. The replies were very readily given by a large number of planters.

2d. A statement, showing the total number of Europeans holding estates which pay revenue to Government; the total number of such estates, and the aggregate of the Government revenue derivable therefrom. The same statement with regard to putnis, where that particular tenure is known. We believe the statement, however, to be under the mark, as all putnis may not be registered at the collectorate. And leases, of course, are only incidentally known to the authorities.

3d. A statement showing the number and kind of landed tenures or interests put up for sale, in execution of the decrees of all civil courts, of six districts in which indigo is cultivated, for the last three years.

5th. A statement, showing the great rise in the prices of produce and in the wages of labour that has taken place since between 1855 and 1860, in certain districts; also a statement of the comparative returns of rice, the cereals, and other productive crops, as sugar-cane, tobacco, vegetables, &c. For the above, reference has been made to selected persons both in and out of the services, and the returns have been prepared by them with every view to secure accuracy.

*6th. Papers from the Behar and Benares opium agencies regarding the cultivation of the poppy, full of interesting details. • Appendix II.

7th. Three forms of agreement to cultivate indigo (translated).

8th. Statement forwarded by Mr. Larmour, manager of the Bengal Indigo Company, showing the small proportion of ryots that had cleared their advances in five large concerns under his superintendence.

9th. Extracts from the same gentleman's khata or account book, showing the debit and credit account of three ryots. These extracts were taken at random by the Commission from the books themselves, in Mr. Larmour's presence.

10th. A statement of ryots who had cut a large average of plant forwarded by the same gentleman.

11th. A report from Mr. Herschel, magistrate of Nuddea, regarding the case of abduction of Haromoni.

12th. Papers of the year 1835 relative to the cultivation of indigo and the settlement of Europeans, containing —

First. Petition from certain merchants, planters, and others.

Second. Minute of the late Lord Macaulay.

Third. Part of a Minute by Mr. Macleod.

Fourth. Letter from the Court of Directors.

38. There are many other valuable papers in the Appendix, but the above, we believe, will be found to be the most interesting. From this point, we shall enter on the many and important questions raised by our inquiry; and for the sake of perspicuity we here divide our subject into three great heads, as follows :

1st. The truth or falsehood of the charges made against the system and the planters.

2d. Changes required to be made in the system, as between manufacturer and cultivator, such as can be made by the heads of concerns themselves.

3d. Changes in the laws or administration, such as can only originate and be carried out by the legislative and executive authorities.

39. The first head, as affecting the character of a large body of individuals, and as one which has been so widely discussed, we shall first consider. Naturally, we cannot but regret the exceeding acerbity which has been infused into the late contest, and the extent to which the minds of Europeans and natives have been exasperated on the subject. We can only indulge an humble hope that our labours may result in setting at rest some of the questions on which most excitement has prevailed, and we should be glad to think that, hereafter, both parties would evince a more moderate tone of feeling, and refrain from those mutual and fierce denunciations, which can only result in creating and perpetuating one of the greatest evils with which this country could be visited, viz., an antagonism of race.

The first head of our inquiry we have again divided into the following five subordinate heads :

1st. The attitude of the planter towards the zemindar, and the attainment of proprietary rights in lands by planters.

2d. The attitude of the planter towards the ryot, as a manufacturer to producer, and as zemindar to payer of rents.

3d. The prevalence of crimes or oppressions of all kinds committed by the planters and their servants.

4th. The conduct of the police and the executive authorities towards the planters.

5th. The conduct of the missionaries, and the causes of the late crisis.

40. As regards the attitude of the planter towards native zemindars, and vice versa, it is undeniable that the planters have gradually acquired more of the higher proprietary rights in land, such as zemindari, talookdari, or putni; or that they have been granted leases of estates, or portions of estates, by the native zemindars, for terms varying from three to five, seven, and ten years, renewable at the said terms, and often so renewed. Most factories certainly commenced with be-ilaka cultivation, that is, by giving advances to, and taking agreements from, ryots resident on the estates of native zemindars. In this, on principle, there can be obviously, nothing objectionable. A planter has a full right to make a bargain with any willing ryot or cultivator anywhere, to grow for him a specified product of the soil. There is nothing in statute or common law which requires that the zemindar should be made a third party to the contract. And there is nothing which warrants the zemindar in expecting direct profits from the transaction, or in interfering in such a bargain fairly and honestly made. Ordinarily he does not exercise, and ought not to exercise, any interference with the cultivation of the ryot, and provided he receives his due rents, it can matter little to him what kind of produce is grown on the land. We are well aware, however, that from land sown with some of the higher products of the country, larger rents are demanded by the zemindars and yielded by the ryots.

41. But those acquainted with the interior of the country will easily discern in the arrangement between planter and ryot a fertile source of dispute. The zemindar, proud of his position and influence, may be displeased that his permission or aid has not been asked by the planter; or some quarrel may arise between his servants and those of the factory; or the ryots may conceive themselves to be oppressed, and may resort, naturally, to their zemindar for protection; or, if no interruption be offered at the time advances are made, the ryots may, in some instances, repudiate their engagements, trusting to the zemindar to support them, and may refuse to sow when the critical period arrives; or the zemindar may really wish to force the planter to ask for a lease, and the planter may feel that he is not secure from interference dictated by caprice, so long as he has not attained to zemindary rights, and it is tolerably certain that his cash advances made to such recusant ryot are lost for the time and are only recoverable by a civil suit. In any case there is usually but one termination to these disputes.

42. The zemindar and the planter enter into negotiations, and the only real practical difficulty is, whether the latter can afford to give the price demanded for a putni, or can pay down the bonus demanded for a lease, as well as collect rents from the ryot sufficient to cover the rent which the zemindar assesses on him as the leaseholder.

43. A great deal has certainly been said regarding the opposition and obstruction offered to European capitalists by native zemindars; but, from the evidence on this head, we are led to the conclusion that the only difficulty experienced by the planter has been that of settling the pecuniary terms. It is true that one zemindar of great experience, Baboo Joy Kissen Mookerjee, has declared himself averse to granting lands to Europeans, on principle; but this gentleman takes a remarkable interest in his own zemindaries, and very little indigo is or could be grown in his district. Baboo Prosonno Kumar Tagore, a well-known native gentleman, makes the same statement on his own account, but thinks that from "indolence, inexperience, and indebtedness," native zemindars prefer the system of giving lands in putni. This saves them the trouble of zemindary management, and enables them to live at the capital or in large cities on assured incomes. But another zemindar admits that he opposed the planter in order to "compel him to ask for a lease." Baboos Sri Gopaul Pal Chowdari, Haronath Rai, Pran Krishno Pal, and others, declare that they have been averse to granting lands in lease or permanency, though, owing to disputes, fear of consequences, and desire to avoid getting into trouble with the authorities, they have generally been obliged, against their will, to adopt this course. Munshi Latafat Hosain proves that he had constant disputes with the proprietor of a factory, and that, at last, the magistrate sent him a hookumnamah or order, of January 1851, which we cannot but regard as a distinct piece of advice, accompanied by a threat that he should come to some arrangement of this kind with the owner of the factory.

44. On the other hand, a zemindar of Pubna, Bijoy Gobindo Chowdari, has declared that of three leases, one was certainly given of his free will. Mr. J. P. Wise states that he has not suffered much oppression from zemindars, that he tries to keep on good terms with them, and that he has on many occasions received assistance at their hands. Messrs. Forlong and Larmour, Mr. Tissendie and others, make statements to the effect that the real question is one of money, and that if the factory can pay the sum demanded, there is no other other obstacle to the acquisition of lands in putni tenure, which is, practically, a purchase outright.

45. Still, it is not to be denied that opposition is offered, and that rents are demanded on leases which are sometimes beyond what the planter can fairly collect; and difficulties of other kinds may arise. Mr. J. Cockburn mentions one case in which, when the factory had obtained three shares of a village from three brothers, shareholders, the fourth, who refused to grant his share and who was at feud with his family, was enabled for years to prevent any cultivation of indigo. There is a well-known case in which the Katgarra concern found it necessary to take a lease of some villages at a dead loss of 5,000 rupees a year. Mr. Forlong states that he has lost 1,500 rupees on a lease of 12,000, for which he had to pay seven or eight thousand rupees besides as bonus, and Mr. Larmour gives three distinct instances of loss incurred in this way in taking leases. Mr. Tissendie also gives an instance of a loss of 1,500 rupees on the rent of a putni, which was only 7,500 rupees. At the same time it is always urged by planters that their object in taking leases of land is not to make money by the collection of rents, but to secure freedom from interruption and from annoyance, for the cultivation of indigo, and to this latter alone do they look for profit. They have declared, too, that rents are not enhanced, nor are the usual leaseholders' fees taken by planters, and that the ryots are thus saved from a general increased assessment, and from demands for extra cesses known as bazy abwabs. But, though we have no doubt this has often been the case, yet the statement must be taken with some qualifications. Mr. Larmour allows that it is his custom in taking a putni, to measure and assess the village at fair rates; and he has admitted an increase of 18,000 rupees a year to have been effected by him over a considerable tract of country, partly by management, but also by measurement; further, in answer 2,001, it is admitted by him that leaseholder's profit, i. e., half an anna and one anna in the rupee has been taken.

46. On the whole, looking to the statements furnished by planters, to the extent of lands now held by them from the native zemindars, as well as to the general tenor of the evidence, we can draw but one inference, which is that the acquirement of proprietary rights, of late so much coveted by planters, depends mainly on their skill and tact in negotiation, and on command of capital.

47. In some cases, too, the zemindar may be indolent or indebted and in want of money, as we have said, or he may desire to have an Englishman to back him in some family quarrel. In others, where the zemindar is unwilling, it has rarely been from actual dislike to indigo cultivation; the dislike may proceed from finding leased estates deteriorated by the mismanagement of a party who has no permanent interest in the ryots. But the general result is, that from some one cause or other, the zemindar eventually comes to terms.

A. 1590.

48. Where the planter has zemindary rights, the ryot has probably but little option, though we can perfectly conceive that, in order to please his landlord, many a ryot might consent to sow 10 cottahs or a beegah of indigo, without the exercise of any direct violence or oppression. The influence is perhaps best to be described as moral compulsion, and the apprehension of physical force. The native zemindars, in general, allow that their ryots do sow in this manner from 10 cottahs to a beegah with indigo, though they derive no profit from the cultivation. And the evidence of ryots and others seems to show that formerly there was less unwillingness to take advances as there was, no doubt, more profit to be looked for. Mr. Larmour has declared that the number of the ryots at Mulnath who sow indigo has, for the last three years, been increasing at the rate of 500 a year, though the area devoted to that cultivation was once 43,000 beegahs, and is now 23,000. The area has, however, slightly increased since 1851. Supposing, then, the ryot has agreed to sow a portion of land with indigo, he enters into a written contract to this effect, on stamped paper of the value of two annas. These contracts, as we have shown, are for various terms of years, and at first sight it would appear that the ryot is only bound for the term of his contract. But our inquiries have placed beyond a doubt the startling fact that in almost every concern, the contract is really renewed every year.*

49. At the time of adjustment of the accounts, the ryot is yearly debited with a fresh sum of two annas, and yearly he affixes his name to a blank stamp paper, which, in many concerns, is not filled up either at that date or at any other subsequent date. In cases, then, whenever a contract, nominally entered into for three or five years, is renewed in this manner annually, it is obvious that such an engagement never advances beyond its first year; or, in plain language, that it is an engagement continually binding the cultivator, year after year, for a term of years.

50. Another inequality is this: the planter, on a fair calculation, looks to a return of two seers of dye from ten bundles of plant, which is the fair average of one beegah. Two seers would sell for 10 rupees when indigo is selling at 200 rupees a maund; but the return from the same 10 bundles to the ryot could not be more than Rs. 2. 8. at four bundles the rupee.

51. Thus the planter would look to derive from the contract about four times the profit which could ever fall to the ryot.

52. We give no credit to a vague charge brought against the planters on this head, to the effect that blank stamps, as above mentioned, are afterwards filled up not as contracts for indigo, but as bonds or notes of hand, and are used against any ryot who may happen to fall under the displeasure of the factory, because such suits are simple in form, and decrees on them can be obtained with celerity. In one instance our inquiries on this head resulted in a complete negation of the charge. The planters themselves, it is well known, are not in the habit of resorting to the civil courts against their own ryots; and the legitimate conclusion from the evidence is, that the contracts are renewed in the manner indicated for the sole purpose of binding the ryot to his cultivation and to the factory. We must regret the above practice as irregular, and as likely to raise apprehensions, however unfounded, in the minds of the ryots, who are aware that in the interior blank stamps are often filled up falsely to the injury of individuals. Sometimes, we further regret to say, the sum required yearly for stamps is not as low as two annas, but it is one which would cover the whole debt due by the ryot to the factory, under the law for stamps in civil suits, apparently for the bare chance of its being necessary at some time to take the ryot into court. We have seen a ryot charged eight annas in one year for stamps, though it was tolerably certain that neither in his case nor in that of any other ryot had the planter any intention of instituting a civil suit; in other words, the ryots are yearly charged two annas, and in rare instances twice or four times that sum, to provide for contingencies which the planter has made up his mind by all means to avoid. We need hardly add that this discloses a vicious point in the very foundation of any contract made for a term of years. In short, the general object of the planter in all contracts seems to be not to secure an adjustment of accounts, but to perpetuate the obligation of the cultivator to sow.

53. The contract binds the ryot to give suitable lands, to plough, sow, and weed at the proper times, to see that the plant be not damaged by cattle, to cut it, and in some instances to deliver it at the factory. Naturally it is, as regards the fulfilment of these contracts, so worded, that we have had the greatest complaints and the largest amount of conflicting evidence.

54. We fully admit that if the planter has to pay an exorbitant price for a putni, or is called on for a bonus on a lease, which bonus he is expected to make up by balances of rent thought to be irrecoverable and never fully recovered, the extra sum demanded is so much taken from the outlay of the factory. By so much, it may justly be said, is the power lessened of paying ryots more liberally, and in this way the cultivator of the plant suffers. But we cannot but feel that the zemindars of Bengal have a right to sell at their own price that landed landed influence which they themselves do not always desire to relinquish, and which the planters, by their own showing, declare to be of essential and even vital importance to their main business. The native gentlemen cannot be prevented from making the bargain most advantageous to themselves; and if they see the planter more than usually anxious to gain a special object, it can hardly be wondered that, for the gratification of that object, they should exact a high price; this is the law of buying and selling all over the world.

* We understand that this is not the case in Messrs. Watson's concerns, see Answer 2991; the ryots there are only charged for stamps every five years.

A. 2570.

55. On the whole, then, we cannot subscribe to the opinion that there is anything in the conduct of native zemindars which evinces hostility to the cultivation of indigo, or which places a bar to the investment of European capital. And the tenure of putni, so often purchased by Englishmen, has lately been rendered more secure. Formerly they were liable to be cancelled on the sale of the superior or zemindary tenure for arrears of revenue; now they can be registered under Act XI. of 1859. For all purposes of power and influence over ryots, and security of cultivation, the putni tenure can be made equal to that of the zemindar or talookdar, whose connexion with the estates ceases whenever a putni has been created.

56. As regards the next two heads of this part of our inquiry, viz. the case between the planter and the ryot, and the oppressions which the former is said to practise, it is obvious that in this lies the gist of our inquiry, and our remarks on this part of our subject must occupy some space.

57. We have endeavoured to find out how exactly advances were first taken by the ryot, but without much success, because most of the witnesses of that station in life who appeared before us, instead of throwing any light on this point, have generally maintained that the original advances were first given many years ago, in their youth, or that they were taken by their father or grandfather. From the evidence of the planters, however, as well as from that of others, we are led to conclude that advances being offered at a season of the year when the ryot is in want of money for rent and for the annual festival of Doorga, they are in some instances willingly and even greedily accepted; some men are in debt, others want to spend money, and all like money without interest. Still, as it is asserted by ryots, and admitted by planters, that many of the ryots are not allowed to clear their account, and are, as it were, hereditary cultivators, working under old advances, and that the practical effect of the system is, "that the son sows because he believes that he is responsible for his father's debt," we are fairly warranted in concluding that cases of advances, given for the first time to fresh parties, are of late years not very numerous in any part of the country. We have reason to think that the son, when he succeeds to the jumma of the father, and becomes liable for his father's debts, conceives the impression that he is also liable for his father's engagements, and so is persuaded into continuing the cultivation.

A. 674. 3001.

A. 304.

58. We are far from drawing the sweeping conclusion that all advances are or have been necessarily made under strong compulsion. To ryots of estates not held by the planter, of whom in some large concerns there are a considerable number, it is obvious that strong compulsion could not be applied without producing disturbances; and in such case the ryots were probably willing at first to receive advances in cash; or persuasion, or the influence of the zemindar, if friendly, were doubtless the means applied.

A. 493. 504.

59. The planters all urge that strict supervision over each successive agricultural operation is rendered necessary by the indolence, supineness, procrastination, and faithless character of the Bengali; that the European manager or assistant must occasionally visit the lands, and that the factory servants must be regularly deputed to see that the ryot ploughs, sows, weeds, and cuts at the proper dates. With all this, they affirm that this supervision is not carried to an extent calculated seriously to harass the cultivator, and that the same kind of watchfulness and care are exercised, though in a less degree, by the mahajan who advances money on the security of the ryot's rice crop, and by the officers of Government in regard to the cultivation of the poppy. The ryots who appeared before us, on the other hand, are loud in denouncing the above supervision, as harassing and vexatious; they say that they are required, again and again, to plough, to crush the clods, to remove stalks, to smooth the ground, to sow at the precise moment which the planter may dictate, until neither their time nor their labour can be called their own; their rice grounds are left untilled or only half tilled; and they are subjected to such constant annoyances, indignities and oppression, while their bundles of plant are unfairly or hurriedly measured, that they have learned to hate the very name of indigo. For confirmation of the above remarks, we have only to solicit his Honour's attention to the evidence on both sides, which, on this head, is too copious to detail.*

60. We believe that one explanation of these contradictory statements, and the main point which it is necessary to keep in view from this time forward, is, that the cultivation of indigo is not profitable to the ryot on the terms heretofore existing. Without anticipating our conclusions on the just and fitting relation between ryot and planter, we think it absolutely essential for a right understanding of the whole subject at this stage of our report to draw his Honour's special attention to this fact, and that it is a fact not to be disputed or questioned, we shall now show, not from the evidence of exasperated ryots relating their grievances, or from that of the gentlemen who have testified in their behalf, but from the admissions of the planters themselves, or of those who have spoken somewhat on this side of the question.

61. It is admitted, then, by one planter, Mr. J. P. Wise (A. 30), "that the ryot takes very little interest in his indigo crop," and presently by the same witness (A. 120) "that indigo at present is not so profitable to ryots as other crops;" by a gentleman who has had experience as a magistrate of a large indigo district, that the crop is unproductive, and that "hitherto the planter has taken upon himself too little of the risk, and left too much of the risk with the ryot" (A. 273); by an old planter of large experience, that "the risk is, no doubt, with the ryot" (A. 372), and (A. 374) that "the ryot, generally speaking, does not produce enough to cover his advances;" by a gentleman who was a planter formerly, "that the cultivation is not popular because it is not profitable, and the ryot has to bear the whole brunt of the risk" (A. 513); by another gentleman, that nij is more profitable to a planter than "dissatisfied ryots, who give a great deal of trouble, and cost a great deal of money;" by a gentleman who has a large nij cultivation, "that even were a beegah of indigo to pay better than a beegah of rice, the ryot would give a preference to the rice" (1453); by Mr. Larmour, "that indigo may not be profitable or popular in some places," (2161); by Mr. Clark, that the ryot "will sow a small quantity to please his zemindar, although he may not gain much profit by it," (3443); and, generally, by planters and by zemindars of experience in ryotti cultivation, that the cultivation is not directly remunerative to the ryot; but it is pleaded that this is to be attributed mainly to bad seasons, high prices, and the precariousness of the crop. In mitigation of this charge, too, it is urged, that it has still been found comparatively easy to satisfy the ryot, and to keep him contented and faithful to his engagements by the grant of what have been termed collateral advantages; and that even with the above disadvantages, several ryots, working honestly and faithfully, have cleared their advances, and received large payments in excess. This last averment is quite true, but it is also true that by the practice of the factories, some ryots who might have cleared themselves are nevertheless kept in debt, because it would seem, when their delivery of indigo would suffice to clear their balance, the planter prefers to pay fresh cash to the ryot for the indigo, and retain the old balance against him. With the favourable exceptions, the fact remains of the greater number of ryots being in balance, and sometimes in heavy balances in all the large concerns of which we are qualified to speak, and of their having been so for years; in other words, the fact of their having repeatedly grown plant without profit, under a supervision which planters themselves avow to be requisite, and which the ryots declare to be vexatious, stands out as a broad and decisive one, from which it is possible to draw but one inference.

62. Various attempts have been made to show the expenses of cultivation, and the profit and loss of the cultivation of indigo and of other crops, which will be found in the evidence. Even the most advantageous statements, made on favourable suppositions, show but a slight profit derivable to the ryot from indigo, and it is quite clear from the statements as to the production of rice, not to speak of the higher kinds of produce, that indigo, as a paying crop, must stand very low in the scale. The valuable information given as to the rise in prices, and the returns of divers kinds of produce in the Appendix, aid in establishing this point beyond question.

A. 3533. 3834.
3522.

A. 492. 596, 7.

A. 101, 2, 3. 604.
2049. 2082. 2437.

63. Some ryots may have been pacified, contented, and even willing to sow, and several ryots even in the past years have cleared their advances; but when we consider the small number of those who have done this, and the large number of those who have not, within the limit of one of the largest and best managed concerns, the Bengal Indigo Company, the huge amount of bad balances of a long series of years, pronounced irrecoverable, as well as the frank admission of planters, that most of their ryots are on the wrong side of the books; we can have no doubt that the question of direct profit to the ryots as a body, is no longer matter for serious discussion.

A. 2066. 2895.

64. But, it has been said, the ryot once fairly under the shield and protection of the planter, enjoys those solid but indirect advantages, whereof particular mention was made in the commencement of this Report, when we stated the case, as it was generally put by those in the interests of the planter. As far as our inquiries have enabled us to discover positive facts, we have heard of but two dispensaries, that at Mulnath, and that at Salgurmudia, and a few vernacular schools; and we can of course readily understand that every European, remote from medical aid in the interior, keeps by him a supply of medicines, not only for himself or family, but for the use of such of the neighbouring population as may apply to him in cases of sickness. We cannot either refuse to believe, in spite of the asseverations of the ryots to the contrary, that many planters have been in the habit of assisting ryots with money, quite independent of the regular advances, for the purchase of cattle, or for the repair of houses; and it is not within our knowledge that such loans, without interest, would be available to a ryot in distress from any other source.

A. 600. 1454.

65. Then, there is the question of diminished rents. By this we do not understand that any planter becoming possessed of temporary or permanent rights in land, ever takes less rents than were taken by the person from whom he has derived his interest. What is meant, is, that the leaseholder or the putnidar forbears to put in force the power derived to him to measure and assess the lands of the ryots to the full amount legally permissible, and that he also never calls on the ryots for those various payments, which some of the native zemindars, on some one pretext or other, constantly demand from the tenants, on births, marriages, religious festivals, and similar events, or on pressing necessities. Mr. J. P. Wise asserted his belief that he could double the rent of his ryots, and Mr. Forlong said that he allowed the ryots to sit at as easy a rate as possible. Mr. Larmour, in Mulnath alone, has released 17,000 beegahs of land held rent free, on the production by the holder of certain papers called the taidad, endorsed by the collector of revenue.

A. 2411. 114.
2914. 2232.

66. That the above demands are made by some native zemindars is perfectly notorious, though there are some honourable exceptions to this rule, and we can readily believe that such are unknown on estates held by planters, but the statement regarding the omission to raise rents must be taken with a qualification, for we have seen the admission by Mr. Larmour of his taking certain leaseholders' fees, though not heavy fees, and of his having raised the rental of his putni by management and measurement some 18,000 rupees a year; and it can hardly be imagined that an European acquiring a permanent landed interest such as putnis confer, should not avail himself of his inherent rights. Again, some of these advantages depend on the planter's command of money; and money in late years has been scarce. A great deal too would depend on the skill, tact, and experience of the planter in giving the fullest effect to the kind of collateral advantages which he had it in his power to offer. Then there is the contrast of the planter's rule to the rule of the zemindar, and to what is termed the rapacity of the mahajun. As regards the latter, his terms are high, and his need is felt everywhere, but we are not aware of similar complaints made by the ryot of the pressure of his debts to the money-lender. At any

A. 2001.

A. 75. 400.

A. 2013. 2114. rate no body of ryots have come forward with such complaints, nor do we think that the slight supervision which the majahun may exercise over the cultivation is vexatious to the same extent. As to the zemindar, we should ask all Europeans seriously to remember, if they take this view of the question, that when they acquire influence and authority of whatever kind in this country, it is not sufficient that they should exercise it with only a little less of the oppression ascribed to the native. The rule of the foreigner should not only be as good as that of the indigenous zemindar; it should be much better in every possible point of view, to take only the low ground of political or private expediency. Experience teaches us, in every department, phase, and period of Indian history, that the lower orders will endure patiently at the hands of one of their own colour or creed 10 times the oppression which they would at the hands of a foreigner. Allowing too, that many planters dispense a summary justice in the courts which they hold, to their own ryots, the zemindars, who attend to business, do exactly the same; when therefore these points are fairly balanced, the indirect advantages which planters have usually offered, will be found reduced to a certain moderation in the enhancement or assessment of rent, some few loans without interest, and some other acts of personal kindness. We say this in no spirit of disparagement to the planters, but it must be obvious, that unless dispensed with regularity, or if exposed to any peculiar counteracting causes, such advantages could not be expected to compensate for the direct loss of profit to which agriculturists look in all countries, for the chance of extortion at the hands of the numerous servants employed in the task of supervision, and for the life tie which binds the ryot to the factory. Indeed, to quote the language of our colleague Mr. Sale, a system, which for its success, may depend on either terror on the one hand, or indulgence on the other, is not a good system in any country.

A. 949.

67. Besides, even if we admit the full force of indirect advantages to exist in all well regulated factories, there are, even in the very same factories, disadvantages and inconveniences peculiar to this system, and to no other that we are aware of. We have clearly explained the system of contracts, which never end, and which are tantamount to a denial of personal freedom of action, and which result in the additional charge to the ryot of two annas a year; small, indeed, but irritating and unnecessary.

68. Then the lands of the ryot are selected as the planter may choose; they are not bid for; nor are those which the ryot would set apart for indigo usually taken; and they are measured for their produce by a standard different to the usual zemindary or land measurement. This varies from one-fourth to one-half as large. In defence of this it is pleaded that the difference is of long standing, and is one of which the ryot is fully aware, and it is shown that there is one uniform standard for the indigo beegah throughout all indigo concerns in the Nuddea district. But there is no question that the distinction operates to the prejudice of the ryots; and of all the complaints which they have made known to us, this is one of the most universal, and the source of very considerable disgust and ill-will. Again, when there is a crop of seed grown from the stumps of the indigo, it is considered the right of the factory to take the produce at the invariable rate of four rupees a maund, and this, when the seed may be selling in the bazar at from 10 rupees to 30 rupees a maund, as has been the case in the three last years. But we have reason to believe that this rate was originally fixed when the price of seed in the market was generally much lower.

69. Thus the constant attitude of the ryot, when under the planter as zemindar, is one of dependence; and that of the planter to the ryot ought to be, and sometimes is, one of advice and protection. But, even should such protection never be exchanged for harshness and oppressive conduct, it is quite clear that this mutual relation is hardly compatible with the free and uninfluenced exertions of manufacturer and producer. For according to the decisions of the highest courts, whenever the law may come in between the parties, the produce of the land belongs to the ryot. That the land is not the planter's, to enter on at his free will, is quite clear from the course he is compelled to pursue whenever he resorts to nij cultivation, and when the plant grows up, it belongs to the ryot, who is only bound by civil contract to deliver it at the factory. Here, too, we must discountenance an erroneous notion, which has been held in some quarters, to the effect that the labour of the ryot costs him nothing, on the ground that he, in the performance of his contract, with his own muscles, drives his own plough, behind his own bullocks, over lands of which he is the undoubted occupant. The bullocks, the implements, the time, and the labour of the ryot represent to him his capital; and it is quite certain that in the populous districts of Lower Bengal, such labour has a market value. Besides, a ryot unemployed in working out his contract would be cultivating his own lands, or helping his neighbours under the plan of mutual assistance, well described in answer 458. Still the ryot may be able to cultivate his land with indigo at a cheaper rate than the planter could cultivate his nij lands with the same crop, by hired labour. We need hardly use further arguments to set before his Honour one of the first principles of political economy as to what represents capital. Our object is simply to show that, until the plant reaches the vats in the factory, no share in the labour of producing it has been borne by the planter. He has given his advances and his seed. Everything else, the land, labour, and the risk, is the ryot's.

70. We have deemed it our duty thus to draw attention to the unfortunate position of the ryot as a cultivator of indigo, because it is one of those points that has hitherto been kept out of sight, misrepresented, or misunderstood. The Commission, which has been mentioned at various times for the last twenty-five years as a desideratum, has now been looked for anxiously by the agricultural population; the more intelligent portion are fully aware of its objects; and we feel that it is incumbent on us first to place in the strongest and clearest light, the ryot as he appears to us, deprived of his free will, and bound to continue a cultivation, which does not give him a fair or adequate profit, which in its worst aspect he absolutely dislikes, and in its most favourable aspect he is only induced to tolerate. All the defects of the system, inherent and incidental, all the faults which justly are to be laid at the door of either planter or ryot, by their respective opponents, may be traced originally to one bare fact, the want of adequate remuneration. It is this that mainly renders the possession of landed influence indispensable to extensive cultivation, and it is owing to this that the planter has to urge the ryot to plough and to sow, to weed, and to cut, by means little short of actual compulsion; it is this that brings out into strong relief the well-known defects of the national character of the Bengali; that sharpens his cunning, aggravates his indolence, tempts him to procrastination, and fosters his proneness to concealment; it is this, in short, that renders the whole relation between the two parties, one prolonged and unhappy struggle in which Anglo-Saxon energy, promptitude, and pertinacity, are often almost baffled by that subterfuge and evasion which are the proverbial resources of the weak.

71. But having thus discharged our duty towards the ryots, we mean to be just towards the planter, and to take no unfair or contracted view of his past and present position.

72. Indigo, it is well known, is one of the most important of our exports, and a staple of great value in the home and foreign market. The indigo manufactured on this side of India is of prime quality, and that of Lower Bengal especially, which is produced in the districts of Nuddea and Jessore, is probably the very finest in the whole world.

73. The annual outturn of this dye on this side of India, for the season, averages 1,05,000 maunds, and the value of this would be nearly two crores of rupees, or two millions sterling.

74. It is clear that, even independent of all other political or social considerations, the loss or diminution of an export of such extent and value would be severely felt both in India and England.

75. But the absence of the manufacturers would be also felt, we have every reason to believe, in the interior of the country, were the skill, outlay, and enterprise which are expended on indigo to be suddenly withdrawn.

76. In a political aspect, the presence of a body of Europeans, scattered over various portions of the interior of the country, is highly valuable. In troublous or disturbed times, it is to them that Government would partly look for assistance in the repression of anarchy, the maintenance of order, and the counteraction of disaffection. In more quiet times the residence of an Englishman is a sort of guarantee that violent abuses shall not long remain undetected. If there is an oppressive law, or a barbarous and antiquated custom, he is probably the first to feel its pressure, and to be urgent for its abolition. If a public functionary is corrupt, idle, or incapable, he will pray to have him removed. Though his complaints be sometimes unreasonable, or be tendered in no measured language, the Englishman acts as the representative of public opinion, and we feel that the administration of justice could not well dispense with his determined and vigorous expostulations.

77. Then, as to the power of the planters to offer more liberal and advantageous terms to the producers, we must bear in mind that, as appears from the evidence of Mr. Moran and others, a considerable portion of the indigo factories are working on borrowed capital and at a high rate of interest. Before the planter, so situated, can offer handsome terms and realise a fair profit, he has to pay heavy interest on his debt and the annual outlay.

A. 1472.

78. Now the general rate of interest is not less than 10 per cent., and if paid on the block, and on the advances for the current season, it must add much to the cost of the indigo; but owing to the valuable landed interests which are attached to almost every factory, the purchase of a good sized concern is now almost beyond the power of any moderate capitalist. Taking the concerns generally, and their annual outlay, it would be unreasonable not to admit that in indigo districts there is a beneficial and active circulation of money. The residence of the manager and his assistants in the interior is tantamount to the expenditure, by each of them, of a certain sum on the spot. Large sums are annually spent in the purchase of seed, grown both in the Upper and Lower Provinces. A very considerable establishment of native servants, many of whom live in the immediate neighbourhood, and nearly all in the district, is maintained on regular salaries, and such men are thus enabled to rise in the social scale. At the manufacturing season of the year, large numbers of labourers are employed in many ways in working for the factory, and the mere manufacturing expenses, we have reason to believe, average 20 rupees a maund; and after making every reasonable deduction for the reasons before given, there still remains a certain sum expended in advances and payments made to the ryots. The yearly outlay in cash of the factories in the district of Nuddea alone is estimated at 18 lacks of rupees, which is about six lacks in excess of the Government revenue. It must be that such a system facilitates the collection of rents and circulates cash through many villages. The amount paid in wages during the manufacturing season by Messrs. Watson & Co., amounts monthly to something very large. The value of the property is very great; the same concern in Rajshahye, and three or four other districts, the Bengal Indigo Company in Nuddea and Baraset, have an amount of property at stake in the country, both in houses and lands, which may be estimated at little short of half a million.

A. 3189.

A. 1530.

79. Next, as regards the soil actually taken up for indigo, it is quite certain that low chur lands, which are submerged early in July, could not grow anything else but indigo as the first crop of the season. Early rice grown there could not come to maturity before the inundation in July. On some other chur lands not exposed to so early a rise of the rivers, the Aous crop of rice could no doubt be grown, but the anxiety of the ryot to grow rice is more visible in regard to high lands than to any kind of churs. These high lands are indeed a different subject; they are not exposed to any rise of the rivers, except in remarkable seasons, and they are preferred by the ryot for rice for reasons already specified. Yet in any concern, the area of such lands taken up for indigo does not exceed one-twentieth of the whole village, or as a very extreme cultivation one-sixteenth; and we have every reason to believe that indigo not being in itself injurious to the soil, it is decidedly advantageous that there should be a due rotation of it with other crops. As a mere question of agriculture, it is beneficial that indigo, like tobacco or sugar-cane, should occasionally occupy lands which otherwise might be given up mainly to rice. We here argue on the supposition that indigo were really remunerative, for,

in

in this case, the ryot would be glad that it should have its turn with other products, in the same way as he has hitherto sown it for seed, in parts of Jessore and Nuddea, without any advances, and to his own profit. Viewed in this light, we should be loath to see indigo cultivation entirely thrown up in any one district, and must hold it to be of service to the agriculturist in the due rotation of crops.

80. Nor must we omit to give prominence to the fact that, wherever indigo planters have established themselves, whole tracts of jungle have been cleared away. The evidence of Mr. Reily, Mr. Tissendie, Mr. Forlong, and others, is conclusive on this head. Nor can we assent to the inference that these good effects are connected solely with an extension of nij cultivation and not with an increase of population and homesteads. Perhaps, in the first instance, lands so cleared were sown by the factory servants, but as such cultivation is confessedly expensive, and as it is the object of the planter to extend his ryotti and not his nij cultivation, we can have no doubt but that the clearance of jungle was, in nearly all instances, followed by an addition to the number of the villagers, and in this way that social comfort was promoted.

81. Conflicting statements have been made as to whether there is or there is not a perceptible difference in the condition of the ryots who grow indigo, compared with those who do not grow it. Seeing that it is not to be contravened that the majority of ryots derive no profit, but a loss, from indigo, and that many ryots in the greater part of Hooghly and Baraset, as well as those on Mr. Morell's estate in Backergunge, and in other parts of that district have grown rich and wealthy, without this kind of cultivation, we do not discover any particular difference to be perceptible in favour of ryots who are cultivators of indigo.

82. What we desire to see is the relation between planter and ryot placed on the permanent footing of a free, a healthy, and a mutually profitable intercourse. The presence of Europeans, their attention to business, the help they give to officials, their energy in clearing jungle, and in aiding in the formation of roads, the check they give to abuses, their yearly circulation of large sums of money, are all things to be admired and valued. But these benefits will be more freely felt, and more openly acknowledged, whenever the whole system shall have undergone a thorough reformation, and when indigo can be cultivated under such circumstances as shall remove even the bare apprehension of agrarian rising and popular discontent.

A. 307. 882.

83. The planters, we must also state, have thrown no difficulties whatever in the way of our inquiry. On the contrary, they have come forward with their books and accounts to afford us all the information in their power, and never, during the progress of the inquiry, have they been even taxed with attempting to intimidate ryots, or with obstructing evidence. We have all been struck, too, with the fulness, lucidity, and openness with which several of them delivered their testimony, and we have had reason to admire the thorough knowledge which they evinced of all the principles and details of the planter's profession; nor can we doubt that such qualities would be calculated to shine conspicuously in any other profession or line of life which they might adopt.

84. We now turn to those distinct and specific charges which, either by one party or other, of natives or of officials, have been brought against the planters, before or during our sittings.

85. Commencing with the gravest, we shall go through the list seriatim. Of actual destruction of human life comparatively few cases of late years have been brought to our knowledge, as proved, and we have no wish to lay great stress on a list of 49 serious cases which are shown to have occurred over a period of 30 years in different parts of the country; because violent affrays, ending in homicide or wounding, are, we are happy to say, of not nearly such frequent occurrence as they used to be, and affrays are not peculiar to indigo planting. They occur equally where the plant is not grown.

86. *From the returns supplied by the magistrates of some of the most important districts for the last five years, some of which are entirely blank, it is quite clear that investigations into those fights between the adherents of zemindars dar and planter, which used to carry desolation, terror, and demoralization into a dozen villages at a time, no longer disfigure our criminal annals to the extent they used to do. Even in Nuddea, as will be seen from the return, the cases were few in the years preceding 1859 and 1860. Some of this good result is, no doubt, due to the working of Act IV. of 1840, for giving summary possession of lands; to the law for the exaction of recognizances and security against apprehended breaches of the peace, namely, Act V. of 1848; and to the establishment of Subdivisions, with convenient circles of jurisdiction. A good deal is owing, also, to the acquisition by planters of rights in lands, and to the peace and quiet which usually follow such acquisition, as far as affrays and fights are concerned; but something, also, is due to the better skill and management of factories generally, and, we doubt not, to the good sense and good feeling of the most influential planters.

87. Affrays carried out with premeditation, on a large scale, by means of hired clubmen, we are thus happy to pronounce rare in some districts, and in others unknown.

88. Then, as to the burning of bazaars and houses, we have a clear admission from a gentleman whose character entitles him to great respect (A. 670), that he "has known of such acts," but no well proved instance of this sort has been brought to our notice in any oral evidence. In one or two instances mentioned to us, when a fire took place, it was a matter of doubt whether its origin was not accidental; and we cannot, therefore, but acquit the planters as a body of any practice of the sort, though we do not mean to say that cases of arson do not occur in Lower Bengal, in consequence of indigo disputes. A crime of this kind would, from its very openness, attract attention, and should be susceptible of the clearest proof.

89. As regards the knocking down of houses, gentlemen of undoubted veracity have seen places where houses had been, and have known indigo growing on deserted homesteads, understanding that the ryots had absconded after some dispute, and that their houses had been demolished. We have the clear evidence of Mr. Blumhardt (A. 1287, 1288) to an outrage of this kind, which came under his observation. It is to be noticed, however, that in this case a sentence imposed at the Sessions was reversed by the Sudder Court. Unless we could fathom the origin of all desertions, we could not take on ourselves to pronounce that houses had been wantonly knocked down by the planter to intimidate the ryot. In one case, particularly, the manager of the Bengal Indigo Company distinctly denied having caused a house to be knocked down, and gave a totally different version to the alleged outrage; and as, whenever a ryot deserts his homestead and settles in another village, the land thrown up, both by law and custom, reverts to the zemindars, we are still less able to pronounce that for any piece of indigo seen growing within a cluster of ryots' houses, or on an abandoned homestead or beeta, a house or houses must have been first knocked to pieces.

90. Still, the demolition of houses, either with the direct or indirect order of the planter, does occasionally, we fear, occur; and it is quite certain that four respectable gantidars of the village of Goaltolli had complained, three of the destruction of their property, and all four of their valuable ganti tenures having been taken from them; nor did the manager deny that those tenures were no longer enjoyed by their rightful owners.

91. As to outrages on women, which, more than any other act, might offend the prejudice and arouse the vindictiveness of a people notoriously sensitive as to the honour of their families, we are happy to declare that our most rigid inquiries could bring to light only one case of the kind. And when we came to examine into its foundation, as seriously affecting the character of one planter, and, through him, the body of the planters in a whole district, or as affording any clue to the excitement of the past season, we discovered that there were very reasonable grounds for supposing that no outrage on the person of the woman had ever taken place.

92. For this we rest on the full report of the magistrate of Nuddea on the charge as preferred before him, which is given in the Appendix.

93. That

93. That the woman, in this case, was taken away by the servants of the factory, is a fact beyond dispute; but as the magistrate has disbelieved the evidence to further outrage, and as the manager of the factory has satisfactorily shown to us that he was absent from home until the very day the abduction took place, and that he no sooner became aware of the fact than he ordered the woman to be returned to her friends, and as he also declares on oath that he subsequently saw the uncle of the woman at the factory, but heard nothing further on the subject, we cannot, on all this, but consider even this one single charge, in its heinous aspect and as affecting the manager, to be disproved. Still, that the servants of any factory should have dared to commit such an act as the abduction of a woman in open day, speaks strongly for the absence of all restraint and the lawlessness of the offenders.

94. There remain, then, of serious charges, those of kidnapping men, carrying off cattle, and rooting up gardens, and other offences; these practices being said to be habitual whenever ryots disobey orders issued from the factory. Here, we regret to say, the cases brought to our notice are so numerous and so well authenticated as to make us apprehend that the practice of imprisoning individuals in the factory or its outhouses is of common occurrence. As regards the seizure of cattle, the cases are not so numerous; but Mr. Sage speaks of it as a "general custom," and he was, no doubt, speaking from facts within his own knowledge.

95. As regards gardens, ryots have made numerous complaints as to date-gardens and plants being uprooted to make room for indigo, and we are afraid that, in some instances, such injuries have been inflicted.

96. Discarding all cases resting on vague hearsay, questionable authority, or mere general rumour, we think that the following array of facts which are put in evidence either by the sufferers themselves or by gentlemen of undoubted credibility, as facts brought to their own personal knowledge, prove the undeniable prevalence of seizing cattle, and more especially of kidnapping. We would refer, then, to the three distinct cases of abducting cattle mentioned by Mr. Schurr, in Answer 779, all three within his own cognizance, and two happening under his very eyes; to the case mentioned by Mr. Eden in Answer 3576, in which he states that he caused the release of 200 or 300 head of cattle; to the first case mentioned by Mr. Lincke in Answer 891, and to the case of abduction of two men for more than two months, mentioned in the same answer, referred to by Mr. Bomwetsch in Answer 956, and explained further before us by one of the sufferers, with the marks of violence still visible on his head and person; to the cases mentioned by Mr. Bomwetsch in Answer 958 and Answer 962, as within his own knowledge, and told him by the very sufferers themselves; to the case of oppression mentioned by the same gentleman in Answers 985 to 987, when a garden of plantains and vegetables was cut down close to the witness's house, in order to make way for indigo; to the narrative of Gunni Duffadar in page 59, showing that he and his father were wounded and taken away by force, the latter simply for having done his duty, and that, after confinement for some months, they complained to the magistrate on their release, but were persuaded to let the matter drop; to the narrative of Faquir Mohammed, showing that only last year he was confined in a godown for eight days, because he would not act as the people of the factory would have had him act; to that of Ishwar Chunder Chowdari, a highly respectable and substantial gantidar, showing that he was confined for three days in a godown, but got away by giving some money to his keeper; to the statements of Sabir Biswas, Adam Mandal, and Bhubataran Halodhur; to the case mentioned by Mr. Herschel in which he released two men who had been taken out of his own subdivision in Moorshedabad to the district of Malda; to the cases reported by Mr. Eden, one of which is mentioned by Grihish Bose, first class darogah, namely, those in which Mr. Tripp and Mr. Laidly were severally fined for kidnapping, which cases have been fully laid before the public within the last three years; to the two of which the narrative is given by Mr. Lautour in his evidence, viz., of Mr. Forde and Mr. Tissendie, and the judicial sentences therein passed on the planters are filed and printed in the Appendix; to the case of Shital Turrufdar, mentioned in page 295 of the Blue Book, Part I., and finally reported on by the Commissioner of Nuddea in his letter of the 5th July 1860; to that discovered by the activity of Mr. A. J. Bainbridge and judicially recorded in pages 124, and following, of Part I. of the same Selections from the Records of the Government of Bengal; and to the recent kidnapping of a boy named Arman, reported in the letter of the Commissioner of the 3d of July last, wherein it is shown that this offence had been compromised by the deputy magistrate in opposition to the orders of the magistrate of Pubna.

97. Of all cases in this country, those of kidnapping are the most difficult of discovery and proof, and those in which conviction rarely follows. But in some of the above instances the ends of justice have been actually attained. In one, there was a positive failure of justice, even when the facts were shown and the means for redress were available. We allude to the case of Abadi Mandal; and though it is some satisfaction to us to find that the head of the concern was absent in England during the time of the man's confinement, and is therefore blameless in the matter, yet looking at the whole facts, we must record our opinion that one such case of violent and unlawful confinement spreads alarm throughout the whole neighbourhood, reflects discredit, by its results, on the administration of justice, and lowers the estimation in which, for legality and fair dealing the European character ought to be held.

98. That a man of the respectability of Ishwar Chowdari, one of those small proprietors to whom, as a body, so much of the improvement in the actual prosperity of the country is owing, should be subjected to the mere indignity of confinement for three days, is also a fact which speaks for itself.

99. Nor did this man tell his story with any exaggeration or emphasis. Being of good family, and having an hereditary and inalienable lease, liable to no enhancement, he merely objected to have his rent raised, and confinement was the natural consequence of his refusal.

100. Indeed, this practice of confining reculant or obstructive parties in the interior of the country, is so common as to be spoken of without the least reserve. A most respectable witness, in answer to a question put as to what would be done, supposing a silk contractor were to refuse to take advances, replies, "we should have demanded instant payment of his balances, or we should, doubtless, have confined the man in one of the godowns if there was no possibility of getting speedy justice."

101. We are fully aware that the delay and difficulties of the law, the corruption of the police, the venality of the native clerks of courts, and the opposition, direct or indirect, which the European may encounter, are repeatedly put forward as excuses for planters thus, as it is termed, taking the law into their own hands. But no code of law that we are aware of would visit any offence of which any of the above sufferers could, on the broadest supposition, have been guilty with the penalties which, without form of justice, they have been compelled to pay. We could understand a man forcibly cutting a few acres of plant, claimed by a rival planter or zemindar, in anticipation of a decree of Court, and urging in excuse of his conduct, that he had no resource but to cut the crop or suffer grievous injury, for which the law would not sufficiently reimburse him. But it would be puerile to put forward this excuse to cloak the abduction of cattle on the scale witnessed by Mr. Schurr, or the habitual practice of confining helpless individuals in godowns until they submit to the will or caprice of the planter. Again, it is said, and doubtless with more or less of truth, that men who are regarded by the planters as troublesome characters, who might lay complaints, or incite others to resistance, or otherwise increase difficulties, are thus confined and kept out of the way. This, while it may account for the practice, is no real justification. Then it may be urged, unfortunately with truth, that the practice was not invented by the planters, but was previously practised, and is still practised, by others. But, obviously, it is to be expected that, as before remarked, European gentlemen in the position of planters will rather by good example discountenance the evil practices which already exist. It may be further said that there are some planters who would not habitually act thus; but still the frequency of the instances is calculated to cast a reflection on the entire body.

102. In short, when we hear of and thus see cases of kidnapping happening in different years, and many of them recent, and extending over a large tract of country; and when we consider how impossible it is that many similar cases should not occur, but never see the light, we can only look on them as proceeding habitually from a determined and headstrong spirit which, at all risks, will have its own way.
in

103. There was really more to be pleaded in excuse for affrays, when affrays did happen. An affray was caused by the meeting of two bodies of armed men, supplied with funds, probably, by two equal, rich, and influential antagonists.

104. The police were weak; the chief authority was at a distance; there were, as we have already stated, rights in jeopardy, or valuable property at stake, which it was imperative for one party or the other to defend or to place at once in security. But for this practice of carrying off individuals, and taking them, sometimes in a wounded condition, from place to place, in order to elude research and detection, we can make no extenuation.

105. On the contrary, we deem it our duty to mark it with our deliberate reproof, as alien to the British character; and while we earnestly call on all unofficial Englishmen henceforth to discountenance it by precept, authority, and by the dismissal from their service of any of their subordinates, European or native, who resort to the same, we also think that no means ought to be left untried on the part of the authorities to check and eradicate a practice which must, more than any other species of illegality, tend to make the ryot chary of complaining, hopeless of redress, and inclined to cherish the belief that Europeans are placed above the law.

106. The consideration of this point leads us further to the various oppressions and extortions stated to be practised by the amla or servants of the factory. On this head minute inquiries were made; but nearly all planters unite in deposing that all payments, on whatever account, are made to the ryot in the presence of the manager or of his European assistant.

107. We accept these statements without question, but as this does not quite meet the complaint of many ryots, or the belief entertained by other parties of the exactions to which the cultivators are often subjected, we can only reconcile this discrepancy by inferring that the prevalence or the reverse of such a practice must depend very much on the character of the planter, his knowledge of the language, his accessibility and readiness to hear and to afford redress, and his general good management. It is not pretended that dustoori, or perquisites, are not taken by the servants of the factory, when not under the planter's eye; this is done unfortunately in all establishments, public or private, official or unofficial, whenever cash passes through the hands of native subordinates. And thus if the planter is unusually careless, and the servants more than ordinarily rapacious and exacting, the extortion becomes habitual. Looking to the pay of the lower class of the factory servants, and to the many instances in which witnesses have detailed to us the items of their just dues of which they have been mulcted by the dewan, gomashta, amin, and takidgir, we feel warranted in saying that we do not think a sufficiently strict hand is kept over the servants in all factories, and that a ryot may be afraid of complaining against a man who may have the opportunity, the next week, of seizing his cattle on pretext of damage done to the growing plant; a complaint to which, from its nature, a willing ear might be lent. At this point we must observe, that instances have been specified to us of servants of factories having built brick-houses for themselves, probably by the profits which their situations afforded them; and though there is exaggeration in the numbers of bamboos, babul, mangoe and other trees, as well as in the amount of thatching grass which several ryots state to have been cut and carried away by the servants, for the use of the manager or assistant, the same not being adequately paid for, or even paid for at all; yet that ill-paid servants in the interior, responsible to no one but their master, and with the courts and police at some distance, are too apt to take goods without payment, when they can find an opportunity, is a fact we cannot question. At the same time we admit that charges of taking such articles without paying for them are justly brought against the lower native officials of many public departments. Our finding on this head, then, can only be general. We see the facilities for oppression, the only safeguard in which lies in the vigilance of the planter; we cannot take on ourselves to define its extent; but from the evident temper and exasperation of the ryots, we fear, that in some instances, the amount was considerable.

108. On the whole, we must sum up these cases between planter and ryot, by declaring our conviction that the relations between the two, even in the largest concerns, managed by the most kind and experienced planters, are in a much more unsatisfactory condition than are the relations between planter and zemindar. The latter has power and wealth, and if he has lost anything, he has got some equivalent.

109. It matters little whether the ryot took his original advances with reluctance or cheerfulness, the result in either case is the same; he is never afterwards a free man. Of all those who have appeared before us, we remember but two or three who had thrown off their connexion with indigo before the commencement of this season. And no man has been brought before us who had cultivated, cleared himself, and had not re-engaged. When we look at the very form and letter of the contract, the large array of bad balances which are neither cleared off nor attempted to be claimed by course of law, the length of time most cultivators have been under engagement, the avowal of one planter that to encourage any ryot to pay off his balances would be virtually to close the factory, the strict supervision which the very necessities of his position and the instinct of self-preservation impose on the planter, the defective measurement of the bundles, and the extra measurement of the standard indigo beegah, the number of the factory servants, their character, salaries, and their opportunities, and the avowedly small return in cash to all but the most fortunate and substantial ryots; looking at all this, we feel conscientiously that with all the alleviations of loans, kindness, or protection, to mitigate the compulsory character of the cultivation, with every allowance for the late rise in prices, for six consecutive bad seasons, for the failings of the Bengali character, for the imperfections of the law, and for the particular trials of the planter, the whole discloses a state of things greatly to be lamented, and requiring the earliest and most vigorous reform. In fact, violent individuals can only work such a system by oppression and ill-usage, and the best and most considerate can gain credit only by the fact of their having worked it, not merely without producing any open manifestation of discontent, but even with some appearance of contentment and satisfaction on the part of the ryots.

110. While thus condemning the system as it now exists in many places, we are anxious to give due weight to all the points which may be alleged in defence or extenuation. Doubtless the planters have, as a body, suffered much from bad seasons, and have not thought themselves in a position to afford liberal terms to the ryots. If they have pressed on the ryots, which we do not justify, they have themselves been under a pressure of circumstances, and in some cases have only been able to maintain their position. The administration of civil justice has been defective. The evils admitted to exist in the system of planting are not universal wherever indigo is grown, nor are the offences committed by the planters or their servants altogether peculiar to indigo. Some of the plant is grown on a fair system, though much is grown on a bad one; while in some districts discontent is rife, in others no complaint is made as yet.*

111. There are advances given under other systems and for the purchase of other kinds of produce on a large scale, and in the opium and salt monopolies there is a supervision exercised by the officials of Government, some of whom are not highly remunerated. It is quite possible that even in those systems, and under the closest superintendence, there may be fraud or extortion practised on the cultivators and manufacturers, though we have no direct evidence to this effect. We argue only from the general laws of native society. But take the case of opium; the regular adjustment of accounts, the refusal to allow the smallest item of bad balances to remain clogging the cultivator, the reluctance to allow careless cultivators to remain under engagements at all, and the perfect freedom freedom of the engagement, which is thrown up by any single ryot who finds the same no longer profitable; these are prominent discrepancies, which we cannot pass over. For many years, the poppy was the crop that paid the ryot best in Benares and Behar; and it gave higher returns to a larger number of ryots than probably indigo ever did, even in a prosperous season. As the returns from other crops crept up gradually to those of the poppy, there was seen the perfect freedom and fairness of the engagements into which the Behar cultivator had entered. The yearly licence to cultivate was not renewed; no questions were asked by the sub-deputy agent; and the course of a few years, more than* thirty thousand cultivators in the Behar agency threw up altogether the cultivation of the poppy. Seeing this, the Government, during the present year, considerably raised the price payable to the ryot. No one pretends that the same rise of prices has not been felt throughout Lower Bengal, during the same period, and probably owing to the same causes; nor does any one tell us, in all Bengal, whether any number of ryots, or if any how many, were allowed to abandon the production of indigo. The inference is plain; while the assamis of Behar and Benares have been free agents in their choice, the ryots of Bengal, from the causes already enumerated, have, practically, had no choice at all.

112. As regards the conduct of the police, it is not denied that up to this time, as a body, they are liable to the charge of venality and corruption, and there can be no question that indigo, like every agricultural or mercantile pursuit, may suffer from the want of a really good police. At the same time we observe that the police do not interfere, and are not authorised to interfere, in ordinary transactions between planter and ryot. No planter is either hindered or thwarted by the police, when he offers his advances, makes his engagements, or visits the lands. The cases in which the assistance of the police is most sought for, are when lands are said to be sown or occupied forcibly. And when this interference is asked for, there can be little doubt with which party the advantage will ordinarily be. The frankest admissions have been made before us by planters as to the way in which money is given to officers of the police to ensure their doing their duty, or to prevent them acting or reporting unfairly. When matters come to this, that the assistance or support of the police can be purchased, like any other article, it is quite clear that the advantage will remain with the party who has the freest hand and the fullest purse. And it is surely not contended that, in this respect, the planter is at a disadvantage with the ryot, or lies at his mercy.

113. On the other hand, some exceptions must be made to the universal venality of the police. The bare prospect of attaining the office of a deputy magistrate tends to keep a darogah honest. Some witnesses have been emboldened to declare, that even now, clean-handed, impartial, and intelligent darogahs are to be found. And we can have little doubt that the late raising the salaries of the subordinate grades will gradually attract a better class of natives, and ameliorate all ranks of the department.

114. As regards any special spite or dislike to indigo or indigo planters, on the part of the police, no evidence fully establishing this point has been laid before us. The darogah will naturally look to his immediate superior; and this leads us to consider the charges so often brought against the members of the covenanted and uncovenanted services, especially the former, that they favour the native zemindar and ryot, out of dislike to their countrymen, and with a view to keep them out of the country.

115. We are bound to state, that after inviting the freest communications on this head, we find the whole charge to fall to the ground. One magistrate, as we have remarked, threatened a large zemindar, during some disputes, with penal consequences if he did not make arrangements for giving a lease to a planter. Mr. Larmour, with two exceptions up to this year, has never received anything but "support and counsel" from members of the civil service. Mr. Clarke, even this year, has had nothing to complain of. Mr. Forlong, up to this year, "had received, in every instance, both friendly advice and aid from a magistrate that his official position warranted him in giving." Mr. De Dombal had only to complain of the conduct of one deputy magistrate. His explanation explanation was attended to, and since that time he has had "no cause of complaint." Other planters have not had any but the most trifling cases for some years. Putting, for the moment, the past season out of the question, there is no evidence to show in what the alleged dislike on the part of magistrates to planters consists, or by what course of policy, series of acts, or orders unfavourable to indigo, it has ever been manifested.

116. As regards the usual course of action taken by the executive authorities and by the police in disputes arising between planters and ryots, we have diligently perused the papers bearing on this point in the Selections from the Records of the Government of Bengal (No. 33), Part I., pages 140 to 207.

117. The style of order which is held to be unfavourable to the planters, and which they object to as showing a regard for the protection of the ryot, and excluding any consideration of the contract he may have entered into, is best illustrated by the following proceeding of the Honourable Ashley Eden, the magistrate of Baraset. The orders we allude to are the following:—"Since the ryots can sow on their lands whatever crop they like, no one can without their consent and by violence sow any other crop; ordered, therefore, that the original petition be sent to the deputy magistrate of Mitterhaut, in order that he may send policemen to the ryots' land to prevent any disturbances that are likely to ensue from any compulsory cultivation of their lands, and instruct them that, if the land is really that of the ryots, not to allow any one to interfere with it. If the ryots wish to sow indigo, or anything else, the policemen will see that there is no disturbance."

118. Now these orders are strictly in accordance with the law, which never intended that an executive authority, magistrate, or darogah, should prematurely decide on the fact of a contract; they were approved of by the Lieutenant Governor; and inasmuch as they were the subject of much comment at the time, and were considered unusual, we must naturally infer that contrary orders, more favourable to the planters, had usually been issued by other magistrates; the more so as we find that an able and experienced Commissioner, Mr. Grote, had disapproved of the above order, and had amended it by the introduction of a provision to the effect that, it was not the intention of the order "that police protection should be given to such ryots as had entered into engagements with the factory, and were now on any pretext holding back from their performance." If this has been the practice, as we understand and believe it to have been; if the planter in any part of the country (page 188) was in the habit of sending his own people with indigo seed to see that the ryot performed his part of the contract; and if any ryot who held back on pleas not examined into, nor capable of examination, was not deemed entitled to "police protection" (page 189), we do not see how such a practice and such orders could ever have been thought unfavourable to the interests of the planters. And, on this showing, namely, that the order of the joint magistrate of Baraset, though strictly legal, was of a novel kind, and not in accordance with the usual practice, it is impossible for us to pronounce that any unfairness or ill-will to planters was habitually shown by the authorities; on the contrary, their practice, as shown above, was favourable to the planters and hardly fair to the ryot.

119. So far from the charge of discountenancing and disliking the planters being true, we believe the facts to be that magistrates have not been sufficiently alive to the position of the ryots, and have not accorded to them a due share of protection and support. It is not too much to say, that had all magistrates held the scales in even balance, a cultivation of the character which we have clearly shown indigo to be, would not have gone on for such a length of time. The real truth we take to be that, if anything, the bias of the English magistrate has been unconsciously towards his countrymen, whom he has asked to his own table, or met in the hunting field, or whose houses he has personally visited. In any case, the supporters of a system which, with such defects, has been allowed to go on so long under the eyes of the authorities, have hardly a right to complain of unfair treatment.

120. We come now to the last point of our inquiry under the first great head, viz., the conduct of the missionaries, and the crisis of the past season. A great deal of indignation has been evinced at reverend gentlemen, whose errand is to proclaim peace and good will, taking on themselves the character of political tical agitators; certainly, if to express dislike of what they deem oppression, when forced on their notice, and to stand up for the rights of those who have had no tongue to plead for them, be to carry on agitation, the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society have done this. But, in so doing, they had no private interests to advance, and no political object to gain, except the contentment and well-being of the agricultural population; objects which, if political, any man, however sacred his calling, may fairly exert himself to forward.

121. That ryots should ask these gentlemen for advice, or even assistance, is, in our opinion, perfectly natural. They, the missionaries, are thoroughly conversant with the languages. They mix freely with the people. They hold converse with them on their highest interests, and they are not distracted, like other Europeans are seen to be, by the accumulation of business, by the speculations of commerce, or by the pursuit of trade. It would have been ungenerous and even unmanly for Mr. Blumhardt and his colleagues to turn a deaf ear to the complaints of such ryots, especially when these very complaints appeared to them to form some hindrance to the attainment of the avowed objects of the missionary calling.

A. 25. 19.

122. We have, too, the distinct denial of these reverend gentlemen, that they have, by words or deeds, added any fuel to the excitement. On the contrary, they have advised the ryots to obey the laws, to commit no illegalities, to sow indigo this year, and, if oppressed, to appeal to the higher authorities. What more Christian or straightforward course could have been taken by men in their situation, it is not easy to conceive. Indeed, the assertion that the refusal of the ryots to sow indigo has been produced by the preaching of missionaries, is one entirely without foundation of truth.

A. 783. 1007.

123. From the foregoing remarks, as well as from our study of the relations between ryot and planter, we have come to the deliberate conclusion that the late extensive refusal to sow, manifested by ryots in Nuddea and in other districts, might have been manifested at any time, on any opportunity. There was every element ripe and ready for such an outburst of popular feeling. The cultivation was virtually compulsory, in that no ryot could get free. The ryots, denied the opportunity of benefiting to the fullest extent by the generally increasing prosperity, suddenly discover that ideas spread abroad that Government had a direct interest in the manufacture of indigo, are unfounded; that it is quite optional with any man to take advances or to refuse them; that they are free agents; that no more force is to be used; and that in these respects the Government had decided to give them fair support. We must not be surprised if they proceed at once to act upon this discovery; nor is there anything to be wondered at if in their anxiety to complete their social freedom, they should sometimes have extracted that part of the orders and notifications which best suited their purpose, or sometimes wilfully misapprehended and misinterpreted their intent altogether, or even if they have exhibited a spirit of resistance, a determination, and a power to act together, in contrast to their previous condition of apathy and inability to help themselves.

A. 1413. 2525.

A. 2823.

124. Nor again have we any reason to believe that the discontent was generally fostered either by zemindars themselves resident on the spot, or by emissaries from Calcutta. Mr. Forlong thought, certainly, that his difficulties had been aggravated by two zemindars, but their influence was purely local; and Brindabun Sircar is said to have offered opposition. Several zemindars, however, have denied having instigated the ryots; one or two have suffered slightly themselves in the same way as the planters. Haranath Rai, of Nurrail in Jessore, has given such orders to his local agents as would lessen and not increase the difficulties of the factories. Mr. Hills assures us that he had friendly assistance tendered by two zemindars to whom he applied, one of whom was the said Haranath Rai. And we are of opinion that all zemindars are much too fearful of any general combination of ryots, as well as too jealous of any signs of independence as likely to affect themselves, to have given any secret impulse or instigation to the peasantry.

A. 2835.

A. 3118.

125. The editor of the "Hindoo Patriot," who has naturally taken a great interest in the crisis, has emphatically denied before us the truth of a rumour which charged him with having sent emissaries into the districts: and the

A. 3879.

British Indian Association repudiates any connexion with mooktyars or legal agents, who took up the ryots' cases under Act XI. of this year, and gave them legal advice.

126. But these agents, some of whom did proceed to Nuddea to take up cases on behalf of the ryots, acted in a perfectly legal, open, and fair way, and are a very different class of persons from the supposed agents of sedition.

A. 2821. 3071.

127. The strongest point of all against the existence of emissaries is, that no formal complaints against any individuals designated as such were ever brought to the notice of any of the officials of Nuddea. No planter could tell us the name of a single emissary supposed to have come from Calcutta. Once Mr. Larmour had heard that a person had come thence, and had lived in one of his villages, but the information was vague, and the name of this person, Ramdhun Biswas, has only been ascertained by Mr. Larmour, since he gave his deposition. A person named Mohesh Chatterjee, a man of some property, taxed with giving evil advice, proved to us that he had been down in Calcutta from March to July. In fact there is no real evidence to show that the ryots were acting at the bidding of stronger and more influential parties, or that they had combined together in villages, as they certainly did combine, under the guidance of any but the head ryots of each place, or with any ulterior political object than that of vindicating their own rights. It is quite true, however, that men of one village went to another village, keeping up the general excitement.

A. 2175.

A. 3072. 2831,
2832.

128. The village chowkidars no doubt sympathised with the movement; but these watchmen are not part of the regularly organized police. They are men of the same class and pursuits as the ryots, and such sympathy would be quite natural. In the opinion of the officials of Nuddea there was no general bias against indigo planting visible in the conduct of the darogahs. The joint magistrate of Damurhuda was not quite satisfied with their conduct, as inconsistent, but the magistrate had occasion to punish darogahs indifferently for favouring one party or the other.

129. The magistrates appear to us to have spared no personal exertions in the performance of their duties, and in the preservation of order. If their efforts during the sowing season were not crowned with complete success, allowance must be made for the changes which took place in the office of chief magistrate during the end of the last and the commencement of this year, and for the arrival in February of an officer entirely new to the district, at the time when the difficulties were daily increasing, and when the ryots were in a state of excitement. If these ryots rejoiced in new ideas of their position and rights, or in some cases acted under a sense of irritation or without forethought, this was just what might have been expected from an intelligent and excitable population suddenly roused from torpor to think and act for themselves.

130. In our opinion it is extremely unreasonable to attribute the sudden failure of an unsound system, which had grown up silently for years, to the officials or missionaries who told the people that they were free agents. If it could be said with truth that greased cartridges were only the proximate cause of a rebellion which had been silently gathering for years, it may be said with even more truth that written or spoken words widely circulated, and only pointing out to the ryot what was perfectly correct in all essentials, namely, that it was optional with them to take advances or to refuse them, to sow indigo or not to sow it, were only the proximate cause of the extensive refusal to cultivate during this season.

131. Besides, the dislike to this particular kind of cultivation was so strongly manifested, and appeared to be so deeply seated, that we could not mistake the reality of the feeling. It is not easy to possess those who have not witnessed the demeanour, and heard the language of the ryot, as we have done, with a just appreciation of this intense dislike. Ryots of different concerns, at miles distance from each other, have expressed to us the same idea in language, clear, emphatic, and pointed, and striking as coming from the mouths of persons in their rank of life, namely, that indigo and its attendant evils had been the bane of their lives. But we must observe that in no instance did we hear a single expression expression betokening ill-will to the authorities or to the Government of the country, nor, except as connected with the grievances of which they were actually complaining, did we trace any feeling of hatred against European planters either as a body or as individuals. The crisis which unhappily has overtaken the planters in 1860, was one, we may pronounce emphatically, which might have arisen in any one other year.

132. We have been thus particular in explaining our views as to the late crisis, because we have had every opportunity of forming a fair judgment, and because undue comments have been made on the conduct of others therewith connected, and much misapprehension is prevalent. Our object henceforth is to see what we can suggest in the way of anticipating such a crisis in the districts where indigo is still being cultivated without a change, or of re-establishing it amongst that part of the population which has recently evinced so pointed a dislike thereto.

133. This is the second chief head of our finding. We must premise, of course, that what we are about to say is only by way of suggestion and advice. It is not desirable, even were it possible, that the authority of Government should be exercised to fix the terms of contract between buyer and seller, manufacturer and producer, planter and ryot. But if we can point out some changes which are either recommended by the most experienced planters, or which commend themselves to our sense of justice and expediency, we feel that such changes, when sanctioned by an expression of the approval of Government, and backed by an enlightened public opinion here and in England, may be the means of preventing or obviating the disastrous consequences which inevitably follow when any system is subjected to sudden innovation or attack.

134. As a general rule, it is obvious that a sound and healthy system, in all commercial speculations, is one which rests on the basis of demand and supply; where the buyer or manufacturer makes a fair offer, and where the producer considers whether he can grow or supply the article at the price offered. In such a system both parties stand on their own footing, and take their due share of risk. There is nothing artificial, and there is no talk of concessions or indulgence or incidental advantages, which are to compensate the producer for spending his time and his labour on an article which, grown with much risk, may afford him very little remuneration. In this view, as a general principle, we could almost desire that all advances were abolished in every branch of trade, and that transactions were for cash and in open market. But as this consummation, however desirable, seems remote and improbable, we could next wish that indigo were contracted for in Bengal, as it is under the system described by Mr. J. O'B. Saunders, or in the way that cocoons are purchased for the silk filatures by the agency of paikars, or contractors, as expounded by the Rev. Mr. Hill, or under the system by which substantial khattadars agree to cultivate the poppy for Government. If buying from mere cultivators, who grow the plant as a speculation, be not possible, owing to the competition of rival concerns, or to the character of the people, we should certainly prefer a system in which the European manufacturer should look to a substantial contractor to grow so many bundles for him, or should take an influential gantidar or head ryot, corresponding to the khattadar of the poppy in Behar. Such a man would bind himself to deliver so many bundles of indigo, to be grown where and how he might choose, at the factory, within a given time, at a price to be agreed on between the parties, according to the state of the market. In such a bargain there would be none of the evils attendant on the ryotti system, where the capabilities of every agriculturist must be scrutinised by a planter anxious, naturally, to make the most of his area for cultivation.

135. Either of the above plans, it appears to us, would be free from serious causes of complaint. But if these be not possible, or not possible at this time, we should recommend the planters seriously to consider whether a system on the basis of that existent in Tirhoot be not feasible, that is, that the crop should be valued on the ground, and paid for according to an estimate, then and there made, and a classification of the crops.

136. We are not at all convinced that the cultivation in Tirhoot is the source of much profit to the ryot, or that it is not susceptible of amendment. But it has one merit; the general exclusion of bad balances of one year from the ryot's account of the next. Matters are wound up every season. The planter has two or three different prices put on the various kinds of crops, and even if the result be a total failure, the advances of three rupees a beegah are considered as the ryot's dues for the occupation of his land and for the labour of his bullocks. The obvious danger of such a system, if introduced into Bengal, would be the temptation to the ryot, who had received two rupees advances, to remain idle, or to cultivate rice and not indigo, or to evade his contract in some way. But we think this danger is easily avoided, wherever a really fine crop of indigo is sure to be paid for by the planter at a really remunerative price.

137. Failing the above three systems, we think nothing remains for us but to suggest improvements in the Bengal system as it stands.

138. We have then a strong conviction, first, that the form of contract should be of the simplest kind compatible with a due definition of the engagement and liability. Contracts for long periods should be avoided, and there should be a very strict annual adjustment of accounts. The indebtedness of the ryot, and his inevitable dislike to indigo, commence from the date when these obvious precautions are neglected. That it is quite possible to adjust complicated accounts yearly, and to have no bad balances, is evident from the deposition of Mr. Hollings, and from the letters of Mr. King, Mr. Pughe, and Mr. Wilson, sub-deputy opium agents, forwarded by the agents at Ghazipore and Patna, and given in the Appendix; as well as from the evidence of Mr. C. Chapman, on the salt manufacture. Care should be exercised in the bestowal of advances: if the wish of every needy cultivator, who fancies a few rupees without interest at a festive season, is hastily and carelessly gratified, the planter has no right to complain if eventually such parties prove unwilling or perfunctory cultivators. The contracts should be drawn out for twelve months, and there should be no renewal at the expiration, or even no encouragement to complete the cultivation within the term, unless the agriculturist had shown himself capable of meeting his engagements. If he prove a bad or unlucky cultivator, and likely to fall into heavy balances, the best thing that can be done is to get rid of him altogether, not to renew the contract, and then to proceed to recover the balances by process of law. This has been the regular practice in the opium agencies of Behar. In the cultivation of the poppy, the advances are given at three periods, and the second or third advance is not made until the previous ones have been worked off. Directly there is a tendency to carelessness or neglect, the advances are stopped, and means are taken to recover those already given out.

2d. The stamp paper should be provided and paid for by the factory. The ryot will then not be irritated by annually recurring charges; and the planter will not spend money unnecessarily in providing blank papers merely to be signed, and never to be filled up, nor to be used for any purpose except to hold in terrorem over the ryot. If in any factories stamps can be dispensed with altogether and the contract be purely verbal, each party relying on the good faith of the other of course we shall not regret such a result.

3d. That the selection of the land should be part of the agreement between the parties, and that wherever possible, the particular plot or piece should be specified in the contract, unless the planter should think fit to leave the selection of the land entirely to the ryot; also, that in measurements made by the planter to satisfy himself of the extent of land given up to indigo, the size of the beegah shall correspond, either to the Government beegah of 14,400 square feet, or to the local zemindary beegah. The present mode of selection of lands by the planter is a source of irritation and annoyance, so far as it may be made without consulting the ryot, or in opposition to his wishes. The ryot knows his own interest best, and if it be for his interest to cultivate indigo at all, it will equally be for his interest to cultivate it on good land, or at any rate on lands not unsuited for the plant. As regards the indigo beegah, which is larger than the local or than the Government beegah, the double standard, as matter of principle, we cannot defend. It may be convenient to the factories to

to have one uniform standard for indigo all over the district, but when this standard is, in any particular locality, brought into juxtaposition with another standard, it becomes difficult to justify it. As a matter of practice, it is annoying and vexatious to the ryots, who have made it one of their staple complaints. It is not a sufficient answer to such complaints that the practice is one of long standing, or that the ryot was aware of the distinction when he entered into the contract. No man likes to pay his rent by one measurement, and to give a crop by another and a larger one.

Nor, in practice, do we anticipate any difficulties in the change. It is pleaded for the planter that where the concern holds lands in two or three pergunnahs, it has already two or three standards for rent or zemindary measurement. The answer to this is plain. No ryot will complain if rent and indigo are taken from him by the same uniform standard, or if the planter's beegah is less than that of the zemindar; what the ryot complains of is, the double standard in one and the same village. Let, then, the planter measure his indigo by the Government standard, or by the lowest known zemindary standard where there are more than one, or at least let him never exceed the local pergunnah standard. In the latter case there will be no additional difficulty or variety. A planter collecting or assessing rent in three pergunnahs has three local standards, and he will have no more when he assimilates the indigo standard to that of each pergunnah or zemindary.

4th. That the expense of delivering the plant, whether by cart or boat, should be borne by the factory, and not by the ryot. In some factories this is the case already, and where it is not, we have seen the item of carting yearly added to the debt of the ryot, and swelling his account. If the servants of the factory have not the time, or are not numerous enough to convey the plant from each field to the factory, the ryot should be invited to perform the work for cash payments, like any other.

5th. That means should be taken to ensure a fair measurement, or account of the plant delivered by the ryot. If the plant cannot be weighed, though weighment is the practice followed in the North-West Provinces, nor every bundle measured, then such a standard estimate of size or space should be agreed on as will be just to both parties, and capable of being formed during all the bustle of manufacture, with certainty and rapidity.

6th. That the ryot should be charged nothing for seed. The seed might be considered the planter's risk. We freely admit that hitherto, whether the planter has paid for seed at 4 rupees a maund, or at 40 rupees, he has not usually charged the ryot more than from four to eight annas a beegah for the same. But we are anxious to clear the ryot's account of all small additions, which are either used as a means of extortion or annoyance by the factory servants, or which tend to complicate the transaction; and we had rather see the matter reduced to a single offer by the planter to purchase plant, at a fair price, the ryot taking the chances of the seasons and the labour of cultivation, and the planter standing all the additional or incidental items of expenditure of every description.

7th. That the ryot shall be left to sow a cold weather crop after the indigo, or to allow the stumps to shoot up for seed, as they often do in favourable localities, whichever he may choose. If he prefers the latter, then he should be at liberty to sell the seed so produced in the open market, instead of being bound to deliver it, as hitherto, to the factory, at four rupees per maund. During these last three years this practice has inflicted on the ryot a loss of from three to nearly ten times the value, though in previous years, when seed was cheap, it may have been to him a positive gain. The production of the plant and the production of the crop of seed from the same roots, are operations which, however consecutive, are and ought not to be considered as one in the original engagement.

8th. That the accounts for rent due from the ryots, and the accounts for indigo with the same persons should be kept separate wherever this may be practicable. This is already done in Mulnath, and we are aware of no reason, except the additional expense, why this plan should not be generally adopted.

There would be advantages in this which could be set against the cost of two establishments, the one for rent, and the other for indigo.

139. The above recommendations can be clearly defined, and are not liable to the charge of vagueness; nearly all have the support of some of the best planters; we are unanimous in recommending them for the general approval of the Government; because we think that changes which have that sanction, and which are endorsed, as we trust they will be, by the public, may be rendered easily capable of adoption in Bengal through the efforts of those planters who may be expected to take the lead in any reform.

140. As regards the actual price to be given for the bundles, we apprehend that it is better not to suggest or say anything. Our former suggestions apply to visible or tangible defects. But the value of a thing to be produced had better be settled by the two parties interested in the contract, who are the best judges of their mutual convenience and advantage, and of the state of the market.

141. In a general way, we also think ourselves justified in recommending to the whole body of planters to exercise a strict supervision over their own servants; to raise their salaries, when possible, so as to place them above the grosser forms of temptation to extortion, and to afford all ryots, labourers, or persons having occasional business at the factory, sure and speedy means of redress. These are truisms, but we do not feel certain that it is not to their partial neglect that a great deal of the virulent dislike and stubborn recusancy lately evinced by the ryot is owing.

142. We now come to the last head of our inquiry, viz., the changes in the relation between the planters and ryots, or other holders of lands, which can be carried out by legislative or executive authority. Under this head the following points have had our closest attention:

1. The vesting planters or zemindars with the powers of honorary magistrates.
2. The establishment of more sub-divisions.
3. The reform of the police and the security of property.
4. The working of the civil courts.
5. Act X. of 1859.
6. The appointment of a special commissioner.
7. The law for breaches of contract.

143. As regards the appointment of managers of factories to be honorary magistrates, we have no reason to suppose that such of the planters as were vested with these powers generally abused them during their incumbency; but the subject has been brought to our notice by two instances in which the planter had to deal officially with cases at a time when he had his own interests to promote, and in which the results were not satisfactory. We mean the cases of Amir Mullik and the Mittras of Goaltally. The latter case has been already explained. The former person, it is shown, complained to the magistrate against the act of a planter, then honorary magistrate, but thought it useless to prosecute his complaint when he found it was forwarded to that very planter for report. Whether injustice was committed or not, it seems clear that the complainant had no hope of a hearing. The feeling of the people, too, generally was against the measure. Such a measure may be regarded as affecting those principles on which the country is usually governed, and also as it meets with the wishes of the population. As a question of principle, there can be no doubt that the measure is not in accordance with the rule hitherto observed in Bengal, of keeping official functions and executive management rigidly distinct from all agricultural and mercantile pursuits. Magistrates and judges have not been permitted to hold lands in districts to which they stand appointed, to collect rents, and to have an interest therein, or to manufacture produce; and judicial functions, before 1857, were never conferred on gentlemen engaged in any of the above pursuits.

144. We are well aware that in 1857 the measure was tried on the grounds of political urgency, and we know that the same attempt is now being made, and with some success, in other parts of India. But in the present state of the people of Bengal Proper we entertain grave doubts whether the measure, however admirably it may work elsewhere, is at all a suitable one. Any person conversant with the complicated, and, in some respects, the civilised relations of social existence in Bengal, can easily discern that we have got far beyond the patriarchal epoch. On the other hand, we have not advanced to that stage which in many countries, as for instance in England, justify the vesting of landholders with these same powers. The ryots, we are informed by some of the missionaries, looked on the investment of planters at the time with these functions with undisguised apprehension, and they are quite intelligent enough to understand that unofficial Europeans should not have judicial powers, or decide cases in the result of which they may be concerned, or which they may use as precedents in their future dealings with the population. It is true that many planters now hold open courts, not sanctioned by law, and find them crowded with complainants, but these men resort thither to settle petty disputes with each other, or to complain to the manager regarding one of the native servants; and the whole advantage of such tribunals, which are often unobjectionable, and even praiseworthy, is lost, when the free will of the litigants is no longer considered, and when the manager and his assistants can legally either threaten or compel. The relations of planter to ryot, as disclosed by the evidence before us, are not satisfactory; but they would have been much more unsatisfactory had planters still been vested with powers of magistrates at a time when the dislike of the ryots was broadly shown.
and

A. 898. 1628.

145. The remedy for the evils which the appointment of honorary magistrates was intended to obviate is simple. Let sub-divisions and magistrates be multiplied as the Executive Government may think fit. It is the distance of our courts which has made the ryot unwilling to complain, and which has furnished the planter with an excuse for taking the law into his own hands. We are ready to admit that sub-divisions have been multiplied, and it is to their frequency, in the district of Baraset especially, that Mr. Eden traces something of the keenness with which the ryots have stood on their own rights. But we should wish to see such tribunals permanently established, not only at such places as Damurhuda and Bongong, but wherever else expediency may suggest; these sub-divisions to be presided equally over by native and European officers. The planters, who really know their own interests best, are well aware that the establishment of a sub-division in the neighbourhood of a factory will not, in the end, unsettle the relations between the planter and the ryots and the holders of lands. It is in these measures, and not in any incompatible union of conflicting duties and interests, that lies the true remedy for inability to find redress, or for acts of lawlessness and oppression.

A. 3629.

A. 2272. 2275

146. As regards the police, we have little to add to our former remarks. A reform of corruption so long discussed, and so fully laid bare, must be a work of time. But as far as the actual security of life and property goes, we have the testimony of planters that where Europeans are concerned life has hitherto been secure, the factory buildings and property have been unmolested, and the crops and premises usually inviolate. The great cause of complaint is, that even the higher officers of the police cannot always be relied on to write a just report of a local dispute, to show correctly the boundaries of a plot of ground, or to give effect to the instructions of the magistrate, without being feed. Better pay will, we trust, attract the higher and educated class of natives, and a closer supervision by more numerous European officers will probably ameliorate these defects. Gradually, too, the lower grades may feel the influence of better officers over them. But we should wish to see the police brought into a state of organisation and efficiency, and adequate to suppress outrages and illegalities of all kinds by whomsoever perpetrated.

A. 1488. 2052.

147. As regards the working of the new code of civil procedure we have the opinion of some planters that it has already shortened delay. Previous to the passing of this code, the great delay of the law was a just cause of complaint, and we have no doubt that planters were deterred by the expense and delay from seeking redress in a proper manner. We have examined Mr. Lautour, a judge of large experience, on this particular head, and it will be seen from his opinion that if the moonsiffs are not overburdened, and can keep their files clear, the procedure may be expected to work almost like that of a small cause court. That such a desirable result can be effected we have no reason to doubt; and if so, the planters will have a speedy means of recovering their just dues and establishing their rights in all cases where real property is not involved, or an hereditary succession is not disputed. A glance at the code will show this. Suppose one person to sue another for debt, for breach of simple contract, or for damages done to crops, it is clear that under the new code the plaintiff, describing the cause and origin of the action, and the remedy prayed for, can be comprised in a few lines. The defendant is not called on to put in any written defence; he is even forbidden to do so; his answer, which in many instances would be a simple denial, is to be collated from his own lips or from those of his counsel, by the presiding judge. No local investigation can be necessary in such a case, and as soon as the witnesses of the parties can be brought into court, the case may be heard and decided, and execution may follow a decree. It is perhaps too much to expect that all cause of complaint, and all delay, should be at once removed by the new procedure; but if the above provisions are honestly worked by competent judges, not overburdened with arrears, and if the appellate courts have leisure to take up appeals as they become ripe for decision, it is quite clear that suits, other than suits for real property, may become as summary as the nature of things will allow, or as the most eager suitor could wish.

148. That the new code should be so worked by a full complement of moon-siffs, who would try the bulk of such cases, is matter for the consideration of the Executive Government in communication with the Sudder Court.

A. 1545. 1558,
1559.

149. As regards the law usually known as the Rent Bill, or Act X. of 1859, we have thought it necessary to take full evidence on its bearing and application, though it affects the European, not as manufacturer of produce, but, in common with so many natives, as collector of rents and zemindar.

A. 1551. 1558.
2593, 2594.

150. We have the opinion of two very experienced revenue officers, Mr. Grote and Mr. Reily, that this law does not originate any violent change in the actual tenure of real property in Bengal: the law, in fact, supplies the deficiency, and completes the intention of the old Regulations of 1793. It merely consolidates and strengthens the rights and interests in the land which many tenants have always possessed, which the old laws admitted him to possess, but which were imperfectly protected and liable to be obliterated by any powerful or encroaching neighbour. At the same time we admit that while the common law of the country regards certain classes of the ryots as having rights in the soil above those of mere occupany, and while the late Act has merely strengthened those rights, certain sections are regarded by many parties as having conferred on the tenants new rights altogether, and as having withdrawn from the zemindar rights and privileges which, in virtue of his station and his liabilities, he had most properly enjoyed. Such are Sections IV., VI. and XI.

A. 3769.

151. As regards the first of these, it has been shown by Baboo Prosonno Kumar Tagore, that this section merely explains the presumption of the law. The law will henceforth presume a fixed rent to have been paid from the perpetual settlement on proof of payment at the same rate by the ryot for a period of twenty years, and it will throw on the zemindar the burden of proving the contrary, which, when he has a good case, he ought to be well able to do.

A. 2947.

152. Section VI. gives the ryot a right of occupancy after twelve years, and prevents those violent ejections so often made at the caprice of the landholder. With some diffidence we venture to suggest that this particular section may be too favourable to mere squatters; and not so much protecting rights as creating incumbrances, may operate to the prejudice of the zemindar. This, however, will hardly happen if the zemindar gives a fair share of personal attendance to the management of his property.

153. But the great ground of complaint is Section XI. which withdraws from zemindars the power of compelling the attendance of their tenants for the adjustment of their rents, or for any other purpose.

154. Large

154. Large and influential zemindars acknowledge that hitherto this section has been little or partially felt to their disadvantage in practice, either because the ryots are unaware of its existence, or because the custom of summoning ryots to the village or zemindary cutcherry to settle about rents is still continued, though no actual compulsion can or should follow the summons. But several gentlemen prophesy ruin or difficulty to the smaller talookdars, to whom this power of compulsory procuring the attendance of ryots was absolutely necessary for the realization of rents. The ryots, it is urged, will not attend on a mere summons, which cannot be enforced, and there will remain no remedy but a summary suit, which, however cheap and easy of working in an isolated instance, would be a costly remedy against a whole village of cultivators, obstinately leagued together to refuse payment.

A. 2034. 3770.

A. 2260. 2944.
3036.

155. Some of these anticipations may be visionary, and rents may be collected on a mere summons as hitherto without much difficulty. And the Act gives ample powers of distraint to the zemindar, while three years' rent can be sued for in the collectorate instead of the yearly rent only, as under the former law, back rent being then only recoverable by civil suits; still, considerable apprehension has been felt about this section; to a certain extent, it raises up a barrier between zemindar and ryot, and it is a change in the practice of more than 60 years, though it has been shown that under cloak of the summons great abuses were constantly perpetrated.

A. 2596.

156. We consider, however, that this valuable and comprehensive Act was passed after a very full and protracted discussion. Many persons were consulted on its provisions. It has not been much more than a year in operation. Without question it assures to the neglected tenants of Bengal the undisturbed possession of their ancient rights, wherever such have not been wholly effaced. Looking to these facts, we are not prepared to make any recommendation in favour of any change in the Act; but considering the scope, object, and fulness of our inquiry, and the weight due to testimony on this head, we think ourselves justified in pointing out to his Honor, that if ever any practical inconvenience should arise from any portion of the law, as regards the punctual collection of rents, the payment of the revenue, and the consequent security of landed property, it is likely to arise in connection with this Section XI., and we would respectfully suggest that the working of this Section and of Section VI. should be very carefully watched. And if there should be any difficulty in the realization of rents, we should hope that, as the power compelling the attendance of tenants has been withdrawn, every assistance may be given to landholders by supplying them with a sufficient number of officers to try such cases with celerity.

157. More or less than this we do not feel warranted in saying, considering how the question of rents has naturally engaged our attention in connection with the general position and landed influence of planters.

158. As regards the appointment of an officer to be designated Special Commissioner, and the proposal that this person should have under him one or two deputies to be stationed in each large indigo district, we understand the intent to be that the Special Commissioner should, in the present season especially, endeavour to mediate between planters and ryots, and should continue to visit different districts, reporting on the condition of the factories, putting down oppression by his authority, and establishing the relations between the two parties on a proper footing, as far as this can be done by advice and persuasion. The deputies or subordinates would be stationed at suitable places, and would exercise fiscal, criminal, and civil powers, trying all cases in which planters and ryots, or planters and zemindars, are concerned.

159. As regards the vesting of the deputies with any such triple and exclusive jurisdiction, the majority of the Commission see no necessity for such a measure. No reason has been shown for taking these cases out of the jurisdiction of the ordinary tribunals. The vesting of one individual with this extensive and often conflicting jurisdiction is quite opposed to the principles on which the Government of Bengal is conducted. The cases proposed to be tried can be better tried severally by the sub-divisional officer, by the collector, and by the moonsiff, each in his proper sphere. At present the civil court is too often the remedy for inquiries caused by the orders of the magistrate, or by a decision of the revenue authorities. By the proposed arrangement one officer would be a magistrate, collector, and civil judge. This union, we are sure, would be distasteful to both zemindars and ryots, and we are not certain whether it would be acceptable to all the planters.

160. Again, the Special Commissioner would scarcely find time to give to all the concerns and factories existing in Bengal anything but a cursory inspection, and yet it is to him that all managers and proprietors in difficulties would look. Authority to fine for irregularities and small offences would be powerless, the majority think, to check any regular and organised system of compulsory cultivation; and if armed with only this power we do not see how the special commissioner could effect more in the way of doing justice in small offences than an ordinary magistrate. Then there would be difficulties for other parties arising out of a special or exclusive jurisdiction. The ryots might be perplexed as to whom they should apply for redress; to the regular magistrate, or to the deputy armed with triple powers; and if jurisdiction in cases relating to indigo be practically taken out of the hands of the chief executive authority of a district, it is obvious that in a district where there are many factories half the occupation of such an official would cease. Again, for the supervision of the chief magistrate, and for redress against any of his acts, there is now the office of the regular commissioner of division. An officer of experience and ability in this situation, with three or four districts under him, would be more likely, the majority think, to give redress to either party, than a single commissioner for 10, or 12, or 20 districts. The ryots would see a Government official making periodical visits, and would have but little time to make their grievances known, and on seeing or hearing of this special commissioner at intervals they might be apt to fancy justice more remote than ever.

161. As regards any difficulties apprehended for the approaching cold weather we think that such may best be avoided or encountered if the planters will meet the ryots on fair and even liberal terms; and we are quite sure that the local and divisional authorities will not be wanting in such legitimate advice, support, and mediation, as they may give, consistently with their duty and impartiality, to gentlemen whose material interests may be in jeopardy, and whose losses every Englishman would regret. More than this we do not think that even a proposed special commissioner could be expected to do.

162. It should be remembered, too, the majority suggest, that the word "factory" in common use in this country, might be apt to mislead those who are practically unacquainted with the real relations between those who grow and those who manufacture the plant. For it is incorrect to designate the present contest as one between capital and labour. Such a term might be used with the greatest propriety, to describe a strike of coolies, carters, boatmen, or native workmen of any kind, for higher wages. But it cannot be correctly used to designate the relations between the planter who possesses a large ryotti cultivation, and the ryots who contract with him in the manner and for the objects explained in this Report, to carry on that cultivation for his benefit. If a factory in Bengal were like a cotton factory in Manchester, in which a large swarm of workmen were employed at weekly wages by a mill owner, or like a Government school or jail, within the walls of which several hundred men, or boys, or girls, were daily assembled for work, it would be easy to understand that a commissioner, rapidly visiting each building in succession might hear complaints, ascertain whether the hours of work were not exceeded, and whether the workmen were regularly paid, and might act as a powerful check to abuses. But the business of a special commissioner or his deputy in executive matters would not consist in this kind of work, and unless the official were residing at each factory when advances or excess payments were made, which would be impossible, he would be little likely to arrive at the truth. To be of any service, he should spend days amongst the villages; watch the behaviour of the lower order of factory servants; follow the course of agricultural operations; and hear complaints from talookdars and cultivators of the soil. We hope to see such a system established between ryot and planter as would render this minute inquisition unnecessary; and less than such a close and almost impracticable supervision we do not think would be of any real use.

163. For

163. For the above reasons, the majority* are unable to recommend the appointment of a special commissioner, or of a special class of officers, with powers different to those exercised by the ordinary tribunals and authorities, for the settlement of indigo disputes. We think that the want which that office is intended to supply would be better met anywhere by more numerous subdivisions, a well-organised police, and an active executive officer at the head of the whole of the district.

*President, Mr. Sale, Baboo C. M. Chatterjee.

164. We now come to the last point of consideration, viz., whether the interests of the planter imperatively demand a special protection, worked by summary process, such as is not accorded to any other branch of industry or trade. We here beg briefly to draw attention to the two laws in our code, in which the subject of indigo is specially mentioned; and what follows is the opinion of the same majority.

165. Regulation VI. of 1823 was designed to protect a person who had advanced indigo seed or capital only, for the expenses of cultivation on a "defined parcel of land;" and by that law such a person was considered to possess a lien and interest in the land, and was declared entitled to avail himself of a certain process for the protection of his interests. Under the provisions of this law, a planter who had reason to believe that an individual was about to evade his contract, by making away with the produce, was to apply to the zillah judge, filing the deed of engagement, and the judge, after a summary enquiry with certain formalities, was to decree the crop to the plaintiff, who was held liable, in such a case, for the rent of the land. In some cases the judge might order the ripe crop to be cut, pending the enquiry.

166. Whether it is that indigo is not usually grown on "land of certain defined limits," as contemplated by the law, or from ignorance, or from a cause of action not unusually arising in this way, or from any other reason, this law, to the best of our belief, is very rarely, if ever, resorted to.

167. The only other law referring to indigo is Regulation V. of 1830. The portions of this law by which persons who induced ryots to break their contract, or cultivators who failed to fulfil their engagements, were liable to imprisonment, were repealed by Act X. of 1836. Nothing remains of this law, but the section by which the wilful damage of indigo plant is punishable by fine and imprisonment, at the complaint either of the ryot or the manufacturer; and another section, which allows persons, who wish to settle their accounts and to be released from their engagements, to apply to the judge for a summary inquiry and adjustment.

168. The first provision may be considered as partly superseded by the law against cattle trespass, and to the second very little recourse has ever been had by the parties interested, namely, the ryots.

169. The re-enactment of the repealed provisions of this law has been urged, and this is what we have now to consider.

170. The summary law of this year, was, in fact, the law of 1830 revived.

171. The main arguments for the manufacturer, who makes the advances, as we understand them, are, that the ryot takes advances willingly, but that at the bad advice or instigation of third parties, or from his own faithlessness and indolence, he refuses to work them out and to fulfil his engagements; that indigo requires to be sown within a very short time after the first fall of rain, failing which, the season is lost; that the ordinary process of the civil courts is inoperative and powerless to compel specific performance if prayed for; that specific performance, and not damages for breach of contract, is the one thing which the planter requires; that a large sum is often spent in advances, and that the planter having done his part in making them, may lawfully call on the legislature and the authorities to compel the cultivator to perform his; that a great amount of capital is embarked in, and a deal of skill and energy devoted to, the manufacture of this produce; and that, with advertence to the precariousness of the crop, the amount at stake, the isolation and helplessness of the European, and the faithlessness of the native, a stringent and summary process is imperatively demanded for the enforcement of indigo contracts.

172. In support of this view, the following laws are quoted: Act VII. of 1819, Act XIII. of 1859, and Act IX. of 1860. We shall briefly note the scope and object of these enactments. The first law is applicable only to domestic servants and workmen in the interior of the country, who engage to serve for any fixed term, or to perform any specific service, and who, for wilful neglect, are punishable by imprisonment as for a misdemeanour.

173. The second law is intended to protect manufacturers, tradesmen, and others in the Presidency towns, from fraudulent breach of contract by artificers, workmen, and labourers; and by it, the latter who have received advances, which they will not work out, are either compelled to perform their engagements, or are liable to three months' imprisonment. And the third law renders workmen who, without reasonable excuse refuse to perform work stipulated for on any railway, canal, or other public work, liable to fine or even to imprisonment, in the event of their similarly refusing specific performance.

* Burns' Justice,
vol. p. 867, and following.

174. Still further, we have referred to the several English laws, whereby servants retained for husbandry, are not permitted to leave one service for another, without a testimonial equivalent to a permission, under pain of imprisonment; labourers are bound to continue at work between certain hours under penalty of loss of wages, and, in harvest time, under penalty of being committed to the house of correction; artificers are compelled to finish the repairs of buildings under a similar penalty of imprisonment; and, finally, husbandmen, handicraftsmen, colliers, potters, calico printers and some others, are liable, for non-performance of contract, to loss of wages and to imprisonment in the house of correction.

175. It appears to us, however, that the above cases are not strictly analogous to those of planter and ryot; or, correctly speaking, to those of the European who establishes a factory and makes advances for the growth of the plant, and of the cultivator or ryot, who takes the money, and grows the indigo by his own labour on his own lands. As far as we are aware, in all the instances for which the law, both in India and in England, has provided a summary remedy, the party exposed to loss or injury is owner of the actual property, for which work is required, as well as capitalist and manufacturer; or else a great public undertaking may be impeded or injured by the contumacy or neglect of parties to work, while the defaulting party causes the loss by the mere wilful neglect to give his own labour to the benefit of his employer; and the reason for threatening such defaulters with imprisonment is, that labourers and workmen are seldom possessed of property, and must therefore pay in their persons for wilful default. But the ryot has fair means out of which a decree for damages can be satisfied. This has been proved abundantly by the suits for damages brought under Act XI. of this year. Out of 60,880 rupees assessed as damages in Nuddea, above 31,225 rupees, or more than 3,100 $\frac{1}{2}$ %, were paid up by the ryots within a few days of the decrees. In Jessore 157 men paid up 6,226 rupees, or 622 $\frac{1}{2}$ %, within a few days. It can scarcely be argued that parties of such substance, failing in their contract, cannot be reached by the law; and if the attempt to enforce such debts has not been made hitherto, we must ascribe it not merely to the delay and difficulty of a regular suit, but to the desire of the planters to keep up the full number of cultivating ryots. Again, the ryot who cultivates indigo, gives far beyond mere labour; he gives his capital in the shape of his own plough and his own bullocks, and he commits the seed, which he receives from the planter, and for which he is charged with payment, after due agricultural preparation, to his own land. Viewed then in this light, the conditions are not similar, and the analogy fails. But we do not wish to consider such a question by the comparatively restricted ground of analogy. If it could be proved that the manufacturer lay at a manifest disadvantage, and at the mercy of the ryot; that all contracts being freely entered into were afterwards shamefully and deceitfully evaded, either at the instigation of third parties, or by the habitual faithlessness of the ryot; and that in this way, large sums of money were annually lost to the planter, and the regular production of a great staple exposed to peril and uncertainty, we might perhaps feel ourselves called on to consider what additional security it would be just and expedient to grant to men engaged in such enterprises.

176. Looking

176. Looking at the subject from this point of view, we admit that the indigo crop is precarious, and that most of it must be sown in spring, so as to come to maturity within from 90 to 100 days. If, then, the ryot refuses to perform his contract only at the actual period of sowing, the planter loses his expectation of a valuable crop, and can only look to recover his advances with damages. But these facts are, we think, the only ones the planter can bring forward as the basis of any special remedy, such as it is not in the power of the ordinary tribunals to give, and even to these facts other arguments can be opposed. It is not proved to us, that in other and similar transactions the native of Bengal is more than usually dishonest. Large advances are made for silk, hides, and jute; much money, or the equivalent of money, is advanced in the way of loans on the security of the crop; for this we hold to be the real nature of the transaction between mahajan and ryot; and we are not aware of dealers complaining generally of the dishonesty of the contracting parties, or claiming that some special law should be enacted in their favour. On the contrary, several witnesses, Mr. Morrell, Mr. S. Hill, Mr. Eden, Baboo Joykissen Mookerji, and Mr. A. Forbes, have mentioned facts, or given evidence which prove fair dealing on the part of ryots and other classes of natives in matters profitable to them. One inference which we draw from this is, that the sale of hides, and the raising of jute and ordinary rice crops, are profitable to the parties who supply these articles; and as to the ordinary mahajani dealings, it suits the ryots to borrow money or grain to eat at a season of the year when the market is tight, and to repay the loan after the gathering in of the harvest. It is true, that on behalf of the planters it is denied that they demand special legislation; these gentlemen holding that all evasions or breaches of contract of whatever kind, should be punished as misdemeanours, as only fair to all commercial enterprise. In this, we think, that such arguments are merely pushed to their utmost logical consequence and conclusion. The position being taken up that indigo requires protection, it is natural to add that not only indigo, but every kind of mercantile speculation is liable to the same fluctuations, is exposed to the same chances of fraud and dishonesty, and naturally demands the same prompt remedy.

A. 1732. 2442.
2615, 2616. 3964.

A. 2200.

177. Now, as it is an undeniable fact that a vast deal of money changes hands annually in the course of transactions with regard to country produce; and as the parties mainly interested are, as far as we know, not anxious for any special law, or ever complain that the courts, should they have occasion to resort there, do not give adequate protection, we cannot think that, for the sake of apparent logical consistency, it would be expedient to demand from the Legislature a summary remedy to be applied to all mercantile transactions where money is advanced by one party for the purchase of produce. The claims of the indigo planters, if any, are special, and must be considered as such.

178. Then, when a recommendation for a special law is pressed on us, on grounds which seriously affect the planter and him alone, we cannot avoid considering how such special laws have been found to work hitherto. The law of 1830, Regulation V., was repealed because it was thought manifestly unfair to one party, and since the date of its repeal in 1836, the planters, for whose benefit it was enacted, have largely added to their territorial possessions and influence, and are, we think, in a more independent position than before. Indeed, Mr. Larmour (A. 2257) allows that zemindary influence has hitherto been quite sufficient to induce his ryots to sow without their signing contracts, though it is still necessary to make advances to such ryots. But the question naturally may be asked why, where the concern has landed interests and consequent influence, should it be necessary to make advances at all, or why should not the advances be made by instalments, due care being taken that the cultivation of the land is proceeding? Also, when we consider the working of the law for breach of contract, passed in the spring of this year, we are unable to pronounce it at all satisfactory. Unless we are greatly misinformed, the hope and intention of the Legislature was, that the law would act as an inducement to the ryot to sow as in former years, and that its stringent provisions would be rarely put in force. But the result, unhappily, has not borne out these expectations. In one district the ryots have been induced to sow, as we gather from official papers duly placed before us, by the management and decided course adopted by the local authorities in aid of the summary law. But, in another, ryots have preferred dstraint and apparent ruin, and even the gaol, to a continuation of their cultivation. It is true that many of these unfortunate persons, through wilfulness or carelessness, have mistaken the object of the Act, have imagined that it was a mere threat, or that, instead of the suits turning on the point of cash advances given and received, there would be a regular adjustment of past accounts on both sides, by which they would be entitled to receive money, instead of being found in debt to the factory. But the results, however caused, are such as make us shrink from recommending any continuance of the summary law in its present or even in an amended form. There is either reluctance, or the most clear and avowed dislike to indigo: the operation of the law has inflicted heavy loss on scores of families; those who have suffered its operations, and those who have not, have, in language not to be mistaken, declared before us their unalterable determination not to sow any more. And we have felt it our duty to point out, in the system of planting, sundry defects which must be removed before we can pronounce that both parties stand on an equal footing. Besides, even if we were disposed to recommend a summary law, we should think it necessary to point out that such a measure this year might really be prejudicial to the very interests which it was intended to serve. No such summary law, we should suppose, could be made to apply to the advances of past years. It would apply to advances to be taken in future, and it would, no doubt, be thought proper clearly to explain to all ryots the penal consequences of taking advances and not fulfilling a contract. Now, if this were done, as we suppose it would be, and the ryots were told that imprisonment in the criminal gaol would be likely to follow any breach of engagement on their part, we are morally certain that, from the temper of the ryots, few persons would be found to come forward and enter into such contracts at all. While matters are in this state of uncertainty and transition, and the minds of the agricultural population are under the influence of fear and discontent, or are completely unsettled, we cannot reconcile it to our consciences to recommend any special and summary legislation of any kind, so manifestly in favour of one party, as such a law would be, even though it were purposed to give security to ryots by making advances not recoverable under any contract of more than a year's duration, or unless the planter sue within a twelvemonth; on the contrary, we object to any laws which fetter one party or the other, and we do not wish to see the period within which a person may sue for debts, damages, or breach of contract, reduced below that at which the late law of limitation has fixed it.*

179. As to what might be expedient in future years, we have come to the conclusion that were a new, sound, impartial, and healthy arrangement established, a necessity for any special law would hardly be felt. If either the system of buying in the open market, or that of contracting only with substantial parties, or that of offering a fair price for the crop, were fairly started, parties engaging for the supply of plant would find the contract so much to their advantage, as to have little reason to be tempted to evade or break it. It would even be possible, we think, so to reform and simplify the existing Bengal system, in the manner pointed out by us, that the ryot should become a free agent, and look to derive the profit from indigo, which he can derive from any other crop. Should prices of other products fall, and the defects of the system be eradicated, we see no reason why the ryot and the planter should not meet on fair terms, no compulsion being exerted on one hand, no subterfuges employed on the other, and no special law or protection being necessary for either party. We must add our earnest hope, on behalf of the planters and the valuable property which they hold or manage, that such happy results may not long be delayed. But as the case now stands, we hold the complete reform of the system to be imperative as the first object, and a reformed and healthy system requires no special law. Mr. Hollings (A. 2719) informs us that he has never had recourse to proceedings by which balances may be recovered summarily from the cultivators of the poppy.

180. We

* While these sheets are passing through the press, letters are still being constantly received by the Head of the Commission, from ryots in more distant zillahs, praying for inquiry and relief.

180. We may doubt, too, whether in the event of a ryot or a body of ryots who had taken advances suddenly refusing to sow at the critical moment, it would always be possible to apply even a summary law to the case in such a way as would enforce specific performance within a brief time. However summary the process, there must be some kind of judicial investigation; the engagement or the receipt of the cash advances, with the evidence for or against these statements, must be regularly put in issue, whether the officer trying the case be a civil judge or a criminal magistrate, and whether the result of a decision be civil damages and costs, or imprisonment as for a misdemeanour. For such a trial a little time is requisite, but we have no wish to see any proceedings in any court whatever more lengthy, or less summary than the ascertainment of truth and the interests of justice demand.

181. It has also been suggested by some gentlemen of great weight and experience, that a summary law would be unobjectionable and even expedient, were no engagement brought under it unless previously registered before a competent officer. Registration of this kind may be attractive in theory, but there appear to us powerful objections of practice and detail to the plan. There is a paucity of officers, though this might be remedied by the appointment of every moonsiff and every person in charge of a subdivision, as registrars of deeds. We hardly think that such registration could be entrusted to the Pergunnah Kazis. On the other hand, there are objections to the appointment of judicial functionaries to the performance of such duties; planters declare that it would be almost impossible to get the ryots to attend in a body at the office of the registrar; and we think it would be unadvisable for the registrars, especially if moonsiffs, to visit the factories personally, in order to carry out registration on a large scale.

A. 1567 to 1575.

A. 2059. 2966.

182. Then, as to registration itself, to be effectual, it must be made on the responsibility of some qualified and respectable person, in whom both parties confide; such parties may be hard to find, and in doubtful cases, which are the very cases likely to be followed by repudiation of contract, and a consequent litigation, the registry must partake somewhat of the character of a judicial proceeding. This demands, on the part of the registrar, research, patience, acumen, and judgment; and unless we can depend on finding these qualities in every registrar, which is not likely, the act of registration may degenerate into a mere idle form. On this we would refer his Honor to the luminous and powerful reasoning of the late Lord Macaulay, as contained in his minute, as head of the Law Commission, printed in the Appendix, and already adverted to. But we have no objection to the multiplication of offices of registry; all parties being left to register deeds or not as they may think best.

183. We believe, in short, that a really good system needs the support neither of registration nor of summary and special laws or measures, and that such measures would do nothing more than prop up a bad system, or cloke its defects.

184. At any rate, a system fair to both parties should be first tried, as it has certainly not been tried, before that we can pronounce special laws and registration necessary for one party or the other.

185. In this view we must now conclude our report, by simply referring to our various findings, embodied therein, and which may be mainly summed up as follows: all we humbly submit, are incontestably proved by the evidence, oral and documentary, which we have specially relied on. On the first great head of our inquiry we find that:

1st. The relations between planters and zemindars are, on the whole, not unsatisfactory.

2d. Those between planter and ryot are not satisfactory, and require considerable changes.

3d. The planters, as a body, stand acquitted of the grosser and more violent forms of outrages of late years; but, as a body, they are not acquitted of the practice of kidnapping and illegally confining individuals; and this practice is not palliated by the existing defects of the law or the courts.

4th. There has been no general bias exerted against planters by either the magistrates or the police.

5th. The conduct of the missionaries, as a body, during the late controversy and crisis, is not blameworthy, and that of many has been straightforward, manly, and considerate; the recent crisis, though its occurrence this year was due to secondary causes, had been maturing for years, from primary causes, and might have occurred at any time.

186. On the second great head we find that:

The residence of Europeans in the interior, and their embarking in mercantile pursuits, is to be encouraged by all legitimate means, for political and social reasons, consistent with the welfare of the mass of the population, but great changes are necessary in the system and practice of planting, which, as previously suggested by us, we earnestly recommend to the consideration of the planters.

187. On the third great head we find that:

1st. The appointment of unofficial Europeans as honorary magistrates is inexpedient in the present state of Bengal Proper.

2d and 3d. The multiplication of subdivisions and subdivisional officers, with a better police and civil courts of prompt and effective procedure, are amongst the remedies for the other evils complained of by both planters and ryots.

4th. Particular attention should be paid by the authorities to the working of Sections 6 and 11 of Act 10, of 1859.

188. In the above findings four members of the Commission agree. Mr. Fergusson, who has not signed our Report, has written a separate Minute. As regards the Special Commissioner and the summary law, the majority have already recorded their opinion. The opinion of Mr. Temple and Mr. Fergusson on these remaining two points will be found elsewhere.

5th. The appointment of a regular special commissioner for indigo and other special agency, does not seem advisable to the majority of the Commission.

6th. The continuance of the present law, Act XI. of 1860, or any summary law at all, especially in the present unsettled relations of ryots to planters, seems also objectionable in the opinion of the majority. And they think registration, and any Act that complicates engagements or fetters the free agency of the contracting parties, is also inexpedient.

189. We must here conclude, and respectfully submit to his Honor the Lieutenant Governor that, however highly we may value the presence of Europeans in the interior of this country, or deeply regret the injury which seems to threaten a large amount of property, or urgently desire to meet the wishes of the manufacturers of a valuable staple, we still feel that there are considerations which are paramount to all mercantile interests, to all political expediency, and to all material advantages, however specious in theory or imposing in effect. These are the simple considerations of justice and truth; of justice to the population whose complaints demand a hearing; and of truth, because we desire that the real facts should be clearly stated and widely known. We, the majority, feel that we owe a duty to the Government that has appointed us, to the body of planters, who have been working unfortunately on an unsound system, to the calm and thoughtful members of the English community, but especially to a large portion of the natives, who, we are told, look with some anxiety for our report.

190. We have therefore resolved to be very clear and explicit in our statements and views, and we have endeavoured so to support our conclusions by facts and reliable evidence, that misunderstanding shall no longer be possible. In this view, we now commit this important subject to the hands of the Government, in the humble hope that our labours may assist the higher authorities in forming their own opinion, and, at the same time, that a spirited, able, and energetic body of Englishmen, in whose hands the remedy mainly lies, may, after due consultation, resolve on adopting such sound measures as shall give profit to both manufacturer and to producer, shall reconcile agricultural and mercantile interests, and shall satisfy the just expectations of the rulers of the State.

may

We have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient Servants,

W. S. Seton-Karr, c.s.,
President.

Calcutta, 27 August 1860.

Minute by Mr. Temple, concurred in by Mr. Fergusson.

1. THE Report of the Commission, while portraying the disadvantages of indigo cultivation in Bengal as at present carried on, has shown the advantages which, on the other hand, arise from the production of the plant. But we desire to offer further illustration of these advantages in a politico-economical view.

2. Rice being the great staple of Bengal, and occupying at least three-fourths, if not more, of the cultivated area, and there being only a trifling export demand for it in proportion to the production, it is clear that any other cultivation which occupies a portion of the land, and adds to the number and variety of its products, must be highly advantageous to the agriculturist and to the country.

3. From official statements, it will be seen that the average annual export of rice from Bengal for the last 10 years has been 54,02,000 maunds, or 1,98,000 tons, and that for the last two years it has averaged only 46,30,000 maunds, or 1,69,000 tons, the falling off being chiefly in the exports to Europe. So long as the price here continues as high as at present, the exportation to Europe will virtually cease, for the consumption there stops when the price rises above 12 s. or 13 s. per cwt., and at three rupees eight annas per maund, it costs 15 s. or 16 s.

4. In the absence of statistics as to population, it is difficult to state the consumption of rice in the country, but 40 millions of people, which is the current estimate of the number of the inhabitants of Bengal, at one seer of rice a day, consume a million of maunds per diem, and 365 millions of maunds in a year, equal to 13½ millions of tons of rice.

5. This statement may be said to be too high, but even if considerably reduced, it proves that the export can have a scarcely appreciable effect on the price; and with no bad seasons, with no new channels of consumption, with little or no export, it is doubtful whether the staple production of the country, only used as the food of the people, can permanently remain at double the price it was a very few years ago.

6. If the above facts are beyond dispute, the effect of throwing into rice cultivation the area of land now appropriated to indigo, would be followed by a fall in the price of grain which would injure equally landholder and cultivators, and might affect ultimately the Government revenue. A serious fall would probably occur, and possibly it might be immediate and disastrous. Such a result has happened within the last few years in other parts of India, when circumstances stimulated the production of grain crops without corresponding increase of outlets, and means for exportation. Such a thing has happened to our certain knowledge in the Punjab; and we believe in Madras also; and it might happen in Bengal.

7. Virtually, indigo and rice are in many places rival products, contending for land; and no doubt at the present high prices for rice, and the late low rate paid for indigo plant, rice is more advantageous to the agriculturist. We fear that

* With a reservation to paras. 69 and 70, in which I do not fully concur.

that planters have not adequately appreciated the signs of the times, and have not sufficiently arranged to meet the change. We hope that they will do so now, before it is altogether too late.

8. That indigo can directly add to the wealth of the ryot at the rates lately given is an untenable proposition. This cultivation, indeed, must at present rather detract from his wealth, though in the end on better terms he would doubtless benefit by it. But the existence of indigo concerns in the interior of districts, causing factories, houses, boats, and carts to be built, employing thousands of workmen, artificers, day labourers, and a host of miscellaneous employés, must raise the value of everything, including especially the very rice which the agriculturist grows, and must thus add generally to his wealth.

9. If, for instance, the 18 lakhs of rupees expended annually in Kishnaghur district alone by the planters were withdrawn, and the area now appropriated to indigo were cultivated with rice, what would be the result? No doubt rice would be abundant, but there would not be more people to eat it; there would be less money to buy it with, and the district would gradually, though surely, deteriorate.

10. The Report of the Commission shows that serious evils exist in the system and practice of indigo cultivation in Lower Bengal; and that in many places the relations between planter and ryot are most unsatisfactory. We earnestly hope that this state of things will be found to admit of reform, beneficial to the interest of both these parties. And the application of remedies must, in our opinion, rest partly with the planters themselves, and partly with the Government and the Legislature.

11. As respects the terms and conditions, engagements, or contracts which ought in future to be made between the planters and ryots, it is not in the province of our Commission to specify these. Such arrangements must be matters for private settlement between the parties without any interference whatever on the part of the State.

12. These arrangements must vary in different localities. The local administration is, however, bound to protect both parties in the exercise of their legal rights; the ryot, therefore, must be absolutely protected from force, unlawful coercion, or violence. Let all this freedom be secured from henceforth; let the cultivators of indigo be really free agents; and doubtless some good understanding will soon be arrived at between planter and ryot.

13. But we deem it right to declare our apprehension that, unless some important concessions are at once made by the planters to the ryots in several districts, nothing short of actual force would induce the ryots to sow. In such places if an attempt were made by the planters to perpetuate by compulsion the present system, the ryots would, in their present temper, meet force by force, and serious disturbances would result; or if, in virtue of previous contracts, the ryots were even legally coerced to sow, still a contest would arise that must seriously damage the interests of the planters. In either case we believe that judicious concession will be the best policy for the planter to adopt towards the ryot. We do not presume to say what the concessions ought to be. But we shall advert to one or two points most demanding improvement, and point out what remedy would be the most likely to prove efficacious.

14. As shown in the Report, one prominent evil is the risk borne by the ryot, and his consequent indebtedness. We think that in Bengal the planter might bear at least a part of the risk as he does in Behar. The ryot might be guaranteed a fixed sum per acre whether his crop succeeded or not.

If the crop were deficient he would not lose, but he would gain little. If it were abundant he would gain. He would thus in the expectation of gain cultivate the indigo crop much better than he does now. He would need much less supervision than at present. He would prepare the ground properly for the sowing, and he would be careful to sow at the right moment. He would tend the crop, and weed it well; he would allow no cattle to trespass on it. Instead of evasive neglect he would evince cheerful industry. In that case cultivation might improve, the average yield per acre might increase, and indigo become more and more popular. The planter would be saved the expense of maintaining an establishment for supervision. The ryot would be spared the harassment of being supervised.

15. Further, we think, as indeed has been stated in the Report, that the deductions now made, which cause so much dissatisfaction to the ryot, should be discontinued.

continued. The charges for cutting, weeding, carrying, stamp paper, seed, &c., should all, or nearly all, be borne by the factory.

16. Then we consider that steps should be taken to ensure correct and fair measurement of the plant.

It would be desirable that the plant should be weighed (wherever this might be practicable), and not measured, as the measurement by the chain sometimes gives dissatisfaction. But weighments, we know, are often impracticable.

In this matter the practice of payment per beegah, according to the estimated quantity of plant, might be carried out in many instances with advantage. Again, it would be desirable that the factory beegah (measure of land) should be assimilated to the local zemindaree beegah. But we do not regard this point as one of great importance.

17. The price which the factory should pay the ryot for the plant is a matter, not for us, but for the parties to decide. It would vary much in different places. But we apprehend that in many places some enhancement of the price will be found desirable.

18. In many cases it may be expedient to remit the balances of advances outstanding against the ryot. If such a course should be proved to satisfy the ryots we hope that the planters will not hesitate to adopt it, for these debts are in general notoriously bad ones, and are never actually recovered.

19. We would here extract the following passage from the evidence of Mr. James Forlong, one of the most eminent and experienced among the body of planters. We believe the terms which he mentions, and which he is willing to concede to his ryots, to be worthy of general consideration, though we by no means say that they can be adopted in all indigo concerns:—"My own intention is to make a contract with the ryots, of as simple a character as possible, to give each man a cash advance of two rupees a beegah, which, as he would have it for 12 months without interest, would be equal at the lowest to three rupees a beegah; that the above two rupees should be given to the ryot, on condition of his cultivating, irrespective of all risk to himself connected with the crop; that whether there is a crop or no crop at all, no portion of this money should be charged to him in any future account, thereby securing under any circumstances to the ryot a reasonable remuneration for his labour, and for the rent of his land. Eight* bundles per beegah would pay off the first advance, and a ryot with ordinary luck and industry might very easily secure a crop of double the amount. I would also abolish the charges for stamp, for carriage, for seed, throwing really the risk of the crop upon the factory, and leaving a hope of a very liberal return to the cultivator."

20. We will not abandon the hope that with some such concessions as these, the planters may be able to continue successfully the cultivation of indigo. Their chance is of course much the best in those estates of which they are proprietors, and in which they can exercise the legitimate influence of landlords. But at this moment it is impossible to foresee, with the least confidence, what terms it will be practicable to make. Such terms will probably vary in different concerns.

21. We would urge all planters to keep a very vigilant eye over the misdoings of the factory servants. Bad as the police and such like employes of Government may be, these factory servants are at least as bad. And as the planter is more or less at hand, he is in a position to exercise a fair supervision.

22. All the above matters are mainly in the hands of the planters, who will, by attending thereto, consult their own interests as well as benefit their ryots. But there are other important matters, the decision of which will pertain to the Government.

23. In the first place, we think that a decided and organic improvement in the police is essential to the establishment of relations between planter and ryot on a satisfactory footing. It is of the utmost consequence that violence and oppression of every degree should be put an end to, once for all. We feel that it is impossible to urge this too strongly. It must be rendered impossible in future for bands of clubmen either to be permanently kept up, or employed on any any special service, of coercion, or for expeditions against villages to be organized, or for bloody affrays to occur on indigo lands, or for villages to be plundered, or for houses to be burnt! We do not say that such overt offences have been frequent; on the whole, we hope that they have been rare. But such things have happened, and may still happen, if further precautions are not taken. On the other hand, though generally the persons and property of planters have been quite secure, yet even planters have of late been sometimes attacked and their factories threatened. Now, the prevention of such overt offences, by whatever party committed, lies within the province of police arrangements; and should be entirely and absolutely accomplished. But there are other minor kinds of violence and oppression (though, indeed, these are bad enough) which are unfortunately common, and which ought, if possible, to be stopped entirely; or at the least greatly checked, viz., kidnapping and confining of ryots, forcible occupation of ryots' lands, ploughing up rice crops, and sowing the land with indigo instead. These things must no longer be. We believe, in short, that often as the necessity for a reform of the police has been demonstrated, stronger facts in support of this can nowhere be found than those in the records of the Indigo Commission.

24. Now, if the police could be better organized, better selected, better drilled, trained, and disciplined, having better pay, promotion, and prospects than at present, better officered and supervised, and imbued altogether with a better spirit; if the staff of sub-divisional officers (already strengthened, we believe, of late) were still further increased, then much would be done towards the prevention and suppression of the evils mentioned—evils which cause discredit and infinite harm to the indigo system, and utterly disorganize the relations between the planters and the ryots. Indeed, a thorough reform of the police is a remedy which approaches very near to the root of the matter. If protected in this manner, all the respectable ryots will manage for themselves in regard to their indigo cultivation, and will enter into suitable engagements with the planter, and thus all may yet go well; and obviously the affording of such protection and the prevention of violence, so that both parties to engagements may in peace and with a free will, settle their own business and conduct their own trade, must ever be one of the fundamental objects of the administration.

25. Of those who may read the proceedings of this inquiry, many will think that cases of violence and oppression afford proof of the necessity of subjecting Europeans resident in the Mofussil to the same criminal law with the natives. Now, as this point has been repeatedly before the Legislature, we need not offer any opinion on it. But we must observe that if Europeans commit these offences, and if the magistrates should fail to prosecute the inquiry and to prevent recurrence of such things, then the existing state of the criminal law will hardly furnish a sufficient justification for the failure; for, as justice of the peace, the magistrate has ample power to investigate and to prosecute. As to prevention, the police, if well organized, should suffice for that. It appears to us, therefore, that whether Europeans be or be not subject to the criminal law of the mofussil, the magistrates should be able to suppress lawlessness and violence on the part of Europeans or of any one else.

26. Then we think that this inquiry shows that a general disarming of natives (but not of Europeans, of course) ought to be carried out in Lower Bengal as has been done in Upper India. We know, indeed, that a favourite weapon of the agents of coercion has been the club. It is not of course possible, nor would it be desirable, to deprive people of this. But in most of the affray cases, the spear or javelin (Shurkie) seems to be largely used.

Now we consider that in the indigo districts especially, all natives should be deprived of such weapons, except approved or licensed persons.

It is of the utmost importance to the improvement of relations between the factory and the people, that blood should never again be shed in an indigo dispute, and that lethal weapons should never again be used in affrays between the factory servants and the villagers. We would ensure this by resuming these weapons as above described.

27. We also consider that the existing law regarding affrays should be rendered more effective to reach the parties who are the real instigators, and for whose benefit the outrage is committed. It would be superfluous to say more in favour of such a law, as its necessity has been powerfully urged by the Government of Bengal. We will only observe that, if a law were enacted, subjecting to heavy fine, any influential person, planter, zemindar or other, in whose interest an affray of such like outrage had been committed, such an enactment would properly form one of a series of measures which are needed to prevent the possibility of violence occurring in future in connexion with indigo matters.

28. Then we are of opinion that while on the one hand effectual measures have been taken for the protection of the ryot, on the other hand the just interests of the planter should be guarded and cared for.

29. The precarious nature of the crop in Lower Bengal, the critical emergencies which arise in the cultivation of indigo, have been shown in the report. Similar emergencies may arise even in the manufacture. Thus it is possible, and does actually happen, that the planter is involved in sudden difficulties through no fault of his own. His ryots may have taken advances, and then refuse to sow, or they may delay to sow within the few hours, during which alone the sowing for a season's crop will be possible. There is hardly any other product, the culture of which is liable to such a crisis as this. Then in the midst of the manufacturing season the hired labourer may absent himself, or, contrary to agreement, strike for higher wages. The ryot (especially if as suggested, he received a considerable payment, whether a crop is cut or not) may refuse to exert himself in the case of inundation or destructive accidents. Now, it appears to us that wherever the conduct of any business is from its nature critical, wherever breach of contract would, if not immediately redressed, cause irreparable loss or inconvenience to the opposite party, the policy of the law has been to render such breach of contract liable to criminal penalties. Such has been the principle followed in the case of domestic servants, of workmen, of railway labourers, and, as we understand, in the case of coffee-planters, and recently this appears to have been the principle which guided the Legislature in passing the summary and temporary Act for indigo cultivation during the season of 1860. If the principle has been correctly described above, then we submit that it applies in the case of the cultivation and manufacture of indigo as much as to any case whatever. Indeed, we believe that in none of the cases in which the principle has been sanctioned, is the business more critical, or the inconvenience more immediate, or the loss more difficult of reparation, than in the case of indigo cultivation.

30. We would therefore recommend that the Act XI. of 1860, rendering breaches of contract to cultivate indigo criminally punishable by the magistrate, be made permanent with certain modifications. And we would extend it to breaches of contract to manufacture indigo, so that a ryot who has engaged to cultivate, or a labourer who has engaged to manufacture, may be by law compelled summarily to fulfil his engagement.

31. If it be urged, in opposition to the enactment of such a law, that the crop is unremunerative to the ryot, that the ryot is not practically free, that force and violence are already used, that the police are inefficient, that the planter is already the stronger party, then we would beg that the matters previously urged may be borne in mind, and we submit that these objections, however applicable under the system heretofore existing, will not apply to that reformed system which we seek to introduce. If the improvements which we urge shall be carried out (and unless they are carried out, more or less, we fear that the very existence of indigo cultivation at all will be jeopardised), then we submit that the cultivation will be remunerative to the ryot; that the ryot will be a perfectly free agent, that force and oppression will no longer be possible, that the police will not be inefficient. And, lastly, however powerfully the planter may have heretofore been, yet he is not now the stronger party, as compared with the ryot. Indeed, the ryots have shown themselves to be aware of their own rights and interests, and resolute in using their physical force and numerical strength in resistance to anything like coercion.

32. Then it may be objected that the new civil procedure is prompt and summary; that the old delay of the law is now done away with; and that the present law will afford the planter all the redress he can require. Now, we are fully sensible of the improvement which has been effected in the civil procedure, though it remains to be seen whether justice will in practice be speedy. But facility and speed in obtaining justice, are not sufficient in cases where the breach of particular contracts is specially and peculiarly productive of loss or inconvenience. In cases of this class, the law has prescribed criminal penalties in order to deter parties from breaking such engagements. It is the moral effect of threatened punishment that is needed. At the Presidency of Calcutta there are small cause courts, and every possible facility for obtaining justice; still the criminal penalties are needed for servants who abscond from service, and for workmen who desert their work.

33. It may be asked why should criminal penalties be enacted to enforce contracts to cultivate indigo, when there is no such law for contracts to cultivate any other crop. To this we would reply that, in the first place, with no other crop is the culture affected by such emergencies, as with indigo. Rice or jute, or other products, do not, like indigo, need to be sown on the instant, after a particular shower. Such products are sown in the rainy season, and the sowings may be completed to-day, or to-morrow, or the next day, or the day after that. But with indigo the sowing must be completed within a few hours, or it may prove a failure. So it often happens in cutting. Much of the plant is grown on the river side. Frequently the river may be rising just as the plant is being cut. If there be the least delay, the crop may be damaged or destroyed by inundation.

34. In the next place, with indigo the cultivation has to be arranged for, and the manufacture to be managed by the same capitalist. This is not the case with other produce generally. With an article like rice, the village banker may advance some money to the ryot on the security of the crop; and the lender may take a part of the crop in payment, but beyond the repayment of the loan, he has no interest in the crop. If the ryot fail to sow or to raise a crop, the banker will nevertheless sue the ryot, and recover his own with interest. But the indigo planter advances cash, not to trade in money and the interest thereof, but to ensure the delivery of a certain quantity of plant. It is in the plant that the planter's hopes centre. It is for this that he invests capital in building factories, and maintains expensive establishments. If therefore there be a failure of the plant, the planter loses not only the sums he has advanced (which may be of comparatively lesser consequence), but the season's profit, for the sake of which so much capital has been sunk, so much current expense incurred. If such a loss occur it will be of little use to the planter to sue the ryot for recovery of advances. Such recovery would not cover more than a fraction of the damage sustained. It is evident, therefore, that the liabilities incurred by the indigo planter, and the stake held by him in the culture, is not to be compared with the limited risk run by those who lend money to cultivators of land. We therefore confidently submit that, in this very important respect, the production of indigo is, in the nature of things, widely different from the case of any other product in Lower Bengal.

35. Further, it may be said that if a law of this nature be enacted for indigo contracts, it may be equally required for silk contracts, and perhaps other similar contracts. Doubtless this is true. And if the just protection of the silk interest, or other interest similarly circumstanced with indigo, should require a special contract law, such lawful assistance might, we think, with good policy be conceded.

36. Lastly, although the practice of advances by indigo planters to ryots is not a desirable one, and might with advantage be discontinued, still we apprehend that as, by the custom of the country, nothing can be done without cash advances, these will have to be continued. Then if the planters should (as we hope they will) consent to grant the amount of advances to the ryot absolutely, whether the crop yield that value or not, whereby the risk now borne by the ryot will be transferred to the planter; then we observe that an ill-disposed ryot will have a certain degree of temptation to neglect his cultivation, being assured beforehand of a fixed payment. Now this inevitable disadvantage, in a scheme that is otherwise excellent, will be removed by a special law, such as we recommend. If a ryot shall try to abuse the advantage conceded to him, the planter will have a real means of redress. And the consciousness of this would, we believe, render planters more ready to make to the ryot those concessions which are so desirable.

37. For all these reasons we recommend that a law like that of Act XI. of 1860, be enacted for indigo contracts. We anticipate that under the better system which must now be introduced, such a law will seldom have to be actually enforced; and that numerous cases like those which occurred in Kishnaghur district, and which were much to be regretted, would not occur in future. The moral effect of such an enactment would suffice, in ordinary times, to induce induce ryots to fulfil their engagements, and would give confidence to the planting interest, at a time when severe sacrifices are demanded of it.

38. When a similar law was enacted in 1835, it did, we believe, work well, and was approved by the Government of the time. It was afterwards repealed because it was thought to operate prejudicially to the ryot. But with the improvements which we hope to see effected, the ryot will be in a good and independent position; and there will be no fear of the law pressing more hardly upon him than it does upon domestic servants, artificers, and labourers.

39. But if a law on the principle of Act XI of 1860 be enacted, we do not think that the taking of a cash advance, which is, by the present law, the test of a contract having been made, would suit as a primary condition in a permanent law. Such a provision would tend to render permanent the vicious system of advances which now pervades every description of work, and every kind of transaction, whether it be the Government manufacture of opium and salt, the making of indigo, and indeed every thing else. The condition should be a regular contract to cultivate, or a contract to manufacture. And measures should be taken to ensure the contract being regular and bonâ fide.

40. After all the doubts which have been thrown, sometimes correctly, sometimes incorrectly, on the voluntary nature of contracts to cultivate indigo, we consider it of the utmost importance to encourage the registration of these contracts, if such is by any means practicable without being felt as an oppression by the ryot. Let a ryot appear before a responsible officer of Government, and attest his engagement, and the terms thereof, and then there will be no doubt as to its reality, and there need be no hesitation in punishing him if he should break it. We know that some planters doubt the practicability of registering contracts with so many hundreds of ryots. But some, and among them (as we understand) Mr. James Forlong, consider that this might be practicable. This opinion is held by the experienced officer (Mr. A. Grote) who was Commissioner of the Nuddea Division, which contains the two largest indigo districts. And, as is well known, Mr. F. Beaufort, an officer of great experience in questions of this sort, recommended the same thing. Sub-divisional officers might be deputed to the spot at the season when the contracts are chiefly made, and they might conduct the registration. But no police official, nor any officer below the rank of a subordinate judicial officer, should be entrusted with the duty. Then the planter would not require to register the contracts with all the ryots. He would easily select those cases in which registration would be desirable. Nor, on the other hand, would every ryot desire to have registration. Again, perhaps head ryots (Ganteedars) might register in behalf of their subordinate ryots. In that case, however, it might be difficult to render any one personally responsible except the Ganteedar. No doubt the Ganteedar might declare himself responsible if any of his constituents broke their contracts, though perhaps there might be hesitation, even then, in punishing the Ganteedar for the misfeasance of the ryot. At all events, however, we believe that registration to a sufficient extent would be practicable. We admit that if the contracts are to be registered at a remote station, then the inconvenience would more than counterbalance the advantage. But if more European officers are appointed to act on the spot, as we hope they will be, then there ought not to be any particular trouble in the registration. And we believe that a district officer (that is magistrate and collector) could by a judicious distribution of his judicial subordinates, manage to have officers at hand to register indigo contracts at the proper season. And if the registering officers were on the spot, their verification and identification of the parties should be simple and easy.

41. We are aware that the Indian Law Commission in 1835 considered this question; and that the President (Lord Macaulay) objected to registration, while some of the members were in favour of it. But the registration then proposed was of a very comprehensive character; every contract to cultivate indigo was to be invalid unless registered. We do not venture to go so far. We only say that legal provision should be made for registering; that facilities should be offered therefor; and that special penal consequences should be attached to the breach of a contract thus registered. Registration of agreements under certain circumstances has found favour in all countries, and especially in India.

42. We would then make the breach of a registered contract to cultivate indigo punishable by a magistrate, but not any other contract except a registered one. It would be very desirable to make the terms of such contracts explicit, so as to include the whole process of cultivating, from the ploughing to the cutting, and delivery at the factory. We do not think that registration of agreements on the part of coolies to manufacture indigo would be necessary. We would, however, have breaches of such agreements punished by a magistrate, in the same manner as breaches of contract on the part of workmen or domestic servants.

43. While recommending a law prescribing criminal penalties for the breach of registered contracts to cultivate indigo; and while also admitting the great improvement made in the ordinary civil procedure; we anticipate that there will probably arise cases, or classes of cases, for which some special measures will be desirable. There are, we believe, in many indigo concerns, contracts made by ryots, previously to the present year, to cultivate indigo for various periods or terms of years not yet expired. Such contracts will probably be found to have been made by the ryots according to the understanding, at the time existing, of the relations between the planter and the ryot. In the present state of feeling among the people, it appears not impossible that some of these contracts might be disputed or repudiated by the ryot. Without attempting to form any opinion on the validity or otherwise of such contracts, a matter which must depend upon the merit of cases, we still think that the occurrence of such disputes should be watched. If in any district a considerable number of these contracts should be disputed, it would be very desirable to depute some competent and selected officers to try promptly on the spot any suits that might be brought, and to carry out their decisions with effect. The course to be pursued, however, should be well considered, because the settlement of one case at the outset might govern the decision of a great number of other cases.

44. Act X. of 1849, which abolishes the power previously vested in a landlord of summoning his tenant for the payment of rent, has been much complained of by planters, as interfering with their manorial influence over the ryot; and evidence on the point has been tendered. We admit the importance in many ways of preserving the influence of the landlord over his tenantry; but we trust that whether they have the power of summoning vested in them by law or not, the landholders will still exercise great influence. We do not wish to elevate the peasant at the expense of the upper class; but the peasant is entitled to a certain degree of protection. And many experienced men think that the additional protection afforded by the new law was really needed in Bengal. We do not see, moreover, how this law affects the planters more than other landlords, and on the whole we refrain from offering any recommendation on this head. We have done enough in drawing attention to the subject, and we should hesitate, as at present informed, to do more.

45. But now that indigo planters have become large landed proprietors, and indeed form a very important section in the land-holding community, it is evident that the indigo interest has become bound up in the tenure of land.

46. As the planters have, in common with other landlords, been deprived of the power of summoning ryots, we would venture to draw the attention of Government to the speedy recovery of rents. If power be taken from the landlord, it is the more necessary that the law should afford prompt redress. We know that attention was given to this point in the framing of Act XI of 1860. And we trust that adequate machinery may be available for ensuring the expeditious recovery of rent, as the matter deeply affects the settlement of European capitalists in the interior.

47. Then we think it very desirable, even necessary, that some special agency be appointed to see, on the one hand, that no violence occurs in indigo cases; that no oppression is practised towards the ryots; that the prevention and cure of the evils which have hitherto existed is thorough and complete; and on the other hand, to see that the just interests of the planter are not sacrificed; that contracts duly made with him are fulfilled; that disputes relative to indigo are speedily settled. For the establishment of proper relations between planters and ryots it is essential that all the above objects be secured; but in the first instance great care and watchfulness will be required. We doubt whether the district authorities, heavily tasked as they are, can adequately accomplish this task. Whenever any special difficulty has arisen, it has been customary to appoint a special agency, and this has been done occasionally with eminent success in Bengal. We anticipate that such a plan would succeed in the indigo districts. The necessity of a reference on the spot is one of the few points on which both both parties agree. On behalf of the planter, it is said, that there being no qualified officer at hand to apply to for aid, force or intimidation is resorted to. On behalf of the ryots it is said, that there is no sufficient authority at hand to afford redress and protection. We recommend then that one or more additional and specially selected European officers be stationed for the present in central and convenient localities in each of the principal indigo districts. To these officers should be entrusted the inspection of the indigo system, the speedy decision of disputes, civil or criminal, regarding all indigo cases, the prevention of violence and oppression of all kinds. They would reside in the interior or localities conveniently situated to factories and indigo villages, and would be generally, though severally, responsible for ensuring obedience to the law in the above matters. Such officers might be vested with judicial, criminal, and fiscal powers, exactly like the deputy and assistant commissioners in the non-regulation provinces, to administer the law relating to indigo cases; whether the case belonged to the department of civil justice, of police, or of revenue. In each of these departments the special officer would be subordinate to the regular constituted authority; that is, in police and revenue matters, he would be subordinate to the magistrate, and in judicial matters to the civil judge. Such an officer on the spot would afford valuable aid to the ordinary authorities; and this, without at all interfering with the jurisdictions already existing. As soon as all habits of violence and oppression had been eradicated and satisfactory relations established (as it might be hoped they soon would be), then these additional and special officers might be dispensed with.

48. Lastly, we venture to advise that one officer of ability and experience be appointed special commissioner of indigo affairs in Lower Bengal. His chief function would be to travel about in the indigo districts, to ascertain on the spot the exact state of affairs in relation to indigo, and report, as often as need be, to the Lieutenant Governor. His main duty would be that of a responsible Inspector General.

49. Such an officer would exercise no direct authority over the local officers, and would interfere with no existing jurisdiction. His function would be to ascertain and report to the Government of Bengal. If oppression or malpractices were springing up in any district, he would report the circumstances. If the law relating to indigo were being misunderstood anywhere, he would draw attention to it. If unreasonable apprehension were arising in the minds of the ryots, he would allay it.

The Government would be thus kept constantly informed of the real state of things in the indigo villages, and with this information available, such remedies as might appear necessary could be applied from time to time. Such an officer would be of the utmost use, until the time shall arrive when the relations between planter and ryot are placed on a satisfactory footing.

50. But we believe that at the present time the appointment of a well-selected special commissioner is of urgent importance. It appears that in many districts the mind of the indigo ryots are in an excited state; although certainly, no new cause of discontent or excitement has arisen lately; and unfounded apprehensions seem to spring up among the ryots as to the consequence of cultivating indigo in future. A spirit of combination is abroad among them, and intimidation is likely to be resorted to by some persons. If any excitement of this kind should become general among an ignorant and credulous class, there is but little chance of terms being listened to by them, or of salutary reform being introduced in the system of indigo planting. A contest might arise between planter and ryot regarding unfulfilled contracts; and then a struggle would commence between planter and ryot in their respective capacities of landlord and tenant. The planters are now so largely concerned in the proprietorship of land that any general contest which might arise regarding the cultivation of indigo, would, in all probability, extend to the payment of rent, and the right of occupancy. A struggle of this kind would, of course, be most injurious to both parties, and specially to the planters. Such contingencies will, we hope, not occur at all; but we imagine it to be an important object to obviate or diminish the chance of their occurrence. And it would, we submit, be worthy of the administration to ward off by judicious precautions any crisis of this kind.

51. It is evident that the ordinary courts could not easily avert such a state of things. They could only interfere after some breach of the peace had occurred; or until exacerbation between the parties had proceeded to a serious extent.

It is under such circumstances then that a Special Commissioner can most beneficially act.

52. In the event then of any such state of things as that we have indicated threatening to arise in any indigo district, we would earnestly recommend that a special commissioner be immediately appointed to allay excitement among the ryots, to ascertain exactly what terms they require, and to learn whether any mediation between them and the planters is possible. The success of such a measure would depend of course on the judgment and ability of the Special Commissioner. But we entertain a good hope that a really able officer would succeed, and would secure the confidence of both parties. We believe that the planters, as a body, are really alive to the realities of the situation, and are willing to make reasonable concessions to the ryots. And if on their side the ryots can really be satisfied regarding all this, it may be expected that they would be willing to continue to cultivate. If a special commissioner could materially assist in affecting a satisfactory settlement, great good would be thereby effected.

53. We would now respectfully submit these various matters for the decision of the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal. We are indeed fully alive to the many improvements which have been, and are being, introduced into all parts of the administration in the Mofussil. And we therefore entertain a confident hope that recommendations designed to secure justice between contending parties; to prevent violence and oppression; to compose dissensions; to settle disputes; and to save important interests from ruin, will meet with his Honor's favourable consideration.

(signed) R. Temple,
W. F. Fergusson,
Members of the Indigo Commission.

Calcutta,
27 August 1860.

MINUTE by Mr. Fergusson.

I DISSENT from the Report adopted by my colleagues for reasons stated below. I have joined with Mr. Temple in a Minute recommending the measures which we deem advisable and necessary to ward off the calamity in which I apprehend not only indigo planting, but the whole agricultural and landed interests of Lower Bengal are likely to be involved, unless measures are promptly taken to put a stop to the delusions and excitement under which the people are now labouring.

My reasons for dissenting from the Report are—

That it leads to the inference that planters as a body are lawless, the evidence affecting only some out of a number.

That although I admit there has been no general bias against planters on the part of the officials, yet particular instances of undue interference have been shown which, operating on the minds of an ignorant peasantry, have been most detrimental to the planter, particularly in the present season.

The recent crisis, though accelerated by an unfounded belief on the part of the ryot that the Government was opposed to the cultivation of indigo, must have sooner or later occurred owing to the disturbance which has taken place on the relative returns to the ryot from indigo as compared with cereals and other cultivation, and the planters would have done well had they paid earlier attention to the above facts and met the ryot with a more proportionate remuneration. The same remark applies to the cultivation of opium and the manufacture of salt.

The Report finds generally the inexpediency of appointing European gentlemen resident in the Mofussil as honorary magistrates, whereas I think the inexpediency should be limited simply until such time as the question between indigo planter and ryot is put on a more satisfactory footing. When this is done, in my opinion, not only should Europeans but also native gentlemen be appointed justices of the peace, with a jurisdiction limited as in England.

I further dissent from the language and tone of the Report even as to those points the truth of which I do not dispute, for the reason that the language and tone tend to give a colouring, and to lead to conclusions not proved from the facts.

I would

I would especially refer to the views in the Report as to the relative position of ryot and zemindar as tending to disturb the acknowledged principles of the permanent settlement, and to suggest to the ryot notions of rights incompatible with his real position and with the contract, made by that settlement, between zemindar and Government. This, in my opinion, may lead to disturbances, the extent and consequences of which cannot be foreseen.

For these reasons I have deemed it my duty to dissent from the Report, and to record my views thereon.

Calcutta, 25 August 1860.

W. F. Fergusson.

MINUTE by the President, concurred in by Mr. Sale and Baboo C. M. Chatterjee.

OUR remarks on our colleague Mr. Fergusson's Minute will be very brief, and are only designed to prevent misunderstanding.

As regards the remarks of our colleague "on the language and tone" of the Report, which "tend to give a colouring and lead to conclusions not proved from the facts," we have only to say that the mass of evidence has been by us carefully analyzed and impartially weighed. No conclusion is drawn which is not based on good evidence, and we must leave the Government and the public to judge whether the conclusions, so supported, do not justify the tone of the Report. As regards our colleague's remarks on the permanent settlement, we emphatically disclaim any intention of disturbing or impugning the acknowledged principles of that great measure. Our views as to the relative position of ryot and zemindar are, we submit, borne out by the Statute Law, and by the common custom of the country; moreover, in discussing the merits of Act X of 1859, we have thought it necessary, in the interest of the zemindars, to solicit the attention of Government to two of its most important sections, and we have suggested nothing to the ryot incompatible with his real position, or with the zemindar's rights.

W. S. Seton-Karr, c.s.

J. Sale.

C. M. Chatterjee.

Calcutta, 27 August 1860.

I HAVE not any remarks to offer on the subject.

Note.—The total number of witnesses appears greater than that mentioned in the Report. The explanation of this apparent discrepancy is, that when the examination of any witness was resumed after an interval of some days, such a witness, in this list, has been reckoned twice over. The actual number of witnesses examined is 134.

MINUTES OF EVIDENCE

TAKEN BEFORE

THE INDIGO COMMISSION.

Friday, 18th May 1860.

PRESENT.

W. S. SETON-KARR, Esq., c. s., President.

Members:—R. Temple, Esq., c. s., W. F. Fergusson, Esq., Reverend J. Sale, Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.

JOSIAH PATRICK WISE, Esq., called in; and Examined on oath.

1. President.] I BELIEVE you have had considerable experience in indigo factories?—I have had 35 years' experience in the districts of Tipperah, Furreedpore, Mymensing, and Dacca.

2. What was the system of cultivation practised by you?—Nij and ryotti.

3. Can you state the proportion of each kind of cultivation?—About two-thirds nij and one-third ryotti.

4. Did you increase the cultivation of nij lands?—I found a great deal of waste, unoccupied, churlands, and considerably increased the nij cultivation.

5. You took leases of these lands?—Yes, I took leases from zemindars and from the Government, and brought them into cultivation with hired labourers.

6. Did you cultivate these lands by your own servants?—Yes, but it was also my interest to induce cultivators to settle upon the lands, supplying me with labourers, and these tenants growing jute, safflower, rice, and oil seed for their own benefit.

7. Did you give the ryots permanent leases?—I give no permanent leases; they cultivate from year to year, and pay the rent pretty regularly.

8. Have you ever found it necessary to eject any of your ryots?—No, I have never done so.

9. Do you consider you have the power of ejecting your ryots?—I do consider I have that power, but have never exercised it.

10. After you had taken these churs, did you still continue nij cultivation?—Yes, I cultivated nij by my own servants and labourers.

11. Did you find the ryots with bullocks and ploughs for the cultivation of these lands?—I hire ploughs from the ryots, and kept up an establishment of bullocks for the cultivation of these lands.

12. Then you did not change the system when the churs were settled?—No.

13. Are the ryots anxious to get leases?—No; they do not care about getting leases; they have such facilities for change, and for taking new lands. I have had no difficulty in getting ryots, but some difficulty in keeping my nij lands for indigo.

14. Have you ever found the ryots disinclined to settle on the churs?—No; and when settled, I have found them disposed to dispossess me always of the best lands.

15. At what time of the year did you find the ryots most willing to take advances?—I found them most willing about the time of the pooja in September and October.

16. Mr. Temple.] That is the time they are always most willing?—Yes, they are at that time more willing to take advances for indigo.

17. Why do you consider them then most willing?—They have no crops for sale, and are generally in want of money then, as it is required for festival expenses, and as the zemindars get in a large proportion of their rents at that time.

18. President.] Are there no crops in March and April on the ground when the sowings would commence?—Yes, there are some crops on the ground in these months, but not extensive or profitable.

19. Are you aware that there is a time of the year called punyo, when rents are first collected?—Yes, in Dacca the punyo is some time in June, when the zemindars make their first collections for the year.

20. Did you take an agreement from the ryots for a term of years, or was the term undefined?—In making indigo advances to the ryots, I bind them to no term of years.

21. Was it on stamp paper?—Sometimes stamp paper is used, at other times, not; generally it is not; sometimes the agreement is entered in a book, to which the ryot's mark or signature is put.

22. In what position do you consider that the ryot stood?—I consider him as a free agent.

23. Was your agreement signed in the presence of the manager, or superintendent, or assistant?—It is not always done, but I have invariably inculcated this on my superintendents, and as far as possible, to see every rupee paid into the hands of the ryot.

24. You mean your European superintendents?—Yes.

25. Could you state the rent the ryots paid in the settled talooks?—I think the ryots pay on high lands, from 12 annas to 1 rupee 4 annas.

26. What do you mean by the high lands?—The best lands, in contrast to the low chur lands, early flooded by the rise of the rivers.

27. You have said that the terms were merely general in these contracts with the ryots?—The ryot, on receiving a given number of rupees, contracts to cultivate and sow a certain number of beegahs with indigo.

28. Did you follow the system of rotation of crops, i. e., changing the indigo from one piece of land to another?—Rotation is very desirable when it can be managed.

29. Is the ryot generally agreeable to such change?—He is generally desirous of giving the factory the worst land he can, and of doing as little as he possibly can, in the way of cultivation.

30. How do you account for this?—He takes very little interest in the indigo crop.

31. Can you state the cause why he should not take any interest in it?—He thinks he has got all he is likely to get in the advances. He will not cultivate his field well with the expectation of getting more bundles, and he will not give his best land, reserving it for rice and his more paying crops.

32. When you give advances, at what rate do you do so?—Always at two rupees a beegah, and I believe this rate to prevail all over the country.

33. Can you state what the ploughing costs the ryot?—The ploughing costs him very little; only his labour.

34. How many ploughs go to the rupee in your part of the country?—In some parts I get for my nij cultivation 12, 14, and 16 ploughs for a rupee. I do not think a ryot expends more than six ploughs to his beegah of indigo.

35. What do you call a day's labour?—They go out 7 a.m. and are back at noon. They don't return in the evening.

36. Do you consider six ploughs sufficient for the beegah?—No, I don't think so; it depends very much on the land itself. Unless the land is sufficiently clean, six ploughs would not be enough.

37. Did you find it necessary to have the indigo weeded?—Not on the high lands, but on the churs jungle springs up rapidly and requires a great deal of weeding.

38. Then you did send out the khalassy or gomashita to see to the weeding?—Not on the ryotti lands so much as the nij, where the weeding is very heavy.

39. Have you been to the Mofussil since the Cattle Trespass Act was passed, and have you observed its operation?—For a few months only, and I cannot state from personal knowledge how it is working.

40. Can you say to whom the cattle that damage the plant generally belong?—To the ryots, and not unfrequently to the ryot who has an interest in the protection and preservation of the plant.

41. Not to goalahs?—No, not often to goalahs.

42. The cattle may have belonged to the ryot that cultivated the indigo?—Very likely they did.

43. Were the cattle allowed to trespass intentionally?—No, it is often mere negligence, and often the want of pasture for the cattle.

44. What is a day's labour paid at in those parts now?—Formerly one and a half to two annas a day; now four annas. Working coolies used to get Rs. 2. 8. a month; now four rupees are the monthly wages.

45. Do you cut as well as cart the indigo crop yourself?—I hire boats to cut the nij cultivation. In some instances I am obliged to cut the ryot's plant, but generally, they cut and bring it to the factory.

46. Which custom obtains most?—There are no carts. The plant is brought in boats, and the general practice is for the ryot to bring it.

47. Does it take a day to cut and load a beegah of indigo?—The produce of a beegah is about seven to 12 bundles. (I should say nine bundles is the average). It would take two men to cut nine bundles and convey it to the factory in one day.

48. What is the size of a beegah?—Eighty by 96 square cubits. It is smaller than the Jessore beegah, which I believe is 100 cubits square.

49. What is usually the furthest distance of any ryotti cultivation from the factory?—Three miles is the outside distance.

50. At what rate do you pay the ryots for the bundles?—At five bundles for the rupee.

51. How do you measure the bundles?—By a six-feet chain.

52. Who measures them?—We have a respectable native to measure; I forget his designation at this moment. The factory mohurir is also in attendance writing down the number of bundles brought by each ryot.

53. Is not there some difficulty or confusion, when many of the ryots come in with their bundles the same day?—They generally look sharp after their own bundles, arranging them in little circles until measured, and then the number of bundles is written down, and a receipt given to the ryot.

54. At what time of the year are the accounts squared?—Generally after the 5th or 10th of August, and we go on till every thing is settled, or we do as much as possible before the pooja in October.

55. Does the ryot generally give less produce than would cover his advance?—I have seen as much as 15 and 16 bundles said to have been cut from a beegah, but eight or nine bundles is a fair average.

56. Do you still give them further advances next year, if they are not on the right side of the account?—If the ryot's advance is covered by the produce or more, he gets credit for it in his fresh advance, and if any thing is due by the ryot, it is deducted in making fresh advances.

57. Do you resort to law to recover the balance?—No, but I have been obliged sometimes to wipe off very heavy balances due by ryots.

58. If the average yield per beegah is only nine bundles, is it safe to continue to advance?—The ryot does not get the full two rupees when there is a balance against him. He gets his advances minus the debt remaining against him.

59. Have you had cases in which the ryots have refused to cultivate?—Yes, they have refused to take advances, but it is generally in consequence of some undue interference with them.

60. When the lands are not yours, or you have no proprietary right therein, are you not sometimes at the mercy of the zemindars?—Yes.

61. Do

J. P. Wise,
Esq.

1860.

61. Do you consider it advisable to become the malik or proprietor of the lands?—Yes, it is essentially necessary for the quiet and profitable working of an indigo factory.

62. Have you suffered much opposition from the zemindars?—Not much, as I am personally acquainted with most of them, and, as far as possible, try to keep on good terms with them.

63. Have you received any assistance from them?—I have on many occasions.

64. If you wish to cultivate, do you make the contract with the ryots or the zemindars?—With the ryots only.

65. Do you debit any other items to the ryot?—He is debited with nothing but the advances.

66. Not with stamp paper?—No, I seldom use stamp paper.

67. Nor for seed?—No, I always supplied seed free of any charge.

68. Is not seed charged for in other districts?—Seed is charged for in other districts, I believe.

69. Do you expend more time on the nij or the ryotti cultivation?—More attention is required to look after the nij cultivation in ploughing, and weeding in particular.

70. Do you pay wages to the ryots for ploughing?—A large extent of my nij cultivation is carried on by ploughs hired from the ryots at so many the rupee.

71. Did you become a putnidar or ijaradar?—I always tried to become a putnidar or ijaradar, and am so to a great extent.

72. In applying for a lease of a talook, have you been obliged to pay a heavy bonus?—I was invariably called on for a bonus to be paid down.

73. Did you find the rent demanded from you as a leaseholder more than you could fairly levy from the ryots?—For farms I have generally been obliged to advance money or give a bonus, and for a putni you must pay down a considerable amount. In taking farms I did not look for profit, by raising the rents or taking salamees.

74. Did you ever attempt to take one anna on the rupee rent for your profit as leaseholder?—I looked for the profit by the indigo out-turn and found this generally to answer well.

75. What advantage do you consider the ryot derived from this system?—The planter having got the rights of the proprietor, protects the ryots from all outside oppression, leaves him undisturbed in regard to rent, and perhaps charges none of the bazy abwabs so usual amongst native zemindars.

76. Are you then of opinion the ryots are better off when you have the lease than they would be under the zemindars?—I certainly do; I have always endeavoured to protect them, and believe they are better off on my factories than with the zemindars.

77. Did you find the putni tenure as secure as the zemindary?—The difference is the chance of being summarily sold out twice a year; it is otherwise secure, and of advantage to the planter.

78. Mr. Fergusson.] What was the outlay on your factories yearly?—About two lacs and 25,000 to 30,000 rupees.

79. How many factories have you?—About 40.

80. How many persons on the average to each concern?—Ahead manager, with two or three assistants under him, to each concern of six or 10 factories.

81. How many European assistants have you?—About 14 or 15 at present.

82. What is the extent of land under cultivation in your factories?—About 65,000 beegahs, both ryotti and nij.

72—I.

83. Can you state the produce in indigo of so many bundles of plant?—A cake to a bundle is very good, that is to say, about five maunds to 1,000 bundles, and this is the return the planter gets for all his outlay.

84. What has been the average price of a maund for the past three years?—For the last three years, the price has been about 200 rupees, but going back some years, it has been 165 to 170 rupees. Our connexion with the indigo, as far as the planting is concerned, ends when it is sold in Calcutta.

85. President.] Are you aware of any considerable rise in the prices of labour and of produce near Dacca?—The rise has been very great indeed for the last three years.

86. Is not rice, especially, very high-priced?—Yes, rice is nearly double what it was five years ago; coolies, carts, and boat-hire have likewise risen.

87. Has there been any rise in the price paid for the bundles to the ryot?—There has not been any rise.

88. Have the ryots made any complaint about the price of the bundles being inadequate?—No complaints of the kind have ever reached me; but I have authorised my assistants to pay higher wages, if necessary, and to give higher remuneration for labour.

89. Can you give the price of the cartage or transport of indigo?—I give five rupees to cut and carry 100 bundles to the factory.

90. Was it the custom in your factories to fine for cattle trespass?—A fine has been inflicted occasionally, but not to any great extent; cattle trespass is a serious evil, and difficult to stop.

91. Supposing a ryot had 20 beegahs, what portion of it would he be required to sow with indigo?—I have no standard to go upon in regard to this; a ryot may have 20 beegahs and not have more than one in indigo.

92. What is the average of eligible land in 20 beegahs?—That would depend entirely on the kind of land.

93. Is sugar-cane much cultivated?—No, not to any great extent in Dacca, but more in the Mymensing district.

94. Mr. Temple.] Is the indigo land fit for growing other kind of crops?—Indigo land is fit for other kinds of crops.

95. President.] Deep rice lands would not grow indigo?—No, indigo is more confined to, and grows better on the chur lands.

96. But lands that are not entirely submerged in and after the rains would grow indigo?—Yes, but the best indigo lands are those that are submerged two or three months.

97. Are the best lands on your estates given up for indigo cultivation?—I have great difficulty in getting the best lands. The ryots take very often my zemindary lands, and are in no hurry to give them up. No man knows his interests better in this respect than a Bengalee ryot.

98. Do ryots cultivate indigo on their own account?—No, never.

99. Not for seed even in your locality?—No, not for seed.

100. Are there indigo cultivators among the zemindars?—Very few; one or two; the concerns are small, and the owners make no advances.

101. How then do they manage?—I have been told by a native, that he gets seed and gives it out to his ryots for cultivation, but the ryots are not paid for the bundles; they grow a few cottahs each, more as a mark of respect and obedience.

J. P. Wise,
Esq.

102. Mr. Temple.] You have stated that the average number of bundles per beegah is nine, and that you advanced two rupees a beegah; supposing the returns were 15 or 16 bundles, would there be a gain to the ryot at the end of the year?—Yes, the ryot would be a gainer by so large a return of plant.

103. Mr. Fergusson.] If you made fresh advances each year, deducting from the advances made, the debt remaining due from the ryot, the time might come when the ryot would have nothing left to pay?—Yes, it might; and very large balances have besides been expunged from my books.

104. Have you known of many cases in which the ryots received a payment in cash, having produced more than their advances?—I have known of such cases, but I could not say how many on an average. When the season is favourable and the crop good, many ryots clear off all balances and have money to receive.

105. You have stated that the extent of land under cultivation in your concerns was 65,000 beegahs; what were the amount of cash advances on this?—On the ryotti cultivation, which is about one-third, the cash advances are about 20,000 or 25,000 rupees.

106. President.] Have you ever advanced for any other cultivation than indigo, and do you know of any similar system of advances being made for any other kind of cultivation?—No.

107. Mr. Fergusson.] Are there any advances made by any other parties for safflower?—I am not aware if such safflower is purchased as a manufactured article in the open market; I advance money to secure the preference at the market price.

108. President.] In the event of a good season, does a ryot share in the advantages thereof?—Yes, he does; if he gives 20 bundles, he would get two rupees over his advance.

109. In a very good season, if any particular ryot happened to produce an ordinary crop, would he benefit by the general prosperity?—No, he would only benefit by the return from his own field.

110. Mr. Fergusson.] This might arise from his neglect in cultivating?—Yes, from his own carelessness, or from any other circumstance, such as allowing cattle to destroy the crop, or the rise of the river to overflow it.

111. You have mentioned that most of the ryotti cultivation was carried on on estates other than yours; have you found that undue influence has been exercised to induce you to take leases and to pay a bonus for them?—It has induced me to make sacrifices to obtain putnis and farms by money advances.

112. Whatever sums you expended that way added to the cost of your operations, and virtually prevented your giving so much more to the ryots?—Undoubtedly, it did.

113. Notwithstanding the general rise for the past four or five years, which in the case of rice you have allowed to be nearly 100 per cent., have you raised the rent upon any of your ryots or farms?—No, I have not.

114. If from any causes you had to abandon indigo cultivation on your estates, could you raise the rents thereon?—I could double them.

115. Then, in consideration of indigo cultivation, you allow the ryots to hold on at the present low rates?—Yes.

116. Are the ryots aware of that fact?—No, they probably are not, but such is the fact.

117. Practically speaking, has the zemindar the right to raise the rents, and does he do so?—Yes, and he is now generally doing this in the Dacca, as well as other districts.

118. How many beegahs of cultivated land do you consider an European assistant competent to superintend?—From 400 to 500 beegahs.

119. Mr. Temple.] Then, if you abstain from raising the rents in consideration of indigo being cultivated, is it therefore to be understood that indigo is not as profitable to the cultivator as other crops?—It is from the expectation of its being a profitable crop to me, that I am able to treat them thus leniently.

120. Are we then to infer from this that indigo is not as profitable to ryots as other crops?—My opinion decidedly is that indigo at present is not so profitable as other crops.

121. Then, is it to be understood that any disadvantage the ryot may be subjected to by the cultivation of indigo, is made up to him by his rents not being raised?—Such would be the case with reference to my estates.

122. Then, in what is called be-ilaka cultivation, the ryots would not have this compensation?—No.

123. Mr. Fergusson.] You have stated that you gave up a good number of ryotti balances, and that you charged no interest?—I have given up large sums of bad balances, and I have charged no interest.

124. Then every rupee of balances you gave up, was virtually so much paid in cash to the ryots?—It is a rupee out of my pocket, for which I have got no return.

125. Mr. Temple.] Do you find that the expenses of the law courts and of the police add to your expenses as a planter?—Considerably so; it is a very large item.

126. Do you then consider that if the courts and police were better regulated, a further sum would be saved, which might be available to remunerate the ryots?—It would be so much money saved.

127. Can you state the circumstances under which the expenses of the law courts and the police add so greatly to your outlay?—It may be that a number of bullocks are caught amongst the indigo, and on being carried off to the thanah, they may be rescued, and the factory servants beat by the villagers. Both sides put in complaints to the magistrate, an investigation by the police takes place, and a considerable sum is spent before the matter is finished.

128. Is there any other mode in which expenses of this sort are incurred?—A robbery may take place in one of your villages; some of the factory servants may be accused, and a great number of their names brought in as defendants or witnesses, and the magistrate orders an investigation. All these things cost money, and I could give a hundred different ways of squeezing money from the planter.

129. Are you frequently obliged to call in the aid of the police to get the indigo sown?—I have had differences with zemindars, but have not often had to call for the assistance of the police to get indigo sown.

130. Mr. Sale.] You stated in your evidence before the Colonization Committee that it was necessary to keep up a large establishment for the protection of your property; does that refer to to lattials?—No, I have never kept up any such establishment; I have had my godowns broken open, and have been obliged to keep peons to protect my property.

131. Do you consider the system of indigo cultivation as described by you, to have had a good moral effect upon the natives?—I do not think it has morally any bad effect upon them.

132. Supposing a Bengali to possess manliness of character, would the system of special indulgence, for the sake of getting a special service from him, be likely to destroy that manliness?—I cannot exactly say, but I can state that his outward circumstances appear improved. As to the effect on his moral character, I cannot venture an opinion.

133. Do you not think it would be better for a man to cultivate his own indigo and sell it in the best market?—Of course, in indigo or any thing else an open market is the best.

134. Do you think that the system of indigo cultivation at present existing is of the character as described in the last question?—If the ryot had a manlier and better moral character, and were more true to his engagements, he would cultivate his indigo crop better and protect it, and thereby benefit himself as well as the indigo planter from whom he takes advances.

135. President.] As you describe the system, do you think that with reference to the general rise in produce and the altered circumstances of the country, there ought to be any enhancement of the price now paid to the ryot?—I do not think it so remunerative a crop to the ryot with reference to the high prices of other crops; but it has its advantages in giving the ryots cash to a considerable amount, at a time when they are in want of money, for which cash they pay no interest, and which the planters may have to get at a large sacrifice; and I think that if the ryots were not interfered with or mischievously led to break their engagements, and if they evinced a more moral and manly character in keeping to those engagements, they might derive a profit from indigo, but not to the same extent as other produce.

136. Then you would still recommend that indigo be paid for as now at five bundles for the rupee?—I don't think it advisable for the Legislature to interfere; I would leave the capitalist and the ryots to make their own arrangements; and I would make it a misdemeanour in the ryot not fulfilling written engagements.

137. Do you think it would be a good thing if contracts were entered into for a short period, say for one, two, or three years, instead of being undefined?—No, the ryot is in a better condition now, with the power of returning his advances at the close of any season.

138. Mr. Fergusson.] Since you have been in Dacca, have your indigo operations brought land into cultivation and increased the revenues of Government, and tended to improve the condition of the people?—I think my operations have brought about these results to a considerable extent.

139. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] In the districts with which you are acquainted, when indigo is not sown, are not churs and waste lands brought into cultivation?—The present price of all country produce has a tendency to induce the ryots to settle and cultivate churs and all waste lands.

140. Would you mention any particulars in which the condition of the people have been improved as the result of your operations?—It appears to me that the people are better housed, better clothed, and in a more independent position in the neighbourhood of indigo factories than in more jungly parts which I have had occasion to visit.

141. Mr. Fergusson.] Are you aware that in other districts, the ryots are charged with stamp paper and seed, cart hire, cutting plants, and weeding, besides the advance of two rupees per beegah?—I am not aware of all these circumstances; I believe seed is charged in some concerns.

Baboo JOY CHAND PAUL CHOWDARI, of Ranaghaut in Nuddea, called in; and Examined on oath.

142. President.] DO you possess zemindaries and indigo factories in several districts?—I had several in Nuddea, Jessore, the 24-pergunnahs, and Hooghly.

143. How many concerns had you?—Thirty-two in my own estates, and I had shares besides in nine factories of the Katgarrah concern.

144. Was your cultivation both ryotti and nij?—Yes, I had about 5,000 beegahs nij; and ryotti 28,000 beegahs in my own estates, besides 11,000 beegahs belonging to the Katgarrah concern. The nij in this latter was very trifling, perhaps 100 beegahs, carried on in small spots of land, from which the ryots had absconded.

145. Describe the system of making advances?—Two rupees to 2 rupees 8 annas were given per beegah. The advances were given in my own presence and in that of my superintendent. I used to remain in the Mofussil for nine months. There was no interest charged on advances. Then there was another system of advances called shouk dadun, or "free advances;" according to which I got six bundles for the rupee, and the ryot was not charged for any thing else; all expenses being borne by me, such as those for seed and cutting and carting; only the cost of sowing and weeding was borne by the ryot. In the usual system of advances, not "free advances," I used to get eight bundles per rupee in Hooghly and Jessore, and eight and ten bundles in Nuddea. There was, further, a third system, under which the ryot received no advances in cash, but took seed, for which he was charged at the bazar rate. I am speaking of three years ago, since which time I have done no business. The ryot was always charged for seed 10 rupees per maund, whether it cost me one rupee or 90 rupees a maund.

146. Can you mention the average rent of a beegah of land cultivated by the ryot with indigo?—About 2 rupees 8 annas to 3 rupees on the average, because the indigo was sown on tobacco lands.

147. How many seers are necessary to sow one beegah?—Country seed $4\frac{1}{2}$ seers per beegah, and five seers of up-country seed, and six seers if the seed is of bad quality.

148. State the average produce in bundles, of a beegah?—It ranges from 12 to 24 bundles; the average produce would be 16 bundles.

149. Was it your custom to oblige the ryots to weed the lands, and what was your system of agricultural operations?—Yes, twice a year. The agricultural operations are as follows: in the month of Magh (January and February) the tobacco stumps were cleared out, and the land was ploughed twice, and on the fall of the first sowing shower, the land was again twice ploughed on the same day, the seed sown, and the mui, or bamboo ladder, passed over the land. The next morning the mui was again passed over the land. After that, on the plant reaching four inches in height, the first weeding took place, and then again when the plant was one foot high; and if, in the interim, insects attacked the plant, the bida or harrow was passed over the land, and it was re-sown in the bare spots. Then, on the plant being ripe, the operation of cutting commenced in the evening, and was carried on till 10 at night; and early the next morning the bundles were conveyed to the factory by boats and carts.

150. Can you give the produce of 100 or 1,000 bundles?—One hundred bundles will give 24 seers, and 1,000 will give six maunds; this is the average.

151. At the time you were carrying on this business, what price did your indigo fetch?—From 160 to 350 rupees; the average was 250 rupees.

152. Did the ryots give kabulyats, or agreements; and, if so, were they for a term of years or for undefined periods?—The be-ilaka ryots, i. e., those not on my estates, gave kabulyats; my own ryots were only entered in a book: some used to sign blank stamp papers.

153. At what time of the year were the accounts squared?—From Kartick to Posh (i. e., from the middle of October to the middle of January).

154. If a ryot had anything to receive, in whose presence was he paid?—In my own presence.

155. Can you state from memory whether most ryots had anything to receive or not?—Those under the shouk dadun system had something to receive; others might have to receive something very trifling, two to four annas.

156. How many ploughs are to be had for the rupee in your part of the country?—Formerly we could get six, then the number was increased to 16; this was three years ago. I cannot speak of any later period.

157. Was that the market price for labour?—No; the market price was eight ploughs for the rupee.

158. Are we to understand that the rate of 16 ploughs was a forced rate?—It was; everybody took at this rate, and so did I. The accounts, which were submitted to the mercantile houses, will show this.

159. From what you have described, the ryot would appear to derive no advantage from indigo?—No; the ryots would derive no advantage therefrom.

160. Was it the custom to make fresh cash advances every season?—It was so 15 years ago.

161. How were the accounts made up at the end of the year?—Taking a case of two beegahs of ryotti cultivation, the advances on this would be 4 rupees; 20 seers of seed, 5 rupees; dustoori for the factory, 2 annas in each rupee of advances, or four annas; stamps, 4 annas; expense of carting, at six bundles a cart, and 4 annas for each cart, 1 rupee 5 annas; total, 10 rupees 13 annas.

162. Besides the above, was there any system of fines?—Sometimes for cattle trespass, 6 annas per day per head of cattle. But these fines were not entered in the accounts, being levied then and there from the ryots.

163. How are the accounts closed with the ryots?—First, all the items of expense against the ryots are added up, and then the value of the indigo is deducted therefrom, say 32 bundles on the two beegahs at eight for the rupee = 4 rupees. Thus, according to the computation given above, there would remain against the ryot a balance of 6 rupees 13 annas; that is to say, debit 10 rupees 13 annas; credit 4 rupees; difference 6 rupees 13 annas. And, besides this the ryot has to pay dustoori to the amlah. The amount is not fixed; it might be 8 annas or 10 annas.

164. Can you state the expenses of nij cultivation per beegah?—The expenses include the following items:

	Rs.	a.	p.
Plough - - - -	1	8	-
Weeding - - - -	-	6	-
Choukidary - - -	-	6	-
Seed - - - - -	1	4	-
Cutting - - - -	}	8	-
Carting - - - -
Ground rent - - -	1	4	-
Total - - - -	Rs. 5	4	-

165. Were you in the habit of giving putnis and ijaras, or leases, to planters?—Yes, sometimes at the recommendation of others, and sometimes at the planters' own request.

166. Were you in the habit of taking a good price for your putnis, and a bonus for your leases?—When I gave putnis I received a pon, or price, and when I gave an ijara I received salami. The pon, or price, was from three times to four times, and one-half of the annual rental; and the salami was sometimes 4 annas, sometimes 8 annas, and sometimes 16 annas in the rupee; so that if I gave a lease of 5,000 rupees, I got occasionally a salami of 5,000 rupees.

167. Mr. Temple.] Were you in the habit of receiving a bonus from natives and Europeans?—When the leases were required for indigo, I took equally from natives and from Europeans.

168. But when it was not required for indigo, did you still take that rate of salami?—No; then I took only a little by way of nuzzur, or present.

169. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] When you had occasion to take leases for your own indigo purposes from others, did you then give salami?—I had to give as I took.

170. Mr. Temple.] What is the reason that a difference was made when land was required for indigo?—Because you wanted leases in order to get the ryots under your thumb.

171. Mr. Fergusson.] Did you ever, in any of your zemindaries, prohibit or prevent the ryots from engaging to sow on account of planters?—Yes, I did, in order to compel the planter to ask for a lease.

172. Mr. Temple.] Was that the only reason why you opposed the planter?—That was the only reason.

173. Did you suffer any inconvenience from your ryots cultivating indigo for the planters?—No, I did not.

174. President.] Were the ryots themselves at all unwilling to cultivate for the planters?—Twenty years ago the ryots were willing to cultivate indigo for the planters, but not since that date. Since then they have become unwilling.

175. What

Baboo
J. C. P.
Chowdari.
18 May
1860.

175. What is the cause of this?—Formerly the Calcutta houses were richer, and used to disburse more money in the mofussil. This was at the time of the Union Bank.

176. Was there any difference in the rate of advances then, compared with what it is now?—None.

177. Then how do you mean to say that the disbursements in the Mofussil were larger at the time of the Union Bank?—Because the sums charged to ryots were wiped off, and fresh advances given out every year.

178. Then if the same system were followed at the present time, would the ryots be as willing as they were then?—No, at that time a ryot with one plough was required to sow one beegah and a half, whereas now he has to sow six beegahs.

179. Then do you mean to say that the ryot is called upon to sow six beegahs instead of one, and that the aggregate cultivation has increased to that extent?—The aggregate cultivation has increased to a certain extent, and the proportion of ryotti has become larger than nij abad; that is to say, that now there is less nij abad and more ryotti.

180. If the ryot were now called upon to sow only one beegah, instead of six, would he be willing?—Yes, he might.

181. Then what is the reason why the ryot is unwilling to cultivate six beegahs as well as one and half beegah. If the cultivation were profitable for one beegah, would it not be more so for six?—The ryots cultivate a little, in order to be let alone, and because they cannot avoid it altogether, but they do as little as they can.

182. Then why was it not profitable to the ryot to sow one or two beegahs?—There is no profit at all. If the ryot is to cultivate indigo, he must give his exclusive attention to it for the whole year, to the neglect of other crops, which would give him a large profit of 50 to 100 per cent.

183. What rate per bundle do you consider would prove remunerative to the ryot?—Four bundles for the rupee under the system of shouk dadun.

184. Without the shouk dadun system, what numbers of bundles would remunerate the ryot?—Not even one bundle for the rupee would remunerate him.

185. Then do you consider that the shouk dadun system is necessary to satisfy the ryots?—Without the shouk dadun, it is not possible for them to be satisfied.

186. If the ryots have, for the last 20 years, been unwilling to sow indigo, how then have they gone on cultivating the plant up to the present time?—By numerous acts of oppression and violence, by locking them up in godowns, burning their houses, beating them, &c.

187. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] You have said that you prevented your ryots from sowing indigo to induce the planter to take putni and ijara leases from you, but did you prevent them from doing so on account of their having been ill-treated by the planters?—Yes, I have always told the planters not to practise oppression, but I was not listened to.

188. Mr. Fergusson.] For the sake of the ryots, did you ever refuse to grant a putni?—Now and then.

189. President.] YOU have had considerable acquaintance with indigo planting in Pubna and Jessore?—I have, as a magistrate, had opportunities of observing the system of indigo planting in those districts.

190. You have had opportunities of seeing how the law works towards the planters, ryots, and zemindars?—Yes.

191. You have had occasionally to interfere in quarrels between planters, zemindars, and ryots?—Yes, very often.

192. Can you give the classes of cases in which your interference was sought?—It was sought in cases where zemindars complained against planters for forcing cultivation in be-ilaka villages; in other cases where planters complained of zemindars for interfering with their cultivation in their ilaka villages; and also in various classes of disputes between planters and ryots regarding the cultivation of indigo.

193. In the first class of cases, did you find the ryots siding with the zemindars?—It was difficult to judge, as ryots generally are under the influence of zemindars; in fact, you can rarely know the real feeling of the ryot when brought into court; he then often speaks just as he is told.

194. Did you infer that some time before the disputes, ryots of be-ilaka villages had taken advances willingly?—Yes, generally.

195. When the disputes fairly came on, was it not difficult to judge of the ryots' real feeling, or how how they would have acted had they been left alone?—When the case came on before the magistrate, the ryots knew what to say; but when a sudden stoppage took place in cultivation which had been carried on regularly before, I referred it to the influence of the zemindars. I believe there can be no doubt of the fact that the ryots formerly took advances willingly.

196. Mr. Fergusson.] Can you define any period when the alteration in the willingness to take advances took place?—I don't think you can reduce it to a particular year. It has grown gradually.

197. Mr. Temple.] The Commission has been informed that the change took place since the breaking up of the Union Bank; that is, since less money circulated in the Mofussil. Are you aware of any change about that time?—I first went to Jessore about the time of the failure of the Union Bank, and therefore, from my personal experience, I have no means of contrasting the state of things before and after that period. I have no reason to believe that the failure of the Union Bank produced any change.

198. When you first went to Jessore, were the ryots willing to cultivate indigo?—Generally speaking they were perfectly willing, as far as I saw. There were cases where the zemindars did interfere with the cultivation of planters.

199. President.] You have mentioned a class of cases where zemindars encroached on planters, can you give an idea of these cases, as to how this interference was exercised by the zemindars?—The cases were most numerous in regard to belilaka villages, not to ilaka villages. When a zemindar and planter quarrelled, the zemindar endeavoured to obstruct the cultivation of indigo.

200. Do you consider it very expedient for the planters to get a talook or proprietary right if he can get it?—Undoubtedly.

201. Can you state your opinion as to the facilities existing for the acquirement of such rights?—It depends on the character of the zemindar. Most zemindars have an aversion to give up their authority and influence in a village by leasing it out to anybody; others are influenced by other motives. In Jessore a very large portion of the district was held by Ramrutton Roy, who was himself a large indigo cultivator, and was specially averse, probably on that account, to grant leases to others.

202. Then I suppose it required considerable pecuniary inducement for a zemindar to grant a putni lease?—Generally; but I should add that I have on several occasions effected arrangements between planter and zemindar, and found that the terms of the latter were not on the whole unfair.

203. Mr. Temple.] Have you any reason to believe that the zemindars troubled the planters with a view to compel them to get a lease, and to pay bonuses?—I cannot recollect any particular case in which that motive was traced out, but in some cases doubtless it had influence.

204. Do you know of cases in which the zemindars troubled the planter before the lease was taken, and then when a bonus was paid and the lease given, the result was subsequent quiet?—When a zemindar and planter quarrelled, numerous complaints of all kinds were laid before a magistrate. In such a case I found it beneficial to bring the planter and zemindar together, and to induce them to come to terms; the result of such a settlement was, usually, a lease of the village in which the planter cultivated indigo. Usually in such a settlement the bonus would be given to the zemindar in the form of an agreement to realise large nominal balances in the villages; the planter paying that amount in cash down, or, soon after, by instalments.

205. Do you know of any instances in which the planter recovered such balances?—I have known cases in which planters have recovered a portion, but I have no doubt that the greater portion was irrecoverable.

206. Have you any reason to suppose that the planter, on obtaining the lease, remitted these balances to the ryots on condition that they would cultivate indigo?—I have no means of answering that question. After a settlement was made, there was no need to bring further complaints before a magistrate.

207. Were the zemindars generally anxious or the reverse that the planter should take leases?—In ordinary cases I should say the zemindar was averse to giving a lease; but there are peculiar circumstances attending certain estates which made zemindars willing to get a planter to take the lease. Both zemindars and ryots trade on the personal influence of an Englishman in the Mofussil. If one zemindar has a dispute with another, he desires to have an Englishman to back him. If ryots disagree with the landlord, they are glad to have an Englishman to support them. In some cases a zemindar may be anxious to be an absentee proprietor, or he may have other private reasons, which would induce him to give a lease.

208. Mr. Fergusson.] Since you first went to Jessore did Ramrutton Roy increase in territorial influence?—I am not aware that he acquired any large additions to his landed property.

209. Was it not generally understood that he systematically opposed indigo planting with a view to extract bonuses?—I don't what was generally understood; but the impression on my mind was that such may have been one of the motives which influenced him.

210. Did he purchase large properties, or shares in other property, in your time?—I don't remember.

211. Was it not the case that when Ramrutton Roy had any influence, planters were oppressed until they came to his terms?—Usually.

212. Mr. Temple.] Had Ramrutton Roy many such transactions with planters?—Yes, a great many.

213. In those transactions did he secure a bonus or other such advantage?—He always secured certain advantages.

214. Could you say what those advantages were?—It was not always easy to know what the advantages were, but having the power in his hands no doubt he secured certain advantages. Generally a cash payment was one of the terms of the settlement.

215. Mr. Fergusson.] Has the practice of planters taking putnis and leases in these districts increased or decreased in your time?—As far as my experience goes, planters have always been anxious to increase their landed property, and have done so when they had the opportunity; and though I have no data on which to go, my general impression is, that the landed property of planters has been generally extended.

216. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Do you not know that affrays take place between zemindars and planters if the zemindars refuse to give give a lease to the planter?—When a planter endeavoured to extend his cultivation into villages where he has no lease, an affray was often the consequence.

217. Don't you think that was the cause of affrays with the planters and Ramrutton Roy, and zemindars of influence?—There may have been cases, but they were unusual, as far as I could judge. In fact, most of the concerns had balances in many villages in which they recently had had no cultivation, and therefore it was not easy for a magistrate to tell whether the planter was endeavouring to extend his cultivation, or to work on old balances.

218. Do the magistrates ever persuade or insist on zemindars to give leases to planters of their zemindaries, talooks, or villages?—I never heard of any case in which a magistrate ever insisted on such a lease, but I have myself in many instances obtained a settlement of long standing disputes by persuading the zemindars to create a lease in favour of the planter.

219. Mr. Fergusson.] Did you think that the interest of the ryots was improved or otherwise by such an arrangement?—The interest of the ryot always suffers when the zemindar and planter quarrel; therefore it always improves by the amicable settlement of their disputes.

220. President.] When a planter had acquired a permanent or temporary right in the lands, were you often called on to adjudicate in cases between him and his ryots, or to interfere in any way?—Scarcely ever.

221. Then you consider that once a dispute was terminated between planter and zemindar, things went on smoothly?—In such cases the creation of the lease did away with the cause of dispute, and once the planter got the ilaka of a village, he made his own terms with the ryots, and then disputes were very rare.

222. Had you many complaints in or out of court from ryots of villages, held by planters, that the cultivation of indigo was very irksome and burdensome?—The cultivation of indigo is less profitable to the ryots than the cultivation of other crops; therefore the ryots will not cultivate indigo, unless they receive advantages in other ways to compensate for such comparative loss.

223. Are you in a position to say why indigo cultivation is less profitable?—I understand that the indigo crop is a very precarious one.

224. Then is it your opinion that if left to themselves, the ryots would not cultivate indigo?—Undoubtedly, unless other advantages be offered in connexion with the cultivation.

225. Can you give us any general idea what those advantages are?—A ryot derives advantage in the cultivation of indigo by having in the planter a master or protector; he obtains loans from the factories when he is in difficulties. The loans are not directly connected with the advances, and are not charged with interest. If his cattle die, he gets a present from the planter, with which he may buy new cattle. He gets many little helps from the factory in the way of medicines, education for his children, &c., and, generally speaking, he acquires a friend who will support him against the oppression of others. That is the case with the good planter; I don't mean to say that it is so with all planters.

226. Then you consider the prospect of these advantages sufficient to counterbalance his dislike to a cultivation which you have admitted to be precarious and not profitable?—Yes, it is worth the while of the ryot to give up a portion of his cultivation to indigo, in order that he may have the planter for his protector.

227. Mr. Sale.] Do you not think that a good zemindar would do the same and help the ryots in all these modes which you have described?—No doubt; in my former answer, I was not contrasting the zemindar and the planter.

228. Suppose that an European took land for zemindary purposes only, would he not show the same kindness to the ryots as a European planter?—I presume so.

229. President.] Were you aware in the Mofussil of any general attempt by planters to increase indigo cultivation, and require two beegahs where only one was sown before?—No, of late years the extent of indigo cultivation has been on the decrease rather than increase, as far as I am aware.

230. Mr. Temple.] In estates where the planter has acquired the status of a zemindar, does he take less rent than would otherwise be taken from the ryots generally, in consideration of their sowing a portion of their lands with indigo?—I believe that that is the case usually.

231. Can you tell to what extent the rent would thus be virtually lowered?—The object of a planter is not to make money by his lease; he would be well content if he collected from the ryots the amount he has to pay to the zemindar. The object of the zemindar is frequently to collect as much as he can. Therefore, it is impossible to say how much the rents of the ryots would be lessened by a lease to the planter.

232. President.] But do you think the planter would ever take less than a zemindar would have taken, had he not given the planter a lease?—I should say so, not from knowledge of individual cases of what planters have collected from ryots, but because I know that the object of the planter is to keep on good terms with the ryots, and therefore he never desires to rack-rent them.

233. And you think it certain, or tolerably certain, that the indigo planter would not attempt to enhance the rates?—Yes, in those villages in which he desires to cultivate indigo.

234. Mr. Temple.] Within your knowledge, and generally speaking, do the planters offer protection and other collateral advantages to the ryots, to a greater extent than native zemindars would do?—Yes, a zemindar does not care to keep on good terms with any individual ryot, while that is the object of the planter.

235. You have stated that the indigo crop is precarious; is that so everywhere, or only in certain districts?—In those districts with which I am personally acquainted, i. e., Jessore and Pubna.

236. Why is the crop so precarious in those districts?—Because it depends on the fall of rain, and the rise of the rivers; the showers of rain in those districts are very uncertain. I have known of one instance where no rain fell from October to June.

237. Were there any spring sowings that year?—Yes, there were spring sowings, but very late ones, after the rains fell.

238. Mr. Fergusson.] Practically, are the ryots in Bengal tenants at will?—No doubt they are, practically.

239. And the landlord has the power practically to enhance the rent as far as the ryot can bear it?—I should say very often, because it is seldom worth the while of the ryot to oppose the landlord.

240. President.] Are there not frequent cases of decided opposition to enhancement of rents on the part of the ryots when brought into court by the zemindar?—Yes, very frequently. I am speaking of the time before Act X. of 1859 was passed.

241. And even before that Act, have you not heard of cases where the ryots stood out in civil suits against the zemindars who wished to enhance rent?—Yes, there were always many such suits.

242. You have proposed to re-enact part of Section 3, Regulation V., 1830, which had been abolished by Act XVI. of 1835?—Yes.

243. Would you explain the reasons and circumstances under which you made that proposal?—When Mr. Halliday, the late Lieutenant Governor, came up to Pubna in 1854, we had a good deal of conversation about indigo planting, and I explained to him then my opinion that that law ought to be re-enacted for the benefit of planters. He desired me to make a representation on the subject, and that is the report to which allusion is made.

244. Will you state the reasons why you considered the re-enactment of that law desirable?—The chief reason why I think that the passing of such law is desirable, is that the nature of the contract between a planter and a ryot is peculiar, and that a planter now has no sufficient remedy in case of a breach of the contract; the only remedy now is a suit in a civil court, and the result of such a suit would, in the great majority of cases, be an additional loss to the planter in the payment of costs without any positive advantage. Another reason is, that the cultivation of indigo is of a peculiar nature. It is absolutely necessary that the cultivator should sow the lands immediately after a fall of rain; if he loses that opportunity, perhaps he loses the whole crop of the year. It seems to me therefore requisite, that the ryot should be induced to take advantage of such opportunity by the fear of incurring some greater punishment than having to defend a regular suit. I think, also, that the cultivation of indigo is clearly a material general advantage to the country, and that it ought to be encouraged by all means that are not unfair to the ryots and proprietors of lands.

245. At the time you made the proposal for this re-enactment, you were not probably aware of the precise reasons for which the law, having been tried, was found inexpedient, and was rescinded?—No, I never saw the correspondence which led to the law being repealed; but I have given the reasons in my report which led me to believe that that law had produced no bad results. (Para. 5, page 28, Part I. of the Selection from the Records on Indigo Planting.)

246. Before you made that proposal, had you many complaints from planters that the ryots were in the habit of wilfully breaking their contracts?—That is the usual complaint of all planters, that ryots endeavour to evade their contracts after having received advances.

247. Were you aware of the precise form in which those contracts were drawn up, that is, were they for a certain term, or for undefined periods?—Generally speaking, contracts are for one year only, but I have known of cases where the period extended over more than one year; I never knew a case in which the period was left indefinite.

248. Mr. Temple.] Are the cases in which the contract is for a term exceeding one year, rare or frequent?—I have not a very clear remembrance of the proportion which one class bears to the other, but I should say the annual contracts are more frequent.

249. President.] Then, had you reason to believe that in the cases of annual contracts the accounts were regularly squared yearly, and that the ryot then entered into a fresh contract?—My belief is, that in such cases the accounts of ryots were made up yearly; but I have no personal knowledge of the internal working of indigo factories.

250. Mr. Temple.] Would that still more be the case in regard to contracts for terms exceeding one year?—That I am not able to answer, as I have only a general impression of the customs of indigo concerns.

251. President.] Then you have no reason to believe that whether the contract was for one year or a term of years, the ryot was other than a free agent?—My belief is that, generally, ryots enter willingly into indigo contracts.

252. Mr. Temple.] Have you known of any instances in which the ryots have been coerced, directly or indirectly, by the planter, to enter into contracts to sow indigo?—I have often heard cases spoken of, but I do not remember a single instance in which such coercion was proved before me as a magistrate.

253. Were formal complaints ever made before you by ryots or zemindars of such coercion having been used?—I have no doubt of such complaints having been made, but I cannot speak to individual cases.

254. You have mentioned that generally the accounts of the ryots with the planters were settled annually; in what way were these settlements made?—I have understood that the ryots went to the factory at the end of the manufacturing year, and that an adjustment of the accounts was then made.

255. In the event of a balance appearing against the ryot, how would that be recorded?—I apprehend that in most cases it remained as a balance, and was retained in the books of the factory.

256. Would the ryot, notwithstanding this balance, receive the full amount of advance for the next year?—I believe that that would depend upon circumstances. In villages in which the planter had no ilaka, he would, as I understand, never omit to pay cash advances to ryots; in his own villages there would be a more general adjustment of the two sides of the account, which would include the advances; and I should have drawn that distinction in my answer to the previous question.

257. You have stated that the ryot might be induced to evade fulfilment of his contract by the fear of some punishment greater than that of being cast in a civil suit at the instance of the planter; what is the nature of that greater punishment?—That answer was given with reference to the re-enactment of the old law, in which the punishment was imprisonment for one month, which is the punishment for breaches of contract laid down by Regulation VII., 1819.

258. Do the zemindars ever instigate the ryots to break their contracts?—I have no doubt they often do so.

259. Do you know of any reason which induces them to do so?—No reason in individual cases; the reasons are to be found in those causes of which we were talking some time ago.

260. Do

F. L.
Beaufort,
Esq., c. s.

19 May
1860.

260. Do you know whether the ryots take advances from planters, in order to pay rents to the zemindars?—The reason at which the planter usually makes his advances is, that in which the largest kist or instalment of the year is under collection, and it is also the time when the ryots want money to expend on their poojas. With reference to these objects, ryots are always glad at that time to obtain cash.

261. In reference to your opinion, that the cultivation of indigo is of material advantage to the country, in what way do you consider that that advantage accrues?—The two great advantages are—First. That you have a number of Englishmen scattered over the Mofussil. Second. That the general commerce of the country is benefited by the large outlay of indigo concerns. With reference to the expenditure of money, I remember when I was at Pubna, making inquiries regarding the flux and reflux of money in the district, the result of those inquiries was very unsatisfactory, because, though I discovered that large sums of money found their way into the district, I was unable to ascertain the means by which they passed out of it; and I was led to the conclusion that it was dissipated in small sums, by which the poorer classes benefited. The larger portion of the money was cash imported by indigo planters.

262. What other crops are cultivated in the Pubna and Jessore districts?—Most of the cereals, jute, mulberry, &c.

263. Are the more valuable crops, such as sugar-cane, cotton, and tobacco, largely cultivated?—Sugar-cane is not largely cultivated, because they have the date cultivation; tobacco and cotton are not largely cultivated, because the soil is unfit for them.

264. Then is not the cultivation of indigo beneficial, as contributing to prevent the over-production of cereals, and to prevent the markets being glutted with such articles as rice, jute, and the like?—I have no reason to believe that if all the land now sown with indigo were given up to such crops, there would be any over-production; but indigo cultivation is of use in this way, that it occupies some descriptions of land which are scarcely fit for other crops.

265. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] You mean only chur-lands?—Generally.

266. Mr. Temple.] On the whole, do you consider that the people generally, and the ryots in particular, in the Jessore and Pubna districts, benefit materially by the existence of indigo concerns in those districts?—On the whole, that is my decided opinion.

267. Does that benefit exist up to the present time in those districts, as much as ever?—As far as I know, it does. The benefit which I ascribe to Englishmen living in the district still of course remains; but of late years the ryot has become richer, and is less dependent on adventitious assistance.

268. Can you mention any symptoms of improvement observable in the external condition of the ryots in those districts?—Generally speaking, I did observe improvements in Jessore while I was there; that is observable in the general style in which the ryot lived, the better clothes that he wore, the improvement of his food, and probably the superiority of his thatch. During the time that I was magistrate of Jessore, the ryots began to realise more largely the profits arising from the date cultivation; consequent upon that, there was every perceptible improvement in the condition of the ryot; and in many villages which had been small and poor, large homesteads crept up and the ryots got fat.

269. Were those ryots who cultivated indigo better off than, or as well off as, or worse off than other ryots generally?—Quite as well off, and in many places better off.

270. Have you ever known instances in which indigo ryots have been worse off than other ryots?—I have known instances where the ryots have been so much harassed by the quarrels regarding indigo between planters and zemindars, or planters and planters, and have suffered so much in house and property, that they have left the village. I have known other cases in which the oppression of the planter has nearly depopulated a large tract of country; but as I have also known cases in which ryots have suffered similarly from the zemindars, I cannot say that the one set of ryots is worse off than the other.

271. On the whole, were instances of such oppression on the part of the planters rare or frequent?—Very rare, of course, because they are suicidal in their effects.

272. Has the ryot, of late, within your knowledge, become unwilling to cultivate indigo, more so than he was before?—I have no personal knowledge of the state of things within the last five years.

273. Can you form any idea of what might be practically done to render the cultivation of indigo more profitable to the ryots; that is, by the planters?—My belief is that the disinclination of the ryots to cultivate indigo now, is because the crop is unproductive; it is, as I said before, precarious, and therefore on the average it does not yield profit. Any steps therefore which a planter might adopt to ensure more secure profit would have that effect. My general opinion is, that hitherto the planter has taken upon himself too little of the risk, and left too much of the risk to the ryot.

274. Can you mention what precise arrangement the planter might make to reduce the risk of the ryot?—In the case of almost any other crop the ryot can reckon with almost certainty on some profit; in the case of indigo it might occur, but in bad years it very often occurs that the crop yields no profit at all. Therefore it is necessary the planter should make arrangements which would ensure to the ryot an equal average profit to what he would receive from the cultivation of other crops. I have not sufficient acquaintance with the management and working of an indigo concern to suggest the nature of the arrangements which would produce that effect; but I have no doubt that the object could be obtained by settlement by the planter independently of the mere payment of cash advances, and of the price of the plant produced at the vats.

275. President.] You have mentioned date cultivation having largely increased in Jessore; it is carried on without advances, is it not?—I never heard of any advances being made, nor would the nature of the crop admit of such; but the ryot is at liberty to sell the produce in the best market he can find.

276. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Don't you think that many ryots would be thankful to pay off in cash the amount of balances due against them in the factory books to get out of the planters' hands?—I think there are many cases in which an old balance standing against a ryot's ryot's name may serve as an inducement to that ryot to take fresh advances, and I believe that in some such cases a ryot would willingly pay the balance in order to take his name out of the books if the planter would receive the money.

277. Mr. Temple.] But could not the ryot in such a case obtain remedy in a court of law, that is, supposing him to be in a position to pay the money?—There is a special law which gives the remedy to the ryot. I think it is the latter part of Regulation V. 1830, which gives the ryot the power of going into court and demanding an account, but I have known very few cases in which this law has been put in force.

278. Can you tell me what prevents the ryots from availing themselves of this law, supposing them anxious to get out of the hands of the planters, and able to pay the money?—There are several causes. When he is not too poor, a ryot is usually exceedingly disinclined to part with his cash, but in most cases in which his old balances exist, the nominal account has run on so many years that he cannot afford to pay off the whole sum demanded, and he has no means of disproving the claim to the whole amount.

279. Mr. Sale.] Is it not very difficult for a poor man to get justice in the Mofussil courts?—Certainly not; quite the contrary. It is always difficult for a poor man to get justice against a rich man all over the world, but it is not more difficult for the poor to get justice in the Mofussil courts than in courts elsewhere.

280. Mr. Temple.] If a ryot were able and willing to pay the balance against him, and were to sue the planter for release from the whole transaction under the summary law, would he have any special trouble or difficulty in obtaining justice?—No, he would have no special trouble, because, as far as I remember, the law is a summary law, and the process of putting it in force is simple and cheap, but he would find great difficulty in disproving any portion of the claim made against him, and therefore it would not be worth his while to go into court unless he were prepared to pay the whole of the demand.

281. Mr. Sale.] Have you any knowledge of the practice of the planters in the districts with which you are acquainted, forbidding their ryots from going into a court of justice?—I have known cases in which planters have forbidden their ryots to go to the regular courts for the adjustment of disputes between themselves and other ryots, but of course that would not apply to cases in which the ryot makes up his mind to oppose the planter, because then he is prepared to brave the effects of the planter's anger.

282. You don't know, then, of any general custom or rule of this kind?—No.

283. Mr. Fergusson.] You know that the planters generally decide disputes between their ryots which are referred to them, and hold manorial courts?—Yes, I believe every planter devotes a portion of every day to hearing and adjusting disputes brought before him by his ryots.

284. Have you objected to such a practice as a magistrate?—No, never.

285. Mr. Temple.] In reference to the proportion of risk to be borne by the planter and ryot respectively, do you consider that the profits of a ryot, in what is called a bumper season, make up for his losses in a defective season?—Usually it has done so hitherto, with the exception of recent years, in which there has been a succession of bad seasons in Jessore.

286. Do you consider that if by any arrangement between the ryot and planter, the ryot was secured from risk of loss, he would be willing to sow indigo?—I know no reason why he should not.

287. If by such arrangement a moderate profit could be secured, would he then be anxious to cultivate indigo?—The cultivation of indigo is certainly not more difficult than other crops, and does not entail more labour; in some cases it is more easy, consequently there is no reason why he should not be glad to cultivate it.

288. Can you form any idea of what remuneration ought to be ensured to the ryot in order to make him willing to cultivate indigo?—I can give no precise reply.

289. Can you suggest any special improvement in the law which would improve the relation between ryots and planters, and make the former more willing to cultivate indigo, of course in addition to the alteration suggested in your Report of 1854?—I don't remember anything at this moment to which I have not adverted in that Report.

290. Mr. Sale.] Is it your opinion that the ryots seek advances with the intention of breaking their contracts?—I believe that in the great majority of cases ryots intend to fulfil their contracts when they take advances, but on the other hand I have known many cases in which I had reason to believe that the ryots had taken advances without any such intention.

291. What do you consider to be the cause of a ryot taking advances, intending all the time to break his contract?—It may be the fraud of the individual. It often is the case that a zemindar is not averse to the ryots taking advances, but is unwilling that he should work them out.

292. Mr. Temple.] What advantage would it be to a zemindar that the ryot should not work out his advances?—The solid advantage to a zemindar is, that the ryots cultivate other crops which produce greater profits in the land which would have been given up to indigo, the profits of which are pocketed by the planter; and when the ryots have only taken their advances, as much pecuniary profit has gone into the village as would probably go there if the contracts were fulfilled.

293. Mr. Sale.] If it is believed that under the fear of the zemindar, or the pressure of poverty, in the majority of cases the ryot fails to fulfil his contract, is it just or wise to treat him as a criminal?—I have always understood that crime is not justified by compulsion or the influence of others. There is a great difference between punishing a man for breach of contract and treating him as a criminal.

294. Mr. Fergusson.] Is it not according to the laws of England that in special trades, breaches of contract of service or otherwise are punished as a misdemeanor by magistrates?—I believe it is so in cases when the relation between the parties is that of master and servant, but in this country there is a special law which gives the magistrate power to award punishment for breach of contract when the relation is not so confined.

295. President.] Do you consider the case of master and servant parallel to that of the ryot who contracts and the planter who advances money?—Setting aside the usual use of words, I should say very nearly so.

296. Mr. Sale.] In one of your previous answers you stated that a month's imprisonment was sufficient sufficient to deter ryots from breaking their contracts; are you aware that ryots are now undergoing more than a month's imprisonment rather than sow indigo?—I have no knowledge of what is going on now beyond what I derive from the newspapers, but I believe that a ryot may be induced to undergo a much longer term of imprisonment than one month when the influence of others is exerted over him.

297. So far as you have observed the moral effect of indigo planting in Bengal, do you consider that effect to be good?—I don't know that I ever considered it in that point of view, but anything that leads to quarrels has a deteriorating effect.

298. Mr. Temple.] In so far forth as indigo planting does not lead to quarrels, do you see anything in the system that has a morally deteriorating effect on the ryot?—Independently of quarrels and their consequences, I don't know any other way in which the system would have a bad moral effect.

299. Do you consider that there is anything in the condition of the police or the criminal law which operates injuriously on the interests of indigo planting or of indigo planters?—I am not aware that there is any peculiar defect in the law or the system of police which affects indigo planting more particularly than any other trade; but I have known indigo concerns expend very large sums of money in law expenses; for instance, I know that one concern spent 24,000 rupees in one year in law suits of all kinds, and, no doubt, when such expenses are incurred the profits are virtually decreased. But, generally speaking, the gross amount expended in prosecuting cases before the police and the courts of the magistrates does not bear any large proportion to the general outlay of the concern.

300. Considering that the indigo crop is very precarious, that any failure on the part of the ryot to sow immediately after a fall of rain would endanger the crop, that ryots are apt occasionally to fail in such sowing, that on account of such disputes police assistance has sometimes to be called in; that, in order to ensure the prompt fulfilment of such contract, criminal process is, in your opinion, necessary; do you consider that indigo planting would be peculiarly liable to be affected more than other kinds of cultivation by any defect that might be existing in the police administration?—I should say that the main interest of indigo planting is more liable to be affected by a corrupt police than any other cultivation, on account of the reasons mentioned in the question. No doubt a bad planter would occasionally find his advantage in the corruption of the police. But to one who carries on his business honestly, a good police is a material benefit, and a corrupt police might lead to his ruin.

301. Could you say the same of any person, European or native, connected with the raising of any other products besides indigo?—There is no cultivation more extended, or on which more capital is expended, than that of indigo, and there is no other system of cultivation which can be referred to as parallel to that of indigo. I have no hesitation in saying that the interests of planting depend materially on a good police.

302. Mr. Fergusson.] Is it the custom or practice that the contract of a ryot with a planter is personal to the ryot, or descends on his death to his heirs, if the heirs take up the tenure which he held?—In practice, I believe, that these contracts are supposed to descend from father to son, but, of course, such an idea would not be allowed in any court.

303. Mr. Temple.] Do you think such inheritance of liability is ever practically enforced by the planter against the ryots?—Practically, I have no doubt the planter holds it in terrorem over the ryot.

304. President.] Is it not practically the case that the son sows because the father has sown before him, leaving unliquidated balances?—The practical effect is, that the son sows because he believes that he is responsible for his father's debts.

305. Mr. Fergusson.] If a son adopts the tenure and takes the property, would he be liable in law for the debts?—A son is liable for the proved debts of the father to the extent of the value of the property which he obtained by the succession.

306. President.] Have you not found great assistance from planters in making roads?—Undoubtedly, they have assisted me in funds, and in the superintendence of the construction of roads and bridges.

307. Mr. Temple.] Have you received assistance from the planters in managing the districts?—I have received great assistance from many planters in various ways in connexion with the administration of the police.

308. President.] WILL you inform the Commission in what districts you have had experience as an indigo planter?—In Moorshedabad for the last 32 years on my own account, and in silk for the last 22 years; during that time I have managed factories on account of other persons in Jessore and Kishnaghur.

309. Will you state broadly your system in your own factory?—My own system is nij cultivation to the extent of 7,000 beegahs. I hold the lands in my own zemindary, in my own putni talook, and in mourusi potta, and some lands with no potta. I cultivate these lands by my own work-people, and my own ploughs, and I hire ploughs from the villagers when I require them. I have 250 ploughs, and about 700 bullocks.

310. Will you inform the Commission in detail, of the expense of your cultivation per beegah, including all charges?—Of these 7,000 beegahs I do not cultivate more than 6,000 with indigo. The expenses are from four rupees eight annas to five rupees per beegah, consisting of ploughing, sowing, weeding, cutting, manufacturing, and rents. My out-turn was on an average for 25 years 225 maunds. Three hundred of the other 1,000 beegahs I had in mulberry, and the other 700 beegahs in kor, or thatching, grass lands, and grass for cattle. I cultivate no rice; sometimes I sow cold weather crops with indigo, i. e., I sow cold weather crops with my October indigo, and lands that are not sown in October I keep ploughing till I sow indigo in the spring. I keep from 300 to 350 boona coolies, and of course am obliged to keep choulkidars and other servants to look after the cultivation.

311. Could you give the Commission the details of the remuneration of labour?—I pay my boona coolies from two to three rupees a month, and sometimes I have occasion to hire desi or local coolies from the village, who receive the same rate of remuneration; ploughs I hire at nine and 10 per rupee according to the time of the year; day labourers are also paid at the same rate.

312. Do you keep sowing the same lands every year with indigo, or do you try rotation?—I keep sowing the same lands every year with indigo, for this reason: my lands are chur-lands, and go mostly under water every year.

313. Do you give your boona coolies any hutting?—I give my coolies huts rent-free, and each man about a beegah of land for his own cultivation; and I allow them to keep cattle, goats, &c., to graze on my lands.

314. Are you aware of any considerable rise in the price of labour and food?—There has been a little in labour, and a very great rise in that of food, particularly rice; I have been obliged to raise my rates a little.

315. Do you consider you can get out of your boona coolies and ploughmen a good day's labour?—Yes, I can, if they are properly looked after, i. e., if their work is given to them ticka, or by the job, early in the morning, they will do it well and quickly, but there must be supervision. I have an amin and a burkundaz in each field for this purpose. I have only six amins for the 6,000 beegahs.

316. Do you consider it absolutely essential that the fields you sow with indigo in spring, should have remained fallow previously?—Yes, I invariably do so, I prefer to keep cultivating my lands to sowing them with cold weather crops.

317. In which department of cultivation did you find good supervision most necessary, in ploughing or weeding?—There must be good supervision in both ploughing and weeding; there is a great deal of weeding on chur-lands.

318. Could you extend your nij cultivation?—I could; but I should be obliged to rent high lands, which are very expensive to cultivate; my factory is Ramnagur on the Bhagirutti, in Moorshedabad.

319. Mr. Temple.] If chur-lands grow up in the neighbourhood, would you bring them under indigo cultivation?—Yes, provided the land were suitable; and most chur-land is suitable.

320. President.] You have stated that you hold the rights of the talookdar, have you also obtained the tenant or jote right?—I held the tenant right before I held the zemindary.

321. As jotedar, had you under tenants; and what are the local terms?—Occasionally. I have still under me the ryots known as koorfa.

322. Had you much difficulty in obtaining the talookdari rights?—I had to wait for an opportunity to negotiate for the purchase.

323. Were you called on to give bonuses?—I had to pay consideration money in all cases; it was light, not heavy.

324. Could you state how you got possession of the jote or tenant rights previous to the estate?—The jote lands belonged to the factory 20 or 30 years before I had it, that is, perhaps, 50 or 60 years ago.

325. When you were still only a jotedar, was any undue pressure exercised on you, with a view to the enhancement of rent?—Zemindars tried to exact a higher rate of rent than they were entitled to, and I was sued for the rent of lands not belonging longing to their zemindary. They would not often try me in court, but they obstructed indigo cultivation, that is to say, they sent laltials. They did not let loose cattle on my fields, i.e. the zemindars did not, but that was an every day occurrence by ryots; I did not submit to the exactions of the zemindars, and have been successful generally both in court and out of it, save in one particular case. In that case, lands that I had held for 25 years from one zemindar were decreed to another, i.e. the zemindary right was decreed to another zemindar, and in the course of the case the revenue survey was set aside, and I was ordered to pay rent to the judgment-holder or decreeedar, by the court, from the date of the institution of the suit, which was about seven years. Having already paid the rents to the person whom I had always dealt with as the proprietor, I took every step I could and pleaded the Statute of Limitation, but without effect. The contest between the two zemindars was not a family contest, but a dispute about the line and boundary. Putting this aside, I have generally been successful in resisting encroachments or exactions, and have for the last 25 years not had above 10 cases in all the courts, revenue, civil, or criminal, connected with the Ramnagar factory. I believe my servants were fined only once, and that was for taking possession of my own lands decreed to me under Act IV of 1840; my servants turned the tenants out, and they were fined by the same magistrate who decreed over the lands to me. I recollect another case in which my servants were fined for thrashing a police peon, he never having thrashed the peon. I have never been fined myself in any court; I have had very little to say to the police on my own factories.

326. Could you state what is the rental of your nij lands?—From eight to twelve annas a beegah.

327. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Will you state what increase you have given to your labourers?—Whereas I was in the habit of getting 16 coolies per rupee, I am now obliged sometimes to take only eight.

328. Since when was this increase given them?—This last year.

329. Mr. Temple.] Supposing the cost of cultivation per beegah is Rs. 4. 8 a., minus 12 annas for rent, could you say what proportion of five rupees went for labour?—I could not say without going into minute calculation. I get something from the sale of hor thatching grass, fisheries, and grass indigo lands, say 2,000 rupees a year.

330. Mr. Fergusson.] Is the whole of the cultivation of Ramnaghur nij?—At present the whole.

331. What is the average yield per beegah in bundles?—We don't look much to the bundles in nij; we could tell the price given for cutting 100 bundles, and we could tell how many bundles go to a vat.

332. Do you think you could carry on the cultivation of your concern without the importation of boona coolies?—I could not; the reason is, that the Mussulmans in my part of the country won't beat vats, though they will 10 miles off; I can get them to do anything else, except at times, when they want to look after their own crops.

333. Do you make advances to the boona coolies?—No advances, but when I first brought a portion of them from the jungle, about 25 years ago, I was obliged to make them a small advance.
72—I.

334. The prices of indigo for the last three years have been rather higher than formerly?—I have sold mine for upwards of 200 rupees for the last three years.

335. In previous years they were considerably lower?—I have sold as high as 300 and as low as 125 rupees per factory maund.

336. At 150 or 160 rupees, would this pay you?—No, it would hardly pay at that rate, even on my own capital.

337. How far is your factory situated from the magistrate?—I have to deal with no less than three of them. My factory is 20 miles from Berhampore, about 10 miles from Cutwa, and about 12 miles from Jummukandy.

338. Mr. Temple.] Do you consider that the establishment of a sub-division near your factory would affect your operations?—Yes, it might or might not; it would depend on the individual; if he was up to his work he would do me no harm.

339. But it would not be necessarily prejudicial to your interest?—It would not.

340. Mr. Sale.] Do you anticipate any difficulty in carrying on your nij cultivation?—I do not.

341. Do you find any dislike to indigo cultivation on the part of the people?—Quite the reverse.

342. President.] You have led the Commission to believe that your factory as well as your pottas are of long standing, would there be a difficulty in starting such a factory, on such a scale of nij cultivation, in another part of the country?—It would be difficult, if not impossible; but where there existed a factory you might watch your opportunity, and by giving salamis and buying up jotes you might extend nij cultivation, as opportunities offered.

343. Mr. Temple.] That is, if you found lands disengaged, and the zemindar gave you pottas, could you establish nij cultivation?—You could, by taking the lands from the zemindars in pottas.

344. Then the fact that tenures are not obtainable is the only obstacle to nij cultivation being indefinitely extended?—It could only be extended to advantage on chur-lands, or lands easy of cultivation; you might try it on high lands, but it would not answer; it would be too expensive. It will only answer when the rates of rent are also low, and labour cheap.

345. Is the cultivation generally known as ryotti cultivation carried on on chur-lands, or on village lands?—On both; I could not state the proportion; they would be nearly equal throughout all Beagal.

346. If nij cultivation on village lands does not pay the planter, do you consider that it would pay the ryot?—I don't think it does generally on high lands, but still the ryot is differently situated from the planters. He does everything himself; he weeds, ploughs, and his children assist him.

347. Then as a ryot does all the work for himself, work for which a planter would have to pay hire, might not the cultivation on high lands pay the ryots, although it does not pay the planter?—It might, possibly, under the difference of circumstances; for instance, in Kishnaghur and Jessore, the ryots in many places get a crop of indigo seed as well as indigo, from the same plant later in the year; that is to say, often the plant is cut in July and August; it sprouts up again and gives a crop of seed in November and December. In all such cases indigo pays the ryots.

348. President.] Besides your own concern of Ramnagur,

W. G. Rose,

1860.

W. G. Rose,

1860.

Ramnagur, in what districts have you been a manager?—I was deputed by the Union Bank as a general manager to take charge of the Big Union in Kishnaghur and Jessore, comprising Katchikatta concern, Katli concern, Sindoori and Golder concerns, and Bijooli for a season, i. e., from 1st September 1846 to 31st August 1847.

349. Would you give us a general outline of the system you found prevalent there?—Generally ryotti, hardly any nij. I should say the former was 50,000 beegahs, and the latter perhaps not more than 1,000 nij.

350. Did you attempt to extend the cultivation, or did you maintain it as before?—I maintained them at the same rate as before.

351. Will you give us a general idea of the ryotti system?—I cannot say exactly the amount of rent paid by the ryots; they had their own khooḍ kasht lands at a fixed and low jumma. In the month of October the ryots came into the factory, settled their accounts for the past year, and received advances in the presence of the European assistants. We then defined the quantity of land to be cultivated by each ryot; the locality was pointed out afterwards, and marked with the factory mark; an amin or servant of the factory did this. The lands having been marked out, as soon as the cold weather crops were taken off the ground, they were cultivated with indigo. The cold weather crops on our ryotti land were not prohibited. Then they were again ploughed for indigo, and sown when the first shower of rains fell. Weeding took place in due time wherever it was required, generally once. It is generally not 50 beegahs in 1,000 beegahs that require weeding twice. My impression is, that the plant was cut and brought in by the ryot. I have no distinct recollection on that head; we paid for it at the rate of six bundles for the rupee. The seed was charged, I think, at four rupees a maund. It was sown at three sears per beegah (desi seed). I think that formerly eight bundles of plant might be had for the rupee.

352. During the operations you have described, did you find it necessary to send men to see that the process of cultivation was duly performed by the ryot?—It was necessary to send men to see that the ryot ploughed, weeded, sowed, &c. at the proper time. The men whose office it was to see to this are called khalassies, amins, takidgirs, and so forth.

353. Did you never have complaints from the ryots that those persons oppressed them in asking for money?—I don't recollect any such thing, but from my knowledge of the native character it is possible they did. A good deal, however, depends on the character of the planter. If he was open to receive complaints, the servants would not so readily try to commit oppression.

354. Mr. Temple.] Is it not the custom of the planters generally to listen to complaints?—Less or more; but much depends upon the planter's knowledge of the language.

355. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Are planters generally accessible to the ryots?—I think in most cases they are.

356. Out of every rupee debited to the ryot in the factory accounts, how much does he actually receive?—I believe he gets every rupee; but the factory servants get something afterwards, of which the planter knows nothing.

357. Do you know that the factory servants harass the ryots, and extort money from them?

—They do sometimes; but that will also depend upon the planter. If the planter is up to his work and will listen to the complaints of ryots, his servants will act accordingly.

358. Is the cultivation of indigo profitable, or otherwise, to the ryots?—I think the cultivation of indigo will pay the ryots on chur-lands, but for high lands rice will pay better; I mean rice at the present high prices.

359. Mr. Fergusson.] When rice was selling at half the present price, would indigo not have answered as well at the time?—The ryots don't take to the cultivation of indigo so kindly as to that of rice; I don't think they ever did. The high lands that have given a cold weather crop, will also give a crop of aus or early rice on such lands. They prefer sowing rice to indigo now, but there is a large portion of low chur-lands in Bengal on which the ryot cannot sow rice; they can sow cold weather crops and indigo along with them. They lift the cold weather crops in February, while the indigo remains till June and July. They could not sow early rice on these lands, because such lands would be entirely submerged by the end of July. They take kindly to indigo cultivation on such lands.

360. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Was the cultivation of indigo on high lands ever profitable to the ryot?—I have stated that it must have been profitable where a crop of seed was also obtained. In other cases, I don't think it could have been profitable; still it might have answered the ryot's purpose, because he had some other advantage in holding advances from a factory. He had the protection of the planter, and almost always got money without interest when he most wanted it, and could not get it in any other quarter without heavy interest.

361. Do the ryots generally take advances willingly from the factory?—They will take them readily when they require money.

362. And if a ryot once takes an advance, will he, in his whole lifetime, be able to pay off his debt?—That will depend on his own exertions.

363. Mr. Sale.] Do you think the ryot has a fair chance of doing so?—I think he has. He enters into a contract to cultivate a certain number of beegahs of lands; he takes an advance of a certain amount for that purpose, and engages to give a certain quantity of plant at a rate stated in the contract. If he performs his agreement, then his debt is discharged, and he is free.

364. This being your statement of the case, have you known of any such cases in which a ryot has fulfilled this engagement?—I have known of cases, when the ryot cleared his advance by indigo. In all such cases a fresh advance is given, if the ryot is willing to take it; and I have known of cases where he had cleared it by cash payment, and has got free.

365. President.] Do you think in the generality of cases the ryot gets clear, or does he sow on from one generation to another?—I think he sows on from one generation to another, where the debt has never been paid off.

366. Do you think, in the concern you superintended, the majority of ryots had recently taken advances for the first time, or were they sowing on the agreements of long standing?—I think they were ryots who had sown for the concern for some time before.

367. During the year you were manager, you no doubt inspected the kabulyats; can you state what what the terms were?—My recollection is that they were from year to year; but I have seen habulyats or agreements for two or three years.

368. Mr. Sale.] According to your understanding of the contract entered into between the cultivating ryots and the planter, is it your opinion that the ryot is bound to cultivate a certain number of beegahs of land, and also to supply a certain number of bundles of indigo; and that having cultivated the land, and failed to raise the indigo, he is still held bound to supply these bundles?—He is bound to supply a certain number of bundles, according to the advance he takes; and if he fails to do that, there will be a balance against him.

369. Mr. Temple.] If the season is a good one, is not the ryot credited with the additional bundles he may produce?—Most decidedly.

370. Mr. Sale.] Is he credited by the market price, or by the rate fixed by the factory?—He is credited by the rate fixed in his contract, which is the only market price in that part of the country.

371. Mr. Temple.] Were not ryots so credited in the Katchikatta concern?—I should say always, when they gave more indigo. That would however entirely depend upon the season; if a good season, the ryot profited by it, if not, he had a balance against him.

372. President.] Then, practically, is not all the risk with the ryot?—The risk is with the ryot, no doubt.

373. Mr. Sale.] Do you think that in an ordinary season, a ryot, fairly cultivating his lands, can supply as much indigo as would cover his advances and pay his rent?—The rent is more than covered by the cold weather crops which the ryot gets; then the advances of the ryots are, generally speaking, two rupees a beegah; a beegah of land properly cultivated is capable of yielding from 8 to 30 bundles, 30 being a very outside calculation. Then if the ryot only agrees to give six bundles for the rupee, I think he has a fair chance of clearing his advances if he works honestly; they never, however, cultivate the full quantity of land which they engage to do. A Bengali ryot very seldom keeps his engagement in anything if he can help it. I have made advances to ryots for other purposes, i.e. for silk, and I have never yet found them keep to their engagement.

374. Mr. Temple.] Then, speaking generally and on the whole, does the ryot produce enough of indigo to cover his advances?—I think, generally speaking, he does not, for the causes I have above stated.

375. Then is he generally in debt to the factory?—Consequently he must be in debt to the factory.

376. Then, notwithstanding such debt, would the factory go on advancing at the same rate, viz., two rupees a beegah?—No, not making fresh advances in cash to the full amount of two rupees. The advances would then consist partly of the old balance, and partly of cash.

377. But supposing the debt was increasing, so as to equal the full two rupees a beegah, what would the factory do then?—It would make no fresh advance; or the factory might make an advance of a trifle for the purpose of assisting the ryots.

378. But if the ryot got no fresh advance, would he still be expected to sow?—He would be expected to sow a certain quantity of land, but not the full quantity.

72—I.

379. If he then failed to sow, would the factory proceed against him for the recovery of the debt, or what course would be pursued?—The debt would stand against him in the factory books. We hardly ever proceed against a ryot in the court. These debts are very often compromised, i.e. half the debt is often forgiven, and in some cases the whole debt is, in order to induce the ryot to go on cultivating.

380. Do such unrecovered debts exist to a large extent?—To a very large extent.

381. Does the ryot ever pay up an old debt, and obtain an acquittance from the factory?—I do not think a ryot is ever able to pay up an old debt.

382. What is the reason that advances are made in October, when the sowing is not to take place till April or May?—The factory accounts are, generally speaking, made up in October. The ryots at that time of the year have got to pay their rents, and are generally in want of money to give their children new clothes for the pooja, and they have to pay other expenses.

383. Then is the advance given to enable the ryot to arrange for the cultivation of indigo, or is it given by way of general accommodation?—The advance is given for the purpose of enabling the ryot to arrange for the cultivation of indigo, and also by way of accommodation.

384. But is the ryot put to any preliminary expense at that time for the cultivation of indigo?—He is obliged to plough his lands, pay his rents, and procure seed for his cold weather crops. In some cases, for indigo and cold weather crops.

385. Does the agreement to cultivate ever consist of stamp paper left blank with the planter, and merely containing the ryot's signature or mark?—Yes, it is often done. The nature of the agreement is explained to the ryot, before he puts his mark or signature.

386. Can you form any idea what the cost of indigo cultivation is to a ryot per beegah, exclusive of the value of his labour?—There is nothing, save seed and land rents.

387. President.] You have stated that the ryot does by his own labour what the planter is obliged to pay for; do you not think that the ryot's labour, his bullocks, and his ploughs, represent his capital; in other words, do you not think that time and labour are money?—No doubt, to a certain extent. A ryot only devotes his time and his labour to indigo, where he can do nothing else. He always gives his attention to his own field first, and his superfluous time to indigo.

388. Mr. Temple.] But are there not certain charges which may be bonâ fide represented as money, and which are set down to the ryot, such as the following:—

Stamp paper.	Weeding.
Seed.	Cutting.
Ploughs.	Carting.

The charge for stamp paper to each ryot is hardly ever more than two annas; seed he pays for at a given rate, fixed by the factory. I think that when the ryot gives his ploughs for cultivation, it is only when he has finished his own. There is very little weeding on ryotti lands; when he does weed, he generally does it for half an hour a day, at his own convenience. Cutting is a different thing; he must cut at a given time, not at his convenience. The plant is, generally speaking, brought in on bullocks in the morning. In many cases there is no carting; the plant is also very often brought in by the planter in boats, at his own expense.

389. But does not the ryot have to pay for the hire of ploughs as well as the bamboo ladder which is drawn over the land?—The plough is his own, and the bamboo ladder is also his own.

390. Is not the cutting and weeding done by the factory servant, and the charge thereof debited to the ryot?—Never, unless the ryot refuses or neglects to weed or cut.

391. On the whole, do you consider that at the present time the ryot is willing or unwilling to cultivate indigo?—A good deal depends upon the locality; in some zillahs they are willing, in others unwilling.

392. In these cases, when they are unwilling, from what cause does this unwillingness proceed?—One of the causes would be because other crops pay better; another would be, mismanagement of the mofussil authorities.

393. Have you any reason to believe that when the ryots have testified their unwillingness to cultivate that they have been instigated by other parties?—Ryots have never behaved in the manner they are behaving, without being instigated in the matter. From my knowledge of the Bengal ryot, I should say he never would have behaved this way, unless instigated by some one who bears the factory ill-will.

394. Can you suggest any means by which the unwillingness of any portion of the ryots to cultivate indigo can be removed, so that they be induced voluntarily to sow?—The only means I would suggest would be to leave the ryots to themselves.

395. Do you believe that the ryot will continue voluntarily to sow indigo at the present rate of remuneration?—This depends entirely upon the locality. It will pay in some places; in others it won't.

396. In those places where it does not pay, what can be done?—Ryotti cultivation must be given up, and the planters must take to nij abad if they find it answer.

397. But in such cases, would it not be possible that the remuneration should be increased, rather than the cultivation of indigo dropped?—In some places, I do not think that any rate of remuneration would pay the ryot.

398. President.] It has been stated to the Commission, by a native gentleman, that a rupee a bundle would not pay the ryot?—Yes, not even a rupee a bundle would pay the ryot, in some places; but no planter, at the present price of indigo, could afford to pay that. My calculation is this: I take the average of a beegah at 10 bundles, so that a beegah would have to be paid for at that rate at 10 rupees. Even at such a price per bundle in particular localities, indigo would not pay so well as other crops.

399. What quantity of indigo does a 1,000 bundles yield?—The average yield throughout Bengal I take to be five maunds to 1,000 bundles.

400. Mr. Temple.] Could the planter, by increased economy in the manufacture or by improved machinery or otherwise, manage to save money, which might enable him to give more remuneration to the ryot?—I do not think so. The planters are now-a-days as economical as they can be; much more so than they used to be.

401. Then, if the planter find himself obliged to give more remuneration to the ryot, could he increase the price of indigo to pay himself?—That could only occur on a succession of short crops; that is, when the demand exceeds the supply, and high prices would diminish consumption.

402. If the cost of Bengal indigo were raised, do you think it could compete with the produce of Behar, Java, Madras, or Guatimala?—If increased only a little, I think it still would.

403. Is the quality of Bengal indigo finer than that of any other country?—Yes, Bengal indigo is the finest in the world.

404. Can you suggest any changes in the law which could improve the relation between the ryot and the planter?—When a ryot voluntarily agrees to cultivate indigo, the contract should be summarily enforced.

405. In that case would the present form of contract be sufficient, or would registration be advisable?—Registration would be advisable if it could be done, but it is an impossibility on account of the number of contracts.

406. You have stated that the ryot's contract must be voluntary in the event of a summary process being established. How would you test the voluntariness of it?—I would have the books of the factory brought forward to the court, as well as the European superintendent before whom the advance was made, which I consider sufficient evidence.

407. Can you think of anything further that could be done for the placing of the relation between ryot and planter on a more satisfactory footing?—No, I would leave them to themselves to make their own arrangements. In any cases when the planters coerced the ryots to take advances, I would have it put down with a high hand; but when the ryot voluntarily took advances, I would enforce his engagement in a summary way.

408. President.] Have you ever known ryots to cultivate indigo (I do not mean for seed) and sell it at the best market on their own account?—I have known ryots to cultivate indigo on their own account within 14 miles from Calcutta; I had charge of a factory belonging to an estate called Neelgungce where the ryots cultivated indigo without advances for eight years, and sold me the plant at four bundles per rupee, cash on the vats; seed was given to sow, the price thereof being of course deducted. There was no supervision. There was an agreement that the plant should be given at the above price, and the cost of the seed deducted therefrom, and there was no difficulty in the matter. The quantity was however small, say from 10 to 50 maunds a year.

409. Mr. Temple.] Are there not in some villages head ryots, with ryots under them, which head ryots are, comparatively speaking, in easy circumstances. How exactly do these head ryots make their money?—These head ryots go with their own ryots to the factory. The advances are made to the small ryots in the presence of the head ryots, and they afterwards get a slice out of the money.

410. Are the circumstances related in pages 236 and 237 of the Selections (the same being read out) within your experience?—If the head man went as guarantee for the ryots, I could understand the case, otherwise it is not within my experience.

411. Mr. Fergusson.] Are the lands of the Big Union to which you refer, rich, and would they produce more indigo than your churs in Ramnagar?—

magur?—Yes, they would produce half as much again.

412. Mr. Temple.] On the whole, do you consider that indigo ryots are better or worse off than other ryots?—I think they should be better off, because they sow other crops besides indigo; but, for my own part, I have not observed any particular difference in their clothes or houses.

413. Within your experience have you observed any marked general improvement in the Bengal ryots?—I think, generally speaking, that they have improved in circumstances; but there are many drawbacks, that is to say, a corrupt police, and the exactions of the zemindars.

414. Do you consider that the prosperity of indigo planting is much affected by the fluctuation of the state of the police?—Everything and every cultivation is affected by it.

415. Is indigo affected thereby more than any other crop?—No, I don't think so.

416. Mr. Fergusson.] The circumstance, that advances are all made in one season of the year, i. e. in October, at which time the chief processes of cultivation are not going on, must, I presume, have a tendency to induce the ryot to break his engagements?—That is one of the reasons.

417. Is it not an almost universal custom in the country to make advances for all kinds of cultivation and every description of service?—If the ryots cultivate for another, or if the ryot performs services for another party, he must have advances; this also applies to artificers or workmen of all kinds.

418. Do all such parties require constantly to be looked after?—They must all be looked after.

419. Do you consider there is any settled plan on the part of the planter when the ryot comes to settle his account, if he has money to receive, to prevent his settling his account, but to give him further advances?—I am not aware of any such practice; it can only be done with the ryot's consent.

420. To whom did you make advances for silk?—To the ryots, who rear the cocoons, and not to the mulberry cultivators.

421. Did you find as much difficulty with those to whom you had made such advances as with those for indigo cultivation?—I found equal difficulties, but of different kinds. The ryots, after rearing the cocoons, instead of giving them to me, sold them to other parties.

422. Was then the same attempt made to evade the fulfilment of contracts of silk as of indigo?—There was.

423. Mr. Sale.] The price you paid for the cocoons was lower than the bazar rate?—The ryots who held my advances gave them for eight annas a seer of silk less than those who sold cocoons without advances.

424. Mr. Fergusson.] In carrying on your business did you suffer from the exactions or interference of the zemindars, and in what way?—When I had charge of the Big Union in Jessore, a large ijara held by the Sinduri concern had expired. The zemindar tried to stop my cultivation in the villages (I believe upwards of 50 in number) for the purpose of inducing me to take another ijara. The concern lost 5,000 rupees per annum in rents, under the former ijara, and if I had renewed it according to the terms which the zemindar then offered, we should have lost 10,000 rupees per annum. The consequence was, that I did not take the ijara, upon which the zemindar put the ryots up not to cultivate the indigo for the concern. After some hesitation, however, the ryots did cultivate the indigo, and the consequence was that the zemindar commenced oppressing them, by plundering their houses, &c., and the ryots were fortunate enough in that case, which they were not in all such cases, to get the zemindar's naib put into jail for six months. I have had in my own part of the country, i. e. in Moorshedabad, a durputnidar, suing for rent of lands at a rupee a beegah, when I held pottahs from the zemindar at 10 and 12 annas a beegah. The durputnidar has taken me into the civil courts, but he does not treat his other ryots quite so civilly. This durputnidar has been trying to increase the rents of his ryots in the whole pergunnah to double what they used to be; some of the villagers in my part of the country resisted it. The consequence was that he commenced sundry oppressions upon the ryots, and the ryots appealed to the magistrate. Upon this, the durputnidar brought a charge against the ryots of one village of having plundered his Sudder cutcherry, and murdered one of his servants. The durputnidar in this case was supported by the jemadar and burkundazes of a police farree, or station, in the neighbourhood, who had the assurance to give evidence in favour of the durputnidar; the magistrate, however, saw through the case and dismissed it. The same durputnidar carried away all the cattle belonging to the ryots of another village, and brought a charge against the ryots of this village of having plundered the village cutcherry, the night of the day on which the cattle were taken away. The ryots went with their complaint to the court of a native deputy magistrate, and the durputnidar also went with his complaint there; the ryots were bound over to appear on bail, and danced attendance at the deputy magistrate's court for three months. So far, I speak positively, and from my own knowledge, but the result of the two cases I can only give from hearsay. I have heard that 10 of the head ryots of the village have been imprisoned for six months, and fined 200 rupees each, in the case of the durputnidar against the ryot. In the case of the ryots against the durputnidar, four of his men have been put in jail for three months, and fined 50 rupees each.

425. Must not all such proceedings enhance the cost of producing indigo?—Not only indigo, but of every thing else.

426. President.] Are you aware of the working of the late Cattle Trespass Act?—I think the Act works well as far as it goes, but it has not obviated the evil. I know that ryots, particularly goalas, put their cattle into the indigo fields on purpose for the cattle to graze on the doob grass that grows up with the indigo, which is the very best grass. It is no special malice against the planter, but it is done with a view to get the best grass at a time when the country is burnt up. They not only do this on purpose, but they turn out in large armed bodies, particularly at night, for the purpose of grazing their cattle.

427. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] If a ryot refuses to take advances for cultivating indigo, is he not subjected to oppression and confinement till he does so?—Such cases are very rare. I have heard of such cases, but have not come across any such myself.

428. Are not the best lands in the ryot's holding forcibly taken by the planter to sow indigo, without giving any advances?—I know of nothing

Mr.
W. G. Rose.
21 May
1860.

Mr. thing of the kind within my experience, and such cases must be very rare.

429. You are one of the oldest planters in Bengal, will you be pleased to state whether you are not aware of the planters employing lattials (clubmen) and shurkiwallas (spearmen) to commit affrays to suit their purposes?—Indigo planters did, in former days, occasionally employ lattials to protect their property, but the thing is very rare now. I do not know of any case for the last two or three years.

430. If there had been such operations, would you not find the expense entered in the account books?—All the expenses of the factory are entered in the account books.

431. If such be the case, under what head would they be entered?—Very likely under the head of "Law Expenses." I have employed lattials, but never for the purpose of affray, nor in an indigo factory.

432. Under what head are entered the expenses for satisfying the "Corrupt Police," or sending witnesses to sub-divisions or to the Sudder station?—I should think they would all come under the head of "Law Charges."

433. Mr. Fergusson.] Is not a planter bound by law to give in a return of all his servants, and does not a magistrate fail in his duty if he does not fine the planter for not sending in this return?—They are, but lattials are generally kept for short periods, and are not regular servants.

Commission adjourned at Six p. m.

PRESENT :

W. S. SETON-KARR, Esq., c. s., President.

Members :—R. Temple, Esq., c. s. ; W. F. Fergusson, Esq. ; Reverend J. Sale ; Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.

JAMES COCKBURN, Esq., at present holding the situation of Deputy Magistrate in the Commission for the suppression of Dacoity, Hooghly ; called in, and Examined on oath.

J. Cockburn, Esq. 434. President.] WILL you state to the Commission in what districts you have been employed as an indigo planter?—In the Baraset concern, which includes factories in the Baraset and Nuddea districts. In 1852 I went to the Chota Mohutpore division of the Bansburria concern in Nuddea to learn my duty. I was in the Baraset concern from 1853 to 1858, first as assistant, afterwards in charge of a division.

435. During that time you had ample opportunity of mixing with the people, and of observing the working of the system of cultivating indigo?—I had.

436. Did you consider indigo planting to be popular or unpopular with the ryots?—Unpopular, decidedly.

437. Can you state the relative proportion, between nij and ryotti cultivation, in the Baraset concern?—We had very little nij, scarcely 400 beegahs I think; the ryotti was from 9,000 to 10,000 beegahs.

438. Was the ryotti mostly carried on in ilaka or in be-ilaka lands, that is, in villages of which the proprietary rights were held by the concern, or in villages on the estates of other parties?—Mostly ilaka; the ilaka was in lease; there were no putnis, nor were there any talookdari rights. The nij cultivation was carried on mostly in the compounds of the factories, on the sides of tanks, and on patit or waste lands, and in old burial grounds.

439. The leases were obtained or renewed during your incumbency?—Yes, but I had very little to do with the negotiations preceding the renewal of the leases; that was generally done by the managers, Messrs. J. P. Hampton, W. Studert, and H. Newcomen; I had little or nothing to do with that.

440. The Commission clearly understand you to state that you had little to do with the negotiations preceding the leases; but can you state whether the leases were renewed without any disturbances?—Without any disturbances, except in one instance. There was a talook divided into four shares, held by four brothers, the Deh Chowdries of Ranaghaut. The concern obtained leases of the shares of three brothers from the brothers themselves; the fourth would not give us his share. I believe the shares were held ijmali, or jointly; in this instance he gave the factory great trouble, and impeded our sowing. There was no division of lands; the division was in the rents simply. The consequence was that the fourth shareholder had his naib and his cutcherry in the village for the collection of rents; and, being an old proprietor, the ryots all sided with him, and whenever we went to sow, disturbances occurred, and the servants of the fourth shareholder kept us out. This state of things continued year after year; whenever we went to sow, there was always opposition, but no actual disturbances; I don't believe this opposition was overcome before I left the concern. Previously, where the village was be-ilaka, we used to sow, but in trying to get a firmer hold by lease, we lost what hold we had. In fact, after getting the three shares, we were unable to sow at all; our cultivation was entirely stopped in that ilaka.

441. Did

J. Cockburn,
Esq.22 May 1860.

441. Did you never have recourse to the courts?—Yes, I believe we did; I had not, however, much to do with that.

442. Did you not manage to collect the rents from the ryots for the three shares?—Having the shares of three shareholders, we could bring three separate summary suits against each ryot, for each instalment of his rent. This was done without inducing them to sow. The ryots would willingly have sown if not meddled with by the fourth brother, the opposing zemindar. Practically, and owing to the quarrel of one brother with the other three, our hold on three-fourths of the property became quite useless for the manufacturing of indigo.

443. Was this the only instance in which you experienced any opposition?—Yes, because in the other cases we had 16 annas; an ijara from Mr. Mackintosh, of the Chowrassee villages, and another from the Administrator General.

444. Mr. Fergusson.] Can you state the object of the fourth brother refusing to give the lease, and preventing indigo being sown?—This brother was always trying to encroach on the others' rights, and they thought that by getting the factory on their side, they would get an Englishman to back them, and so get the better of their brother.

445. Do you think it was the object of the fourth brother to get a large bonus from the concern?—No, I do not think so. It was a mere family quarrel.

446. When you had obtained this lease, did you ever find opposition to indigo cultivation by gantis, middlemen, or substantial ryots?—No, nor did they use their influence in our favour. We had no need to ask it when we had once got the lease. We took the usual amount of village lands from each ryot, that rate being two beegahs per plough, that is to say, from every ryot in the ilaka.

447. Could you give any general idea of what proportion of land in each village was set apart for the cultivation of indigo?—I could not. It would depend very much on the circumstances of the ryots, and the number of ploughs they had in work.

448. What number of bullocks do you allot to a plough?—Two to a plough. It should, however, be four, which is called a pucka plough; but, generally, in Baraset and Kishnagur, it is two bullocks to the plough.

449. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Do you mean to say that, on an average, they do not work more than two beegahs of indigo to a plough?—I never did, but I am aware of one be-ilaka ryot ploughing 70 beegahs of land with 10 pucka ploughs, i. e., four bullocks to the plough; that was, however, a solitary instance.

450. Did the factory or the concern make its own selection of each ryot's lands for the indigo?—The selections are made by the amins and the khalassies, to be tested afterwards by ourselves. In going over the land, if we disapproved of any set apart for indigo, we cut it out of the chita or register of lands, and substituted a better piece. Of course, we took the best land we could get, whether the ryot liked it or not.

451. Mr. Sale.] Did you find the ryots generally anxious to give you the worst land?—If a ryot got an advance, say to sow indigo on 10 beegahs, he gave us five good beegahs and five bad.

452. Would you give us the following particulars, namely, the measurement of the beegah, the number of times the indigo beegah required to be ploughed, and the amount of seed per beegah and its price?—Fourteen thousand four hundred square feet go to a beegah; the amount of ploughing depends on the quality of the land and the crop previously sown on it; if it was tobacco, which is the best crop, and keeps the land best cleared, it would require $3\frac{1}{2}$ ploughs, the half plough being the mui or bamboo ladder, required to smooth the ground after sowing. Whatever kind of seed we give, whether expensive or cheap, old, new, or mixed, we charged the ryot for it at 10 annas a beegah.

453. How did you pay for the plant?—We usually took five bundles for the rupee; the average return of a good season would be from eight to ten bundles a beegah. In very fine lands I have seen sometimes a bundle a cotta (i. e., 20 bundles per beegah), but that was extraordinary.

454. Mr. Temple.] Do you consider that ploughing for indigo cultivation actually costs the ryot anything?—Of course, it costs him the use of his plough, which may be estimated at two annas a day.

455. Is the plough the ryot's own plough, or does he hire it from another party?—Of course it is the ryot's.

456. Mr. Fergusson.] Then how do you mean that the use of the plough costs him two annas a day?—I mean that we estimate the value of his labour at this rate.

457. In practice generally, does the ryot have to hire a plough, or does he work with his own plough?—He works with his own plough.

458. President.] Is it not the practice for the ryots to help each other mutually by giving a day's labour the one to the other?—Yes, the custom is for them to assist each other by loans of each others' ploughs; that is to say, No. 1 and No. 2 work for No. 3 one day, and Nos. 2 and 3 for No. 1 another day, and so on, round the village; and this mutual assistance extends to other agricultural operations, such as weeding, cutting, &c., especially in other crops.

459. Mr. Sale.] Do you think two annas a day is at all an excessive estimate, considering the present price of labour?—No, you can't get a plough at two annas now.

460. We have been told by a former witness that a ryot's labour is worth little to him, because he cultivates indigo in his leisure moments, when he would be doing nothing; is that according to your experience?—Not at all.

461. Will you explain what your experience is on that point?—The hours of labour are from sunrise to noon, and from 3 p.m. to dark; but if a shower of rain had favoured the sowing of both indigo and rice, we would have the ryot labour for us for the first part of the day, and let him have the remainder to himself; that was our practice. But it might so have happened that the shower was favourable to indigo only; in that case we should require the ryot to work for the whole day.

462. Mr. Temple.] Then the cultivation of indigo does not interfere with other cultivation that the ryot might be carrying on?—It may or may not, as stated in a previous answer, because a ryot never allows his ploughs or his bullocks to lie idle; he is always ploughing some land. If the time were favourable for indigo sowing, but not for sowing rice or other crops, he might still be ploughing his lands to let the heat out, if we did not want him to sow our indigo.

463. Supposing a ryot to sow indigo for the whole

J. Cockburn,
Esq.

22 May

whole day, and supposing him to have an average amount of bullocks, would he not accomplish all his work in that day, or would he take longer?—Taking the average at two ploughs, the land would be four beegahs; two ploughs could not possibly sow well more than a beegah of land a day. A ryot may do a little more than 10 cot-tahs a day with each plough, and finish his sowings in three days, that is to say, if the ryot alone sowed his own lands. There may be a case where one ryot's land may be fit for sowing, while that of the others is not, and he would get half a dozen of his friends to assist him and finish his sowing; or, if his lands were particularly good, the factory would send their nij ploughs to assist him, while his joe (the requisite degree of moisture, neither too much nor too little) was in the land. It is rarely that hired ploughs are used.

464. And for the use of the nij plough the ryot had, he was charged nothing?—No, when we employ hired ploughs for indigo, sometimes the factory pays for the same, and sometimes the ryot; sometimes we lend the factory or nij ploughs to the ryots.

465. Then do you consider that three days being occupied for sowing, there is any serious interruption to the ryot's general cultivation?—It would depend on the season of the year and the nature of the crop he is anxious to sow, nevertheless it must be some kind of interruption to him.

466. What is meant in a letter addressed by you to the Government of Bengal, dated 31st December last, of an item of three annas per beegah for sowing charges?—The sowing charge consists of one plough and a mui or bamboo ladder; the plough was used on the day of sowing, and the mui the day after. Such plough and mui being the ryot's own property, as was shown by me in the average rate of cultivating a beegah by a ryot. Should one of the ryot's cattle have died, we hire an animal and charge the cost to the ryot, or we may advance him money without interest to buy one; we could not often spare the nij abad ploughs.

467. But then, are not these charges of the nature of the estimated rather than actual items?—Certainly not, in this instance, because the statement from which this question is put is an average statement of the actual expense he is generally put to.

468. Does the ryot weed the crop himself?—In some instances; not generally. They are very much disinclined to it; we weed, and charge them, i. e. one ryot in 20 may weed.

469. Does the ryot generally do the cutting himself?—The answer to the sowing applies equally to this. Sometimes we send the nij abad coolies to assist him, other times not; sometimes we charge the ryot, sometimes not.

470. Mr. Sale.] Could a ryot cut his own crop of indigo, just at the time it is fit to go to the vat?—Yes, he could do it, putting the factory to great inconvenience. It would depend solely, however, on the amount of land he cultivated, and also upon the situation of the plant. If a solitary piece, and at a distance from the factory, we should send out coolies to cut it all and bring it in at once, but if near, we could cut a few bundles as required to fill a vat. Generally speaking, if the plant be near the factory, we cut a few bundles every day, from each beegah, or the ryots get disheartened, seeing the leaves dropping off, and the plant ripe and requiring to be cut.

471. When done by others than the ryots themselves, is the expense of cutting charged to the ryots?—Generally speaking, it is not.

472. Mr. Temple.] Who pays for the carriage of the indigo from the field to the factory?—In the first place, the carts are the ryots' own. We pay them at the rate of five rupees to every 100 bundles they bring into the factory. There are advances made on the carting account, just as the other advances, and the ryot may or may not be on the wrong side of the carting account. We make no allowance for distance; if near the factory, the ryot may bring in 20 bundles a day, if at a distance with bad roads, such as we have during the manufacturing, i. e. the rainy season, he may not bring in two bundles a day.

473. What, on the whole, is the greatest average distance of any plant from the factory?—Two miles is the greatest distance; and as the ryot won't allow you to overload his carts, we can hardly get him to take more than two and a half bundles on each cart.

474. On the whole, considering that some fields are near while others are distant, does the rate of five rupees per 100 bundles pay the ryot for the cost to which he is put, in carrying the plant in carts or bullocks?—No, it is impossible.

475. Is it a correct way of making up this statement as contained in the letter addressed to the Government of Bengal above referred to, to charge the full hire of a plough without having reference to the ordinary use of the plough on previous crops?—It was the daily hire of the ploughs.

476. Mr. Fergusson.] Had there been a previous crop taken off the land referred to in your statement?—The lands we generally sow indigo on are tobacco and baro mashia lands, i. e. which have been constantly ploughed for a twelve-month.

477. Do you think it possible to separate accurately the ryot's labour and cattle, on each description of crop in one year?—Certainly not; that's why I headed the statement referred to as the "probable cost."

478. Is it not probable that if the ryot was not sowing indigo that he himself and his cattle would be idle occasionally?—Certainly not.

479. How do you apportion the rent of one rupee for the indigo statement on the rent of the land?—I refer to section 5 of page 255 of the "Selections."

480. Does it then appear that the indigo pays one rupee of the rent, and the tobacco eight annas?—It should be borne in mind that perhaps there may be one beegah of tobacco to 50 of rice in a zemindary.

481. Mr. Temple.] Is not one rupee a beegah a very high rent?—The ryots generally pay three rupees per beegah as rent for tobacco lands (and we try and get tobacco lands for indigo cultivation), and for rice from one rupee to two rupees; something less than half the cultivation was on tobacco lands.

482. Indigo is cultivated on the same land on which tobacco is also grown, does it affect the tobacco or not?—Tobacco is scarcely ever sown for two years successively on the same land. First the tobacco crop is sown, after that is cut, the indigo; then that land is manured for the next next year, and is sown with tobacco the season after.

483. Mr. Fergusson.] If the tobacco land, after the tobacco was cleared off, had no indigo sown upon it, would any other crop be fitted for it?—Yes, it is all we can do to prevent them sowing other crops.

484. President.] Would you state to the Commission as broadly as you can the facts connected with the measurement and record of the bundles, and with the squaring of the account in regard to the same?—It is measured with a chain called 14 paoos, or 3½ haths. The man who measures it is called the shikaldar, or chain bearer. The amdani novis takes a note of the bundles. In some factories, the ryots never come in at all, nor send any one to look after their interests; in others the head man of the village comes in and haggles about the measurement and size of the bundles. It is seldom we have time to measure each bundle. So many anties or small bundles go to each factory bundle; the general number is about 16 to 18. The squaring of accounts begins in October, and goes on till March. The money is generally paid before the assistant; the ryot's account having been made up by the mohurrir and gomashita. Money, if there is any to be received, is paid before this assistant, who is supposed to look over the account. At the time of recording the bundles a hath chitti or receipt is given to such ryots as come in for it.

485. When you were in charge of the factory you were in the habit of looking into the books?—Yes, if any dispute arose between the mohurrir and the ryots. At the time of taking the bundles, I could not supervise the account of the bundles daily received, as I had six factories under my charge and was constantly going the round of them.

286. Are you in a position to state, whether the general number of ryots had money to receive on the squaring of the accounts in excess of the advance they received?—In only one year did I see almost all the ryots make a profit, that was, I think, in 1854. I believe, in Chota Tangra Factory, I got 70 maunds from 900 beegahs, to the best of my recollection. This was in a new ilaka where no indigo had been previously sown. We had the lease of the village for three years. In the first year, they did not sow, in the second it was a bad season, and the third and last year was a very good one. There were no advances longer than three years standing. After settling with the ryots, we gave them fresh advances in order to induce them to sow the next season, but the zemindar would not renew the lease, though he returned us all the money we had advanced to the ryots.

487. Was 1854 particularly favourable in that part of the country?—Yes, the best I have seen; the concern made about 500 maunds.

488. Do you attribute any part of the success of that season to the lands being new and the ryots getting advances for the first time for some period?—Yes, to the lands being new.

489. Mr. Fergusson.] If your cultivation was 900 beegahs and you got 70 maunds, supposing your produce was six maunds to 1,000 bundles, you must have cut 12,000 bundles of plant; well, then, if the ryots were to cultivate carefully, would they not have the same profitable result that they had that year?—I said that in consequence of the land being new, that was the result. We could not always have new lands under cultivation. J. Cockburn, Esq.

490. But I thought you had previously stated that you took the lands whenever you pleased?—I did when I was questioned regarding my own ilaka.

491. President.] Are you in a position to state whether ryots have been cultivating for a long period or have they lately contracted?—Long periods in almost every instance.

492. Did any ryot or ryots ever represent to you the wish to get clear of their engagements, and to sow no more?—Many ryots are anxious to do so. When I was put in charge of the Baraset concern, all the factory servants were ryots, head men of villages, and I, knowing that they favoured their own relations as themselves, in settling accounts, discharged the whole of them; upon which they brought in the whole of their relations, jotedars, &c. with the money in their hands to settle their accounts, and they would have done so if Mr. Eden had not persuaded them to the contrary. But it must be understood that those men had very little balances against them, having had the accounts in their own hands; practically they were in a position to get free if they wished it. Besides these there are some individuals who could clear themselves, if we would let them, but we would not clear them on principle, inasmuch as it would be tantamount to closing the factory. It is my belief that many ilaka ryots would borrow money to get free if allowed. A good many be-ilaka ryots however don't sow at all, though we have heavy balances against them. We did not go to the courts, because our books had been abstracted. If we had, it would be a very difficult thing to recover the balances in court. The thing happens thus: the advances are first made when perhaps the man was a prosperous ryot; the advance is, say 40 rupees for 20 beegahs, and seed is charged for besides, and probably the ryot never cuts a stick of indigo that year; then the next year his account would stand so—

	Rs.	a.	p.
Amount of former advance -	40	-	-
Amount of price of seed for 20 beegahs, at 10 annas per beegah - - - - -	12	8	-
TOTAL - - - - -	Rs.	52	8 -

his cultivation would consequently be raised from 20 beegahs to 26 beegahs 4 cottas. I do not recollect a case in which we sued a ryot in the civil court for the recovery of balances. It is the custom of the factory to reckon every two rupees as a representative of a beegah; for instance, if a man owed the factory 100 rupees, he would be liable to sow 50 beegahs with indigo, and so on.

493. How is a ryot in the first instance induced to take advances with regard to European factories?—In ilaka villages he has no option, as we are zemindars; but in the be-ilaka there are several ways in which advances originate; for instance, if the head man of the village comes to borrow, say 50 rupees to get his son married, promising to sow himself or to get some others in his village to sow 25 beegahs of land as an equivalent, being an influential person, he gets his subordinate ryots to sow each a little land land for him, and when they have done so, he comes and has their names entered in the books as so much against each of them. The head man informs them of it, and they come in to see what they have to receive after the manufacturing, and each gets a hath chitti of his account with the factory; it is at this time they sign the stamp paper. At other times it is done by the influence of the head ryots, and sometimes by the aid of the zemindar who may be a friend of the planters, or perhaps our own lands may surround the be-ilaka lands, and then there is no escape. I have never seen a poor independent man who cultivated his own lands and whom you thought you could honestly trust, come in and ask for an advance. By independent, I mean a ryot who has to pay his rent direct to the zemindar, and is not a dependent ryot of the mandul or head man.

494. Mr. Temple.] Are there not individuals besides those you have mentioned who take advances of 50 rupees; from what motive do they take advances?—I have mentioned the head man of the village, and I have mentioned his subordinate or dependent ryots, and I have mentioned the poor independent ryot; I don't know that there are ryots of any other class.

495. Mr. Sale.] It has been stated in evidence that ryots do come into a factory and take advances and give a kabulyat, in which kabulyat a definite time is stated, within which the ryot is supposed to fulfil his contract?—I have never known any such thing, but I have seen many ryots put their names to a blank stamp paper.

496. Are these blank stamp papers usually filled up afterwards?—No, very seldom; only in cases in which the ryots are inclined to disagree with the factory, and then not as bonâ fide indigo contracts, but as simple private notes for money lent: the prevalent idea in the Mofussil being that the courts are so prejudiced against the cultivation of indigo, that it would be useless to bring a contract connected with it before the court.

497. Mr. Temple.] What is generally supposed in the Mofussil to be the nature of the prejudice on the part of the court, and what are supposed to be the reasons of it?—I say that they believe there to be a prejudice in favour of the ryot, because I never heard of an indigo contract being proved by a planter.

498. But it has been stated in evidence that suits of this nature are never brought before the courts; how then can it be known whether the courts would entertain them or not?—Because I think experience has shown that there is no use bringing them. Besides, any intelligent judge would with half a dozen questions, see the hollowness of the contract, because the ryot is supposed to settle his accounts in October when the contract would be drawn up. The contract to be binding, should state every piece of land and its boundaries. This it would be impossible to fill up till the sowings, for, as I said before, many lands are changed at the last moment.

499. Would it be possible in your opinion for contracts so to be framed that planters might in virtue of them sue the ryots for breach of engagement with a fair chance of success?—Contracts could always be properly worded, but the seasons are against it. Unless a man knew every bit of land that a ryot possessed, what quality, &c. it would be impossible to give advances to the ryot for definite pieces of land in October to make him sow in March, as lands are often changed at the last moment.

500. Would not a general form of contract suffice by which the ryot bound himself to cultivate one beegah anywhere in return for two rupees advance?—I don't think it would hold good in court.

501. Do ryots ever bring suits in court with a view of paying up the balance outstanding against them, and being released from their connexion with the factory?—An ilaka ryot would never fight against his zemindar, and a be-ilaka ryot never thinks of returning him (the planter) anything; therefore, why should he go into court.

502. But if the be-ilaka was really anxious to obtain his release from the factory, would it not be worth his while to pay up his balance and be free?—He is free without it.

503. Then you mean to say that all the be-ilaka ryots are in respect to taking advances and cultivating indigo, and generally in regard to their connexion with the factory, free agents?—Generally they are.

504. And their continuing in that connexion from year to year is a purely voluntary act?—Of course, as far as the contract is concerned.

505. President.] But practically is there much be-ilaka cultivation actually carried on?—Not much.

506. Mr. Temple.] Do the ryots of a village, within your experience, on the village being taken on lease by an indigo planter, improve or remain stationary on the whole?—The village might improve, but the condition of the ryots does not. A road or so may be made through the village, to allow our indigo to pass.

507. President.] Is not the mere fact of a road where there was no road before, itself a benefit to the ryot?—The ryot may ultimately benefit by it, but he grumbles when the land is taken up for the road.

508. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Do the ryots pay any part of the expense of making such roads?—We can get it out of them if we like; but I don't remember ever taking it from them.

509. Mr. Temple.] Does not the circulation of money and the location of a factory with a number of servants benefit the village?—Excepting as regards the purchase or sale of a few eggs and fowls, I don't see what circulation of money takes place.

510. President.] Does not the existence of a factory give employment to a good number of ryots, especially at certain seasons of the year?—Yes, it does; but they would rather not come to the factory, because they are paid only just as much as they would be paid if employed by natives, and in the latter case, they would, besides the payment, get as much tobacco as they could smoke, besides one meal a day.

511. Mr. Fergusson.] Was not the whole outlay of the Baraset concern, amounting to 60,000 or 70,000 rupees, with the exception of the price of the up-country seed, and one or two other articles, spent within the circuit of the concern, and must not that have done good to all within that limit?—The salary of the manager and assistants amounted to about 12,000 rupees, and of the servants to about 12,000 rupees, that took off 24,000 rupees.

512. Did not the factory servants spend their pay in the neighbourhood on their subsistence, and and did not some of the managers' pay go in the same way?—Some part, no doubt, did; but the servants spent as little as they possibly could; I don't believe the manager spent more than 50 rupees a month.

513. President.] It has been stated to the Commission by other witnesses that indigo cultivation is unprofitable to the ryot, and you have stated your belief that it is not popular, can you explain the causes of this unproductiveness and unpopularity, and could you suggest any means by which its cultivation could be made both profitable and popular?—It is not popular because it is not profitable, and the ryot has to bear the whole brunt of the risk. I think if a ryot were allowed to cultivate the whole of his lands, and the planter went out to bargain for the land, i. e. any piece he might select; were he to ask the ryot what it has cost him to cultivate it, and how much more he would take to sow it for the planter, and then let the planter give the seed, and be at his own risk of growing, cutting, and carting the plant; I think, by these means, the cultivation would be more popular, and moreover in this way the sowings according to the original advances might be finished. This would avoid, in the first place, the expense of half the establishment of the factory, besides saving a great deal of trouble to the assistants in looking after the lands to get them into a proper state of preparation. A ryot knows much better how to cultivate his lands than any assistant does. Again, the superintendence of weeding and of cattle trespass would be rendered unnecessary. Very well cultivated lands require little or no weeding, and the ryots, to increase the bid for lands next year, would take care that the planter's crops were not damaged by cattle; in this way the exactions of factory servants would also be got rid of. The change would cost something more to the planter; but it would, I think, be counterbalanced by a saving of establishment.

514. Do you think there would be any danger of the ryot evading his agreement if made in this way?—I would make it a cash transaction; the money to be paid immediately, half before and after the sowing.

515. Mr. Fergusson.]—From your knowledge of the Bengali ryot, do you believe that he would, in that instance, weed or prevent cattle trespass when he had no interest or responsibility for the result of the crop; which would be the case according to your plan?—I think if he was pleased with the rent, and satisfied with the remuneration he received, his object would be to show how much better the plant grew on his lands than on the lands of others, with a view that some of his land might be taken next year, and he get a better bid.

516. How many months were you at the Bansberia concern, and had you any charge there?—About six months; I had no charge.

517. Then your whole experience has been with the Baraset concern?—Yes.

518. And your letter to Government contains the result of your practical experience of what you have seen?—Yes.

519. Those statements of the expense of nij cultivation, whence did you derive them?—They are the results of our own small nij cultivation.

520. Where did you derive that statement about the books of factories showing a profitable nij account?—My own books did show that; my amla endeavoured to show it, and I know it to be the case with others' concerns about me.

521. Are you aware that the Baraset concern is nearly shut up?—I only know that the other day I was told it had finished all its usual sowings, but I know that it was closed previously.

522. Mr. Temple.] What object have the planters or their amlas to show a favourable account of the nij cultivation?—The planter has no object; the amlas have, because more money passes through their hands for keeping up the establishment for nij cultivation.

523. Mr. Fergusson.] Was it on account of any interference on the part of the Government officials that the Baraset concern was shut up?—Not to my knowledge; up to the last day I know the factory was working beautifully; I left in October 1858.

524. Were there no grumblings on the part of the ryots?—None that I am aware of; but I knew that this would happen.

525. Do you think that the ryots would have refused to sow as invariably as they have done, if they had not been instigated or incited to do so by other parties?—The Baraset concern was once closed, several years ago, in 1852, in precisely the same way as it was lately.

526. Do you know how it was re-opened?—By getting back the ijaras.

527. During your time, was there any opposition or discouragement shown by any of the Government officials?—Never; but the ryots were aware that there had been a difference between Mr. Hampton and Mr. Eden, and there was some discontent among the ryots in his part of the division.

528. You said that you knew these disturbances would happen: will you state how you came to know this?—Because I saw that the manager the agents put there was unequal to the delicate task; the manager would not go out and meet the ryots. These ryots are in the habit of coming at all hours, and if you don't go out and talk to them at all hours, they are a difficult set to manage.

529. In such a state of things, any disfavour shown by the magistrate, would it not have a prejudicial effect?—Yes, but the magistrate did not adopt that course.

530. Mr. Temple.] While you were employed in that concern, did the concern, on the whole, receive a fair amount of support from the magistrate?—Certainly.

531. Did you not mention an instance in which the magistrate persuaded some refractory ryots to fulfil their contracts?—Yes.

532. Mr. Fergusson.] Is not the practical result of a factory shut up to release the ryots from all their liabilities to the factory?—Yes.

533. And therefore they have every motive to shut up a factory?—Of course.

534. Is it the case that the lands in that concern are generally not well suited to indigo?—I consider them exhausted, and not well suited.

535. Mr. Rose, when at Neelgunge, which place is four miles from Baraset, stated yesterday that ryots came in willingly, and sold him plants on the vats at four bundles for the rupee without advances, except for seed, does not that prove that at that rate the cultivation is profitable to the ryots?—I believe the Neelgunge concern has been closed for many years; so that if Mr. Rose still purchases plant from ryots about there, he must, I imagine, purchase plant belonging to the Baraset concern; I myself once purchased plant offered at that rate from ryots who belonged to a factory of the Paul Chowdries. Mr. Macintosh got possession of this factory, between the sowing and manufacturing, through the Supreme Court; and as both these parties claimed the plant, the ryots went to the magistrate, who told them the crop was their own, and that they might sell it to whom they pleased; they brought it to me, and I purchased it.

536. Mr. Temple.] In regard to the plan that you described as the proper one which planters ought to adopt for the cultivation of indigo, what do you think would be the cost of that to the planter, as compared with the cost of the present system?—I shall furnish a statement on this point.

537. Mr. Fergusson.] Do you adhere to the statements in the third last paragraph of your letter, in regard to indigo factories worked by native zemindars?—Yes, entirely.

538. And you think that indigo ryots are better off under European than native planters?—Decidedly so, 100 per cent. so.

539. Is it the custom in that part of the country to make advances for any kind of work?—It is the custom; and the object is to get it done cheaply and quickly.

540. At what rate does a mahajun charge when he makes advances for crops?—The usual rate is one and a half in kind.

[Commission adjourned at 5.30 P.M.]

Friday, 25th May 1860.

PRESENT:

W. S. SETON-KARR, Esquire, C.S., President.

Members:—R. Temple, Esquire, C.S.; W. F. Fergusson, Esquire; Reverend J. Sale; Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.

R. P. SAGE, Esquire, called in; and Examined on oath.

R. P. Sage,
Esq.
25 May
1860.

541. President.] WILL you state to the Commission the concerns and districts in which you have had experience?—Bansberria, in Kishnagur, Katgarra, in Kishnaghur, and Khalbolia, in Kishnagur, Loknathpore, in Kishnagur, Jorada, in Jessore, and Boribaree, in Rungpore.

542. In the Kishnagur and Jessore factories you are familiar with the nij and ryotti system of cultivation; will you state the proportion of each of them?—They varied very much; in my time the proportion was one-quarter in Bansberria and Katgarra, and half in Khalbolia and Loknathpore, and in Jorada about half of each description of cultivation.

543. It has been stated to the Commission, and they have reason to believe that nij abad is carried on churs, in the compounds of factories, on the sides of tanks, and on pieces of land in which the factory has obtained the tenant right; is this within your experience?—In Katgarra we had no chur lands, but we took jotes on leases from the ryots. The same in Bansberria, save in one factory on the banks of the Jellinghee, which had chur lands, and which were taken in potta from the zemindar or ryot to whom it belonged. In the Khalbolia concern there were no chur lands, but pottas were taken; in fact, without getting the right of occupancy, we can do nothing in the way of nij abad.

544. Was all this nij abad cultivated by factory servants, or by hired labour?—The keeping up a large private establishment of bullocks for the nij abad was found, 13 to 15 years ago, to be so expensive that the factory establishments were reduced, and since then the ryots' ploughs have been hired; and this same hiring is one of the greatest causes of dissatisfaction among the ryots, because, at the time when the ploughs are required to sow the nij abad lands, the ryots are naturally anxious to cultivate their own lands. The rate per plough varies in different parts of the district, but two annas per plough was, I think, the average rate. In a factory in which there were 1,000 begahs of nij abad land, we should be glad to get 2,000 ploughs, i. e. at two ploughs per beegah; but such a number was never obtainable. In a factory like Loknathpore 200 to 300 ploughs could be mustered from the ryots in one day. Two ploughs would be sufficient to sow a beegah of land in one day, if such had been previously well cultivated, including the passing of the mui over the land if the degree of moisture on the ground was not too great to admit of the mui being used that day; the use of the mui depends entirely on the amount of moisture on the ground.

545. Are we then clearly to understand that the only cause of dissatisfaction with nij abad cultivation is the interruption to the ryot's own cultivation, and not any inadequate rate of pay, or no payment at all?—Yes, of late years the managers and assistants of factories, as far as I have been able to observe, have taken the greatest care to see that the ryots are properly paid for their ploughs; one or two exceptions to this however exist.

546. Are proper means taken to prevent the factory amla from misappropriating or exacting a part of the payment after it has been regularly made?—I believe such means are adopted, but that they generally fail, as the ryot will seldom leave the factory without, what he calls, an "offering" to the amla.

547. Mr. Temple.] At what rate of wages are the factory servants generally paid?—The Gomashtha's pay is 16 rupees to 40 rupees; Mohurri, six rupees to 10 rupees; Amins, three rupees to five

R. P. Sage,
Esq.

25 May
1860.

five rupees; Takidgirs, Rs. 2. 8. to four rupees. These are the men with whom the ryot is generally brought in contract.

548. With reference to the prevailing rates of wages, do you consider that the above wages are liberal, or moderate, or low?—Moderate; but they are never considered so by the servants themselves, who always expect to double or treble the amount of their pay by taking presents; as they call it, from the ryots.

549. Besides the above wages, are there any authorised perquisites?—None but those authorised by the custom of the factory, viz., a dustoori of one anna to half an anna per rupee on every rupee which the ryot gets; this dustoori is levied in a lump, and divided rateably among the amla. There is no authorised dustoori for the smaller servants; they take what they can get.

550. Upon what payment is this dustoori given?—Upon all payments.

551. Is this custom or dustoori applicable to indigo, or is it equally so to every transaction?—I believe to all transactions.

552. On the whole, is it your belief that, beyond the dustoori, any considerable portion of the payments made to the ryot is abstracted by the factory amla?—I believe such is the case sometimes, but not generally. When the planter exercises a due supervision over his servants, they would not dare to make any deductions beyond the regular dustoori.

553. Then do you consider that generally, the ryots pocket the greater portion, or nearly all the sums paid to them?—My belief is, that the ryot generally is able to carry away clear about three-fourths of the sum with which he is debited in the factory books.

554. Do you think, that if the factory servants were paid at a higher rate, they would be less disposed to abstract money from the ryots?—There are some respectable servants who, if better paid, would not fleece the ryots.

555. Mr. Sale.] Does not the treatment which a ryot would meet with at a factory, very much depend upon the liberality with which he fees the amla?—Undoubtedly.

556. Mr. Temple.] Then you think he generally does fee the amla?—No doubt of it.

557. President.] Taking the cost of cultivation of nij abad whether by factory ploughs, or by hired labour, as well as the return, is nij cultivation generally profitable?—I believe nij cultivation can never be profitable, except on chur lands, new or old.

558. Then are we to understand that a concern taking pottas from ryots on high lands would find such cultivation unprofitable?—Such cultivation would be unprofitable if the planter kept his own ploughing establishment, but it might pay by taking new lands, so as to have a rotation, and by hiring ploughs when required, at eight ploughs per rupee.

559. And in nij cultivation all the risk must fall upon the concern?—Entirely.

560. Does it then follow, that if nij cultivation on high lands be unprofitable to the planter, the cultivation of indigo must be unprofitable to the ryot, when he cultivates for the concern with his own plough and bullocks on his own lands; or are there different circumstances in the ryot's position which might make that profitable to him, which you have admitted, is not profitable to the planter?—No, because if the planter keep up an establishment of bullocks, servants, &c., for nij abad cultivation, the whole expense of such establishment would fall upon the indigo, whereas the ryot cultivates many other crops.

561. Would you, or would you not recommend to the planters to extend their nij cultivation, and are there facilities for its extension, such as the purchase of jummas, or of small pieces of rent-free land, or the taking leases of jummas, and so on?—No, I should not recommend a planter to extend his nij cultivation, because there would always be an uncertainty from year to year, as to the quality of land he might obtain; but I have no doubt he could always obtain a certain quantity of land, but not enough to keep his factory going through a series of years. I refer now to populous districts, such as Kishnaghur and Jessore.

562. The facilities then would be greater in a jungly and less populous district where land was of less value?—I suppose so; but in jungly districts, labour would not easily be procurable.

563. Could not a planter, holding a fair amount of nij abad lands, make the same profitable by sowing it partly with indigo, and partly with sugar-cane or tobacco, or other valuable produce?—I think not; having seen the experiment tried with sugar-cane and tobacco, and I believe no European farmer could produce either sugar-cane, or tobacco, or any raw material as cheaply as the ryots.

564. Mr. Temple.] Is the difficulty of obtaining land on temporary tenure or otherwise, the only reason why you would not recommend planters to extend their nij cultivation?—No, I would not myself keep a nij cultivation anywhere, except on chur-lands, because the chur-lands can be cheaply cultivated, which is not the case with high soils.

565. Then in fact the planter could not anywhere make the cultivation on the high lands pay?—I am not prepared to say that he could not make it pay, but I should think such a cultivation would be a very hazardous one.

566. Mr. Sale.] You have stated that the establishment kept up by a planter on the nij abad system is kept entirely for indigo cultivation; is it necessarily so; and, do you know of any instance in which the attempt has been made to maintain that establishment for the growth of any other crops beside indigo, and how has that attempt succeeded?—In all concerns where it is practicable, cold weather crops, such as mustard, linseed, halai, and peas are sown, which to a certain extent reduces the expense of the nij abad establishment.

567. Do you think that under such a system of cultivation nij abad would pay?—Yes, I think it would, provided the concern held a large proportion of chur-lands. The Kulna concern, the property of Mr. Sawers, and the Akragunge concern, are instances in point.

568. Are you acquainted with the Ramnugur concern, the property of Mr. Rose?—No, I am not.

569. Mr. Fergusson.] Is not the reason why tobacco, sugar-cane, and other crops cannot be grown profitably by Europeans, that the natives will not value the labour of themselves and families at anything, while working for themselves, whilst they charge very highly and do very little if hired for money by Europeans?—I believe that is the reason, and that, when hiring out their labour they do as little as they can help, and the supervision supervision of the cultivation becomes a very large item in its cost.

570. Mr. Sale.] Who does the weeding under the nij abad system?—I have seldom known nij abad to be weeded beyond being cleared of large jungle.

571. Is that because the planter is less particular when the cultivation is nij, or because weeding is less needed?—It is not because weeding is less needed, but because people to weed are with difficulty procurable.

572. What other labour besides ploughing is required under the nij abad system?—Nij abad plants require to be cleared of all large weeds that can be pulled up by the hand, and then a plough is passed through the plant to loosen the earth. This is what is generally done. The weeding is done by the Boona coolies, I believe, invariably. These coolies are generally paid from Rs. 3. 4. to Rs. 4. 8. during the manufacturing season, and three rupees at other times.

573. Mr. Fergusson.] Is it necessary for all factories, with any extent of nij cultivation, to import Boona or other similar coolies?—I believe in every case.

574. Mr. Sale.] Do you think two annas a plough sufficient remuneration for a ryot?—No, because two annas, at the present price of the food which the ryot eats, is barely sufficient to support himself and family, to say nothing of his bullocks.

575. Could you state the average expense of cultivating a beegah of indigo under the nij abad system?—If the land is of the kind that requires digging, four rupees a beegah is not too much to cultivate, sow, weed, and cut it; if it requires ploughing only, about Rs. 1. 8. less; and if the land be chur, one rupee less than that.

576. Could you state the average produce in bundles of plant per beegah, the measurement of the bundle being at 4½ haths?—The produce of plant per beegah varies according to the soil, culture, and state of the weather, from one bundle to 25 bundles. From exceedingly fine land I have measured a beegah of indigo land, and have measured the plant at 25 bundles. The average of years, however, I conceive to be about eight bundles a beegah of nij cultivation.

577. President.] Then with the exception of this single cause of dissatisfaction by interruption to the ryot's other cultivation when the ploughs are required, nij cultivation goes on smoothly, without quarrels and disturbances?—Yes, quite so.

578. Mr. Sale.] Have you ever seen any disturbances, occasioned by the attempt of the planter to get at the ryots' holdings for the purpose of nij cultivation?—No.

579. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] What is the system of ryotti cultivation, beginning with the form and stipulation of contracts with the ryots?—The ryot takes two rupees per beegah in advance, and agrees to give a beegah of land suitable for indigo; also to plough the land sufficiently, and to sow at the proper time; to weed as may be necessary; and to cut the plant when the planter thinks it ready. The planter carts it, in all the concerns I am acquainted with. The contract is generally made or renewed each year, except in Rungpore, where it is done always for three years. The contract is executed on stamp paper of the proper value. When the factory manager has any doubts of the honesty of the ryot, the contract is written out fully on the stamp paper at the time of making the advances before witnesses, but in many cases the ryot is merely called upon to put his mark (also before witnesses) to a blank stamp.

580. Are these blank stamp papers ever filled up?—Very rarely.

581. President.] Then what is done if, in the event of a breach of contract, it becomes necessary to institute proceedings?—A planter knows that it is not to his interest to institute regular proceedings against his ryots, and only does so, I believe, in extreme cases. The poor ryots are led by those who are better off, and would rarely refuse to fulfil their contract, but at the instigation or in consequence of threats held out by the head ryot of a village. If legal proceedings, therefore, need to be adopted, it is against the head ryot. The head ryots, in all cases, compel the smaller ryots to sow or not, as they themselves choose to do.

582. Then towards such head ryots is it never necessary for the factories to use persuasion, intimidation, or force?—Yes, frequently it is necessary to use either one or the other of these arguments.

583. Can you state, from what causes generally those head ryots refuse to cultivate, and what kind of force or intimidation you have known to be employed?—Generally some dispute about the particular piece or pieces of land to be given for indigo; and if the head ryots are refractory, I have known their bullocks removed from their possession temporarily, and I have also known the refractory ryots summoned to and kept at the factory, while the non-recusant ryots were induced to sow. The instigators of opposition to the factory being prevented from counselling the small ryots, such ryots are easily led to do what is required of them.

584. Have you ever known of cases in which recusant ryots were kept under restraint, first at one factory and then at another, so as to elude the police if their friends complained of their detention?—Yes, rather frequently at one time. Of late years not often, and at any time only by a very small proportion of the planters; that is to say, the practice of confinement was used by only a few planters, men who were determined to have their own way.

585. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Are not any of these blank stamp papers afterwards written out as khuts or promissory notes, instead of indigo contracts, with a view to keep the ryot in submission?—I am glad to say I never heard of such a case.

586. President.] You stated that the contract is for one year; did you find any difficulty in renewing the contract with the ryots every year?—Sometimes; and in such cases, if their unwillingness to renew was caused by the loss of the ryot's bullocks, the factory has generally made a loan to the ryot to enable him to replace a bullock or bullocks. Harsh treatment is never used until all fair means fail.

587. Did you never find unwillingness in one year, because the last year's contract had not turned out profitable to the ryot, and he was on the wrong side of the factory books?—Yes, very frequently; I myself have generally been in the habit of reducing the extent of the land to be cultivated by the ryot, and have seldom found any difficulty in getting him to cultivate the remainder. This plan would be generally adopted, I believe, were it not that reducing in one man's favour would would cause many, without any reason, to claim a similar reduction.

588. Then are we to understand from this that the ryots would generally wish either to reduce their own cultivation or to get rid of it altogether? No, well-to-do and industrious ryots seldom object to take advances, and those who cultivate indigo badly seldom make much of their rice crop. They are generally bad cultivators.

589. Then are we to understand that good ryots who are willing to take advances find the cultivation of indigo actually profitable?—Yes, I believe they do; I have known some ryots take away money at the time of settling accounts every year, such ryots not being servants of the factory. They were in all cases substantial men, being in command of ploughs.

590. You don't think, then, that such men misappropriated the gains which should have reverted to others, and which should have gone to the dependent or smaller ryot?—In many cases no doubt the richer ryots do, by paying the amla, get a portion of the poor ryot's indigo transferred to their account; for instance, for a present of two annas a mohurrir will sometimes credit one or two bundles of the indigo belonging to a poor ryot to his richer neighbour.

591. Mr. Temple.] Does it happen that the head ryot makes indigo cultivation profitable to himself individually, by inducing his subordinate ryots to cultivate indigo for him, he pocketing the profits thereof?—Yes, frequently; I have known of several instances in my own factories.

592. It has been stated in evidence that small independent ryots rarely come forward to take advances, do you concur in that opinion?—No, I have known all grades of ryots come to the factory for advances, when there was any peculiar pressure upon them for money.

593. Why are not contracts with the ryots filled up at the time?—Chiefly, I believe, to save the time of the mohurrirs. The blank kabulyats are kept for some years and then destroyed.

594. Do you consider that ryots who are on the factory books, are frequently anxious to be released from their connexion with the factory?—Yes.

595. Are such persons willing to pay up the sum outstanding against them and be free?—Sometimes they are, sometimes not; generally they are willing to pay when able.

596. Do men who are willing and able to pay up such outstanding balances come forward and demand to pay up such balances or not?—I have often known them do so, but every planter endeavours to persuade them to retain their advances and work them out.

597. Have you known instances of ryots persisting in their demand of paying up the balance and getting themselves free?—Not when a man was in a condition to work out his balance; I have only known the balance to be received when there appeared no chance of his being able to work it out.

598. Are such as the above very rare?—Very rare.

599. Have you ever known the ryots avail themselves of the summary law for paying up their balances and setting themselves free?—Yes, I have heard of such cases; but have never known one in my own experience.

600. President.]—It has been stated to the Commission by several witnesses, that though indigo cultivation was not directly profitable to the ryots, yet that any loss is more than counterbalanced by collateral advantages, such as protection from the planter, loans without interest, education, and medicines, diminished rents, and other acts of kindness; is this within your knowledge and experience?—Yes, most decidedly; I could mention some concerns in which all the advantages stated in the question are enjoyed by the ryots and others; in which some, if not all, of these benefits were enjoyed; loans without interest on particular occasions are, I believe, made in all concerns; all these benefits are found united only in few concerns.

601. Such being your opinion, do you consider that in order to establish harmonious relations between planter and ryot any change in any part of the system is required, or if it is fairly worked by considerate planters the system can go on as it has done?—Yes, I think a change might be very advantageously made by making contracts or sattas for three years; the ryot being liable to punishment summarily if he wilfully fail in the performance of his contract, and the planter being also liable to punishment if he refuse to settle accounts with the ryots on the expiration of the term of his satta. This plan, I believe, would, in the course of two or three years, bring about such a change in the present feeling of the ryot towards the planter that the ryot would willingly take advances; but, with reference to the greatly enhanced price of food, four instead of six bundles of indigo per rupee should satisfy the planter.

602. Do you think no rise is required in the wages of the amla?—Yes, with reference to the price of food I think there should be a rise too.

603. It has been stated to the Commission that in some places not even a rupee a bundle would pay; does that accord with your opinion?—No, I think a rupee a bundle would much more than pay in any concern or village.

604. Then can you furnish the Commission with a statement of the cost of cultivation to the ryot which will show a profit at four bundles per rupee?—Cost of production:—

	Rs.	a.	p.
Rent	-	-	10

Three rupees in the ryot's favour, including seed crop. Then again, in my opinion, the ryot should be allowed to sell his seed where he pleases, instead of its being taken by the factory at four rupees per maund.

R. P. Sage,
Esq.

25 May
1860.

605. Then you make a balance of three rupees in his favour, which includes two rupees advance, and so at the end of the season he will have one rupee to receive?—Yes.

606. Do you think this is sufficient inducement for the ryot to cultivate: knowing that he stands exposed to pay dustoori to the factory servants out of his receipts, that he rarely can get clear of the factory if he wishes it, and that he may occasionally meet with intimidation and force?—I consider it a sufficient inducement, because I have known many ryots who were perfectly satisfied, and who cheerfully cultivated indigo for a period of 15 years without receiving more than that profit on the average. I left the charge of the Jorada concern in October 1858; I commenced business as an indigo planter in the Kishnagar district in 1840, and my experience extends over that time.

607. Mr. Temple.] Do you consider that three rupees per beegah would be regarded by the ryot as an equivalent profit to what he might derive from other crops?—According to the return from other crops, five or six years ago; I consider that indigo would pay an industrious ryot as well as rice, for instance, if not better.

608. President.]—Do you think that four bundles per rupee would pay, considering the rise in the value of other crops during the last two or three years?—Perhaps not, in proportion; but considering the great advantage a ryot enjoys in obtaining an advance of two rupees in October without interest, money for which he would have to pay a mahajun 60 to 70 per cent. per annum, I think that four bundles per rupee would pay the ryot.

609. Mr. Sale.]—Are we to understand from the last answer that the ryots come in October in very large numbers seeking advances from the factory?—Yes, if they are very poor or pinched for money, I have known them to come in large numbers. If the rice crop has been bad, probably half the ryots will come for advances.

610. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.]—If the rice crop is good, what then?—Then the ryots would not come in such large numbers, perhaps eight or ten out of each village.

611. Mr. Sale.]—Among the alterations you propose, is a law for summarily punishing the ryot for failing to fulfil his contract, what do you consider would be a failure on his part to fulfil his contract?—First, in failing to give a suitable piece of land; secondly, in refusing to cultivate that land; and thirdly, in putting in the seed, and then neglecting to take care of it, or wilfully destroying the plant.

612. But supposing him to have carefully cultivated the land and the crop to have failed, would you still have him severely punished?—I would not, nor do I think any planter would.

613. You also proposed to punish the planter in certain cases; do you think, in the present state of courts in the mofussil the ryot has fair facilities for suing out his rights against a planter?—Yes, I think his rights might be ensured by making it compulsory upon the planter and ryot to register each satta, so that the expiry of the term could not be disputed. No planter would mind going into the Sudder Station for two days to have his three years' sattas registered.

614. Mr. Fergusson.] How long were you in charge of the Boribaree concern in Rungpore?—Five years.

615. I believe there are only two concerns there?—Three; one large, one small, and one very small.

616. Was the cultivation then entirely ryotti?—Yes, the first three years I was there we sowed about 30,000 beegahs; there was no nij.

617. It was chiefly on tobacco lands?—Chiefly sugar-cane and tobacco.

618. Have you any recollection of the number of ryots in the whole concern?—The average was about two beegahs to each ryot.

619. In other respects was the cultivation carried on in the same way as in lower Bengal with regard to the ryots?—Much the same.

620. Had you any ilakas or ijaras of any kind?—After the first ijaras no ilaka or ijaras belonged to the concern.

621. You had a system of purchasing plant for cash?—Yes, nuggud khureed, or cash paid down.

622. What price did you pay?—Four bundles for the rupee.

623. Did you purchase very considerably?—Yes, in some years so much as two lacks of bundles.

624. Did you find that your own plant was sold to you?—Yes, very often; to avoid this was our great difficulty.

625. Do you think this system would be practicable in a district thickly studded with factories?—No, the ryots would sell their indigo, for which they had received advances, to the highest bidder.

626. But the system generally proves that four bundles were remunerative?—Certainly; and the crop, from circumstances of weather, is more precarious, and fails more frequently, than in Lower Bengal.

627. Is there any difficulty in getting advances made to ryots in Rungpore?—None whatever; they are easily received if it be wished.

628. President.] In giving these advances to ryots on lands not belonging to the concern, did you experience any difficulty from any party, and did you run any risk of your cultivation being interrupted after the advances were once given?—I never experienced any opposition of any kind. The only thing we had to complain of was the ryot selling the plants to other people. We never were asked for salamis from any zemindars, and there are many influential zemindars in that district.

629. How do you account for the want of opposition there, as compared with the opposition which has been stated to exist in districts near Calcutta?—I can only account for it from the fact that the European and native planters of Rungpore have never interfered with each other.

630. Mr. Sale.] Is the system pursued by the native planters the same as that of the Europeans at Rungpore?—I believe so; but it is 11 years since I left Rungpore, and labour was then very cheap.

631. Mr. Fergusson.] You are now manager and proprietor of Chowkidanga Colliery on the Singarron?—I am.

632. Have you there to make advances to your miners, boatmen, &c., whom you employ?—Yes, to carters, boatmen, miners, coolies, &c., in the same way as to ryots in an indigo factory.

633. Do you find a similar unwillingness to fulfil and desire to evade contracts as you did in indigo factories?—Among the carters many evade their contracts, and the miners frequently decamp with with their advances; the boatmen are the most honest of all.

634. Has the price of rice risen much within the last few years?—Yes, very considerably. The price four years ago was 14 annas, and it is now two rupees two annas, and everything has risen in proportion; mustard oil and rice perhaps more.

635. From your knowledge of the ryots at Kishnagur and Jessore, do you consider that they would have assumed their present position towards planters, if they had not been instigated by others?—No, I believe not; for I am aware that the act of resistance to planters has been encouraged by parties who have thought the ryots were oppressed by the planters, and who have been very active since the disturbances in fomenting ill-will against the planters.

636. Are you aware that many planters have been forced, by zemindars interfering with the cultivation, to take ijaras and putnis from the zemindars at very onerous rates?—Yes; and a previous witness, himself a zemindar, has spoken to the fact. The Katgarra concern had to pay 80,000 rupees for the putni, on the jumma of which there was a yearly loss of 5,000 rupees.

637. What was the inducement to pay such an exorbitant rate?—To secure the working of the concern.

638. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] At what calculation did you pay the sum of 80,000?—At three and a half years' purchase.

639. Do you consider three and a half years' purchase for a putni tenure as exorbitant and enormous?—Yes, certainly enormous, considering that there was an annual loss of 5,000 on the jumma.

640. Do you think that three and a half times the gross annual rental is an exorbitant sum to pay for a putni lease if there be no loss on the jumma?—No, rather a moderate rate, if there be no loss on the jumma.

641. Mr. Sale.] Do you consider that efforts on the part of the planters to save themselves from losses on ijaras or putnis taken from zemindars, have had any effect in the production of the present state of ill-feeling on the part of the ryot towards the planter?—I am not in a position to answer that question, not having been in Kishnagur for the last two years.

642. Have you sufficient knowledge of the district of Jessore to state, whether in that district parties that believed the planters to have oppressed the ryots have instigated the ryots to resist the planter?—I have had no particular case of the Jessore district brought to my notice. The cases to which I allude belong to Kishnagur.

643. Mr. Temple.] Within your knowledge, do the police extort much from the indigo planters directly or indirectly?—Not when the planter acts legally. When the planter acts contrary to law, of course he is obliged to bribe the police.

644. But as to the general practical result, does the planter usually have to pay the police or not?—Yes, he usually pays the police in case of quarrel. In such cases the darogah invariably sends to the planter for a present, which I believe is generally granted; but I myself have never paid the police.

645. If the police darogah wanted a present from a planter, how would he demand it?—He sends a messenger to one of the amlas, and if a present is not given, you are pretty sure to find out that the darogah is displeased at not getting what he expected.

646. Has a policeman ever demanded a sum of money at any time from you personally?—Yes, a police mohurrir, jemadar, and burkundauz have come to me within the last six months, and before also, and plainly asked for a present. The word they used was bukshish, and the demand is generally made at the approach of the doorga and other poojas.

647. But independently of small presents, has a daroga or other police officer ever demanded of you, personally, or through your servants, a sum of money as a bribe in a case relating to indigo?—Not that I recollect.

648. Do we understand rightly that the presents above referred to, were for small amounts?—Yes, for small amounts.

649. Have you ever suffered inconvenience from refusing to give presents to the police?—I don't recollect any instance, but then I never had more than one criminal case, of any sort, with the zemindar, and that was in the Katgarra concern.

650. Do you consider, on the whole, that the police are disposed to side with any class, say, zemindars, planters or ryots?—It is generally believed that the police side with the party who pays them best, whether zemindar or planter. The ryot, of course, has no chance against his richer opponents.

651. Do you consider that the police, in its present condition, impedes indigo planting or not?—I conceive that any impediment offered by the police would depend upon what they believed to be the wishes of the magistrate. I do not think they would offer any impediment of themselves.

652. But on the whole, do the police offer impediments generally or not?—Not to my knowledge.

653. Is there anything in the present state of the police calculated to impede indigo planting?—It does not appear to me that there is.

654. President.] Are you in a position to state whether the recent establishment of more subdivisions has tended to unsettle the relations between planter and ryot, or planter and zemindar?—I have never lived within any of the subdivisions of either Kishnagur or Jessore. Most of them now existing were not established when I was in Kishnagur. At Raneegunge, from which station my residence is about 5½ miles, I seldom or never see anything of the police.

655. Mr. Temple.] Do you know whether indigo planters often obtain the assistance of the police?—I cannot speak to that from personal knowledge.

656. In cases where the planter pays the police, how are such payments entered in the factory accounts?—I don't at this moment recollect having seen such entries; but I suppose that they would come under the head of "law charges."

657. Are the items of law charges in the factory books heavy or inconsiderable?—In some factories heavy, and in others light. It depends upon the temper and position of the planter.

658. Is it to be understood that the items entered in the factory books as law expenses do in reality consist, for the most part, of bribes to the police?—In foudary cases, I suppose that the items under the head of law expenses, would consist chiefly of presents to the police and the amlas of the magistrate's court.

659. Besides the presents above described, what other law expenses would a planter have?—Diet money money to witnesses; stamp paper; the mookhtiar's salary also comes under "law expenses." I would distinguish a present from a bribe, by saying that a planter going into court with clean hands, would give the amla of the Court a present merely to ensure the evidence of his witness being fairly produced, or not perverted in any way. A bribe would be given to escape justice.

660. Is it the case that a concern may have very few cases in court, either civil or criminal, and yet have to pay large law expenses?—Yes, if lattials are kept.

661. Are lattials, to the best of your knowledge and belief, generally kept either directly or indirectly in indigo concerns in Lower Bengal or not?—They are not generally kept, but employed when required, either for the purpose of aggression or protection.

662. Is it to be understood that many, if not most factories, have lattials who might be called out in case of need?—Lattials are to be found in some one village or other, of nearly every concern; men who live by fighting for hire.

663. Did such men exist in the village prior to the establishment of the concern?—From what I have heard, lattials have been employed for more than 60 or 70 years past.

664. For instance, in the event of disturbance, suppose a magistrate were to call on the manager of a large concern to furnish some hundreds of armed men within 24 hours, could the manager do it?—In many concerns I believe one or two hundred men armed with clubs and spears, and willing to fight, could, if well paid, be brought together in a few hours.

665. Do such men exist generally in villages all over the country which have no connexion with indigo?—I believe they do. In Dinagapore, in which district there are very few indigo factories, lattials certainly do exist.

666. Are lattials an ancient institution of the country, or are they the creation of indigo planters?—I believe indigo planters had nothing to do with their origin.

667. Do planters ever use lattials to compel ryots to take advances?—For the purpose of intimidation, and sometimes for inflicting injury, I believe they are so used, but only by a very small number of the planters; I have only known two men to do this systematically.

668. Are lattials ever used to compel ryots to sow?—My last answer will also apply to this question.

669. Within your knowledge, are the ryots ever beaten by the planters?—Very rarely, I believe.

670. Are their houses ever attacked, or burnt or thrown down?—Yes, I have known of such acts being done.

671. Was that done to compel the ryots to take advances, or to sow in consequence of having taken advances?—Chiefly as a warning to others not to resist.

672. Are the cattle of ryots ever seized with a view of inducing them to take advances?—I believe they are.

673. Is this rare or frequent?—It was a general custom.

674. On the whole, and speaking generally, do you consider that the present system of indigo planting is oppressive to the ryots?—Oppressive, in that the ryot is not permitted to clear his account when he finds he cannot work to his own advantage.

675. On the whole, are instances of actual violence or oppression rare or otherwise?—Instances of violence are certainly rare.

676. Mr. Fergusson.] Can you state, from your recollection, what was about the amount of the ryots' balances in the Borabaree concern, when in your charge?—As far as I can recollect, the total amount of balances on the books was nearly two lakhs of rupees, but the real or working balances were about 30,000 rupees, I think.

BENI MADHUB MITTRA, inhabitant of Goaltolli, Zillah Nuddea, called in; and Examined on oath.

26 May
1860.

677. President.] In the limits of what concern do you reside?—Within the Katgarra concern.

678. Have you any lands in that concern?—I possess a ganti of rather more than 200 rupees jumma and some rent-free lands; there are about 40 or 50 khoud kasht ryots resident on the ganti, and besides that I have a number of pye kasht ryots, probably 70.

679. Are you up to this time in possession of this ganti?—No, I was dispossessed of this in 1264, Bengali year. Mr. Larmour obtained the putni of half of the zemindary, and the other half in lease from the Paul Chowdries. I cannot say in what year he got the putni and the ijara; the lease will expire at the end of this year. Mr. Larmour said he would measure and assess my lands at double the present rate; the power of measurement and assessing rent is inherent with zemindars, but I had old papers, i. e. pottas from the Rajah of Nuddea one hundred years old, which should have been a bar to assessment. No civil suit was instituted against me. Mr. Larmour sent his people and drove me away from my house and gave the potta of the land to other persons; I have not been there since. Mr. Larmour never said anything to me about sowing indigo; indigo; the only dispute was about the enhancement of rents. I have not been able to complain about this to the courts; I have three times complained to Government. I live in Calcutta, and practice as a mookhtar in the office of the receiver of the Supreme Court.

680. You have stated that you reside in Calcutta; how was it then that you went home and were dispossessed there?—I was not personally dispossessed; my wife and family were driven away.

681. Are you sole possessor of the ganti, or are there other shareholders also?—There is another shareholder of 4 annas, by name Madub Chunder Mittra, who has a place at the sugar factory at Kote Chandpore, his rights have also been extinguished with mine; I have not been able to collect a pice of the rents, nor even to gather the fruits of the gardens; I dare not go there for fear of being imprisoned.

682. When this ganti was in your possession, you living in Calcutta, who collected your rents?—I had a gomashta whose house was knocked down and indigo sown in the homestead; his name was Mohesh Chunder Bose; he complained to the magistrate, Mr. Elliott; but as Mr. Larmour soon afterwards obtained an appointment as honorary Magistrate, nothing was done.

683. Will the papers of the complaint be found at the Nuddea Office?—It is my belief that the papers of the case may be found; I can only speak from what I hear.

684. Did no local investigation take place by the police?—No local investigation took place that I know of.

685. Were the putni and the lease obtained before Mr. Larmour was appointed magistrate?—

Yes, I think it was in Mr. Crawford's or Mr. Forlong's time; these gentlemen never oppressed me in any way.

686. Was there any other cause of quarrel between you and Mr. Larmour?—I had some garden trees, jack, mango, and bamboo. Mr. Larmour's people cut these down; Mr. Larmour sowed indigo on some of my lands and never paid rent for them; Mr. Larmour's people did not allow me to collect any rents from my under-tenants.

687. Do you intend to institute a suit for re-possession, and if so, in what court?—I intend to sue in the courts.

688. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Cannot you state precisely what was the result of your gomashta's case in the criminal court?—There are a great many Mussulmans in that part of the country; very many of my ryots are Mahomedans, and, as there was a prejudice against the Mahomedans at the time on account of the mutiny, nothing came of the case.

689. Your gomashta had all your papers, regarding the collection of rents; could you not have righted yourself by instituting a suit under Act IV. of 1840?—My gomashta left the place; I was in Calcutta, and I thought the roads were beset with the Saheb's laltials, and nothing was done.

690. Mr. Fergusson.] How far was the thannah, and why did you not complain there?—The thannah was Bagda, and was 5 or 6 coss from there, and the people of the thannah are assisting the opposite party. I heard from Chunder Nath Sircar that the thannah people were assisting them, consequently there was no use complaining at the thannah.

CHUNDRA NATH SIRCAR, Resident of Goaltolli, Zillah Nuddea, called in; and Examined on oath.

691. President.] What are your means of livelihood?—I had a ganti jumma, and at times I take service; at present I am not employed.

692. How did you lose possession of your ganti jumma?—Mr. Larmour the manager of the Mulnath indigo concern is the zemindar of my village. My ganti is a mourusi (i. e. fixed and hereditary) ganti of 114 rupees; it is a very old one. Mr. Larmour and his naibs sent for me and asked for more rents at the rate of 2 rupees additional a beegah; in some instances 1 rupee; in others 8 annas; in others even so much as 2 rupees 8 annas. I did not agree to this, on which Mr. Larmour ordered me to be kept two days in a godown; I was so kept for two days under lock and key with a jemadar at the gate. Two days afterwards Mr. Larmour sent for me, and I from distress said, "Let me go home and see what the others say;" I went and remained concealed. About 10 days afterwards, Mr. Larmour sent 25 laltials, i. e. armed men, but as I was in the habit of concealing myself in another person's house, they could not find me. They surrounded my own house, but I fled to Nuddea; this was in 1264, Bengali year. I preferred a complaint to the magistrate; the magistrate became displeased, and said, "You are come to complain against a hakim." He then told me to point out my witnesses, which I couldn't do for fear; I could not go to the village, as that was beset with laltials; so my case ended in nothing, and I was unable to sue for re-possession either in the civil or criminal court.

72—I.

693. Had you any dispute about indigo with Mr. Larmour?—I have no ploughs of my own, but Mr. Larmour used to sow indigo in my fields and not pay me my rent; this was when I still had possession of the ganti; he used to sow by force. Through fear I was unable to complain of this; Mr. Larmour's people used to cut down my trees, mango and jack, to burn their brick kilns and to make indigo boxes; I was never paid for them.

694. Have you any other oppression to complain of?—No, except what I complained of at Nuddea; Mr. Larmour's people knocked my house to pieces; I am not able to go there from fear; once or twice I have been attacked by night there.

695. Are you not going to attempt to right yourself either in the revenue, civil, or criminal court, and are you aware of the passing of Act X. of 1859?—I know nothing of Act X., and I can't afford a civil suit.

696. Mr. Temple.] Did you not complain at the thannah about your house being pulled down?—No, not at the thannah; but I went and deposited the rents at the civil court, but Mr. Larmour would not receive them. The judge had the rupees counted, and then gave them back to me.

697. Your mourusi potta was at a very favourable rent?—Yes, 4 annas a beegah; such rates are not to be had now.

698. When did the oppression about indigo, that you have stated, commence?—From 1263 to 1264, 1264, Bengali year; Mr. Larmour's people used to cut my trees, and not pay for them, i. e. for a tree worth 10 rupees, I was paid one rupee; and indigo used to be sown and no rent paid for the land; all this oppression has increased by degrees.

699. You said that your sub-tenants were forced to sow indigo, was it by you or by the planter?—By the planter; I did not prevent any one from sowing, nor did I tell them to sow; I had no concern in the matter.

700. Mr. Sale.] Did you never go to the factory and take advances for yourself or for your sub-tenants?—I never went myself, but sometimes the under-tenants were taken by the peons to receive advances.

701. Was there any other cause of dispute but that of increasing your rents?—No.

702. Mr. Temple.] When the peons took your under-tenants to the factory, what happened?—The under-tenants used to come back and say that they were told to sow, some two beegahs, some one; they never showed me any money.

703. Did they never say that they had received advances?—No.

704. You say your ganti is gone and you dare not go home, how do you support yourself?—I live on my friends and relatives; I am not in service.

705. What month was it that you complained about the factory, at Nuddea?—It was either in the month of Sraban or Bhadro.

706. Mr. Fergusson.] Was there any rent due at the time you were dispossessed?—There were no anterior balances against me at the time; Mr. Larmour having refused to receive the money, I went and deposited it in court.

707. Was there any other dispute about rents, or about indigo?—There was a dispute about rents. Mr. Larmour wanted to enhance them.

708. Are you in possession of the potta of the old ganti?—Yes, it is with a relative of mine at home.

709. How far is your village from any station or sub-division?—Thirteen or 14 coss; the thanah is about seven coss.

MUDDUN MOHUN BOSE, of Gooaltolli, Zillah Nuddea, called in; and Examined on Oath.

M. M. Bose.

710. President.] HAVE you any possessions in your village?—I had a ganti jumma of 80 rupees which Mr. Larmour has taken away, because I did not agree to pay a higher rate of rent. The Nuddea Raja's ancestors had given my family a potta at a very low rate, at 5 annas 4 pie a beegah; Mr. Larmour wanted me to pay 4 annas more upon each rupee. I was willing to pay 2 annas, but this did not satisfy him. He has also taken away our rent-free lands. Mr. Larmour prevented me from collecting my rents from my under-tenants, and collected them himself. I only complained to Mr. Larmour and not to any of the courts, but the sahib wouldn't listen to me. Mr. Larmour used to sow indigo up to my very doors. My nephew lives on the spot. Our house has not been knocked to pieces as those of others have. My under-tenants hold advances. The people of the factory also sow indigo on the lands and don't pay rent for the same. If a man takes four rupees advance, he is not able to clear himself for three generations to come. Some ryots within my ganti had sown indigo before Mr. Larmour's time; since Mr. Larmour's time much oppression has been practised. You have only to go to the village and see the deserted homesteads.

711. As you are no longer able to pay your rents, are you not going to institute a suit in the civil court or the collector's?—Perhaps I may; I have no potta, but I have had possession for three generations; my potta was lost by accident.

712. Mr. Temple.] If these ryots do not like to sow indigo, why don't they pay up their balances and free themselves?—The factory won't take them, we are not allowed even to speak about it.

713. Did the ryots ever speak about it, or did they take the money in their hands to the factory?—Some of my under-tenants have, but the factory would not accept it.

714. Mr. Fergusson.] Why did not the ryots put it under the summary law of 1830, pay their money, and be free?—They are not aware of the law.

715. Mr. Temple.] How many ryots, within your knowledge, have taken money to free themselves?—Four of my under-tenants went with money to pay, but were not allowed; this was in 1859-60. They were Imatdi Mussulman, Malam, and Pyaruddin Mussulmans; I can't say the other name; it is nigh four years ago.

716. President.] Are you afraid to go to your home now?—Yes, on account of the expenses of the lattins, who were used in turning me out, which expenses I shall be called upon to pay.

717. Mr. Temple.] What is the name of your nephew that is residing there?—Rutton Bose.

718. Do you know what amount of the expenses was paid by your nephew?—I can't say.

719. Mr. Fergusson.] Has Mr. Larmour been raising the rent throughout the whole of his zemindary?—Yes, he has in all the villages, but in these two he has been levelling several homesteads to the ground; I can't say the rate all round; he asked us to pay 2 rupees 8 annas a beegah.

720. Mr. Temple.] Had the raising of the rents anything to do with the indigo planting?—The raising of the rent affected me; the planting of the indigo, my ryots.

721. Mr. Fergusson.] Who was the former zemindar?—Paul Chowdari.

722. How long is it since you have been home?—About five or six years. When I was last there, there was no indigo sown up to the doors; it has been since then. When I was last there, they used to sow indigo on the plain or on waste lands, or if any ryot abandoned his homestead, they sowed indigo on it.

723. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] What other oppression was committed?—They cut all our good trees and bamboos, i. e. big mango, jack, and tamarind; no other oppression was practised.

724. Mr. Temple.] What price did you get for the wood cut?—No price.

725. Within your knowledge, did the ryots cultivate indigo voluntarily, and what advances did they get?—No ryot cultivates indigo willingly, it has always been the same, whether formerly or now. If the ryots hear that they will be allowed to pay off their balances in cash, I think all the ryots of the pergunnah will tender the money to clear themselves.

726. Mr. Sale.] Why are they so unwilling?—Those who have once taken advances, can never never pay them off. These accounts are never closed; it is for this reason; if any have a bad crop, the balance increases. I can't say anything further.

727. Mr. Temple.] How, in the first instance, was the ryot induced to cultivate indigo?—I can't say; how could I possibly say? M. M. Bose.

[Commission adjourned at 3-30 P. M.]

Monday, 28th May 1860.

PRESENT.

W. S. SETON-KARR, Esq., C. S., President.

Members:—R. Temple, Esq., C. S.; W. F. Fergusson, Esq.; Reverend J. Sale;
Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.

MICHEL DURUP DE DOMBAL, Esq., called in; and Examined on oath.

728. President.] WILL you state to the Commission in what districts you have been employed?—In the Ramnaghur concern in Jessore, in Chowlia, Baboo Khally concern, Jita concern, Bijuli and Sinduri, in all of which I was partly proprietor; and in the Lowlara concern, in Furreedpore and Pubna. At present I am in Soojunpore, in Kishnagur; I have been 37 years a planter; I am now residing in Kishnagur; I sold out of the Ramnaghur concern, in Jessore, in 1847; my late experience relates to Kishnagur.

729. Will you state your system of cultivation at Soojunpore, as to how much is ryotti, and how much nij?—About one-fourth ryotti and three-fourths nij. My whole cultivation is about 3,500 beegahs.

730. Is your nij cultivation carried on by the servants of the factory, or by hired labour?—By both; I have upwards of 40 ploughs and 150 Boona coolies, and can get as many desi or indigenous coolies as I wish; I hire ploughs when I need them, at eight for the rupee. I do not find much difficulty in hiring them, as I do not take them when the ryots want them; and when I require ploughs, I moreover make it worth the ryot's while to let them out; I should say I keep up 150 bullocks and buffaloes for the work of the factory.

731. On what kind of tenures is your nij cultivation carried on?—I have very few pottas from the ryots; I have them generally from the zemindars; I have chur as well as high lands; I have ijaras and putnis as well as mourusi pottas and durputnis. It is on the khas lands of the durputnis that I carry on my nij cultivation. The lands are called nuksani or damaged, but they are not really inferior lands. On the whole, I find no practical difficulty in carrying on my nij cultivation. I found some of the durputnis and ijaras with the concern when I bought it in 1852; others I have purchased since. I had no great difficulty in getting them; I had some trouble with one proprietor who was wavering a little, as I have reason to believe his servants wanted a douceur. For one durputni, I had to pay six times the annual rental; it was a small property, but worth a great deal to me. I paid 370 rupees for a jumma of 60 rupees. In another case I paid only 1,100 rupees for a jumma of about 800 rupees, and in others I paid a like proportion. I have also got some pottas in lease of other lands, which I cultivate as my nij and sub-let partly to the ryots. They are renewable after periods of five to seven years.

732. Then is it on these same durputnis and ijaras that you have your ryotti cultivation, and how do you carry it on?—Yes; when I purchased the concern, it was customary for the ryots to give eight bundles of plant for the rupee, but having reduced the number of bundles in Jessore to six, to please the ryots, I reduced them in Kishnagur, to the same standard, without being asked, and eventually to four bundles; that has been the price for the last three or four years. I charge six annas per beegah for seed, though I pay for it at the market rate. The ryots are to bring the plants to the factory, and they have of course to plough and weed, as also to defray the cost of stamp paper, which is according to the sum of money that they owe, generally two annas a head.

733. Do the factory servants exact any dustoori, or have you any system of fines?—It was never brought to my knowledge that the servants took anything, as my ryots generally confer with me personally, and they have never mentioned any grievances. I now and then fine them for cattle trespass, but this is nominal, as I generally let them off with a scolding.

734. Mr. Fergusson.] Does your system, either nij or ryotti, differ in any material point from the planters around you?—Not that I am aware of.

735. Mr. Sale.] It has been stated in evidence that dustoori is always taken, but you say that in your concern it is not taken, how do you account for the difference?—Every one has his own practice; I can speak and write Bengali, and I see the money paid in my presence. I believe, in boat and cart advances, dustoori may be taken.

736. President.] Have you been trying to extend your cultivation lately, and have you perceived a growing disinclination on the part of the ryots to cultivate indigo?—I have increased my cultivation, but the increase is all nij; I have found the ryots in Kishnagur disinclined to increase their advances and to sow more lands, which was not the case in Jessore, when I was there about 13 years ago; and from my experience I have found that it is much more profitable to a planter to have nij cultivation, than dissatisfied ryots, who give a great deal of trouble, and cost a great deal of money.

737. Then, is the Commission to understand that though you keep up ploughs and bullocks at the factory, or have to hire them, you find nij cultivation actually to repay you?—I prefer the system, because it gives less trouble. In the long run, I also think it pays better than ryotti cultivation, through dissatisfied ryots, who get you into law suits, and involve you in expenses, besides injuring your property.

738. Mr. Fergusson.] What do you estimate indigo costs, including everything, on an average of seasons, on your nij cultivation, so as to pay you?—For the last eight years the seasons have been so unfavourable that I have just been able to keep myself afloat, working with my own capital. In a fair average season, I should expect to make my indigo at 150 rupees per maund in Kishnagur, landed at Calcutta, inclusive of every expense. In former years, in good seasons, in Jessore, I have made half nij and half ryotti at 100 rupees a maund. The lands in Kishnagur are, however, not so productive.

739. In ryotti cultivation are not the bad balances, which you give up to the ryots, so much added to the cost of the plant?—Yes, the ryots profit by it as if it had been paid him at first.

740. Mr. Sale.] Do you, in practice, give up any bad balances to the ryots?—It depends much upon the position of the parties. If good ryots are unfortunate, I give up certain sums to make it worth their while to go on cultivating. In 37 years I have only once prosecuted two ryots in a civil court. They were gaolahs, who used to sow their lands willingly in October, and afterwards destroyed them with their own cattle. We came to an understanding that they were to pay me by instalments, which they have not failed to do to this day.

741. President.] Then, on the whole, do you consider that a factory, in a populous district like Nuddea, has fair facilities for increasing nij cultivation by taking pottas, leases, and so forth, and for finding suitable lands?—No, unoccupied lands are not to be had; I got a chur this year, because another party was ousted by court, and the zemindar was willing to give it to me. Almost all the lands in Nuddea, as far as I have seen, are tenanted by the ryots, i. e., if the lands are worth cultivating. The practical and only difficulty is the getting unoccupied lands.

742. Mr. Sale.] Do you find any difficulty in nij cultivation in consequence of the late rise in the prices of provisions and labour?—Yes, I have been obliged to keep pace, by increasing the labourers' hire; I find the labour of the Boona coolies about the same as that of the desi, with this advantage, that the Boonas remaining at the factory, can be called out at any time.

743. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Could you state the difference of cost between nij and ryotti cultivation?—In general when the ryots sow in October they sow indigo with other crops, which other crops, namely, linseed, mustard, Indian corn, kalai or pulse, &c., are very profitable to them. I never object to this as it induces them to cultivate their lands better. After they cut their cold weather crop, they allow the indigo to stand on the ground till ready for the sickle in July or August, and thus cultivate it with little or no expense save in the weeding, which they seldom attend to unless urged on by the factory people. Those who sow in March and April generally do so after reaping a crop from the land, so that it is difficult to calculate upon the exact cost of the cultivation. It costs them nothing but their time and labour; my nij cultivation, including servants' wages, rents, indigo seed, &c., would cost about four rupees. The ryot always ploughs his own land better than he does the planter's. If it costs him one rupee ploughing, he generally doubles with the planters, i. e., if he ploughs one beegah of his own land well with one plough in one day, he ploughs the same quantity badly for a planter with two ploughs, for which he receives at the rate of two annas a plough.

744. Do not the planters also sow cold weather crops with the indigo?—They do, and derive benefit from it, but they cannot thus sow all their nij.

745. Do you calculate the cost of your nij cultivation at four rupees per beegah inclusive of the profit derived from your cold weather crops?—No, the cold weather crop depends entirely on the season; sometimes it is very profitable, at others, it is a failure. It does not always pay, because planters cannot plough their lands properly, from the want of a sufficiency of ploughs.

746. You stated the ryot to be of late disinclined to sow indigo, can you state broadly the reasons why he is so disinclined?—I believe one of the powerful reasons is the failure of indigo crops for the last seven or eight years running, and the rise in the price of other grain which pays them better. Ryots never give a consideration as to their labour, they only look to the result; otherwise the rice crop, if properly calculated, would give them no profit. They have to weed it three or four times, and even after that a sudden rise of the river submerges the whole, which has been the case for the last two or three years in some parts of Kishnagur; yet they continue to sow on; the cold weather crop in Kishnagur is the main support of the ryots; in this is included sugar-cane and a small quantity of tobacco.

747. President.] You have had no difficulty of late with the ryots in your concern?—No, the ryots depend as much on me as I do upon their labour. I assist them in their wants with ploughs, loans without interest, medicines, as well as in various other ways. I had a school which I have been obliged to discontinue, on account of the death of the teacher.

748. Where there has been the difficulty in Kishnagur to induce the ryots to sow, are you in a position to say, whether such difficulty has been increased by any other causes, such as instances of oppression by the planters, extortion by the factory servants, the conduct of the police or of the executive authorities, or any other reasons within your knowledge?—I seldom leave my factory, but from flying reports and from frequent conversations with all classes of men, I have been led to believe that a perwanna from Mr. Eden, the magistrate of Baraset, supported by his under officials, as also owing to the dissatisfaction spread by certain missionaries, whose names I do not know; and, lastly, perhaps, from the rapacity of the quarrelling talookdars, who are notorious in the Kishnagur district; I say owing to these causes, the ryots have risen in a body with a hope of driving the planters from the district by the help of Government. I cannot say anything about the extortion of the amlas.

749. Mr.

749. Mr. Sale.] From the communications you have held with all classes, what is the impression in Kishnagur with regard to the nature of that perwanna?—That the ryots need not sow the lands for the indigo planters, i. e., they need not fulfil their contracts, and that they would be supported by the police or Government in such evasion.

750. What do you understand to be the nature of the influence exerted by the missionaries over the ryots?—It is said that the missionaries think the ryots an oppressed set, and with their European and Christian notions, they fancy the ryots ought to be better treated, and that they should resist until they are looked upon by everybody as brothers.

751. Are we to understand that the influence of this perwanna and the missionary, has not extended to your factory and your ryots?—I never heard of the perwanna or the influence of the missionaries until the ryots of the whole district had struck, and it appears that the influence has not extended to my concern to this day.

752. President.] This perwanna has been much discussed and the strike has extended to some parts of Pubna and Jessore; must there not be some special reason why your ryots did not join in the strike, or must there not have been some other causes at work in other concerns besides this perwanna and the influence of missionaries?—I have been told that there are paid agents to stir up the ryots in many parts of Kishnagur and Jessore, backed by the zemindars, and that some of them are at this moment being prosecuted in the Zillah Courts. I am divided from the Burdwan district only by the Bhagirutti, and thus, my being on one side of Nuddea may be the cause of my having escaped the bad influence. My factory is 10 miles from the station.

753. Have there been any complaints against you or any of your servants for the last three or four years in the magistrate's court?—Yes, a few, for marpit or assault, and cattle trespass. I have no boundary disputes, and no charges of kidnapping or arson have been brought against me.

754. Mr. Fergusson.] Have you had little or much to do with the courts and police?—Very little with either, until very lately, when some of my people were assaulted for preventing cattle trespass, which cases are now pending in the courts.

755. Have you found the courts or the police an assistance or an hinderance to you in your business?—When I first purchased this concern I was in the Santipore Division, and I found that the deputy magistrate there acted like a personal enemy. I represented the case, with my grievances, to the magistrate and judge of Kishnagur, who wrote to Government, and eventually obtained the incorporation of the Nuddea thannah with the hotwalli or Sudder Station, since which I have had no cause of complaint.

756. In your concern, have you, within the last three or four years, raised the rents of the ryots who do not cultivate indigo?—No, I have khattadars i. e., ryots holding advances for indigo in my putni talook, in my yara village, and also in be-ilaka villages; the proprietors have always acted most fairly, and I have found the villagers willing to continue their connexion with the factory, on account of the advantages they derive. In fact, I find the ryots very good, being chiefly Hindoos, and much more manageable than Mahomedans.

757. Do you know of any system under which any ryots sow indigo without advances and sell the plant?—In the Jessore district it used to be carried on on a large scale, and in Kishnagur, and on the opposite bank of the Bhagirutti, in the district of Burdwan, it is still carried on; as to ryots not disliking indigo planting, there is now a case pending in the Sudder where Rajah Pratab Sing's ryots were sworn to having sown upwards of 1,600 beegahs on a chur for the purpose of selling the plant to different factories, and the price in general is four bundles for the rupee, the planters paying the conveyance charges.

758. Have you yourself bought that plant?—Yes, I have often bought it in Jessore, not in Kishnagur.

759. But when you bought that plant, did you use the same chain and the same kind of measurements as for the plant that you had made an advance for?—I cannot exactly say that I remember this, but the impression on my mind is, that the measurement is made a little easier to encourage the parties. I mean by easier, that the chains were not held so tight. A couple of years since two zemindars in Kishnagur having sown a chur with indigo, the case went before the Kishnagur magistrate's court, and was decided according to Act IV. of 1840. The party who won it, being on terms with me, sold me the plant at four bundles for the rupee.

760. Mr. Sale.] According to your knowledge, is the Government generally willing to listen to the representations of planters, regarding the conduct of magistrates and other officers?—When the indigo planters complained about cattle trespass, we were listened to, but the law passed, left us worse off than we were before.

761. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] You have stated that the deputy magistrate of Santipore acted as your personal enemy; can you assign any reason for this?—I have been told that it was to serve the Rajas Pratab Chunder and Ishur Chunder, who were at college with him, and were quarrelling with me. My just cases were dismissed, and the complainants fined; and the cases against me and my servants led to heavy fines. The appealable cases decided adversely to me, were all upset in appeal.

762. Had you many criminal cases in court, if so, of what nature?—Simple assault and wounding while I was away from my factory.

763. What parties were defendants in the wounding case?—I myself, my son, my gomashta, my collector of rents, and about 25 or 26 servants of my factory; my people were found guilty in the court of first instance, but were released by the sessions judge on appeal.

764. Mr. Temple.] On the whole, do you consider that ryotti cultivation is calculated to answer to the planter?—Yes, if the ryots act up to their contract faithfully.

765. But within your knowledge and experience, do ryots generally act up to the contract, and are they generally willing to enter into such contracts?—When I first entered the indigo line 37 years ago, planters used to take 10 and 12 bundles for the rupee, and I found the ryots willing enough to take advances; gradually the number of bundles have been reduced to five and even four. I have never found my ryots unwilling to take advances or to settle their accounts yearly, although they must be urged to sow their lands at proper seasons; they have begun, moreover, to show a decided dissatisfaction in regard to indigo planting from causes previously stated.

766. Among these causes, you have stated the circumstance that indigo has not been of late years so profitable as other crops, do you consider this to be the chief reason of the present excitement in some districts, or would you attribute it to the other causes?—To the other causes as above stated.

767. Do you consider that if this dissatisfaction, regarding the comparative unprofitableness of indigo cultivation had not existed, it would have been possible for the perwanna of the magistrate or the preaching of missionaries to have produced such effects as those, which have been recently witnessed?—Those who have had dealings with the ryots, know that if they can avoid any contract they will do so, especially if supported by any party they consider influential; if the above be not the direct means, they have made matters worse.

768. If indigo cultivation had been a profitable thing to the ryot, do you think that these disturbances could have arisen?—Yes; if, as I say, they are urged on by influential parties, particularly the native landholders, who can make the ryot do anything they like.

769. President. Then would it be possible for perwannas of the authorities, for the preaching of missionaries, and for the influence of landholders, combined or separate, to stop the cultivation of sugar-cane, cold weather crops, jute, or tobacco, or any other crop avowedly profitable; is that your opinion?—Combined, yes; but if separate, the ryot would go for help to the planters and try to avoid the annoyances as much as possible.

770. Mr. Fergusson. Do you remember hearing of zemindars, in Eastern Bengal, having endeavoured to put a stop to the cultivation of jute?—I remember having heard something about it, but not caring much, did not pay particular attention thereto.

771. Mr. Temple. If the cultivation of indigo is not profitable to the ryot at the present time, can you suggest any terms that might satisfy the ryot so that he might be willing to continue the cultivation?—No, my ryots never having complained to me, I cannot suggest anything.

772. Then you think that if the price of four bundles be accompanied with collateral advantages the ryot may be satisfied, although the rate be not of itself remunerative?—Undoubtedly; and I do not know that the indigo planter can alter the number of bundles under the existing prices of indigo and chances of bad seasons, without being exposed to ruin.

773. But if better terms be allowed to the ryots, could not a higher price be demanded for the indigo?—Higher prices could be demanded for indigo, but this is doubtful, and if the price of indigo were to rise, this staple would meet with competition from rival countries where it may be produced cheaper, and thus the present planters would be ruined and indigo planting altogether fall to the ground.

774. Are your ryots generally in debt to the factory, or do they clear off their balances season by season?—In general they are in debt, but a few have cleared and taken new advances. It is owing to a run of bad seasons. I have, however, given up yearly a portion of their balances to make them hold on to the factory.

775. Previously to the run of bad seasons were your ryots free from debt?—Yes; in Jessore for a number of years I paid them what is called their fazil or excess, after they had cleared their balances. The impression on my mind is, that while at Ramnaghur, I have paid as much as 7,000 or 8,000 rupees a year as fazil to the ryots, besides advances of two rupees per beegah. At that time the ryots used to give me six bundles for the rupee; since those days those very concerns have sunk 200 or 300 per cent. in their produce owing to various causes.

776. Do fazil or excess payments ever occur now?—No; the indigo seasons have been very bad for the last seven or eight years.

777. Do you think the land exhausted?—No; the defective seasons have been caused by bad weather.

778. President. Will you state in what part of Kishnagar you have lived, and for what time; and can you state what is the feeling of the ryots as regards indigo?—At first I lived for two years and eight months at Ruttonpore Mission, a mile east of the Ruttonpore factory, and since December 1849, I have been living at Kapasdanga, within about a mile of Nischindipore factory. At first, while living at Ruttonpore, I had charge of a small mission station, Jaoginda, within Mr. Roberts's concern, but for the last few years it has been the property of Mr. James Smith. From the first, in 1849, I heard many complaints about indigo cultivation from the ryots. I spent occasionally a few days at an out-station, and heard many complaints about oppression and unfair conduct on the part of planters in regard to indigo cultivation; some cases were brought to my notice by the Christians, whereupon I either spoke or wrote to the proprietor of the Amjoopi factory. In a few cases relief was granted, but at last the proprietor refused to listen to any more representations. Whilst living at Ruttonpore, several cases of injustice on the part of indigo planter's servants were brought to the notice of my brother missionary, and on his either speaking or writing to the planter at the Ruttonpore factory, he granted immediate redress. At Kapasdanga, I found first only a few Christian ryots cultivating indigo, and I was told that they had willingly taken the advances from the factory some fifteen years ago from the present time, as the cultivation of indigo was then a little more profitable than it has ever been since. The reason for taking the advances, I have been informed, was, that they were at that time in great want of money, and could not obtain it anywhere else. Since I have had charge of Kapasdanga the cultivation of indigo by Christian ryots has considerably increased, but I am not aware of one instance in which the ryot has taken the advances of his own accord. They have been induced first by my persuasion, in order to live peaceably with our neighbour, as the planter was holding the lease of the land, and gradually a few new men were told that they must cultivate indigo; the condition was, that if they did not cultivate indigo they would not be allowed to cultivate their own lands for any other crops.

779. Can you state if there are any other causes which have made the ryots more averse to sow than than they were before?—The chief cause is, that the cultivation of indigo is very unprofitable to them, on which account the planters are under the necessity of resorting to compulsion, such as threatening them with withholding their lands for other crops, or abducting their cattle, or fining them, or imprisoning them in the godowns; one such instance I have seen with my own eyes, I refer to a case of abducting cattle or beating the ryots. My own Christians have been threatened twice with the loss of their lands for cultivating other crops. In one case the European assistant told me himself that it was the planter's intention to do so. Two or three days after I heard from my catechist that the proprietor had called upon the Hindoo ryots who hold jummas, and demanded of them the withholding of their lands from the Christian ryots. I may mention that land is so much occupied by ryots with tenant rights that Christian ryots have to obtain lands for their cultivation from such tenants: the Hindoo ryots represented to the proprietor that the Christians were very peaceable neighbours, they paid their rents regularly, and if they had to oust them they would not be able themselves to cultivate that land or procure other ryots, so the matter dropped. There was another instance of the same kind when land was on the point of being taken away. I just now remember one man cultivating two or three beegahs for rice, and the manager demanded that he should sow half a beegah of indigo or give up his rice cultivation altogether. The man actually threw up his cultivation for two or three days, and then went to the factory and took the advance for half a beegah, as he had no other means of subsistence. The whole community was threatened, but only this one man gave it up. I remember an instance of a Christian who had been living within the Ruttonpore concern; his son, being in my employ, the whole family were anxious to settle at Kapasdanga, and so left their old abode. The manager of the Ruttonpore concern demanded that the man should sow a quantity of indigo for which he had received advances, which the ryot objected to do, stating his willingness to cultivate the same quantity of land in the Nischindipore concern, and that his name and debt only should be transferred. This at first not being acceptable to the planter, one Sunday morning, when all the Christians were assembled in church, some of the Ruttonpore factory servants abducted that Christian's cattle from the fields and took them towards Ruttonpore. The cowboys running in gave notice, and all the Christians ran out and rescued the cattle; I was just then on a visit to the Kishnagur station for two or three days when I received information of it on Sunday evening, I immediately returned home on Monday morning, and found the case as I had been informed. My friends informed the magistrate of Kishnagur of the occurrence, who showed his willingness immediately to afford redress, but I considered it more in accordance with Christian doctrine and practice to speak first personally to the planter, who, admitting all the facts, apologised to me, and granted the transfer of the advances and debt to the Nischindipore factory. In July 1856, some seven men, Christians, received advances for carts to carry indigo. The Christians desired the planter and dewan, or gomashtha, before beginning their work to give them receipts, viz. hath chitties, for their daily work, which was agreed to. They went for some days to their work and they received their receipts, but the servants began to make excuses, and they did not receive the receipts regularly; whereupon the Christians stated that they could not carry indigo any more unless the contract was adhered to by the planter's people by giving them their regular hath chitties; the gomashtha came to me, and I requested him to procure the receipts for the Christians, promising that if he brought them on that day, in the evening, the Christians should fulfil their contracts, and myself would see them do it. The following morning (July 31st 1856) the hath chitties did not come, nor did the Christians go to carry indigo, but an amin came and told the Christians that that day their cattle would be taken away. I disbelieved the statement, saying, "that no such thing could be done to them." But at 4 p.m., when I was writing at my desk, two or three men came running in, saying that the lattials had taken the Christians' cattle away. As it had been so often asserted that missionaries listened only to false stories of natives, I had my horse immediately saddled and rode out in the direction of the factory. Near the bazar, I overtook some 35 head of cattle, and when the clubmen saw me they ran away, and I rode round the herd and turned them back; some of the Christians running after me took the cattle home; I was then told that another herd was coming up from the river side driven by lattials, I rode in that direction, and close to my day school the cattle came up, some 80 head. I rode along, and an amin with some eight lattials was in the rear of the herd. Immediately he saw me, the amin called out, "kharra raho," stand! "Sahib ke maro," beat the Sahib; twice he used these words; I had only gone out to be an eye witness, so I called out "ami dekhiyuchi," or, I have seen it, turned my horse round and galloped away, and I am told that one of the lattials attempted to take hold of the bridle of my horse, and to aim a blow at me, which fell on the syce. Returning home, I wrote to the planter briefly stating what had happened, and he returned rather a sharp reply, telling me to mind my own business. I immediately wrote off to the magistrate, who promised to send out the kotwali, or town daroga, as soon as he could get bearers. The cattle were taken away on Thursday; the daroga arrived on Saturday morning. He began at once to inquire of me and the Christians, after which he proceeded to the Dumuhooda Thannah, to which the planter had sent the cattle (the Cattle Trespass Act was not then in operation), and found them there. They were sent on the pretence that they had been on the indigo; but within several acres of land, to my certain knowledge there was not a stalk of indigo. Mr. Grant, the Post Office Superintendent, was just then living in the factory, opening a new post office; he, hearing from me of the occurrence, was anxious to make it up between the planter and me, and for this purpose came over to me. I stated I had not the least ill-feeling towards the planter, and to convince him of my sincerity, I promised to go over to see him that evening, Saturday. On my arrival, the planter began to speak at once about the case, and pressed me hard to come to an accommodation rather than to make a complaint, on which I at last yielded to the request and to his solemn promise that in future nothing of the kind should happen to the Christian ryots. The magistrate had given the daroga a good character, and he acted up to that that character. As to fines I cannot recollect a case of this nature occurring among my Christians, but I have generally heard complaints when preaching in the villages of heavy fines having been inflicted; I make no inquiries of their sufferings or the injustice and oppression practised towards them; but when preaching or speaking to them about justice, kindness, holiness, charity, &c., the villagers frequently speak of the wrongs which they suffer under the indigo system. As to confining in godowns, &c., I can mention no case of my own personal knowledge; none of my Christians have complained of being confined, but others have. In one case a native Christian, not my own, but Mr. Lincke's, was imprisoned; Mr. Lincke will be able to give particulars. A servant of mine saw two men imprisoned in a godown.

780. Have you any personal knowledge of any graver acts of oppression on the part of the planters or the servants of the planters, such as severe beating, arson, destruction of houses, and outrages on women?—Some nine years ago, the European assistant of the factory required ploughs for the nij cultivation after a shower of rain; he came into the field and demanded all the ryots, Christians and others, to leave their own rice cultivation and go into the indigo field; one Christian requested him to let him just finish his work, and he would go immediately when done, upon which the planter aimed some blows at him, but the ryot escaped the blows by running amongst his bullocks. The Christian came running in to me, and I promised to speak to the planter on his return. A little while afterwards I was told that the planter was at that man again, whereupon I ran out and saw him aim the blows at the man, which he escaped. I went up and remonstrated with him; he acknowledged he was not right in what he had done, but that he was acting under the orders of his master, and that he would go home and tell him about it. The following morning he came again into the village; I asked him, well, have you told your master? He said, yes; and what did he say? He said that "he would not give any more lands to Christian ryots." On another occasion a ryot came to me for medicine, because he had just been beaten by the planter in the fields, for allowing some cattle to stray into the indigo; I saw one wound and some bruises on his arm. Some 12 years ago I paid a visit to another missionary, and at breakfast time he spoke to his wife of the outrages of the neighbouring planter and of his threat of burning down a certain village; at that time I was astonished to hear of such things occurring, and after breakfast we both went to the top of the house, where he pointed out to me the direction of the village, and I saw the smoke arising; I think it was in the cold season; I was new to the country and did not understand these things. I have no personal knowledge of pulling down houses; but I remember one case in particular about a haut; I was then living in a tent for some days, and people pointed out to me where a good many shops and houses were standing, and affirmed that a certain planter had burned down the place. They did assign a reason, but I forget it, as it is so long ago now. A few miles from that place where I happened to pitch my tent, I saw another village with the vestiges of very respectable houses, which had evidently been inhabited by prosperous ryots; I was also told, that the planter had desolated the place, because the ryots would not agree to his terms; it had the appearance of having been once a prosperous village. I know no instance of any outrages on women to my personal knowledge; no one has ever complained to me of the abduction of his wife or daughter; but only a few days ago the ryots of one village said, in my presence, "We will tell the Commissioners what oppression they have practised on our women." I have not heard much on this head. I am quite sure that not one instance of the kind has happened to my Christian ryots.

781. Some of these cases happened some years ago; can you give the Commission your opinion as to the particular causes which made the ryots so unwilling to sow this year?—I believe one cause is the aggression of the indigo planters upon the ryots' lands for nij cultivation; I mean particularly the fertile lands round the village, such as the foundation of old houses and dwellings which the planters have had dug up by their Boona coolies for their own cultivation; the people are vexed at that, because if cows stray into the indigo unawares, they are fined for it, and it deprives the village of its privacy. Another cause is, the weeding of indigo with the weeding knife, which was not known a few years ago, which costs them a great deal of money, and deprives them at the same time of the leisure to attend to their own rice cultivation and other crops, to compel them to attend to indigo. In many cases, their ploughs are kept in charge of the factory people, to secure attention to the nij abad, and during the weeding time, in many instances, their ploughs, horses, &c., are taken away and kept with the planters' servants, to ensure their attention to the weeding of the indigo. Another reason is, the oppressive measure that has been resorted to to ensure the better growth of indigo, which is either breaking up the clods with hoes or removing the clods from off the field. No doubt another cause of the unwillingness of the ryots, is the high price of provisions and the unproductive nature of the indigo crops for the last few years; I have heard many ryots declare that they and their families are now on the point of starving. The ryots have not time to attend to the rice cultivation. I have seen many rice fields overgrown with weeds, in consequence of the ryots not having time to attend to them, and in many cases the people cannot sow their rice, being compelled to attend to the indigo. Another circumstance has, I think, given the ryots courage to bring their grievances to the notice of the authorities. The ryots of one village complained to the magistrate of Kishnagur about the hard conditions they were placed under to the planters. Gradually several villages joined, and the movement having begun before the time of making advances, the magistrate released them from the obligation to cultivate indigo forcibly. This spread like wildfire among the indigo ryots, and petition upon petition was poured into the magistrate's court. A perwanna, not the perwanna which has been so much discussed, was placarded by the magistrate of the sub-division. This encouraged the ryots to petition the magistrate for redress.

782. Do you think that a well-known perwanna issued in the Kalaroa sub-division had anything to do with the dislike of the ryots to sow, or that they imagined that it was the desire of Government that they should not sow?—I did not hear about the perwanna till I saw a discussion in the papers. Since that I have heard it from the ryots in a few instances, by way of allusion.

allusion, some three or four months ago. The impression I have received is, the ryot thinks, that the Government intends administering even-handed justice, and will no longer allow the forcible cultivation of indigo. I lay particular stress upon the word forcible. If indigo cultivation were profitable to them, they would have no objection to cultivate it. At present they are as much afraid of indigo as of a snake; and many have declared most emphatically, in my presence, that they would sow no more indigo under any circumstances. I have seen ryots stand up and say (putting their hands up to their throats), "Let the Government cut our throats and send soldiers to kill us with bullets, but we will not sow indigo."

783. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Have any of your Christians been imprisoned by the Summary Indigo Act?—No, because I persuaded them to submit to the Act this year; and several Hindoo and Mussulman villagers in the neighbourhood have followed the example of the Christians.

784. Mr. Sale.] Will you state what is the nature of the advice you have been giving to the ryots regarding the indigo question?—Before the passing of the Summary Act, I advised the ryots in my neighbourhood to submit quietly and patiently to the planters, and by no means to commit any outrage or any illegal act, and to carry their grievances to God; but in case they should be unable to forbear any longer, they should respectfully represent their hardships to the constituted authorities; and the ryots have done so.

785. If a poor man is oppressed, do you think he finds it easy to get redress from the authorities?—It is now much more easy than it ever was before, because several magistrates have been appointed to subdivisions in the district, consequently the officials have been increased, and the courts being much nearer to their habitations, the ryots have found it more feasible to seek for redress; and as far as I know, the magistrates have been much more accessible to the ryots than formerly, in consequence of the non-intervention of the amlas.

786. You said in a former answer that you lay a great stress upon the word "forcible," are we to understand from that, that the cultivation of indigo is, in practice, a forced cultivation?—Yes, as far as my knowledge goes.

787. Mr. Temple.] In what way is it a forced cultivation?—In the way I have already described it.

788. Mr. Sale.] But we are told that the ryots take advances, and enter into contracts, and that having got the money, they try to evade them; is this true according to your belief?—I previously stated that a few of my Christians took advances some 15 years ago, but to the best of my belief, I have never seen any ryot, for the last six or seven years, who has willingly taken advances, except under a certain pressure.

789. Is that constraint always imposed by the planter?—I believe that, in many instances, the servants are to be blamed; they make a traffic by extorting money; I mean the smaller servants.

790. You have stated that indigo is not profitable, can you give us any proofs of that?—I put in a jumma khurch, or regularly balanced account of nine of my Christians. Those accounts are for the last season with the Nischindipore concern.

They show the amount for the cultivation of each beegah of indigo, at an average of five rupees, and the subsequent loss. In every case there has been a loss to the ryot.

791. Mr. Temple.] Are those cases that you mention exceptional or fair average cases?—My opinion is, that they are rather in favour of the planters.

792. Was this last season a good one, or a bad one?—It was a bad one.

793. Supposing the cultivation of indigo is in itself unprofitable to the ryot, does not the planter offer the ryot various collateral advantages, which, on the whole, might make it worth his while to sow?—I know of none such at present existing, except in a few cases; in former times they had schools. In the Mulnath concern there was a hospital for men and women, besides the school. There were other schools in the out-villages.

794. Does not the planter lend sums of money to those ryots who give him satisfaction?—Besides the advances, I know of none.

795. Is it not often a great convenience to the ryot to get the cash advances at the very time he wants money?—I know positively of a few instances mentioned above in which it was an advantage; but now I am not aware of their getting much money in hand in October, when the advances are made, and I think that the ryots would rather be left alone.

796. Does not the ryot ever place himself under engagement to the planter to obtain protection from him as against the zemindar?—I am not aware of any such instance.

797. In cases where the planter has acquired proprietary power, either by means of lease or putni tenure, or otherwise, does he not mitigate the rent upon the ryot's land generally, on condition that a portion of it be sown with indigo?—I am not aware of any instance.

798. On the whole, do you consider it possible that so large a number of ryots could be absolutely forced to cultivate indigo for such lengthened periods, unless at least there were various inducements of some kind or other held out to overcome their unwillingness?—If the ryots enjoyed the benefits and protection of the law, like the English peasants or peasantry in Europe, I should consider it impossible; but the terror in which the ryots have been kept sufficiently accounts for their submission; besides that, an erroneous opinion seems long to have existed among them, that the Government had a share in all their profits, and being loyal subjects, they submitted to the present necessity; as soon as they were disabused of that opinion, up they rose.

799. At what time did a change in their opinion take place as to the interest of the Government in the indigo concern?—Gradually, for the last six months; light came upon light, and now they are quite sure the Government have no interest, as the magistrates have given heed to their complaints.

800. Can you trace the origin of the change, which has occurred within the last six months?—I cannot trace the origin, but the perwannahs have had a great deal to do with it; I mean the Lieutenant Governor's and Mr. Herschel's.

801. Have the ryots imbibed any impression that the Government is hostile to indigo cultivation, or that it desires that a fair opportunity should be afforded to the ryots?—I believe the latter latter to be the case. I believe the ryots entertain this opinion of Government, that they will henceforth render indigo cultivation optional, and treat the Bengali ryots as free subjects.

802. You have stated that the magistrates have admitted the ryots to a full hearing; could you state how they are heard now, and in what manner they were not heard before, i. e. what new mode of hearing now prevails?—Formerly all the petitions used to be written on stamp paper, and without the intervention of the amlas, the ryots could scarcely come near the magistrate; but now some of the magistrates listen to their complaints in person.

803. Have not many ryots' balances in their favour to be received by them at the end of the year from the factory?—I believe a great many receive balances in their favour; but these are quite disproportioned to what is properly their due.

804. Is the compulsion you speak of on the part of the planter to the ryot moral or physical?—Both combined.

805. In those cases where the ryot has excess of fazil to receive, why does he take fresh advances?—He cannot help himself. There is such moral influence brought to bear upon him, that if he refused, physical force would be applied.

806. Mr. Fergusson.] ON behalf and at the desire of Mr. Forlong I have to inquire whether any of the instances of oppression, &c., related by you refer to that gentleman?—Yes; the second attempt to take away the lands from my Christians occurred when he was in charge of the Nischindipore concern, as also the case of the ryot who was required to sow half a beegah of land; as also the case of the two men kept in the factory.

807. Is not Mr. Forlong landlord of nine-tenths of the lands occupied by your Christians in Ruttonpore and Kapasdanga?—Mr. Forlong has the ijara of the Kapasdanga village; I cannot, however, speak exactly to the extent of his rights in land. The landlord of Ruttonpore village is a Hindoo; his name is Pran Kisto Pal; and I understand that the Christians cultivate a small portion of land belonging to the Ruttonpore concern.

808. During the seven years that Mr. Forlong has been there, did you ever bring any act of oppression or injustice to his notice?—I did, in a few cases.

809. Was not Mr. Forlong always willing to redress anything that you thought wrong, and did he not repeatedly ask you to bring to his notice any oppression on the part of the factory?—In the cases that I brought to his notice he granted redress, and he also asked me to bring such cases to his notice, upon which I generally acted, although I did not always do so in person; I sent my catechist in several instances. My reason for not speaking to him on the subject of his taking away the ryots' lands was, because we were not on speaking terms at that time.

810. Since you have been in charge of the Mission, has the number of your converts increased, or the contrary; I mean adults?—They have been pretty stationary.

811. Are they chiefly agriculturists, or are they handicraftsmen, or day labourers?—When I first took charge of Kapasdanga, the majority were day labourers and servants to the mission; but by establishing a loan fund for them, which is managed by the catechists, and readers, and the Mundals, they have increased in prosperity, so that most of them are now cultivators.

812. Generally speaking, what class of people were they; were they Mussulmans or Hindoos?—A large majority were Mussulmans; there were but few Hindoos.

813. Do you find that their character is much improved as to truthfulness?—I do find that they have considerably improved. There are some instances in which, it is my firm belief, that they are thoroughly truthful.

814. Do you know a ryot of the name of Kanai Mundal, a Christian of Kanaidanga, and are you aware that he and his father have had dealings with the factory as indigo ryots for a long period?—Yes, I do know him; I know the man cultivated indigo, but cannot say what his father did.

815. Have you any reason to doubt the correctness of this account put in, which commenced with a balance of Rs. 11. 6. against the ryot, and terminated with a balance of Rs. 137. 15. in his favour at the end of one year?—I have no reason to doubt the correctness of this statement, for the man himself told me that he had received above 50 rupees for plant, and the amount of 16½ maunds of seed, at the rate of four rupees. However, if the man had been allowed to sell the seed himself at the market rate, he would have realised 25 rupees a maund.

816. Is

816. Is there not an agreement with the factory according to which the ryot agrees to give the seed at four rupees a maund, whether the market rate be more or less?—I am not aware of any such agreement; but I know that the planters do take it at that rate, of which the ryots most bitterly complain.

817. But does not the planter give the seed to the ryot for sowing also at the fixed rate of an anna a seer, or Rs. 2. 8. a maund?—I have often heard from the planters that they give it at the rate of four rupees, and on that ground take it from the ryot at that rate; and I have heard the same statement from ryots.

818. And do you consider the gain of the ryot on the one side as equivalent to his loss on the other?—I consider the ryots who raise seed to be great losers.

819. Do you know if the man Kanai Mundal has gone on cultivating indigo for Mr. Forlong?—Before I came down to Calcutta, the man came to me, and I learnt from him in general that the ryots of his village had sown some indigo, in compliance with the new Act; but I made no particular inquiry about his case. However, from the tenor of his statement, I believe he had also sown some.

820. Could he have any objection to sow indigo if he got a similar result to that shown in the account above referred to?—If he had his own choice, I do not think he would sow indigo, with a prospect of a similar result, because he told me that his expenses for the cultivation of the 16½ beegahs of indigo exceeded what he had received.

821. But if he is a man who receives 130 rupees, and owes nothing to the factory, how could he be made to sow if he did not wish it?—The man would have remained under the apprehension of some violent means being used if he did not sow.

822. Have you, in your own knowledge, known of such violent means being used?—Yes, I have, such as those I mentioned in my evidence yesterday.

823. From what you know, do you consider that the planters live as moral lives as the Government officials in the district?—Taking them as a whole, I do not think that there is much difference.

824. Are you acquainted with the character and general dealings of Pran Kisto Pal, the landlord of your ryots at Ruttonpore?—I have heard a good deal about him, and, with regard to my Christians, I have every reason to be satisfied with him as a landlord. In some instances he has reprov'd his gomashta for harsh treatment to the Christians, and he has told my catechist to write to him should he have anything to complain of.

825. Do you know at what rate he charges when he makes advances of grain or cash to ryots?—No, I do not know, as my Christians have no dealings of that description with him, their only transaction being confined to the payment of rents; but I understand the rate to be, on grain, a maund and a half for one maund, given as they require it. I believe the general rate of money lent is one anna on the rupee per month.

826. Have you heard that Pran Kisto Pal in his talook villages sweeps into his own golas the full crops, and fixes his own price?—I have heard of some instances of the kind.

827. Is it not usual for mahajans to take grain and other produce at prices fixed beforehand, when making advances to ryots?—I am not particularly acquainted with this subject, but I believe that there is a general understanding with the ryots and the mahajans that the cultivators shall give their grain at the harvest-time at a fixed rate, at whatever the market price may be.

828. Mr. Sale.] Is that rate fixed every year when the advance is given by the mahajan, or does the rate continue fixed for a series of years?—If agreements are made, I believe they are only for a season. I wish to correct what I stated in a previous answer. The rate of interest charged by the mahajan is half an anna; not one anna. One anna is the common rate between servants and others.

829. Mr. Fergusson.] Do you think a ryot has the best chance of being prosperous under a planter zemindary, or under a mahajan zemindary?—I have seen so little of native zemindaries that I cannot form an opinion on this subject.

830. Do you know what is the average return of rice per beegah in your neighbourhood in maunds?—I have made no inquiries recently; but formerly I made some passing inquiries, and I think that people told me they obtained from one to two and a half bish. A bish is equivalent to about four maunds. This is the rice in the husk; besides, there would be the straw.

831. Can you state the return from rice cultivation per beegah?—I have an idea that the return may on an average be at Rs. 2. 8.; I mean all kinds of rice. That is the profit after deducting all the expenses, such as ploughing, harrowing, weeding, cutting, carrying, thrashing, rent, &c.

832. Mr. Sale.] Do you intend that your average of Rs. 2. 8. per beegah should refer only to your calculations made some years ago, or to the present time, with rice at the present prices?—I believe the return is about the same now as it was some years ago, because the ryot's expenses for food and agricultural pursuits have increased in proportion.

833. Mr. Fergusson.] I believe the quality of ground suited for rice is not very good in your neighbourhood?—I have seen rice grown in almost every part of the country round Kapas-danga; but in the neighbourhood of Ruttonpore, the soil being sandy, cold weather crops grow better than rice there.

834. Are you aware that a considerable quantity of rice has been frequently imported into the district, and that the Nischindapore concern has imported some?—I know that much rice is being imported from the Eastern and Western districts. Mr. Hills told me several years before he went home, that during the famine in 1838 he had imported quantities of rice for the benefit of the ryots.

835. What is generally the tenure of the Mussulman and Hindoo ryots in your neighbourhood; are they tenants at will, or what?—Many have old pottas or leases at fixed rents, and many are tenants at will; by tenants at will I mean that I believe they are not liable to ejectment so long as they pay their rents.

836. But, in practice, has not the landlord the power of raising the rent on the latter class of tenants?—I believe he exercises a discretionary power with regard to the tenants at will.

837. If the present movement against indigo planting planting is successful, would not the result be the loss by the planters of the indigo balances due by the ryots?—If the balances were received by the planters, I believe all those ryots that could afford it would pay them off at once, as I have heard from many that they were willing to do so, and would even sell their bullocks or other property with a view to get out of the factory books.

838. What would be the proportion of the amount so paid, in one or two years, to the whole amount of the balances?—My impression is, that they would pay off the whole of the balances in two years.

839. Are you aware that the indigo balances in the Kishnagur district amount to perhaps 50 lacs of rupees; supposing that to be the case, do you think it possible that anything near this amount could be realised from the ryot?—Had I the number of the ryots in Kishnagur, I could answer your question.

840. Mr. Sale.] Do you think that the planter's estimate of the balances, and the ryot's estimate of the balances, would agree?—Certainly not; for if the ryots brought up their losses for many years past, the balances against the planter would be very heavy.

841. Do you think, from what you know of the ryots, that they would be disposed to pay a fair and equitable amount to the planters as balances?—I believe they would do so most cheerfully, in order to get rid of the advances for the forced cultivation.

842. Mr. Fergusson.] The outlay of the concern under Mr. Forlong's charge is about three lacs of rupees annually; do you not think that the disbursement of such a sum of money is of great advantage to the people, giving them employment, wages, and means of consuming the produce?—Many, I believe, are benefited by obtaining direct employment and pay from the factory; but I believe that the losses in the cultivation of indigo counterbalance many of these benefits.

843. Mr. Forlong states that in the villages constituting these concerns, there are 7,50,000 beegahs of land cultivated, and that out of that 94,000 beegahs are cultivated with indigo; does it not therefore appear, that if indigo cultivation was put an end to, there would be something less than a lac of beegahs available for other purposes; and do you think, that for that object, it would be desirable to put a stop to the cultivation of indigo?—I do not consider it desirable to put a stop to the cultivation of indigo. The ryots would, as free agents, certainly cultivate a considerable amount of land with indigo, if it proved as profitable to them as other crops. All that I consider desirable, and even imperative, is the discontinuance of the force employed.

844. If indigo cannot be cultivated profitably, paying a higher price than four bundles for the rupee, do you not think that the cultivation of indigo must cease?—If the ryots are free agents, and the planter cannot afford to pay a higher rate than four bundles for the rupee, the ryotti cultivation must cease. But of course they may carry on a nij cultivation, perhaps to any extent that they may desire.

845. This, I presume, would be the case only until the price of food and labour fell, which will be the natural result of so much more land being given to grain, under the want of employment by the people?—I do not expect the prices will fall so much as to bring it to the standard of four bundles of plant for the rupee.

846. Mr. Temple.] But if planters take leases or purchase proprietary tenures to a large extent, will not the legitimate influence, which they as landlords would exercise over the tenants, induce the ryots to cultivate indigo without the employment of actual compulsion?—At the present rate of remuneration, I believe that that legitimate influence would be insufficient.

847. Do you consider that the ryot would in a matter of that kind act contrary to the wishes of his landlord, even supposing that the landlord applied no compulsion?—I believe that the ryot would act according to his own interest. If the compliance with the wishes of the zemindar was more profitable to him than the contrary, I believe he would comply.

848. Would it not be worth the ryot's while to cultivate a small portion of his lands with indigo, in order to please his landlord?—I believe it would be, in order to escape from inconveniences; and hitherto the ryots have been doing so from that motive.

849. Are there not many estates on which the ryots would, notwithstanding an option being allowed to them, and notwithstanding their being made perfectly free agents, still continue to cultivate indigo in order to please their landlords?—I believe they would cultivate a small quantity for a kind, considerate, and just landlord.

850. Are there not many such landlords among the indigo planters?—I believe there are many among the indigo planters who most decidedly disapprove of the present system, and if they had it in their power, would put it on a different and more satisfactory footing, and prove kind, considerate, and just landlords; but individually they have not the power to amend the system.

851. Do not such men manage somehow to keep these indigo tenants tolerably well contented?—I do know some such; but as soon as they can, they leave indigo planting for some other pursuit. The past discontent of the ryots has spread even into concerns where the planter had been acting more considerately than in others.

852. Previous to the present disturbances, do you know whether there was anything in the condition of the police which impeded indigo cultivation, or has aggravated what you consider to be the evils of the present system?—I am not aware of anything regarding the police that I should consider as an impediment to the cultivation of indigo. I believe that many native police officials have been open to bribes from planters. I believe that the small number of European officials gave the planters a large sphere of independent action of which great use was made. I have also been informed that, generally speaking, the darogas and other native officials were afraid of the planters, as in some cases such officers had been removed on the representation of the planters.

853. If the organization or discipline of the police had been other than what it is, would any change have arisen in the system of indigo planting?—If the police had been more efficient and of higher morale and independence, I believe considerable changes would have been the inevitable consequence, such as security of property and person of the ryots, and higher remuneration for the indigo cultivation.

854. Within your knowledge and experience, have

have the planters been much in the habit of obtaining assistance from the police?—I believe they have.

855. Have the police generally rendered a fair amount of support to the indigo planters?—My own impression is that the planters have received a fair amount of assistance from the police.

856. On the other hand, do you consider that the police have rendered, on the whole, a fair amount of protection to the ryots?—No; I think the ryots have been sadly neglected by the police. Since the disturbances, the native police have been of much more help to the ryots than before.

857. On the whole, do you consider that the planters have received, previous to the disturbances, a fair amount of support from the magistrates?—As far as my observations go, I think they have.

858. On the other hand, do you consider that adequate notice has been generally taken by the magisterial authorities of the complaints of the ryots?—I do not think that adequate notice has been taken. I lay stress on the word adequate.

859. Mr. Sale.] It has been stated that there has been a strong prejudice in the minds of magistrates against planters, and in favour of the ryots; as far as your observations go, do you think this correct?—I have never known of any such prejudice; I have known civilians stand up for the just rights of the cultivators, which exposed them to the charge of being prejudiced against the planters.

860. Have you had any opportunity of seeing exactly the origin of the contract between planter and ryot?—I never was present when a contract was made, but from ryots who had just received advances, I have learnt that in their cases the amin was sent to the village to call them to appear at the factory on a certain day, telling them that they would receive advances. The new ryots appearing had their names entered in the books, and the amount of advances was also written and handed over to them at the rate of two rupees a beegah, and with that the ryot was dismissed. This refers to ryots who received new advances.

861. Mr. Fergusson.] Did I gather from your evidence yesterday, that before the late disturbances there were practically neither courts of justice nor police, in the interior where you resided?—It was almost so. In the last 14 months a new sub-division has been added in Damurhuda, and also another in Kurimpore.

862. Do not you think that if an agitation was got up among the ryots not to pay rent, by quoting certain clauses of Act X. of 1859, it would be as successful as this agitation against indigo?—I have seen no sign of such agitation to refuse their lawful rents, nor do I expect the ryots would refuse to pay their just dues; I do not think they would attempt it.

863. You stated that you thought the morality of planter and civilians to be on about a par; do you wish to modify your statement in any way?—I have had very little opportunity of comparing either, not having had much acquaintance with civilians.

864. Do you consider that the lives and morals of indigo planters living in your neighbourhood, are other than the lives and morals of European gentlemen living on their estates at home?—I cannot make a comparison between the two, especially as regards England.

865. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Are not all the best lands taken by the planters for indigo, and all sorts of inferior land left for the ryots for their different crops?—I believe it is so.

866. Out of 1,000 beegahs of land, what proportion would you consider the best lands?—It is very difficult for me to say, as I have not directed my attention to this subject.

867. There are hath chittis and an abstract of account of nine Christian ryots with the Nischindipore concern which you produced, showing a loss to the ryots from Rs. 9. 15. to Rs. 18. 14. each; do you not think that if these ryots are obliged to continue cultivating indigo, it will involve them more and more in debt every year?—If the present system should continue, it would certainly involve them in greater debt, and eventually they might be reduced to penury and day labour.

868. President.] Can you give us any idea of the exact feeling of the ryots towards the Government regarding this indigo question?—The ryots are now looking for the action of Government, and confidently expect that they will obtain redress of their grievances, but they declare that if they are disappointed, the consequences will be terrible. This is not my imagination; I only state what I have heard. This feeling does not exist in Kapasdanga, but I have heard of its existence from persons from all parts of the district.

Reverend J. H. ANDERSON, Baptist Missionary, of Churamankatty, Jessore, called in; and Examined on oath.

869. President.] WILL you state to the Commission what opportunity you have had in Jessore or elsewhere, of ascertaining the feelings of the ryots?—I have resided about five and a half years in the Jessore district, two years of which I spent at Jhingergatchia where there was an indigo factory. The last four years I have travelled about the southern and western parts of the district, and in the south-east of Nuddea, where there are several out-factories belonging to the Bengal Indigo Company. I speak Bengali fluently, and have had frequent occasions to speak to the ryots cultivating indigo.

870. Can you state whether that cultivation is unpopular and unprofitable; and if so, can you tell us from what particular reason, such as oppression or injustice committed against the ryots, the irksome or harassing nature of the cultivation, or any other cause?—I have heard very few complaints from Mr. Mackenzie's ryots of Jhingergatchia. I have reason to believe his ryots are treated with great fairness and kindness; a large quantity of medicine is dispensed to the sick, a school has been established where, I believe, nearly 100 boys receive instruction, and on account of his benevolent feelings towards the ryots, many of them speak very well of him, but they give an altogether different character of his predecessor. Also in the Nuddea districts, the ryots everywhere complain of the unjust and cruel treatment to which they are subjected. At one village I have observed the ruins of two or three houses which have been abandoned by the ryots to escape from the oppression which they had had suffered. In another village I met with a number of people who complained that they were seized and sent about from factory to factory, in order to beat the plant in the vats, and that they received nothing for their labour. At another place I was told by the ryots that they were forced to beat the indigo for two or three months, and were sent away with a remuneration of two rupees each. I remember that in two villages it was said, "Save us from the oppression of the planters, and then we may become Christians." On one occasion I was on a visit to a gentleman residing on the banks of the Kubbaduck, and while there, a ryot of the village of Bazeekaphur came and entreated the gentleman to do what he could to render him help. He asserted that his house had been plundered, and that he and his brother were driven away from their homestead by the planter's people. He happened to mention that a Christian named Ameer Mullick, who had become a convert to Christianity, under the religious teaching of Mr. Sage, and who had been baptized by Mr. Foy, the chaplain of Jessore, that this man and his family of seven children had been forced to leave their abode, which, on being deserted, was broken down by the agents of the planter, as Mr. Foy had left the Jessore district a short time before. I proceeded to the spot in company with Ameer Mullick, and found that the statement made to me was correct. The said Ameer Mullick was a respectable gantidar; some 80 families of ryots belonged to the ganti. He had lived in a pucha house surrounded by high pucha walls, within which two or three kutchas houses were situated. Outside this wall two golas or barns and a stable had stood. The whole place was a perfect ruin. I spoke to one or two individuals in the locality, but scarcely any one ventured to reply to me. A remark of one man who spoke to me while I was standing on the ruin implied that the planter's agents had destroyed the property. About the same time a case of the Goaltolli Mitters came under my notice; their evidence has recently been taken by this Commission. I have not been on the spot, but the circumstances that I have witnessed in another village, together with the fact that the injustice committed to the Goaltolli gantidars is notorious for many miles round convince me of the truth of the case. In connexion with the Sindoori concern, in addition to cases of oppression, which I know of by hearsay, I desire to mention a case of injustice practised upon a family of Christians residing on the property attached to the Sindoori concern; it occurred several years ago; the facts are briefly these:—About 150 head of cattle were carried off. A gola was plundered, and some rice then standing in the field was cut down and taken off. In addition to the afore-mentioned causes the unpopularity of indigo cultivation is attributable to many other causes. On some indigo estates a large number of ryots have been working for a series of years on a single advance. In regard to this subject, I have made particular enquiries, and have been generally assured that this statement is correct, so that in fact the labour of the poorer peasantry is scarcely at all remunerative. The process of cultivation, as described to me by the ryots, is as follows:—When a planter obtains possession of an ijara or lease, the factory servants are sent out, to say, "Our sahib has taken this ijara; you must sow indigo." Thereafter some of the principal ryots are summoned to the factory; advances are given to them, from which the dewan and the karani, or writer, have to be feed; when shortly after he amin's khalassis proceed to the lands of the ryots in order to mark off the land to be sown. They select spots contiguous to the ryot's houses, where they are accustomed to sow their vegetables, and only in the event of their giving a gratuity to these men will they listen to any remonstrance. They complain, moreover, that the measurement is an unjust one. When the plant becomes fit for cutting they are forced to give up their carts and their boats to transport the plant to the factory. They are forced to work at the pumps, and where Boona coolies or labourers from the hills are scarce, low caste ryots are made to beat the indigo in the vats. They complain, too, of the heavy fines to which they are subjected, in the event of their cattle straying into plots of indigo. Illegal detention is also a matter of complaint. When the ryots should receive at the end of the season the alleged value of their crops, it comes to them with so many deductions that the amount they really receive is a small pittance. From these causes I am of opinion that indigo cultivation is unpopular and unprofitable to the ryots.

871. Have you any personal knowledge of any graver acts of oppression, such as house burning, severe beating, or wounding, or outrages on women?—No, I have no personal knowledge from sufferers, but have only heard from third parties.

872. Mr. Sale.] Do you mean to say that the amins systematically take the lands near the ryots' houses to sow indigo, or is it a device for them to extort money from them?—I have seen indigo growing almost at the doors of the ryots' houses, but of course the indigo grown near the ryots' houses forms but a mere fraction of the amount sown.

873. President.] In the instances of the oppression you have mentioned, was any complaint made to the authorities, and do you think that the planter and the ryot respectively meet with fair play at the hands of the police in the courts?—In the case of the gantidar or small proprietor, Ameer Mullick, to whom I have referred, I am told that complaints were made on two occasions. In one case the matter was referred to the Mofussil manager of the Bengal Indigo Company, he being then an honorary magistrate, but the complaining parties thought it fruitless to pursue the complaint, as they considered the gentleman implicated in the case through his own servants. In another case they appealed to the collector of the Kishnagar district, who referred the complaint to his deputy, and the complainant obtained a decree, but the case has been appealed. This case was quite recent, and must have been under the new Act for rents; I mean Act X. of 1859. I have no reason to think the planter is unlawfully dealt with by the magisterial authorities, nor by the police, but I do not think that the wrongs of the ryot are properly recorded by either.

874. Has not the establishment of new subdivisions made justice more accessible to every one?—Until very recently there has been no deputy magistrate stationed within, I should think, a distance of 25 miles from the villages of Kanpoor and Goaltolli. The Kalaroa magistrate resides about 30 miles from the above spot, but I think we greatly need an additional number of magistrates in sub-divisions, and I think that the acts of injustice to which I have referred may be in a considerable measure ascribed to the absence of magistrates in sub-divisions.

875. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Do you not know that the factory people commit many acts of oppression on the ryots in many ways, such as forcibly taking away their milch cows, cutting their bamboos and other trees, taking away their sugar-cane and other fruits and vegetables without paying for them?—I have heard of milch cows and goats being forcibly taken to indigo factories; of cows being kept as long as they give milk, and then restored to their owners. I believe the price of the goats is paid by the planters, but that the servants cheat them of a portion of the amount which they ought to receive. I have heard of fowls being taken to the factory, and being paid for by the servants at the rate of two pice each. Prices vary in different parts of the districts, but I apprehend that in no part could a fowl be purchased for less than one anna.

876. Do not the planters employ club men to commit affrays?—I have heard again and again of lattials being employed. Before the present proprietor of the Jhingergatchea concern resided there, I am told that a body of some 50 up-country men were retained for a period by his predecessor.

877. Mr. Fergusson.] Are you not aware that that former proprietor of Jhingergatchia had charge of the extensive estates of the Raja of Jessore, and consequently had to keep a good number of men to collect rents, carry money, &c.?—I am not aware that such was the case, but I know that some men of that description were discharged by the present proprietor because one of them used threatening language towards Mr. Mackenzie. I may add that men of this stamp were employed in plundering the house of a talookdar of the name of Abdool Miyan. This took place during the residence of the former manager.

878. Have you heard of similar acts of oppression, such as you have related about the planters, being attributed to zemindars?—I have frequently heard of such cases, and have had proof which has quite satisfied me of their reality.

879. President.] Do you think that those acts of oppression to which you have referred are generally perpetrated, or are they confined to a minority of the planters?—Yes, the acts of grave oppression to which I have adverted are, I think, confined to a small minority.

880. Then are we to understand that the general dislike to indigo arises from its unproductiveness, and because the cultivation is made irksome or harassing to the ryot?—The dislike is to be ascribed to both causes.

881. Do you think that any portion of the dislike is due either to any perwannas issued by the magistrate, or to the preaching of missionaries?—I think that the dislike is antecedent to the issue of any perwanna, but I am not aware that missionary influence in any part of the country has had anything to do with it.

882. Mr. Fergusson.] But do you think the late manifestation of the dislike has been the consequence of the perwanna issued from Kalarowah?—Yes, I think it is in a great measure to be ascribed to it.

883. President.] Do you think anything could be done to render indigo planting more popular to the ryot?—I think that it is highly desirable that the power of the native zemindars should be curtailed. If this were done, the power of the planters' zemindars would consequently be curtailed, and also the native zemindars' interference with, and influence over, the cultivators of the soil, would, to some extent at least, be abridged.

884. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] What are the powers that the native zemindar possesses, and which would you like to see curtailed?—They have the power of preventing ryots from seeking legal redress from the constituted authorities. They are, in fact, accustomed to summon the ryots to their cutcherries on any pretext whatever, and consequently they are able to find, and actually do find them, and keep them in custody. In addition to this, they have the power of exacting money from the ryots, which they do to a large extent.

885. Are you not aware that certain Acts passed last year by the legislature, have completely curtailed the powers of the zemindars, who abused those powers?—I am aware of the enactment; but owing to the ignorance of the great bulk of the ryots in many parts, it has remained inoperative, and I greatly question whether it will afford relief to the ryots generally.

886. What would you propose then?—I think that the right of the ryot to justice and protection is paramount to any claims springing out of class legislation; and moreover, that zemindary powers having been greatly abused, no breach of faith on the part of the Government, I think, would result from an alteration in the perpetual settlement being effected.

887. Mr. Sale.] Do you not think that simple courts, and a greater number of them, with the laws already enacted for the ryots, would render them greater service?—Unquestionably they would.

888. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] You stated that the ryots of certain villages said, that if you save us from the planters we may become Christians; have you ever baptised any on those conditions?—Certainly not; I could not for a moment entertain such foolish proposals.

889. President.] WILL you please state to the Commission the parts of the Kishnagur or other districts in which you have been stationed, and what opportunities you have had of ascertaining the feelings of the ryots?—I have been stationed in Solo and Bollobpore Missions; the latter is near the Ruttonpore concern. I have had many and frequent opportunities of speaking with the ryots, as well as have had requests to intercede for them with the planters.

890. Then have you perceived any growing dislike of late towards the cultivation of indigo, on the part of the ryots; and if so, can you state from what causes the disinclination arises?—The dislike has always existed, but has greatly increased of late; the causes are numerous and various indeed. In particular, for the last three years, the ryots have told me that the oppression on the part of the planters has been on the increase. The ryots say that they have been obliged to pay more attention to the cultivation of indigo, in ploughing, weeding, &c., for the last three years, than formerly, to the detriment of their own rice crops, as they are not allowed to attend to their own lands till the indigo sowing is finished. The time for sowing rice and indigo comes together, and although the ryot may manage to sow a little rice, yet as no time is given them to weed it, the crop seriously suffers. Also they complain very much of being obliged to sow more land than they formerly did. A man who has ten beegahs of land, is often obliged to sow two with indigo, and when he has a complete plough, i. e., four bullocks is made to sow three beegahs. Sometimes a man has neither ploughs nor bullocks, but if he plant turmeric, he is also obliged to sow indigo; he is obliged to break the ground with the mattock, and to hire people to weed the land for him. In fact he has to do every thing himself, or hire people to do it for him. There is a man in Bollobpore now in this condition, having neither ploughs nor bullocks, who is in the habit of cultivating turmeric, and therefore he is made to sow one beegah of indigo; this man is personally known to me. Another complaint is, that the ryot gets his lands from the planter, measured out to him by one kind of measure, whilst the planter takes the same land from the ryot for indigo cultivation, by another measure, which is considerably larger; the planter also chooses the land himself. The ryots say the eight cart loads do not give them four bundles; I believe the ryot expects a cart load to be a bundle. The weeding for the last three years has been very expensive; the planter has insisted that the land must be weeded, so as to be "as clean as his hand." I have seen an account for a beegah of planter's measurement, which cost the ryot six rupees in the weeding. They have many and grievous complaints about the factory amlas. If the ryot happen to have a balance in his favour, he has no chance of carrying it home, and I have even known of more than one case in which the ryot has been obliged to pay the amla from his own pocket, over and above his balances. They also complain that the planters take their labour for carting, &c., for less than the market value. They generally give them three rupees advance for a cart, bullock, and man per month, which is often all they get; I believe the right price is four annas a day, or seven rupees eight annas a month; that is what I have to pay myself. A man complained to me a short time ago in Solo, saying "that he had been made to work for three months, on one rupee advance; at the end of that period, when the accounts were made up, he was obliged to refund 11 annas; this is what I understood the man to say, but I did not inquire into the particulars of the case. Besides the above complaints, a moulvee, from a neighbouring village of Bagvan, complained that a number of his bamboo trees were felled for the factory, without his consent, and without remuneration. I never heard complaints of cutting mango and jack trees.

891. Besides the instances stated, have you any personal knowledge of any more serious acts of oppression, such as taking away cattle, wounding or beating, destroying or burning houses, kidnapping and confinement for long periods, or outrages on women?—Of the first I have two instances within my personal knowledge. About three or four years ago, either in 1856 or 1857, a number of cattle had been taken away belonging to Christians in the neighbouring village during the day time; the people came and complained to me, and I wrote to the planter remonstrating. He in reply said, I had been misinformed; whereupon I replied with a statement of the names of the people who had taken the cattle away, such as factory servants and lattials. Failing redress, I wrote to the proprietor; I did not refer the matter to the magistrate or police; some of the cattle have only recently been got back by accident. And the second instance is this: cattle had again been taken away from another village, the zemindar of which village wrote to me, asking me to see what I could do. I have that letter to this day, as also the statement of the chowkidar, as well as of the burkundazes stationed at a pharee. I could do nothing with the planter, so the zemindar made a complaint to the Daroga or the magistrate, I don't recollect which. The Daroga came, but unfortunately fell into the hands of the wrong party; he made a statement contrary to the zemindar's statement, consequently the case was dropped. I believe the zemindar's statement to be true, from the tenor of the conversation I had with the ryots with whom I spoke, but I cannot say that they were the actual sufferers; in this case I did not write to the planter. The zemindar, the chowkidar, and burkundazes agreeing together in the tenor of the conversation with the ryots, made me believe this statement to be true. As regards beating, at the time the cattle were carried off two men were beaten by the factory people because they tried to prevent their cattle being taken away; these two men were carried off to, and were not seen from the 18th March to the 31st May; I remember the circumstance well, as they were two of my Christians. When they came back I saw scars on the head of one of them, where the hair had not grown. The other was an old man, and was not beaten quite so severely; he had a wound behind his ear. The younger of the two told me the names of the various factories to which they were carried, and could point them out if necessary. They were first bound by both hands, afterwards by one hand, and then with a rope round their waist. In this instance also I wrote at once to the planter, begging him as their pastor, to set them free. Their families said, "We don't care about the cattle; restore us our husband and father." I said I wrote to the planter, but got no answer; this occurred in 1856 or 1857. I wrote also to the magistrate who in reply said, that he could not entertain such a complaint without the complainant appearing, so I gave the brother a letter to the magistrate. I don't know how matters ended.

892. Mr. Fergusson.] Can you give any reason for the proceedings of the planter with regard to the zemindar and the people?—I believe there was a quarrel between the planter and zemindar. The planter wanted to have the lease of certain villages, and for some years there was a dispute between them; at last the zemindar was obliged to yield. I think the planter gave these people trouble, because they were the ryots of the zemindar. When there is a dispute between planter and zemindar, the ryot invariably suffers. In connexion with this dispute for two successive years, a cordon was drawn perhaps for two months or more at a time, between the planter's and the zemindar's village, and all communication was stopped between them. There was a large haut in the zemindar's village, and a small one in the planters, and people could not pass from one haut to another; our Christians, living in those villages, were not allowed to come to church. Two Christians who were coming to a sacramental meeting were stopped in the way, taken to the village cutcherry and abused, and then to the factory, which is about two miles distant, and back to the village; they were then laid under a fine of 25 rupees; but having no money my catechist became security, but the fine was never required to be paid; I paid a rupee to the peada with my own hands, as his fee for seizing the people, instead of their paying themselves. They were carried through my village in charge of four lattials and one chowkidar, who threatened them, that if they ventured to speak they would be speared; there was no complaint made to the magistrate. I wrote to the planter on the case, and begged he would not allow such treatment; he replied that he was very busy in packing indigo, but would inquire into it. I reminded him of it afterwards, but no notice was ever taken of it.

893. Is there neither law nor police in that country, to which you could apply for protection against such proceedings?—There are both law and authorities in the country; but in the first place the ryots have not money to prosecute; secondly, they are afraid to be way-laid; and, thirdly, have very seldom got justice done them.

894. President.] Will you please return to the instances referred to in my last question?—I know another case of kidnapping; this happened on Easter Sunday two years ago. At that time the planter was anxious to rase a cutcherry in one of the zemindar's villages, and went with a large force with everything prepared to do it, but he was resisted by the zemindar's people. On that occasion a Government chowkidar and his son were taken away; in about three months they re-appeared, but I did not see them on their return. On the same occasion there was one house burnt down, and others looted; I was on the spot two days after, when the daroga went to make a report; I saw things of small value strewed about which had been thrown away by the looters; I saw the ruined homestead. The magistrate investigated the case himself, and found both parties guilty; both parties were fined and imprisoned. It would appear the magistrate judged the case as one of double affray; but my belief is that it was an attack by the planter against the zemindar, and a defence by the zemindar. The planter's people complained that the house burned down was their cutcherry, and that a man had been killed. I know that there was no cutcherry, and I believe no one was killed. I have had no complaints made to me about outrages on women.

895. Mr. Temple.] Then, on the whole, you have no reason to believe that such things ever occurred?—No; that is, nothing has come to my personal knowledge.

896. If such a thing had occurred, do you not consider that with your intimate knowledge of the ryots, it would have come to your notice?—I don't think it would have come to my notice, as they are most careful not to speak on such subjects; once known that anything had happened to their women, their caste would be gone.

897. President.] How far are you from the Sudder station, and from the nearest sub-division, and do you think that, on the whole, the power of obtaining redress is sufficiently accessible to all parties in your neighbourhood?—I am about 20 miles from the Sudder station, and about eight miles from Hurra; there is no regular sub-division at Hurra, but a magistrate has lately been stationed there temporarily. There is a thannah at Hurra; the power of redress has not been sufficiently accessible to all parties, in consequence of the great distance and of there being only one magistrate. For the zemindars and planters it is easy enough to complain, having mookhtyars and other means at command, but the ryots have neither, and therefore they have no help. As I said before, they are also afraid of the consequences, and they have no hope of redress.

898. Were you in the district at the time when planters were appointed honorary magistrates, and can you give us an idea of the impression which that measure produced?—I was there at the time; the impression was very unfavourable among the ryots; their expression was, "Now they have made the wolf the shepherd of the sheep."

899. Mr. Temple.] On the whole, within your knowledge, how did the planters who were vested with the powers of honorary magistrates, exercise those functions?—On this point I have no personal knowledge.

900. Mr. Fergusson.] Is it not the case that planters generally devote some hours every day to hearing and settling disputes between the ryots, and that the ryots most freely and willingly resort to them for that purpose?—I believe that the planters do so generally, and that the ryots resort to them willingly. I heard, particularly at Shikarpore, that the ryots went to planters instead of the moonsiffs, so that the moonsiffs had no work.

901. President.] Have you observed that in Kishnagur the jungle has disappeared, and cultivation and population has increased; and, if so, can you state to what this is owing?—I have observed in several places the jungle has disappeared, as the planters have cut it down, and made it nij abad. I don't think the population has increased.

902. On the whole, do you think the ryots better off in respect to house, clothing, and food on the estates held by zemindars, or on estates held by planters?—I have observed no difference; but in the Burdwan district I think the villages are much better; there are more pucka houses than in Kishnagur. In Kishnagur you must go a long way to see a pucka house, except what belongs to zemindars, a Government servant, or the servant of a factory.

903. Is not the soil of Kishnagur much poorer than that of the districts round about it?—I am not acquainted with Jessore. In parts of Kishnagur there is a larger quantity of inferior land; on the whole, I should think that it is inferior to that of Burdwan.

904. Mr. Salé.] Do you know of any other place except Shikarpore in which the ryots prefer going to the planter to seek redress at the Moon-siff's Court?—No.

905. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] After hearing the ryots' complaint, do the planters fine the parties who are wrong; if so, to what extent?—I have never been present on such an occasion; but I do believe the planter fines the guilty party. I have heard of fines sometimes being levied on the whole village to the amount of 300 or 400 rupees.

906. Mr. Fergusson.] How many years have you been at Bollobpore, which is, I believe, about a good mile from the Ruttonpore factory?—More than 12 years.

907. Since when have you observed an increase of dissatisfaction on the part of the ryots to cultivate indigo?—I consider that it has been regularly increasing for some years. For the last two or three years the rice crops have been bad, and the suffering of the ryots have been consequently aggravated.

908. Have not the seasons for the last two or three years been very unfavourable for the planters also?—I believe they have been under the average.

909. From your residing so close to Ruttonpore, must you not have known any acts of oppression, and generally of all the proceedings of the planters in charge of that factory?—I am not at all in the habit of inquiring what my neighbours do, and only took notice of things when they were thrust upon me.

910. Have not the planters asked you to state to them any cases of oppression with a view of redressing them?—Yes, Mr. Forlong has done so.

911. Have you applied to him for redress in any act of oppression, or in any case of difficulty?—Yes, I have done so. In two instances I have applied to him in reference to the land on which our village stands. He could not help me in the first instance, as it was not in his power to do so; in the second, he has promised to render me his assistance when the time comes.

912. Is he the landlord generally of your Christian ryots, and how many have you?—Yes, he is; I have about 800 souls altogether.

913. Are they chiefly cultivators, and do any of them cultivate indigo?—Otherwise they would not be allowed to cultivate anything else.

914. Mr. Salé.] Do you mean to say it is a rule of the concern that every cultivator is bound to cultivate indigo?—Such is the case, and I must believe it is so, judging from the common practice.

915. Mr. Fergusson.] Are they tenants at will, or have they pottas for a certain number of years, and at a fixed rent?—In our village at Bollobpore, I believe the first is the case; but in other villages it may be different.

916. Do you think it would have been possible for other acts of oppression to have been committed at Ruttonpore than those you have mentioned without your knowing of it?—Certainly; I refer to what I have said before. I never inquire into anything done, except it be thrust upon me.

917. Is your knowledge of the objection of the ryots to cultivate indigo limited in the same way?—Until within the last six months it was so limited.

918. Mr. Temple.] Then, within the last six months, have the ryots generally mentioned freely in conversation to you their objections to cultivate?—As I have said before, the objections are nothing new, but have gradually gone on increasing. But since the time the Queen took the government, they have been hoping for release; and as there is such a unity amongst them as has never occurred before, they think it is from God, and that the time of relief is at hand; and they also look to this Commission with great hope; but if they should be disappointed, none can tell what will be the consequences.

919. Have you actually heard the ryots mention sentiments to the above effect?—Yes, I have.

920. Is it then to be inferred, that the ryots have, at least within the last six months, freely mentioned in conversation their objections to you to cultivate indigo?—They have stated to me the objections they have always stated, that is to say, the ryots in my immediate neighbourhood have always said the same thing; but within that time I have heard it generally from others too.

921. Upon what objection did the ryots chiefly lay stress?—They say, "There is injustice in this, there is injustice in that; in fact, injustice in the indigo proceedings from beginning to end." And in addition to this, they have got a special and increased dislike to it.

922. Has there been any special oppression lately that should give cause to this dislike?—No, I know of none, but what I have said this morning, that for the last three years the burden of weeding, &c., has been very heavy.

923. Have you any reason to believe that influence from without has been applied to the ryots?—No, I don't know of any, nor do I believe this.

924. Mr.

924. Mr. Fergusson.] Are you sufficiently acquainted with the rice cultivation to be able to compare the results of it with that of indigo?—No, I am not.

925. In the recent difficulties that you had with your congregation when some of them seceded to Roman Catholicism, did you not receive assistance and support from the planters?—Yes.

926. Did not Mr. Forlong refuse to give a site to the Roman Catholic priest for his church?—Yes, I believe he did so after a representation from the Bishop, though in the first instance he ordered it to be given.

927. Do you think that if the planters had used their influence against you in this instance, it would have materially interfered with your success and with the prospects of your mission?—It would in the beginning have certainly created a great confusion; but the real success of the mission is not in the hands of the planters.

928. Mr. Salé.] To say nothing of the personal conduct of the planter, do you think that the indigo planters' system, as it now exists, is favourable to the progress of missions?—No, I do not think so; on the contrary, I think it unfavourable.

929. Still, knowing the system to be contrary to the interest of missions, have you ever attempted to excite any ill-feeling in the minds of the ryots towards the planters?—No, never.

930. Do you know if the ryots are harassed by false cases being brought against them, and by whom are those false cases generally brought?—Yes, it is frequently the case, and particularly since the new Act. They are generally not made by the planter, but by some of his agents; as, for instance, in a recent case in Bagham, my neighbouring village.

931. Mr. Temple.] On the whole, speaking generally, do you consider that any obstruction to indigo planting has arisen from the state of the police or of the courts?—No, I don't think so; on the contrary, the police is always ready to assist the planter.

932. What is the reason of that?—Money, I suppose, as regards the police.

933. Practically, has the planter any difficulty in suing a zemindar or a ryot in the courts?—I do not know that there is any difficulty in suing a zemindar; but I think a ryot is beneath that kind of notice.

934. If the planter does not sue the ryot in court, is it because he does not consider the ryot worth that process, or because he has a difficulty in getting a decree realised?—I believe the first was the case heretofore. But since the passing of the new law, the planter sues any ryot who is in his debt, and there is reason to fear that the law will ruin every ryot throughout Bengal.

935. Previously to the passing of the new law, had the planter any difficulty in realising from the ryot the amount of a decree he might obtain?—I do not think he had; but I have not much knowledge of law proceedings.

936. In your opinion, have the planters been deterred from suing the ryot by any delays in the court procedure?—The planters have always complained that such is the case.

937. Have you any means of judging whether those complaints were well founded?—From the little experience I have had in these matters, I believe that there is some foundation for such a complaint.

938. But as the planters did not generally sue the ryots, have they been successful in obtaining their just dues from the ryots?—My impression is, that the planter has the means of receiving from the ryots what may be justly due.

939. On the whole, do you consider that the police have offered a fair amount of protection to the ryots?—No, I do not think the ryots get from the police the full amount of assistance which the law intends.

940. Do you consider that the magistrate has taken adequate notice of the complaints of the ryots?—No, I do not think so.

941. Do you think that close and clear supervision on the part of the magistrate could prevent oppression being practised on indigo ryots?—The magistrate could not do this, unless European officers were more numerous.

942. Could native magistrates answer this purpose?—They could, if they had moral courage enough.

943. Do you consider it would be possible for a just, kind, and considerate planter to reconcile his ryots to indigo cultivation?—I think he could do so by kindness alone.

944. And this without making any material increase in the remuneration to the ryots?—Yes, I think it might not be necessary to make any great increase in the remuneration; but it would be necessary to take less land from individual ryots. It is not so much the price he gets for the indigo as the quantity of land taken from him that he regards. It is consistent with native ideas that a tenant should do something to please his landlord.

945. Then you consider that if a planter were proprietor of an estate, each ryot would be willing to cultivate some fractional part of his land without much remuneration, in order to please the landlord?—Yes, I think the ryot would; his only fear would be that the proportion would increase.

946. Do you not suppose that some planters who own large estates do manage to get indigo without either oppressing the ryots or impoverishing the village?—It may be, but I do not know of any.

947. Have you never known a planter manage to keep his ryots contented?—Yes, I have known one case in which a planter did by various means keep his ryots contented, that is to say, he gave them a khana one day, a rupee the next, and on the third built them a mosque.

948. Do you believe that the magistrates ever entertain any prejudice against the planter?—I know of no instance.

949. Mr. Salé.] Do you think a system which depends for its existence on indulgence on one hand, or terror on the other, is a good system in any country?—Certainly not.

950. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] You stated that a native magistrate would answer if he had the moral courage; will you be pleased to state what are the impressions you have formed of these functionaries in the discharge of their duties?—I could not bring any specific charge; but when I said so, I had in my mind only a native daroga, and not a deputy magistrate.

951. President.] WILL you state to the Commission the nature of your experience in Kishnagur?—A little more than 12 years ago, I was sent from Burdwan to Solo and lived with Mr. Lincke for about 12 months, and since Mr. Lincke was removed to Bollobpore, I lived alone altogether. I lived there for about seven years, and after visiting Europe I returned to Santipore, where I have been for a little more than five years.

952. Have you been in the habit of holding conversations with ryots?—I am in the habit of conversing not only with Christian ryots, but with other ryots on all subjects, and with all classes if they draw me out.

953. Have you been in the habit of conversing with ryots lately on the subject of indigo cultivation; and if so, will you state your experience on the subject?—The feeling of the ryots is one of intense grief and of bitterness, which is growing upon them more and more every day. I never perceived any bitter feeling against the Government until after the passing of the new law. Formerly, when I was at Solo during the first two years or so, when the Hurra factory belonged to its former proprietor, not a single ryot, Christian, Hindoo, or Mussulman, ever complained to me of oppression, nor had I ever occasion to speak or write to the gentleman managing the factory, except that I once asked him a favour; but since the change of the proprietorship about ten years ago, affairs have taken a different turn. If the books are called for, it will be seen that under former proprietorship, the ryots cultivated only one-half of what they are obliged to cultivate now. Their profits, even under the former proprietorship, were none at all. On the contrary, it was a loss to the ryots; but the cultivation not having been over-much oppressive, and as the ryots were not treated unkindly, they never even spoke to me on indigo cultivation at all, although I was daily and hourly conversing with the people. Now, under the present proprietorship, the beegahs of indigo, for instance, at Chantroghaut were increased to double the number, on which at first the people refused to cultivate. When I asked them why they sowed formerly and yet never complained of hardship, they answered that "As long as it was not overdone, we quietly did sow some beegahs because we had cattle, which we did not wish to have driven away by the factory people, or to be harassed in any other way, and therefore we have quietly sown." But now matters are different. The ryots say that "To such an extent we cannot sow, especially as additional beegahs have been measured out by a considerably larger measurement than that of the zemindars by which we pay rent." When the people refused to sow the additional beegahs, the planter did it for them by force, and they had to submit. There was a respectable Brahmin to whose house I went over one morning, which was a regular preaching place of mine and my assistants, and he told me that the night before by moonlight the factory people had ploughed up eight beegahs of his rice and sown indigo upon it; the planter's object was to get him to take an advance. He, however, on the consideration of being the head man of the village, was afterwards let off through the mediation of the dewan, and had only to sow three beegahs. The cultivation is ruinous. Almost during the whole year round the ryot is obliged to pay the closest attention to ploughing and clearing the ground from grass, crushing clods, sowing, weeding, cutting the indigo, and carrying it to the factory; and many of them are obliged under pretence of cart-advances to serve the factory with one or more carts during the whole cutting season, so that they cannot attend to their own rice fields. Almost every year of late, the ryot is obliged to leave his rice half spoilt by the jungle which he has not time to weed, or, if a man of property, he has to expend a great deal of money in weeding expenses; all this must, of course, make him dislike and even hate indigo cultivation from all his heart; besides this, when the ryot brings his own indigo to the factory he is cheated out of a great deal of it by the factory. The measurement is so very unfair. Ryots have stated for a certainty, that the chain, instead of being put round the middle part of the bundle, is very often put round the softer part of the indigo, where the plant can be easily compressed, unless the man can offer a bribe. Also at the time of settling their accounts, the ryots are obliged to give a good deal of the pittance allowed them for the indigo as dustoori and presents to the factory servants. Sometimes the factory amlas take all they have to get. There are even instances where poor ryots have had to add something out of their own pockets to satisfy the amlas. In most of the factories, these extortions are practised with the knowledge of the manager; owing to these circumstances indigo cultivation is so unpopular.

[Commission adjourned at 6 p.m.]

Members:—R. Temple, Esq., C. S., W. F. Fergusson, Esq., Reverend J. Sale,
Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.

954. President.] You have stated the general causes of the ryot's dislike to indigo; have you any personal knowledge of instances of greater oppression or violence on the part of the planters, which might increase that dislike, such for instance as beating, kidnapping, arson, house-breaking, and outrages on women?—Yesterday I stated that for some years I was not aware of the great hardships of the system, except that I had at one time occasion to go to Kishnagur and to present some 18 men to the magistrate. One day some ten out of those 18 came to Solo, showing marks of severe beating, and some, they said, were unable to come at all, because they were laid up; this was about 12 years ago. Their story was, that the gomashita of the Ruttonpore factory was displeased with them for something, and had them beaten; I took them to the magistrate; the magistrate told me, "You consider this a heinous crime; but we don't." I insisted on the magistrate taking cognizance of the case; at last he consented, and made it over to one of his subordinates. No sooner had I heard of this, than I went to him and found that gentleman willing to take it up; the gomashita at last was sentenced to imprisonment; I think no one else was, he being the head man. Some time after that, when the Hurra factory had been sold to the Nischindipore concern, the manager of that factory went about forcing advances on the ryots. One evening, some of my Christians and the most respectable Hindoos of Putimari, from some of whom we rented the land for the mission, told me with great great grief that they had suffered apaman, i. e. disgrace or beating, for the first time in their lives. They told me that the planter had been there, and wanted them to take advances, which they refused. When they would not take the money into their hands, he threw it down, and when they were reluctant to pick the rupees up, he applied his riding whip to some of them. At this distance of time, I cannot say whether I saw the marks; it was not severe beating; in the end they were obliged to take advances; this occurred about nine years ago. On another occasion, I was under the necessity of begging of the magistrate to send me some burkundazes, because for several evenings lattials were seen by my people to be hovering about my village; and as those factory servants or lattials, whichever they were, sent me a message that they would grind me to tobacco powder, (tamaku), I had reason to be afraid, especially as at the time I used to live in a school-room, which was on the roadside quite unprotected; I did not see the lattials myself. The reasons for their threatening me were, because at the time I ventured to make the planter take back some rupees of advances that had been forced upon two poor Christians of mine, who at the time had neither ploughs nor cattle; and because my very presence near the factory was quite sufficient to check oppression. Two burkundazes remained with me about a fortnight, but no lattials were apprehended. Recently a man came to me and told me that his house was burnt down in the night, because he would not sow indigo; this man lived within the Ruttonpore concern. I believe this man complained to the deputy magistrate of Kurrimpore, but no particular results followed. For some years many persons have complained of their houses being burnt down, but I have not been to the spot to see this myself. There was one case in Bhobarpara or Hridayapore. The people stated to me that some houses or one house (I forget which) had been burnt down, because the people were reluctant to sow indigo, and in order to oblige the zemindar of the place, by harassing his people, to give up his village to the planter. In this case an investigation was made by the magistrate, and both parties were punished. I think it is the same case which Mr. Lincke mentioned in his evidence of yesterday.

955. Did you ever see a village in which houses were knocked down, and from which ryots had deserted?—On one of my tours I saw a village with only a few houses left; the remaining people told me that the village was so deserted on account of the indigo oppression.

956. Can you state near what thannah or what concern that village was?—I do not recollect. As regards kidnapping, I do know of such cases, and would especially draw attention to one case, of which I have authenticated copies of the papers [papers filed as evidence]. The case referred to is this. Two men (father and son) while endeavouring to rescue their cows that were being taken away, were beaten, and one very severely, on account of which it was thought necessary at once to remove him until his wounds were healed. They were taken to the Ruttonpore factory, and from thence successively carried about from factory to factory, always or mostly by night, for about three months. The brother of the man who was so severely beaten, and the son of the old man, complained to the daroga and magistrate; the case was investigated both by the daroga and by the deputy magistrate. The deputy magistrate found on the spot the marks of blood which the young man had lost, and reported the matter correctly, and at the same time reported also that a counter complaint by the planter or his people was an entirely false one. The case was put off because the chief culprit would not make his appearance before the court, and as the man despaired of the case, he, in order to get his father and brother back, promised at last to compromise the matter; this was done with the deputy magistrate's consent. The two men, after having been released, found that the brother and son had put in a razinama, but the young prisoner himself was not willing to compromise, as he had been suffering, and not his brother. The man was again taken by stealth to the Hurra factory, to make him give in a compromise; he then got 10 rupees, and was told that both of them, he and his father, must at once go with the planter to Kishnagur, and say before the magistrate, that they had only been imprisoned in one factory and had been treated very kindly, getting plenty of food, and that they had no longer any complaint to make. The man saw this would not do, for he knew the case had got into the papers, and he had been to Mr. Lincke and told him all. Then afterwards the men, under the pretence of having no clothes with them, begged to be permitted to go home for that evening, and promised to return the following day, and in order to deceive the planter they took the 10 rupees that he had offered to them and then they went home, and that very night, I believe, the young man fled away, first to Mr. Kruckeberg to Chupra, who sent him disguised as a woman to me at Santipore on a cart. I immediately took the man and went right up to the deputy magistrate of Kishnagur, who had investigated the case on the spot, telling him, "Here at last is Abadi," and pointed out the wounds of which he had seen the blood on the spot. No sooner did the deputy magistrate see the man, then tears came into his eyes; he asked after the old woman, his mother, who had implored him so earnestly to get her son and her husband back to her; but when he was told that the old woman was dead, and that her death was attributed to great grief, as she fancied her husband and son were dead, the deputy magistrate expressed his great sorrow; but at the same time told me that he could not undertake to do anything in the matter, but that I should go to the magistrate on behalf of the man. I did so, but the magistrate said, "You must not come with the man to me, as there is a bad feeling between the planters and the missionaries." Then Abadi himself put in a complaint on his own part and that of his father. The magistrate passed the order that the petition should be filed with the case, inasmuch as the plaintiff's brother had given in a compromise. [The translation of the order, which was read out to the Commission, is as follows: "Whereas heretofore on the plea of razinama a suitable order was passed, therefore it is unnecessary to pass any further orders; it is therefore directed that the papers be placed on record. 24th June 1857."] I was determined to have the case looked into, and went down to Calcutta to take advice and to bring it up before the superior authorities, but that being the time of the mutinies the matter was dropped. At the time I took up the man's case several other Hindoos sent word to me to assist them in their cases, but I of course refused, as I could not do so with propriety.

957. Have you any other case?—I have another case in which the authenticated copies were given to me by some parties interested in it. I am not personally acquainted with the party concerned in the case (here the authenticated record was put in by the witness and filed).

958. Do you know of any other instance of kidnapping?—There was a young man near Bolloppore (I believe it is the very man whose house was burned or plundered), who, along with his father, had been taken away and carried about for about three months from one factory to another as prisoners. They could not complain at all, as the village had been taken possession of by the planter, and they feared the consequences; so nothing was done.

959. Mr. Temple.] How did you become acquainted with this case?—Some of Mr. Lincke's Christians of Bolloppore, who paid me a visit at Santipore, brought the very man to me, and I heard it from his own mouth.

960. Upon hearing this story, what steps did you take?—I took no steps in the matter.

961. Did you not speak to the planter, or write to the magistrate?—No, I did not; I did not feel disposed to take the case up. If we took up every case that is brought to our notice, we should all day be writing to the magistrates or planters.

962. President.] Do you know of any other cases?—Yes, I do. Just about four months ago I sent a young man of mine to Solo to inquire whether the petition sent in against me to the magistrate—that I had instigated the ryots of Natana (Christians and Mahomedans) to complain against the planter—had been sent in by the men themselves, or whether it was a false complaint made by the planter or his people. The planters' people, immediately they heard of my having sent a man, tried to catch him; but fortunately they caught the wrong man, a reader of Mr. Lincke's, who had been an old reader of mine also, who resembled my young man. After three days' imprisonment they found out the mistake and let him go. The planter coaxed the prisoner and said he was his Christian brother, and that he had not ordered his apprehension, and that he might go home in peace; the man himself told me all this. The petition purporting to have been presented by the Christians and Hindoos of Natana was disavowed by them. With regard to outrages on women, the brother of a man, whose wife had been taken away from a ghaut, came and told me of the incident; the man's story ran thus: Two young women were fetching water at a ghaut and were taken away by the servants of a planter. After finding out which was the woman that they wanted (who is said by the people to be one of the greatest beauties in Kishnagur), they let the other one go on her way, and the one, who was the beauty, was carried to the factory. The daroga was at once brought by her relations, but he went away without doing anything. Afterwards, I believe, they petitioned a deputy magistrate near the place, who some how or other got rid of it.

963. Mr. Temple.] What became of the woman?—After being taken about to one or two factories, and two or three other places, they at last put her down in the house of a native who, I believe, said he was a relative of hers; from thence she was sent home.

964. Did the husband complain to any superior authority?—I cannot say whether he did or not; the woman is now with her husband.

965. Can you say how long the woman was absent?—I believe three days.

966. Who is the husband, and in what village does does he reside?—He is a Kaiburt, and is a man of some property.

967. From what source is your knowledge of this charge derived?—From the statement of the woman's husband's brother; he told me this in Calcutta four weeks ago. I met him accidentally, and I specially asked him to tell me the whole truth from beginning to end, in the presence of other persons who were cognisant of the fact, because I had heard different versions of the story already. This diversity arose, as I subsequently observed, from the unwillingness of the people to admit in public that the woman had been outraged.

968. At what place in Calcutta was the story told you, and who were those other persons in whose presence the story was told?—In Mr. Long's house, in the presence of several natives of the neighbourhood of that village and neighbouring villages; I mean of the woman's village.

969. Did those men generally assert the correctness of that man's story?—Yes, with one mouth they did assert it; it appeared uppermost in their minds.

970. Had you previously heard the story mentioned in Kishnagur?—Often; it had been mentioned in the papers also.

971. What version was generally given?—I mean the one the brother gave.

972. Mr. Fergusson.] Have you reason to believe that this case is in process of being brought before the Kishnagur courts?—I heard that it has already been brought before the courts, and that it was still pending.

973. Mr. Temple.] Before what court is it pending?—I do not know.

974. Did we not understand you to say that a complaint had been made before the deputy magistrate, who somehow got rid of it; if the case was in the first instance thus dismissed, was a further suit instituted, or how?—I only know that the case was once got rid of, and is now again pending. I am under the impression that the man had come down to Calcutta to complain to the Commission, but am not sure whether he has done so or not.

975. President.] Do you know how it was got rid of in the first instance?—The man told me, while the case was pending in the magistrate's court, he went home to a neighbouring village to fetch some money to defray his expenses for food; whilst he was away, the man said, the magistrate called for him, and, not being present, he dismissed the case.

976. Mr. Temple.] Have you any special reason to know whether the story told you by the husband's brother was correct, or do you know of any corroborative circumstances?—I know of no corroborative circumstances, except that the story, as then told, is, and has been, in the mouth of every native, high and low, in that neighbourhood. I have also heard it mentioned by native gentlemen at Calcutta.

977. Mr. Fergusson.] As the case is before the court, there can be no reason for keeping back places and names; in what village, and in the limits of what concern, is this said to have taken place, and who was the planter?—I stated before that I had forgotten the name of the village, although I could ascertain it. I have heard the name of the planter, but I have great objections to mention the name of the planter; one of them is, that the mention thereof, before this Commission, might defeat the ends of justice in the Kishnagur Courts.*

978. Do you consider that the case had any kind of reference to indigo planting, or might it not have happened with any other European engaged in any other profession?—I do not know that it had any connexion with indigo.

979. Mr. Temple.] Was the woman's husband, or were her relatives, connected with indigo planting?—I do not know, but I dare say they are.

980. Do you know of any other case of oppression besides those you have mentioned already?—I know of some more imprisonments that have taken place during the last year; some people of Govindpore and of a neighbouring village, who had been for months imprisoned. One party, I believe, six in number, were caught at night. Whilst being carried from one factory to another, they were observed by the Government postman, who, I was told, on seeing them, shouted out, asking who they were (because they carried sacking on their heads, which looked very much as if they were going to steal rice). No sooner did the lattials who had accompanied them hear and see the Government postman than they ran away, and the men went home, or were taken by the postman to Kishnagur (I forget which), but at any rate they were presented to the magistrate. What was done about them I do not know.

981. Have you seen the men who were kidnapped?—The people of Puttarghatta and Govindpore, who, I believe, complained of the case to the magistrate, told me.

982. Mr. Fergusson.] When did this happen?—Some months ago.

983. Mr. Temple.] What became of the other party you mentioned about?—One night they were put down in their own village, and they, too, subsequently were presented to the magistrate.

984. Do you know of any other similar case?—I do not, just now, recollect any case that I could specify distinctly.

985. Do you know of any other act of oppression?—Yes, I know the case of a garden, which was cut down in this wise. One evening, when I was sitting at dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Lincke, a great noise was heard, and some of the Christians came running and told us that the planter had come and ordered a plantain garden to be cut down, in order to use the land for his indigo. Mrs. Lincke and myself did not think it advisable that we should interfere, but Mr. Lincke did go out, and tried to prevent them from cutting down the garden, but without success.

986. Did you yourself see the garden afterwards?—Yes, I saw it after it was cut down.

987. What did the garden contain?—It contained

* The Commission having considered this point, came to the conclusion that it was but fair towards the entire body of planters that the name should not be withheld, and that the mention of the name of the planter here would not necessarily prejudice the course of justice at Kishnagur; but being unwilling that any disclosure which a witness might be compelled to make under Section XVI. of the Act should even be thought by any party to have prejudiced the cause of justice in any way whatever, it was resolved, on Mr. Fergusson's motion, that the disclosure of the planter's name be not at present pressed.

tained plantains, and, I believe, vegetables too, and was good land for indigo.

988. Can you mention any other case within your knowledge?—I cannot recollect, just now.

989. Do you know of any other case of outrages on women, besides the one you have mentioned already, connected with indigo planting?—I have not heard of any other well authenticated instance.

990. Can you state whether such outrages, on the whole, were rare or frequent?—I do not think that violent outrages are frequent; if they were so, the case that I have related would not have made such a noise.

991. On the whole, do you consider that cases of kidnapping or confining among the ryots or others are rare or frequent; I mean, within your knowledge and experience?—I must say that such is a standing rule, and indeed almost an every day occurrence.

992. Have you known of a concern in which this practice did not prevail?—There may be such concerns; I do not know of any factory or concern, within my range of experience, of which I could say that the practice does not exist at all.

993. Can you say whether this practice prevails more in some factories, and less in others?—Yes, it does so, more in some factories and less in others; there is a difference between planters.

994. President.] Do you know of any planter who does not practise oppression?—Yes, I do; almost my nearest neighbour; I mean the gentleman who manages the Culna factory, whose name I just now forget. I have never seen him, but never have I heard any complaint against him; on the contrary, I have on several occasions heard him well spoken of.

995. Can you say whether those planters are the most successful who adopt this practice most?—Those who do not oppress must, I should say, in the end, certainly be more successful; but, apparently, those planters who oppress are the most successful.

996. Do you not know of any just and considerate planters who have been and are successful?—I am not sufficiently acquainted with planters to know what their property is.

997. Do you not consider that a planter who treated his ryots well would be better served, and would thereby be a gainer?—I do think so; but I do not mean to say that a planter who does not oppress will soon get rich, because, if he does not oppress at all, the work won't pay.

998. Is it, then, your deliberate opinion that under the past system no indigo planter could get on without practising oppression?—Decidedly so; if the planter wishes to get as much indigo as he makes up his mind for, he must oppress, except he has all nij cultivation.

999. Mr. Temple.] But is not oppression, as now carried on in the Mofussil, a very troublesome and expensive thing, and does not such expense detract from the profits of the concern?—On the whole, I think that oppression in any part of the country is cheap enough; if the planters did not find it profitable, they would not resort to it.

1000. But if a complaint be laid, does it not cost the planter a good deal to effect a compromise; and if the police visit his factory, does it not cost him something to buy them off?—Compromise is generally very cheap; money is promised, but scarcely ever given. As to the daroga, he will take the money agreed upon;

but such law expenses are levied from the ryots by assessment, according to each man's means. The planter has constantly much to do with the daroga in one way or another; either the planter calls in the daroga, or the daroga is called in by the other party.

1001. Has the planter generally much influence over the police, or are the police afraid of the planter?—Both; the planter has much influence over the police, and the police are sore afraid of the planter. I have known several darogas who were justly inclined, but who did wrong through fear of the planters.

1002. Why should the daroga be afraid of the planter?—Because the planter may make ill reports of him to the magistrate, and he may be dismissed.

1003. Have you known darogas removed on the representation of the planter?—I have heard of several cases, but never paid attention to them at the time. I have known of instances where darogas would not flinch from justice.

1004. On the whole do you consider that the planters have received a full amount of fair support from the police?—Yes, I do.

1005. Is it to be inferred from your previous answer that you think the planters have received rather more than a fair amount of support from the police?—Yes, I think on the whole they have.

1006. Do you on the other hand consider that the police have rendered a fair and proper amount of protection to the ryots?—No; it sometimes happens that the daroga is sent out to keep the peace, which the ryots will not break; for instance, there is a dispute about a field; the planter wishes to sow indigo, and the ryot rice. The daroga is sent for and remains on the spot, and no affray takes place; but in most instances indigo may be sown instead of rice; it may be otherwise.

1007. Mr. Sale.] You are aware that there is an impression abroad that the missionaries in Kishnagur especially have used their influence in such a way as to increase the ill-feeling existing between planter and ryot; will you state what your practice has been in regard to this matter?—I beg to state that at the time when a planter first accused a missionary (i.e. me) of having excited the ryots against the planters, I was not then so much as aware of a general agitation, that is to say, for some time after it had commenced. On the contrary, I have advised ryots before the Act was enacted, telling them they should try by all means to make the best season of it and sow for the year, and then if they wanted to get rid of the contract, that was a different question. The ryots' positive answer always was, "We will never sow, because we are ruined." And no sooner was the new Act passed, than I told many of the ryots (who came to me in great distress for advice) to sow. All the advice I could give them was, "Government wishes you to sow; sow for this year." The answer was invariably the same, before as well as after the Act, "We will never sow."

1008. Are you aware of the precise mode in which advances are given to the ryots?—This morning I stated some instances of how advances were forced upon several villages; the same was the case with the Christians at Maliapota. The planter wanted the people to sow indigo, and they would not on any account, although I advised them, by all means to sow a little indigo, showing showing them that it was merely for the sake of the indigo that the Sahib had taken the village, but the people would not yield on any account. One day the planter came to the village and threatened to do this and that, and at last they had to yield, and since that time, that is, for seven years, they have never received any new advances, but are working on on the old ones. The same was the case with Patturghatta and Govindpore.

1009. President.] Are you aware that the planter is in the habit of clearing land of jungle and bringing it under cultivation?—Yes, in the neighbourhood where I formerly lived they have cleared a good deal of jungle, but they keep the lands afterwards for themselves, so that the ryots over the country at large are not profited by it.

1010. Mr. Fergusson.] Do not the ryots obtain employment, and pay for cultivating nij abad?—The planter generally does employ the people for his nij abad, but he gives them nothing, or very little, for the work. I here file some accounts of ryots, showing their general expenses of cultivating indigo, and that which they realise from it; and it will be found that besides sowing indigo for the factory, they are obliged to assist, gratis, at least mostly so, in ploughing and sowing the nij abad. [Accounts were here filed by the witness.] I copied them from Bengali accounts given me by ryots of my former Christian village, Maliapota, and the neighbouring villages, Patturghatta and Govindpore. [The witness then filed a debtor and creditor account of three villages.]

1011. You stated yesterday that the rice cultivation was neglected and injured by the ryots having to attend to indigo; do you state deliberately that it is a fact from your own experience?—Yes, I do.

1012. To any great extent?—Yes, it does happen to a great extent. It is one of the greatest complaints of the ryots that they cannot on account of the indigo attend to their own rice fields.

1013. Mr. Sale.] What do you believe to be the state of the feeling of the ryot regarding Government, especially with regard to the indigo system?—Formerly they were under the impression that any and every Sahib, more or less, was one of the Government, and therefore they considered it understood that they were to sow, and so long as they were not over-much oppressed they quietly went on, but since, of late, the oppression increased, and the ryots became more or less enlightened to the effect, that the Government and the planter are two different persons, they tried to complain and to get rid of indigo cultivation. Since the Indigo Act most of them have almost lost faith in Government, and their feeling is very sorrowful, and in some instances very bitter.

[Commission adjourned at 6 P.M.]

Saturday, 2d June 1860.

PRESENT :

W. S. SETON-KARR, Esq., C.S., President.

Members:—R. Temple, Esq., C.S., W. F. Fergusson, Esq., Reverend J. Sale, Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.

NUFFUR DOSS, son of Ram Lochun Doss, Kaiburt, resident of Locknathpore, thannah Damoodahah, near Locknathpore Factory, called in; and Examined on oath.

1014. President.] Do you sow indigo for the Locknathpore concern, and have you been in the habit of doing so?—I was born in the year after the gale of 1154, Bengali year, and have sown indigo all my life. I cannot remember when I first got advances; I have 24 beegahs of land, of which I sow 12 beegahs with indigo; I have eight head of cattle, two of which go in the cart, and six in the plough. I first used to sow four beegahs, and then seven, according to the factory measurement, but according to my measurement they are 12 beegahs; by sowing these twelve beegahs I profit nothing. When rain falls in the month of Chait, I am called on to plough, instead of being suffered to plough my rice lands. They, i. e. the factory people, take my ploughs to cultivate their nij abad, for which I am paid nothing. They send men to take away my ploughs and cattle to their nij abad in the Locknathpore concern; my men go with them, and only get a handful of rice or dried grain. They call us away at daylight, and don't let us go before the evening, so we have to do both work, the ryotti cultivation as well as the nij. Then they tell us to weed the indigo land; now and then they allow us for a day or two to cultivate rice lands. In this way 12 beegahs going to indigo, my other 12 beegahs I cultivate with rice; but last year they were not well cultivated. I had two beegahs prepared for chillies and tobacco for the last two years. They said they wanted indigo sown, and would not let me sow what I wanted on these two beegahs. The factory servants sowed indigo for seed, but in consequence of much rain the seed was ruined; these last two beegahs were in addition to the 12 above-mentioned.

1015. Are you allowed to sow the cold weather crops on indigo lands?—No, because they require Nuffur Doss.

Nuffur Doss. the stumps of the indigo to be kept for seed, and when the seed is ripe, they give me only 10 seers in each maund, and take the other 30 seers themselves; and instead of paying me any balance due to me, the money is taken for repairs of roads, factory servants, &c.

2 June 1860.

1016. Mr. Temple.] If you are allowed to sell that seed yourself, what would be the difference in the price?—Last year the market rate was from 16 to 20 rupees a maund, but they take it from us at four rupees a maund. For the last three years the price of seed has been high; before that it used to be at eight, ten, and twelve rupees; and even before that it has never been lower than five and six rupees; I never heard it was as low as two rupees.

1017. When the market rate was five and six rupees, at what rate used the factory to take it from you?—The factory invariably gives us four rupees a maund.

1018. President.] When you have to sow for the factory, at what rate are you charged for seed?—When they give us seed, they give it at two seers a beegah; sometimes they give us the sweepings besides; sometimes we are charged for the seed at eight rupees; sometimes ten rupees a maund; sometimes, besides two seers of good seed, they give us two seers of seed of worse quality.

1019. State what is done about the settling of the accounts, and whether you can say what you have to receive?—The accounts are made up in Phalgun; I am not in the habit of going to the factory, as it is no use. If I had anything to get, the amin and takidgir would take it away from me on the way back. Within the last ten years, about three years ago, I got two rupees excess, but about ten days afterwards the amin and takidgir told me there was a pooja in the dewan's house, and that I was down for two rupees, so I had to pay this.

1020. Why did you not complain to the planter?—I thought it no use to complain to the planter, as the factory servants would go and tell the planter that my cows had damaged the indigo. They would have all been taken off to the factory.

1021. Mr. Temple.] Do you think that two rupees was demanded of you, because you got two rupees excess, or because these presents are usually made?—I think they had an eye to my two rupees; and because I had got that excess, they asked me for it.

1022. Mr. Fergusson.] Have you ever on any occasion paid two rupees, or any other sum, for a similar pooja?—I never paid nor got anything; I never was called on to pay in any other year.

1023. The year that you received two rupees in excess, did you also receive two rupees advances for the next year?—I did not receive any advances.

1024. Did you never receive any other advances, except at first?—I have never received any since the first time.

1025. Mr. Temple.] You have been 25 years an indigo ryot, do you mean to say that two rupees was the only sum you have received during that period?—To the best of my recollection that was the only time I received any money, either advances or excess. If I ever went to the planter to complain, I was referred to the gomashta, who would not listen to complaints. If I bandy words with the gomashta he threatens me with the godown.

1026. President.] Do you know the exact amount of your debt with the factory, and have you ever taken steps to clear yourself?—I do not know my debt with the factory, as I never went to ascertain about it. If I could only get the rent of my lands, which I have to pay to my zemindar, I should be content.

1027. Mr. Fergusson.] Have you got no hath chittis with you?—Some years they give me one; some years they don't.

1028. President.] Can you form no idea, by guess, how you stand with regard to the factory, whether you are 10, 20, or 50 rupees in debt to it?—My own opinion is that I ought to receive money; even if they only gave me the rent of my 12 beegahs of land, there would be a large balance in my favour.

1029. Mr. Fergusson.] Can you tell how many seers you got last year for sowing?—For seven beegahs, according to factory measurement, I got 14 seers, and 3½ seers of inferior quality.

1030. Mr. Sale.] Can you read and write?—No.

1031. Mr. Temple.] While the planter was your zemindar, did you pay him rent, or was the rent remitted in consideration of your sowing indigo, or did the planter ask for the ijara fees?—I had to pay the rent in cash without deduction. I had also to pay 1½ annas ijara, and 1½ for the gentleman's table expenses.

1032. President.] What return did you get from your remaining 12 beegahs of land?—I sow aus or early rice; I have no late rice; I sow linseed and mustard mostly; linseed yields from 10 to 15 rupees a beegah. From my aus crop I get about 12 rupees, that is, about one bish and a half of grain.

1033. At what rate do you pay rent?—At eight annas a beegah, this applies throughout; but this does not include the homestead, which is two rupees a beegah.

AMEER MULLICK of Khanpore, Thannah Bagdah, Zillah Nuddea, called in; and Examined on oath.

Ameer Mullick.

1034. President.] HAVE you had any dispute with the factory about indigo, or about any lands?—I am a gantidar. About five or six years ago Mr. Larmour wanted me to receive advances; my ganti is one of 58 rupees jumma; I had neither plough nor bullocks, so I did not consent. Mr. Larmour has given advances to my under-tenants; I never objected to Mr. Larmour's giving them advances; when pressed I made my escape and came home. The dewan of Hilsamari factory came and called on my sons to produce me, and on this occasion the dewan took my two sons first to Hilsamari, and then to Katgarra. About four or five days afterwards some lattials were sent, headed by Jodu Biswas, Mr. Larmour's dewan, and they pulled down my pucka house, with three rooms, and the wall round the premises, and plundered three of my barns; besides this they knocked down five thatched or kutchas houses; I think it was in the Bengali year 1263 or 1264, in the month of Bhadro. Besides this they netted my tank of some very large fish with which I had stocked it. They also plundered my house of all my furniture, ture, tables, chairs, chests, brass utensils, rings, &c. When I saw the lattials I ran away, and fell down and twisted my foot, so I could not complain. My two sons were kept in confinement in Katgarra. After four or five months I got well, but I thought it useless to complain after that delay; but now I have complained under the new Act in the collectorate, because it is cheap and easy. I laid my suit at 3,984 rupees; I believe I have got a decree; I can't say the amount of it; but an appeal has been lodged against the decree in my favour.

1035. When what you have related occurred, did you owe any balance of rents to Mr. Larmour?—No, I owed nothing; but Mr. Larmour was always asking me for more rents. Sometimes 1,000 rupees, sometimes 800 rupees. My potta was about 84 years old; it was first given in the name of my first cousin, in the Bengali year 1211 or 1214.

1036. Mr. Fergusson.] Have you got re-possession of your homestead?—No, but my son has erected two other houses in Adampore, another village of mine. My former house was in the village of Khanpore.

1037. President.] How many under-tenants have you?—In the village of Khanpore 109, and about 50 or 60 in Adampore. Most of these men, except a few weavers, have been sowing indigo for some time. The thannah is distant about seven coss. There has been a subdivision established of late at Bongong; I cannot say how far Bongong is from my house; because when I came down here I avoided that place, and travelled by a circuitous route.

1038. Mr. Sale.] After four months, then, you did not resort to the courts?—I was told that after three months it was no use. Besides, Mr. Larmour had the powers of an assistant magistrate, so I thought it useless to complain.

1039. President.] Did you complain in your own name at Kishnagur lately?—Yes, I stated that my residence was in Khanpore formerly, and at present in Jungypore.

1040. Was it solely because you would not take advances, and because you would not give more rent, that all this occurred?—Yes; and also because my son Jalal Mullick complained against the factory dewan, Jodu Biswas, for interfering with him.

1041. Mr. Sale.] Where are your family now, and what are they doing?—My wife, seven sons, one daughter, and four grandsons, are now living on their relatives in the best way they can.

1042. Do all your ryots always sow indigo willingly?—For fear of being beaten, they sow.

1043. What is the condition of your own ryots now?—Having seen the ryots of three other villages seized, they are all in terror.

1044. Mr. Fergusson.] Were they ever imprisoned by the police or by Mr. Larmour?—Not by Mr. Larmour, but by the authorities since the new Act.

JINAT MULLICK, formerly of Khanpore, at present of Adampore, called in; and Examined on oath.

1045. President.] Are you the son of the last witness?—I am the son of Ameer Mullick. In the month of Bhadro 1264, Bengali year, Mr. Larmour's people laid hold of me, and took me to Hilsamari factory, and told me to sow indigo. I refused to do so, as I had neither ploughs nor bullocks. Hearing this, Mr. Larmour's people were going to present a petition against me, when my brother, Jalal Mullick, went and presented a petition at Kishnagur, which was sent to Mr. Larmour for report. Shortly afterwards Mr. Larmour became honorary magistrate. They kept me confined for three or four months at Katgarra; and when I got away I thought it was no use complaining, as Mr. Larmour was then an honorary magistrate. We have lately righted ourselves by Act X. of 1859. The dewan exacted 60 rupees from me. The money was raised by my brother-in-law.

1046. Did you complain to the criminal court?—No, I did not; but lately, about a month ago, I presented a petition to the Commissioner. I have not got re-possession of my lands.

1047. Mr. Sale.] Are all your ryots still on your property?—Thirty families have deserted their houses and left the place, and gone and established themselves in other places, owing to their aversion to indigo. Their property has been plundered by the factory people.

GUNNI DUFFADAR, Inhabitant of Bhobarpara, Thannah Hantara, near Ruttonpore Factory, called in; and Examined on oath.

1048. President.] How long have you been in the habit of sowing indigo?—My father is a chowkidar, and happened one day to see the Kidirpore village burning, and being a police chowkidar, he raised an outcry, whereupon the lattials of the factory struck and speared us, and, while insensible, set us on an elephant, and took us first to the Ruttonpore factory, where we were kept for about an hour, and then to the Jatrapore factory. I don't remember dates exactly. They took me away in the month of Choit, and let me go in the month of Srabun. From the Jatrapore factory they took me away to some factory, the name of which I don't know, as this happened in the night. I was always kept in a godown, with the door locked. The dewan told us that he would give us regular wages, and restore to us all the property that had been taken away. I and my father were kept together. They also enjoined me not to make a complaint.

1049. Did they ever fulfil their engagements, and if not, did you complain?—They never gave me anything, but put me off with excuses from time to time; so I complained to the magistrate of Kishnagur, but I was persuaded by the factory people to put in a razinama (withdrawal of the case). This is about three years ago.

1050. How many beegahs do you sow?—I began to sow just before the case above-mentioned. I never received any advances. I have four beegahs of land altogether, for which I pay 10 rupees rent; they take the whole of these four beegahs for indigo.

1051. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] If all your land is taken for indigo, how do you manage to get on?—I am obliged to borrow from the mahajan, and my father gets four rupees from the village as chowkidar, by which means we live.

1052. President.] Did you ever derive any profit by sowing indigo?—No, I never got anything. They once gave me a hath chitti, but when I went to settle accounts, they tore it up. When I complained to the planter, he referred me to the dewan.

1053. Mr. Fergusson.] Did you say that you never got any advances, and that therefore you never received a single pice from the planter?—I never got any advances; but now and then I received a rupee or two; but that went to the dewan and amla.

1054. How often did you receive the rupee or two?—Once I remember that I received two rupees.

1055. On what occasion did you receive those two rupees?—On the occasion of my sending ten cart loads of plant to the factory; I cannot say how many bundles those carts contained. On getting credit for the two rupees, deduction was made for seed and for carriage hire; the rest the dewan and the amla got; besides which, I paid eight annas out of my own pocket to the amin.

1056. How much seed did you get from the factory to sow?—I got eight seers of seed every year from the Sahib to sow. According to the factory measurement the land is $2\frac{1}{2}$ beegahs; but according to mine it is four.

1057. How does your account stand with the factory now?—I believe I have something to receive, but I can't say how much it is. I am not able to read or write, and I don't understand much about accounts.

1058. You say you have to borrow from a mahajan; at what rate does he charge?—At one anna per month per rupee.

1059. Do you borrow grain from the mahajan, or money?—I borrow both money and grain.

1060. Do you borrow grain for the purpose of cultivating?—I borrow grain to eat.

1061. How do you live with simple borrowing, if you have no other means besides the pay your father receives as village chowkidar?—If we can't pay our debts, we sell a cow to liquidate them. I have got two bullocks and four milch cows: I don't sell the milk, but drink it. I have also a garden of mango and jack-trees, the fruit of which I sell; and so I manage to get on. I do not do any other business, but I sometimes work as a day labourer, and get four pice a day. I don't get a hot meal, but I got a handful of dry rice; and if my employer is of the same caste as myself, I get a pull at his hookah.

1062. Mr. Temple.] When you were confined in the godown, what sort of a place was it?—It was a dark room, in which the day and night were the same.

1063. Was there any window for air?—No.

1064. Did they let you go out for daily exercise?—No.

1065. What food did you get, and who brought it?—I don't know who the man was, but we used to get some rice in the husk and water. The man brought it to me when there was no one by to see that there was a prisoner confined.

ABADI MUNDAL, Christian, Inhabitant of Bhobarpara, Thannah Hurra, near the Hurra Factory, called in; and Examined on oath.

Abadi
Mundal.

1066. President.] ARE you in the habit of sowing indigo for the Ruttonpore factory?—Yes, they generally make me sow indigo. My father has sown indigo for a long time. About three years ago the factory got the lease of my village, and called on me and all the other ryots to sow indigo. I was compelled to take advances of five beegahs of land, but on that they made me sow 10 beegahs; that is to say, my father got the advances; I never did. Before the factory got the lease of the village, my cattle were grazing on the plain one day, when 50 or 60 lattials came up, and were taking them away, when the herdsman gave me notice. I ran out and remonstrated; they threatened me, and when I persisted in going near them, I was wounded on the head and thigh, of which I still bear the marks. My father was also wounded at the same time. Whereupon they carried us away, first to Ruttonpore, thence to Jatrapore, from there to Dulapore, and thence to Nischindipore. They took me in Phalgun, and let me off in Jyeshth; they took care of my wounds, but for eight days did not give me much to eat; after which they fed me tolerably well, confining me in the drying house. They gave me one full meal a day and moorki and chera (preparations of rice dried) besides, in the evening; they also brought me water, to bathe in the godown. In the end, the dewan of the Pirpore factory gave me 25 rupees, and let me go. I complained to the magistrate of Kishnagur, but no order was passed on my petition by the magistrate.

1067. Mr. Sale.] Why did they give you 25 rupees?—They told me that I had suffered a good deal of loss by my cattle being taken away, and that I had been wounded. Besides which, they told me, "You are a Christian," and they hoped I would not tell the Padre Sahib anything. But for all that I thought it necessary to tell the Padre Sahib.

1068. Mr. Fergusson.] Since this occurrence, did you sow indigo last year, and how much plant did you cut?—Yes, 10 beegahs; I cannot say what the produce was, but my father knows.

1069. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] How did the factory get the lease of the village?—After my affair, the zemindar and the planter made it up, on condition of my being produced and the cattle being returned. This was subsequently done.

1070. Mr. Fergusson.] Was the zemindar afraid, on account of the quarrel?—The zemindar was certainly alarmed, because during the night the factory people used to cut and take away the ryot's crops. The zemindar thought that the factory was very powerful, and might collect 5,000 men in a day, if necessary; and therefore thought it best to make it up. The zemindar had done nothing wrong, but he did not know what cases might or might not be brought against him. The planter used to go to the zemindar almost every day, until it was finally settled.

1071. Have you cultivated indigo this year for the factory?—Yes, we sowed $6\frac{1}{2}$ beegahs in October; I call that my full sowing.

1072. Did they not ask you to sow 10 beegahs, as usual?—No, this year they did not.

1073. Did you get any advance this year?—I cannot say; my father might be able to tell.

1074. Besides

1074. Besides these 10 beegahs on which you sow indigo, what other lands have you, and what do you cultivate it with?—I have 48 beegahs altogether, including the 10 beegahs, on which I sow rice, linseed, and a little tobacco, for home consumption, and about 15 cottas of sugar-cane. The best lands are taken for indigo. I don't sow indigo for seed. They don't allow me to sow cold-weather crops on the indigo lands, but keep the stumps for seed, though they rarely produce anything.

1075. President.] Do the factory servants ever ask you for any money?—They do, threatening to charge us with cattle trespass, if we don't fee them. For the last two months it has not been so bad. If I complain to the Sahib, he drives me away.

1076. Mr. Fergusson.] Have you or your father ever had occasion to borrow money from mahajans, and what interest do they charge?—I have had to borrow at two pice on the rupee per month.

1077. Have you ever had occasion to borrow grain for consumption or for sowing, and if so, at what rate?—When for consumption, it is repaid at 50 per cent. for each maund; and when for sowing, it is at the rate of cent. per cent.

1078. In these transactions does the mahajan claim a right to take a further portion of the crop at a fixed rate below the bazar rate?—It never happened to me; but I have heard of cases in which the zemindar, who is also the mahajan, exacts such a rate forcibly.

1079. Does not the mahajan frequently lose by the ryot not paying him, so that a balance increases against the ryot?—Yes, it happens very often, because the ryots cannot sow their rice, on account of their being obliged to sow the indigo.

1080. President.] In districts in which indigo is not sown, are the ryots never in debt to the mahajan?—No, not to such an extent, and those who get into debt generally manage to pay. They are not obliged to borrow rice; they may borrow money.

1081. Mr. Fergusson.] Did you never hear of ryots who did not sow indigo in your neighbourhood getting into debt?—Only in bad seasons, when instalments of the rent fall due before the crop is ready, then they are obliged to borrow.

1082. Is not the rice crop uncertain in your neighbourhood, on account of the seasons and the soil?—Yes; if there is a want of rain, the crop fails altogether; but the soil is pretty good.

1083. President.] Do not the planters make loans to the ryots when they lose cattle, or are in difficulties, without charging them interest?—I have never heard of such a thing.

1084. Mr. Sale.] Did your father ever make a request to the factory for a loan?—No, we never applied, nor have I ever heard of any one who received one.

AHAD MUNDAL, Inhabitant of Boalia, Thannah Kaloopole, near the Sinduri Concern, called in; and Examined on oath.

1085. President.] For what factory are you in the habit of sowing indigo?—I sow indigo for the Nihalpore factory in the Sinduri concern; my father and grandfather had sown for the concern, and I have sown on accordingly. I sow what I call 14 beegahs, according to zemindary measurement; they call it seven. I have a jumma of 48 rupees, comprising 107 beegahs; I have two ploughs and eight bullocks, also two bullocks for carts, and some milch cows; we are four brothers.

1086. What was the produce of your 12 beegahs last year?—I can't say how many carts or bundles I had last year, because I never went there to see how accounts stood. This year I have not been sued for breach of contract. If there was money owing I should have been sued; but the factory people broke up 18 beegahs of rice land and sowed it with indigo. My rice was about three or four inches high; I made a verbal complaint to the magistrate. The factory claimed my land as their nij, and got an order accordingly from the court.

1087. Mr. Sale.] Why did you not get a petition written, and present it to the magistrate?—I had no money to get a stamp paper, and I was afraid, but I complained in person by word of mouth.

1088. Did you ever take any advances from the factory?—I never did.

1089. Mr. Temple.] If you get no advances and receive no remuneration, why do you continue to sow?—They make me sow forcibly by beating.

1090. What force has been actually applied to you?—They lay hold of us and beat us and drag us to the factory. This has happened to me every year.

1091. When were you last beaten?—Three years ago I was beaten with a split bamboo, because I did not weed properly.

1092. When were you last dragged to the factory?—I was dragged to the factory the same time I was beaten.

1093. You have not been dragged to the factory for the last three years?—Not since then.

1094. Have you ever seen the inside of a factory godown?—No, nor have I been confined.

1095. President.] Are you in debt to the mahajan?—Yes, I have been in debt for the last two or three years; my debt is about 200 rupees.

1096. You know that your debt to the mahajan is 200 rupees; how is it that you cannot tell us the amount of your debt to the factory?—The mahajan tells me that my debt is 200 rupees; I borrowed myself 48 rupees; I believe that the rest was made up by my father's debt; I have paid 41 rupees, and whatever the accumulated interest and the balance may come to, for that I am indebted to the mahajan; the interest is two pice per rupee.

SANTOSH MUNDAL, Inhabitant of Pattarghatta, Govindpore, Thannah Hantara near the Ruttonpore Factory, called in; and Examined on oath.

Santosh Mundal.

2 June
1860.

1097. President.] For what period have you sown indigo?—Since the factory got the lease of the village in 1853, I have sown indigo with my own ploughs for the last seven years. In the first year I received 30 rupees at three rupees a beegah for 10 beegahs of land, because it was new; the lease was taken in Magh and in Chaitro; 25 men were sent to fetch the people of the village to the factory. I was unwilling to take the advances, but I was told to take the money and bury it in the ground and it would become a tree, so I took it home, and I accordingly sowed 10 beegahs according to their measurement, but according to mine, 17. There was some fair produce worth about 12 rupees, but what with seed, fees, and stamp paper, I only got two or three rupees; the original advances remained as they were, and in addition to that they made me take 15 rupees advances for five more beegahs. I remonstrated, saying that I had not cleared the old advances. They said, "take your money, the accounts are our matter;" so in the end I was obliged to take it.

1098. Mr. Sale.] At the time of receiving the money, did you not sign a kabulyat?—No, I did not; they wrote my name in the account book. They never gave me any more advances except on those two occasions, but those 15 beegahs, according to my measurement, are 20 or 25 beegahs. Two years after I had taken another jumma in another village of 10 rupees, that of a ryot who had abandoned it; this ryot used to sow indigo. I was sent for to the Hurra factory, and was told to take up his liabilities to the extent of 26 rupees. I had taken lease of these

10 beegahs from a Mahomedan gentleman, a mulla. I refused, but they said you must sow eight beegahs with indigo; I said that if I took up this man's indigo liabilities I might also have to take up his debts with the mahajans, so I would not sow, but I made arrangements with the ryots of that village to sow some other crops for me: then when the rain fell and the ground was fit for sowing, the factory people came and sowed indigo by force. The dewan told me that I must still sow six beegahs. I was willing to give 10 rupees to get off sowing, and increased the offer to twenty rupees in the presence of the Sahib and the dewan. I even went beyond that, and said I would give 26 rupees, or the full amount of the ryot's balance. Then they said, "sow two beegahs, and let the balance remain." I thereupon went and got a letter from the head of the concern to the manager, at which the manager got very angry and said, "Now that you have complained to the Burra Sahib, you shall sow five beegahs." The matter ended by my sowing three beegahs one year, and I have to pay the rent of the 10 beegahs to the landlord though I cannot cultivate it; I don't wish to give it up as the land is profitable, and I could get 30 rupees out of it if I could only cultivate it all.

1099. Mr. Fergusson.] Can you state how your account now stands with the factory?—I am in debt to the factory about 49 or 50 rupees for last year. We had a magnificent crop, higher than my head, and I took 125 cart-loads of plant to the factory.

1860.

1100. President.] When you took 125 cart loads of plant to the factory, how many bundles were you credited with?—When I took my carts to the factory, they did not measure the bundles but threw them into the vat. I however, remarked that they had raised the sides of the vat a foot higher than what they used to be. They told me that I should be credited with 65 bundles, but I never got a receipt for them; it was not the Sahib who told me this, but the dewan and the mohurrir.

1101. Have you ever tried to pay off your debt to the factory?—I have done so with respect to the 10 beegahs of land I took up, but with regard to the rest, I never took the money; I only delivered my indigo every year.

1102. What amount of remuneration and what system would satisfy you, so that you would henceforth sow indigo?—If the land belonged to the Queen, and the Sahib had nothing to do with it, but only dealt with us as a mere merchant, and paid for the plant in cash right down, we should be satisfied. Formerly there was abundance of indigo, when the Sahibs had not got estates. If a man takes a cartload of thatching grass to the city he get five rupees for it; if he was to get four or five rupees for a cartload of indigo, it would be all right; if there was proper justice justice shown to the complainants, the ryots would be ready to sow. I have heard that towards the east there is a custom for the ryot to receive his price according to the out-turn of indigo, viz., after the manufacture, the share of the factory is six annas, and that of the ryots ten annas; I believe this custom prevails both in the European and Native factories; I can't say exactly where this is carried on, but I believe it is somewhere towards Pubna. When I stated the proportion as above, I meant the division should be of the profits, after the manufacturing expenses were paid off.

1103. Mr. Fergusson.] Do you owe money to any mahajan?—No, I don't.

1104. Would you be willing to pay off the planter, if allowed?—Whatever my just debts would amount to I am willing to pay.

1105. Do you expect to be allowed to alter the contract and make out the account as you please?—My agreement was four bundles per rupee; I have got a hath chitti for one year; the account of the factory was 21 rupees, but the Sahib said I could not get so much, so all I got was 11 rupees.

1106. What kind of potta have you got?—I have a potta unlimited as to time, and I cannot be ejected so long as I pay the rents. The ijaradar exacts in some places two annas, and in some places one anna, on the rupee. The zemindar formerly measured my lands and assessed them at a proper rent in 1241 or 1242 Bengali year; I was then very young.

1107. Cannot the zemindar enhance the rent if he pleases?—Against the will of the ryot the zemindar cannot, because I pay for all lands, whether cultivated or uncultivated, at a proper rate which has been fixed.

1108. If rice and linseed were to get to three rupees a maund, would the zemindar be entitled to any of the profits, or would you take it all?—The profit or loss are both mine. Should a ryot's land diluviate, and he lose a few beegahs, the zemindar would not remit any portion of his rent; the ryot's remedy is to throw up the jumma, i. e., if the zemindar will take it back. I have heard of Act X. of 1859, but I can't say exactly who benefits by it.

Seraj Biswas, Inhabitant of Perijpore, Thannah Mirpore, Zillah Nuddea, near the Nischindipore Concern, Factory Tonghi, called in; and Examined on oath.

1120. President.] How long have you been in the habit of cultivating indigo, and how many beegahs?—About six or seven years ago I was first told to sow $1\frac{1}{2}$ beegah, for which I got three rupees advance. On the accounts of that year being settled I was paid plants to the value of one rupee; there were two rupees against me. The next year I was told to cultivate another beegah and a half, and got another three rupees; the return that year was four rupees. Since then I have continued to sow what they call three beegahs, but what I call $5\frac{1}{4}$ beegahs. I have not sown this year. They have not sued me yet under the new Act, but I believe they will do so.

1121. How many beegahs of land have you altogether?—Fifteen beegahs; of these $5\frac{1}{4}$ go to indigo, and four are uncultivated, because I have no time to attend to cultivation during the months of Phalgun and Chaitro; on the remaining lands I sow early and late rice, two and half of the latter and about five beegahs of early rice. After the early rice I am in the habit of sowing mustard, 1109. Mr. Sale.] If you saw Act X. of 1859, could you read it?—I could read some of it.

1110. President.] What other means of livelihood have you?—I have a mudi's shop in my village, and I sell clothes; I also sell some of my own wood if any one wants to burn bricks. I also lend money and rice, but my dealings in rice have been rather interrupted, owing to my having to sow indigo.

1111. On the whole, are you properous in your worldly affairs?—I was getting on pretty well, but I was fined in the month of Ashar 100 rupees by the factory amin for not weeding, and 100 bamboos of mine have been cut down every year. I complained last Bhadro, together with a number of other men, to the magistrate, of general oppression; it was not a particular complaint of my own, but we complained in a general way.

1112. Mr. Sale.] Why did not you yourself write a petition and present it to the magistrate?—We were all in the same circumstances, and thought it better to complain in a body; I was afraid to complain alone of my other grievances.

1113. Mr. Temple.] You say there is a great difference between your beegah and the factory beegah, how is this?—The difference is between the planter's and zemindar's measuring chain. A perch, according to the zemindar's measurement, is 11 beegahs, and according to the planter's it is 10 beegahs 12 cottahs; it is about 10 to 15 hauts difference in 55 yards.

1114. How did you get the 100 rupees to pay the fine?—I had sent a large cargo of wheat to Calcutta, for which I got 790 rupees; I paid the fine out of that.

1115. To whom did you pay it?—To Joy Chand Sircar, head amin.

1116. Where is Joy Chand Sircar?—He has absconded, and has gone to his home.

1117. Where is his home?—Radacantpoor, under the jurisdiction of thannah Mirpore.

1118. Are you quite sure it was 100 rupees you paid?—Yes, 100 rupees.

1119. Can you produce any proof of the payment?—Yes, I have witnesses to prove the same, before whom the money was paid.

linseed, &c. This year I only sowed one and half beegahs of linseed, because my ploughs were taken away at the very time that there was the right moisture in the land.

1122. Can you state the returns of your rice lands?—In good years about a bish and half of aous, or early rice, and about the same of aumon, or late rice. The straw of the aumon rice is eaten by my cattle; I have two bullocks and a plough.

1123. Are you in debt to the mahajan?—Yes; if I were to make up my accounts it would be about 80 or 90 rupees. I was obliged to borrow to live and pay my rents; it was not for the marriage of my son, for which purpose I was able to scrape up money enough from my relatives this year.

1124. Can you state the amount of your debt to the factory?—About six or seven rupees; last Bhadro I conveyed 18 cartloads of plant to the factory, for which I was only credited with seven bundles; according to my estimate, I should have have had three bundles to a cart, or 54 bundles in all.

1125. Mr. Fergusson.] Do you really mean to say that you carried more than 50 bundles, and were only credited with seven?—Yes, I do mean to say so; if I complain to the Sahib, the servants turn me away.

1126. Did you never try to get rid of the petty debt by paying it off?—I never really attempted to borrow to clear myself, as I really thought it useless, as they would not take it.

1127. What seed did you get from the factory last year?—Seven and a half seers, at the rate of $2\frac{1}{4}$ per beegah.

1128. President.] Did they take anything for stamp paper?—They did not actually take it from me, but they charged it in the account.

1129. Mr. Fergusson.] What kind of potta have you got, and what rent do you pay?—I had a rent-free tenure which was resumed, that was $2\frac{1}{2}$ of land in the plain $1\frac{1}{2}$ homestead and garden; this was assessed at six rupees. Besides this I had a jumma of $5\frac{1}{2}$ rupees, and I have lately increased my jumma by taking more lands up to 16 rupees, i. e. three beegahs pay a rupee, or about five annas four pie a beegah. Besides these they exact several items as ijaradar's fees, and for each rupee of rent they take five pice, and on each beegah of land two pice, i. e. $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas on 15 beegahs. Besides this they take eight annas for fowls and table expenses; the servants of the factory take this from us by order of the Sahib; my potta is without a term; I have lately received my potas, one, three years ago, and one last year. My understanding is, that I am not to be molested as long as I pay rents at the amounts stated.

1130. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Why did you not sow this year?—My reason for not sowing is, that I am tired of the business, and my cows have grown old.

1131. Is indigo cultivation profitable to you or not?—No, it is not profitable to me.

1132. President.] If indigo was profitable, would you cultivate it?—No, not at a rupee for two bundles, nor at a bundle the rupee.

1133. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] What is your reason for this?—Because my izzut or honour is taken away. One day I went to sow my own lands in Baisakh last year, when the amin and takidgir plucked me by the beard; I went to complain to the Sahib, and he drove me away.

1134. What led you to take advances in the first instance?—The Sahib got the talookdari rights, and said, those who would not cultivate, would be driven away. The advances were never paid into our hands, but were intercepted by the dewan, amin, and takidgir.

1135. President.] Of what rank in life are the dewan, amin, and other servants?—The dewan is a Kaiburt, a respectable man; but for all his respectability he takes money. He has a wall round his dwelling, and deals in money. I have not seen his house; the amin is a Brahmin; the takidgir is a Mussulman about the same rank as myself.

1136. Mr. Fergusson.] What is the measurement of a beegah?—The zemindary measurement is 80 hath; the factory measurement I cannot say, as they won't allow us to measure the chain.

1137. What interest do you pay the mahajan on your debt?—Half an anna per month on the rupee.

1138. President.] Have you ever received any loan from the factory without interest, or any medicines when you were sick, and is there a school kept up by the factory?—I never got any loans without interest, nor medicines when I was sick, nor is there a school kept up by the factory.

1139. Mr. Fergusson.] Do you give any bond or engagement to the mahajan for your debts?—There is always a bond given and signed.

1140. Is it a blank stamp, or is it a written engagement?—It is written by some man who can write, either a Mussulman, or a Kayast. Those who can write sign their names; others make a mark.

1141. Mr. Sale.] When you first received advances, did you sign any kabulyat on stamp paper?—No, but I was charged two annas for the stamp.

1142. Baboo Chunder Mohun Chatterjee.] Have you yourself suffered any other oppression at the hands of planters?—From the month of Kartik I have been obliged to plough the nij abad 15 or 16 times, and have never been paid for it. Last year I was fined Rs. 1. 8. because my cattle were said to have damaged indigo, but they really had not done so. Every year they cut my bamboo trees, and never pay me for them; they never took my vegetables.

1143. President.] You complain of these oppressions now; did you ever complain before this to the magistrate or police?—Our Sahib is magistrate, our Sahib is daroga, our Sahib is zemindar. If we dared to complain against him, they would have our family and cattle carried away. I have come here because I cannot stand it any longer.

1144. Were you better off under the native zemindar, or the planter zemindar, putting aside the cultivation of indigo?—We should prefer the native zemindar, because the zemindar hears complaints, and fines a man according to his means; whereas the Sahib does not listen, but visits us with very heavy fines.

1145. Mr. Fergusson.] Did you ever go to the planter's cutcherry, and seek for redress?—I have been three times to complain, twice about weeding, but I was driven away; and the last time was when my beard was pulled.

DINU MUNDAL, inhabitant of Mozumpore, Thannah Damuhuda, Factory Dulalnuggur Concern, Nischindipore, called in; and examined on oath.

Dinu
Mundal.

1146. President.] How many beegahs of land have you?—I have two khadas, i. e. 32 beegahs of land; I had an old potta which was burnt, and in 1261 Bengali year, I took some more lands from the Sahib at four beegahs per rupee. I have now to pay, besides that, expenses of cultivation, five pice, and two annas ijara fees, and two pice for measuring. My agreement is to cultivate $3\frac{1}{2}$ beegahs of indigo, but under that pretext they take $5\frac{1}{4}$ beegahs.

1147. How did you first take advances?—I never got any advances; they threw the hath chitties into my house. My father had been to the factory one day, but they let him go as he was an old man. They then told me to sow $5\frac{1}{2}$ beegahs; I could not help myself, because the planter planter became my zemindar, and that involves being judge, magistrate, and everything.

1148. What was the produce of your indigo?—I had the return of seven cart-loads which I conveyed to the factory, but they gave me no acknowledgment. I never in any year got my money for produce; I only got the stick.

1149. Then why did you keep on sowing?—I could not help myself, I was forced to sow by beating.

1150. Why did you not complain to the magistrate?—I never could go there, as I was always watched by spearmen and clubmen, nor could I go to the Daroga; I never received a rupee from the factory in my life.

1151. Did you ever receive any other collateral advantages from the factory, such as loans without interest, or medicines, or instruction?—No, I never got any loans nor medicines. I can read and write, but I learnt this from a Bengali Sircar.

1152. Then did you derive no advantage whatever from indigo cultivation?—No, no advantage whatever.

1153. No protection from a third party oppressing or quarrelling with you?—No, not in the least. Last year Tilak Bose, gomashta of the factory, ordered Arif Sheik to beat my younger brother, and I complained to the factory and got no redress.

1154. What do you sow on your remaining lands?—I sow very little. Last year I was sowing two beegahs with early rice, and my brother was returning from cultivating indigo, Tilak Bose and Arif Sheik abused and beat me for sowing my rice lands, and for not sowing the indigo. The Sahib had then just gone home.

1155. What have you sown this year?—I have not sown any indigo; I have sown 16 beegahs with early rice, and I have got some late rice yet to sow.

1156. Have you been sued for breach of contract under the Act of this year?—I have not; but I cannot say what has happened since I have been here; but if my throat is cut, I won't sow indigo.

1157. Mr. Fergusson.] Will you allow your throat to be cut before you pay your debt to the factory?—If I owe anything to the factory I will pay it, but I do not owe anything.

1158. In what way do you want to make up your account with the factory; is it to be made up according to the agreement, or how?—I am told by the factory people that some two rupees are given for every beegah, and four annas for seed for the same. When they gave me a hath chitti, they put at the bottom two annas for a stamp paper, which I have never seen; my set-off to this is six or seven cart-loads of plant a year. My account is five bundles to a cart; and according to my calculation, I should, for 30 bundles, receive Rs. 7. 8. I did not give seven cart-loads every year; last year I only gave five.
